Oriental Translation Fund
LONDON.
INSTITUTED 1828.
UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA.

THIS COPY WAS PRINTED FOR THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
THE LADY CHARLOTTE GUEST, A SUBSCRIBER TO
The Oriental Translation Fund.
THE

VISHṆU PURĀṆA,

A SYSTEM

OF

HINDU MYTHOLOGY AND TRADITION,

TRANSLATED

FROM THE ORIGINAL SANSCRIT,

AND

ILLUSTRATED BY NOTES

DERIVED CHIEFLY FROM OTHER PURĀNAS,

BY

H. H. WILSON, M.A. F.R.S.

MEMBER OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY, AND OF THE ASIATIC SOCIETIES OF BENGAL AND PARIS; OF THE IMPERIAL SOCIETY OF NATURALISTS, MOSCOW; OF THE ROYAL ACADEMIES OF BERLIN AND MUNICH; PHIL. DR. IN THE UNIVERSITY OF BREMEN; AND BODEN PROFESSOR OF SANSCRIT IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD; &c. &c. &c.

Purāṇa, Vishnu Purāṇa, English

LONDON,

PRINTED FOR THE ORIENTAL TRANSLATION FUND OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

1840.
TO

THE CHANCELLOR, MASTERS, AND SCHOLARS

OF

THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD,

THIS WORK

IS RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED BY

H. H. WILSON,

IN TESTIMONY OF HIS VENERATION FOR

THE UNIVERSITY,

AND IN GRATEFUL ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF THE DISTINCTION

CONFERRRED UPON HIM

BY HIS ADMISSION AS A MEMBER,

AND HIS ELECTION

TO THE

BODEN PROFESSORSHIP OF THE SANSCRIT LANGUAGE.

Oxford,
Feb. 10, 1840.
PREFACE.

THE literature of the Hindus has now been cultivated for many years with singular diligence, and in many of its branches with eminent success. There are some departments, however, which are yet but partially and imperfectly investigated; and we are far from being in possession of that knowledge which the authentic writings of the Hindus alone can give us of their religion, mythology, and historical traditions.

From the materials to which we have hitherto had access, it seems probable that there have been three principal forms in which the religion of the Hindus has existed, at as many different periods. The duration of those periods, the circumstances of their succession, and the precise state of the national faith at each season, it is not possible to trace with any approach to accuracy. The premises have been too imperfectly determined to authorize other than conclusions of a general and somewhat vague description, and those remain to be hereafter confirmed or corrected by more extensive and satisfactory research.

The earliest form under which the Hindu religion appears is that taught in the Vedas. The style of the language, and the purport of the composition of those works, as far as we are acquainted with them, indicate a date long anterior to that of any other class of Sanscrit writings. It is yet, however, scarcely safe to advance an opinion of the precise belief or philosophy which they inculcate. To enable us to judge of their tendency, we have only a general sketch of their arrangement and contents, with a few extracts, by Mr. Colebrooke, in the Asiatic Researches¹; a few incidental observations by Mr. Ellis, in the same miscellany²; and a translation of the first book of the Sanhítá, or collection of the prayers of the Rig-veda, by Dr. Rosen³; and some of the Upanishads,

¹ Vol. VIII. p. 369.
² Vol. XIV. p. 37.
³ Published by the Oriental Translation Fund Committee. or speculative treatises, attached to, rather than part of, the Vedas, by Ram Mohun Roy. Of the religion taught in the Vedas, Mr. Colebrooke's opinion will probably be received as that which is best entitled to deference, as certainly no Sanscrit scholar has been equally conversant with the original works. "The real doctrine of the Indian scripture is the unity of the Deity, in whom the universe is comprehended; and the seeming polytheism which it exhibits, offers the elements and the stars and planets as gods. The three principal manifestations of the divinity, with other personified attributes and energies, and most of the other gods of Hindu mythology, are indeed mentioned, or at least indicated, in the Veda. But the worship of deified heroes is no part of the system; nor are the incarnations of deities suggested in any portion of the text which I have yet seen, though such are sometimes hinted at by the commentators."

Some of these statements may perhaps require modification; for without a careful examination of all the prayers of the Vedas, it would be hazardous to assert that they contain no indication whatever of hero-worship; and certainly they do appear to allude occasionally to the Avatāras, or incarnations, of Vishnū. Still, however, it is true that the prevailing character of the ritual of the Vedas is the worship of the personified elements; of Agni, or fire; Indra, the firmament; Vāyu, the air; Varuṇa, the water; of Aditya, the sun; Soma, the moon; and other elementary and planetary personages. It is also true that the worship of the Vedas is for the most part domestic worship, consisting of prayers and oblations offered—in their own houses, not in temples—by individuals for individual good, and addressed to unreal presences, not to visible types. In a word, the religion of the Vedas was not idolatry.

It is not possible to conjecture when this more simple and primitive form of adoration was succeeded by the worship of images and types, representing Brahmá, Vishnú, Śíva, and other imaginary beings, constituting a mythological pantheon of most ample extent; or when Ráma

4 A translation of the principal Upanishads was published under the title of Oupnekhat, or Theologia Indica, by Anquetil du Perron; but it was made through the medium of the Persian, and is very incorrect and obscure. A translation of a very different character has been some time in course of preparation by M. Poiley.

5 As. Res. vol. VIII. p. 473.
and Krishṇa, who appear to have been originally real and historical characters, were elevated to the dignity of divinities. Image-worship is alluded to by Manu in several passages 6, but with an intimation that those Brahmins who subsist by ministering in temples are an inferior and degraded class. The story of the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata turns wholly upon the doctrine of incarnations, all the chief dramatis personae of the poems being impersonations of gods and demigods and celestial spirits. The ritual appears to be that of the Vedas, and it may be doubted if any allusion to image-worship occurs; but the doctrine of propitiation by penance and praise prevails throughout, and Vishnu and Śiva are the especial objects of panegyric and invocation. In these two works, then, we trace unequivocal indications of a departure from the elemental worship of the Vedas, and the origin or elaboration of legends, which form the great body of the mythological religion of the Hindus. How far they only improved upon the cosmogony and chronology of their predecessors, or in what degree the traditions of families and dynasties may originate with them, are questions that can only be determined when the Vedas and the two works in question shall have been more thoroughly examined.

The different works known by the name of Purāṇas are evidently derived from the same religious system as the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata, or from the myth-heroic stage of Hindu belief. They present, however, peculiarities which designate their belonging to a later period, and to an important modification in the progress of opinion. They repeat the theoretical cosmogony of the two great poems; they expand and systematize the chronological computations; and they give a more definite and connected representation of the mythological fictions, and the historical traditions. But besides these and other particulars, which may be derivable from an old, if not from a primitive era, they offer characteristic peculiarities of a more modern description, in the paramount importance which they assign to individual divinities, in the variety and purport of the rites and observances addressed to them, and in the invention of new legends illustrative of the power and graciousness of those deities, and of the efficacy of implicit devotion to them. Śiva and Vishnū, under one or other form, are almost the sole objects that claim the homage of the Hindus in the Purānas; departing from the domestic and elemental ritual of the Vedas, and exhibiting a sectarian fervour and exclusiveness not traceable in the Rāmāyaṇa, and only to a qualified extent in the Mahābhārata. They are no longer authorities for Hindu belief as a whole: they are special guides for separate and sometimes conflicting branches of it, compiled for the evident purpose of promoting the preferential, or in some cases the sole, worship of Vishnū or of Śiva?.

6 B. III. 152, 164. B. IV. 214.

That the Purānas always bore the character here given of them, may admit of reasonable doubt; that it correctly applies to them as they now are met with, the following pages will irrefragably substantiate. It is possible, however, that there may have been an earlier class of Purānas, of which those we now have are but the partial and adulterated representatives. The identity of the legends in many of them, and still more the identity of the words—for in several of them long passages are literally the same—is a sufficient proof that in all such cases they must be copied either from some other similar work, or from a common and prior original.
It is not unusual also for a fact to be stated upon the authority of an ‘old stanza,’ which is cited accordingly; shewing the existence of an earlier source of information: and in very many instances legends are alluded to, not told; evincing acquaintance with their prior narration somewhere else.
The name itself, Purāña, which implies ‘old,’ indicates the object of the compilation to be the preservation of ancient traditions, a purpose in the present condition of the Purānas very imperfectly fulfilled. Whatever weight may be attached to these considerations, there is no disputing evidence to the like effect afforded by other and unquestionable authority. The description given by Mr. Colebrooke? of the contents of a Purāña is taken from Sanscrit writers. The Lexicon of Amara Sinha gives as a synonyme of Purāña, Pancha-lakshanam, ‘that which has five characteristic topics:’ and there is no difference of opinion amongst the

? Besides the three periods marked by the Vedas, Heroic Poems, and Purānas, a fourth may be dated from the influence exercised by the Tantras upon Hindu practice and belief; but we are yet too little acquainted with those works, or their origin, to speculate safely upon their consequences.

scholiasts as to what these are. They are, as Mr. Colebrooke mentions,
1. Primary creation, or cosmogony; 2. Secondary creation, or the destruction and renovation of worlds, including chronology; 3. Genealogy of gods and patriarchs; 4. Reigns of the Manus, or periods called Manwantaras; and 5. History, or such particulars as have been preserved of the princes of the solar and lunar races, and of their descendants to modern times. Such, at any rate, were the constituent and characteristic portions of a Puráña in the days of Amara Sinha, fifty-six years before the Christian era; and if the Puráñas had undergone no change since his time, such we should expect to find them still. Do they conform to this description? Not exactly in any one instance: to some of them it is utterly inapplicable; to others it only partially applies. There is not one to which it belongs so entirely as to the Vishnú Purána, and it is one of the circumstances which gives to this work a more authentic character than most of its fellows can pretend to. Yet even in this instance we have a book upon the institutes of society and obsequial rites interposed between the Manwantaras and the genealogies of princes, and a life of Krishná separating the latter from an account of the end of the world, besides the insertion of various legends of a manifestly popular and sectarial character. No doubt many of the Puráñas, as they now are, correspond with the view which Col. Vans Kennedy takes of their purport. "I cannot discover in them," he remarks, "any other object than that of religious instruction." The description of the earth and of the planetary system, and the lists of royal races which occur in them, he asserts to be "evidently extraneous, and not essential circumstances, as they are entirely omitted in some Puráñas, and very concisely illustrated in others; while, on the contrary, in all the Puráñas some or other of the leading principles, rites, and observances of the Hindu religion are fully dwelt upon, and illustrated either by suitable legends

9 The following definition of a Puráña is constantly quoted: it is found in the Vishnú, Mataya, Váyu, and other Puráñas: सन्तक्षण विक्रम पंजी मन्त्रार्थिणिः वेळापरमैरव सृष्टिः वृहत्तलकायम् भृगु पुराण्य संकल्पवृत्ताः। A variation of reading in the beginning of the second line is noticed by Rámaśrama, the scholiast on Amara, भृगु विक्रमपरमैरविक्रम पंजी मन्त्रार्थिणिः वेळापरमैरव सृष्टिः। "Destruction of the earth and the rest, or final dissolution:" in which case the genealogies of heroes and princes are comprised in those of the patriarchs.
or by prescribing the ceremonies to be practised, and the prayers and invocations to be employed, in the worship of different deities. Now, however accurate this description may be of the Purānas as they are, it is clear that it does not apply to what they were when they were synonymously designated as Pancha-lakṣaṇaṇaṇa, or 'treatises on five topics,' not one of which five is ever specified by text or comment to be "religious instruction." In the knowledge of Amara Sinha the lists of princes were not extraneous and unessential, and their being now so considered by a writer so well acquainted with the contents of the Purānas as Col. Vans Kennedy is a decisive proof that since the days of the lexicographer they have undergone some material alteration, and that we have not at present the same works in all respects that were current under the denomination of Purānas in the century prior to Christianity.

The inference deduced from the discrepancy between the actual form and the older definition of a Purāna, unfavourable to the antiquity of the extant works generally, is converted into certainty when we come to examine them in detail; for although they have no dates attached to them, yet circumstances are sometimes mentioned or alluded to, or references to authorities are made, or legends are narrated, or places are particularized, of which the comparatively recent date is indisputable, and which enforce a corresponding reduction of the antiquity of the work in which they are discovered. At the same time they may be acquitted of subservience to any but sectarian imposture. They were pious frauds for temporary purposes: they never emanated from any impossible combination of the Brahmanas to fabricate for the antiquity of the entire Hindu system any claims which it cannot fully support. A very great portion of the contents of many, some portion of the contents of all, is genuine and old. The sectarian interpolation or embellishment is always sufficiently palpable to be set aside, without injury to the more authentic and primitive material; and the Purānas, although they belong especially to that stage of the Hindu religion in which faith in some one divinity was the prevailing principle, are also a valuable record of the form of Hindu belief which came next in order to that of the Vedas; which grafted hero-worship upon the simpler ritual of the latter; and which had been adopted, and was extensively, perhaps universally established in India at the time of the Greek invasion. The Hercules of the Greek writers was indubitably the Balaráma of the Hindus; and their notices of Mathurá on the Jumna, and of the kingdom of the Suraseni and the Pandéan country, evidence the prior currency of the traditions which constitute the argument of the Mahábhárata, and which are constantly repeated in the Puráñás, relating to the Paúdava and Yádava races, to Krishán and his contemporary heroes, and to the dynasties of the solar and lunar kings.

---

The theogony and cosmogony of the Puráñás may probably be traced to the Vedas. They are not, as far as is yet known, described in detail in those works, but they are frequently alluded to in a strain more or less mystical and obscure, which indicates acquaintance with their existence, and which seems to have supplied the Puráñás with the groundwork of their systems. The scheme of primary or elementary creation they borrow from the Sáñkiya philosophy, which is probably one of the oldest forms of speculation on man and nature amongst the Hindus. Agreeably, however, to that part of the Pauránik character which there is reason to suspect of later origin, their inculcation of the worship of a favourite deity, they combine the interposition of a creator with the independent evolution of matter in a somewhat contradictory and unintelligible style. It is evident too that their accounts of secondary creation, or the development of the existing forms of things, and the disposition of the universe, are derived from several and different sources; and it appears very likely that they are to be accused of some of the incongruities and absurdities by which the narrative is disfigured, in consequence of having attempted to assign reality and significance to what was merely metaphor or mysticism. There is, however, amidst the unnecessary complexity of the description, a general agreement amongst them as to the origin of things, and their final distribution; and in many of the circumstances there is a striking concurrence with the ideas which seem to have pervaded the whole of the ancient world, and which we may therefore believe to be faithfully represented in the Puráñás.
PREFACE.

The Pantheism of the Puráñás is one of their invariable characteristics, although the particular divinity, who is all things, from whom all things proceed, and to whom all things return, be diversified according to their individual sectarian bias. They seem to have derived the notion from the Vedas: but in them the one universal Being is of a higher order than a personification of attributes or elements, and, however imperfectly conceived, or unworthily described, is God. In the Puráñás the one only Supreme Being is supposed to be manifest in the person of Śiva or Vishńu, either in the way of illusion or in sport; and one or other of these divinities is therefore also the cause of all that is, is himself all that exists. The identity of God and nature is not a new notion; it was very general in the speculations of antiquity, but it assumed a new vigour in the early ages of Christianity, and was carried to an equal pitch of extravagance by the Platonic Christians as by the Śáiva or Vaishńava Hindus. It seems not impossible that there was some communication between them. We know that there was an active communication between India and the Red sea in the early ages of the Christian era, and that doctrines, as well as articles of merchandise, were brought to Alexandria from the former. Epiphanius\(^{11}\) and Eusebius\(^{12}\) accuse Scythianus of having imported from India, in the second century, books on magic, and heretical notions leading to Manicheism; and it was at the same period that Ammonius instituted the sect of the new Platonists at Alexandria. The basis of his heresy was, that true philosophy derived its origin from the eastern nations: his doctrine of the identity of God and the universe is that of the Vedas and Puráñás; and the practices he enjoined, as well as their object, were precisely those described in several of the Puráñás under the name of Yoga. His disciples were taught “to extenuate by mortification and contemplation the bodily restraints upon the immortal spirit, so that in this life they might enjoy communion with the Supreme Being, and ascend after death to the universal Parent\(^{13}\).” That these are Hindu tenets the following pages\(^{14}\) will testify; and by the admission of their Alexandrian teacher, they originated in India. The importation was perhaps not wholly unrequited; the loan may not have been left unpaid. It is not impossible that the Hindu doctrines received fresh animation from their adoption by the successors of Ammonius, and especially by the mystics, who may have prompted, as well as employed, the expressions of the Purāṇas. Anquetil du Perron has given, in the introduction to his translation of the ‘Oupnekhat,’ several hymns by Synesius, a bishop of the beginning of the fifth century, which may serve as parallels to many of the hymns and prayers addressed to Vishńu in the Vishńu Purāṇa.

But the ascription to individual and personal deities of the attributes of the one universal and spiritual Supreme Being, is an indication of a later date than the Vedas certainly, and apparently also than the Rāmāyaṇa, where Rāma, although an incarnation of Vishńu, commonly appears in his human character alone. There is something of the kind in the Mahābhārata in respect to Krishńa, especially in the philosophical episode known as the Bhagavad Gītā. In other places the divine nature of Krishńa is less decidedly affirmed; in some it is disputed or denied; and in most of the situations in which he is exhibited in action, it is as a prince and warrior, not as a divinity. He exercises no superhuman faculties in the defence of himself or his friends, or in the defeat and destruction of his foes. The Mahābhārata, however, is evidently a work of various periods, and requires to be read throughout carefully and critically before its weight as an authority can be accurately appreciated. As it is now in type—thanks to the public spirit of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and their secretary Mr. J. Prinsep—it will not be long before the Sanscrit scholars of the continent will accurately appreciate its value.

The Purāṇas are also works of evidently different ages, and have been compiled under different circumstances, the precise nature of which we can but imperfectly conjecture from internal evidence, and from what we know of the history of religious opinion in India. It is highly probable, that of the present popular forms of the Hindu religion, none assumed their actual state earlier than the time of Śankara Āchārya, the great Śaiva reformer, who flourished, in all likelihood, in the eighth or ninth century. Of the Vaishnava teachers, Rāmānuja dates in the twelfth century, Madhva Āchārya in the thirteenth, and Vallabha in the sixteenth; and the Purāṇas seem to have accompanied or followed their innovations, being obviously intended to advocate the doctrines they taught. This is to assign to some of them a very modern date, it is true; but I cannot think that a higher can with justice be ascribed to them. This, however, applies to some only out of the number, as I shall presently proceed to specify.

---

16 Three volumes have been printed; the fourth and last is understood to be nearly completed.

Another evidence of a comparatively modern date must be admitted in those chapters of the Purāṇas which, assuming a prophetic tone, foretell what dynasties of kings will reign in the Kali age. These chapters, it is true, are found but in four of the Purāṇas, but they are conclusive in bringing down the date of these four to a period considerably subsequent to Christianity. It is also to be remarked, that the Vāyu, Vishnū, Bhāgavata, and Matsya Purāṇas, in which these particulars are foretold, have in all other respects the character of as great antiquity as any works of their class.

The invariable form of the Purāṇas is that of a dialogue, in which some person relates its contents in reply to the inquiries of another. This dialogue is interwoven with others, which are repeated as having been held on other occasions between different individuals, in consequence of similar questions having been asked. The immediate narrator is commonly, though not constantly, Lomaharshaṇa or Romaharshaṇa, the disciple of Vyāsa, who is supposed to communicate what was imparted to him by his preceptor, as he had heard it from some other sage. Vyāsa, as will be seen in the body of the work, is a generic title, meaning an ‘arranger’ or ‘compiler.’ It is in this age applied to Krishṇa Dwaipā-yana, the son of Parásara, who is said to have taught the Vedas and Puráñas to various disciples, but who appears to have been the head of a college or school, under whom various learned men gave to the sacred literature of the Hindus the form in which it now presents itself. In this task the disciples, as they are termed, of Vyása were rather his colleagues and coadjutors, for they were already conversant with what he is fabled to have taught them; and amongst them, Lomaharshaña represents the class of persons who were especially charged with the record of political and temporal events. He is called Súta, as if it was a proper name; but it is more correctly a title; and Lomaharshaña was ‘a Súta,’ that is, a bard or panegyrist, who was created, according to our text, to celebrate the exploits of princes; and who, according to the Váyu and Padma Puráñas, has a right by birth and profession to narrate the Puráñas, in preference even to the Brahmanas. It is not unlikely therefore that we are to understand, by his being represented as the disciple of Vyása, the institution of some attempt, made under the direction of the latter, to collect from the heralds and annalists of his day the scattered traditions which they had imperfectly preserved; and hence the consequent appropriation of the Puráñas, in a great measure, to the genealogies of regal dynasties, and descriptions of the universe. However this may be, the machinery has been but loosely adhered to, and many of the Puráñas, like the Víshánu, are referred to a different narrator.

An account is given in the following work of a series of Pauránik compilations, of which in their present form no vestige appears. Lomaharshaña is said to have had six disciples, three of whom composed as many fundamental Sanhitás, whilst he himself compiled a fourth. By a Sanhitás is generally understood a ‘collection’ or ‘compilation.’ The Sanhitás of the Vedas are collections of hymns and prayers belonging to them, arranged according to the judgment of some individual sage, who is therefore looked upon as the originator and teacher of each. The Sanhitás of the Puráñas, then, should be analogous compilations, attributed respectively to Mitravíyu, Śáníapáyana, Akrítavrána, and Romaharshaña: no such Pauránik Sanhitás are now known. The

---

20 See p. 276.
21 P. 102.
23 P. 283.
PREFACE.

substance of the four is said to be collected in the Vishńu Puráńa, which is also, in another place 24, itself called a Sanhitá: but such compilations have not, as far as inquiry has yet proceeded, been discovered. The specification may be accepted as an indication of the Puráńas having existed in some other form, in which they are no longer met with; although it does not appear that the arrangement was incompatible with their existence as separate works, for the Vishńu Puráńa, which is our authority for the four Sanhitás, gives us also the usual enumeration of the several Puráńas.

There is another classification of the Puráńas alluded to in the Matsya Puráńa, and specified by the Padma Puráńa, but more fully. It is not undeserving of notice, as it expresses the opinion which native writers entertain of the scope of the Puráńas, and of their recognising the subservience of these works to the dissemination of sectarian principles. Thus it is said in the Uttara Khanda of the Padma, that the Puráńas, as well as other works, are divided into three classes, according to the qualities which prevail in them. Thus the Vishńu, Náradíya, Bhágavata, Gáruḍa, Padma, and Váráha Puráńas, are Sátwika, or pure, from the predominance in them of the Satwa quality, or that of goodness and purity. They are, in fact, Vaishńava Puráńas. The Matsya, Kúrma, Linga, Śiva, Skanda, and Agni Puráńas, are Támasa, or Puráńas of darkness, from the prevalence of the quality of Tamas, ‘ignorance,’ ‘gloom.’ They are indisputably Śaiva Puráńas. The third series, comprising the Brahmáúda, Brahma-vaivarta, Márkaúdeya, Bhavishya, Vámana, and Brahmá Puráńas, are designated as Rájasa, ‘passionate,’ from Raja, the property of passion, which they are supposed to represent. The Matsya does not specify which are the Puráńas that come under these designations, but remarks that those in which the Máhátmya of Hari or Vishńu prevails are Sátwika; those in which the legends of Agni or Śiva predominate are Támasa; and those which dwell most on the stories of Brahmá are Rájasa. I have elsewhere stated 25, that I considered the Rájasa Puráńas to lean to the Śákta division of the Hindus, the worshippers of Śakti, or the female principle; founding this opinion on the character of the legends which some of them contain, such as the Durgá Māhātmya, or celebrated legend on which the worship of Durgá or Kālī is especially founded, which is a principal episode of the Mārkaṇḍeya. The Brāhma-vaivartta also devotes the greatest portion of its chapters to the celebration of Rādhā, the mistress of Krishña, and other female divinities. Col. Vans Kennedy, however, objects to the application of the term Śakti to this last division of the Puráṇas, the worship of Śakti being the especial object of a different class of works, the Tantras, and no such form of worship being particularly inculcated in the Brāhma Puráṇa 26. This last argument is of weight in regard to the particular instance specified, and the designation of Śakti may not be correctly applicable to the whole class, although it is to some of the series; for there is no incompatibility in the advocacy of a Tāntrika modification of the Hindu religion by any Puráṇa, and it has unquestionably been practised in works known as Upa-puráṇas. The proper appropriation of the third class of the Puráṇas, according to the Padma Puráṇa, appears to be to the worship of Krishña, not in the character in which he is represented in the Vishńu and Bhágavata Puráṇas, in which the incidents of his boyhood are only a portion of his biography, and in which the human character largely participates, at least in his riper years, but as the infant Krishña, Govinda, Bāla Gopāla, the sojourner in Vrindávan, the companion of the cowherds and milkmaids, the lover of Rādhā, or as the juvenile master of the universe, Jagannátha. The term Rájasa, implying the animation of passion, and enjoyment of sensual delights, is applicable, not only to the character of the youthful divinity, but to those with whom his adoration in these forms seems to have originated, the Gosains of Gokul and Bengal, the followers and descendants of Vallabha and Chaitanya, the priests and proprietors of Jagannáth and Śrínáth-dwār, who lead a life of affluence and indulgence, and vindicate, both by precept and practice, the reasonableness of the Rájasa property, and the congruity of temporal enjoyment with the duties of religion 27.

24 P. 5.

The Puráṇas are uniformly stated to be eighteen in number. It is said that there are also eighteen Upa-puráṇas, or minor Puráṇas; but the names of only a few of these are specified in the least exceptionable authorities, and the greater number of the works is not procurable. With regard to the eighteen Puráñas, there is a peculiarity in their specification, which is proof of an interference with the integrity of the text, in some of them at least; for each of them specifies the names of the whole eighteen. Now the list could not have been complete whilst the work that gives it was unfinished, and in one only therefore, the last of the series, have we a right to look for it. As however there are more last words than one, it is evident that the names must have been inserted in all except one after the whole were completed: which of the eighteen is the exception, and truly the last, there is no clue to discover, and the specification is probably an interpolation in most, if not in all.

27 As. Res. vol. XVI. p. 85.

Some of the Puráñas, as the Agni, Matsya, Bhágavata, and Padma, also particularize the number of stanzas which each of the eighteen contains. In one or two instances they disagree, but in general they concur. The aggregate is stated at 400,000 slokas, or 1,600,000 lines. These are 28 The names are put attributively, the noun substantive, Puráña, being understood. Thus Vaishñavam Puránam means the Puráña of Vishńu; Saivam Puránam, the P. of Siva; Brahmam Puránam, the P. of Brahm. It is equally correct, and more common, to use the two substantives in apposition, as Vishńu Puráña, Śiva Puráña, &c. In the original Sanscrit the nouns are compounded, as Vishńu-puránam, &c.; but it has not been customary to combine them in their European shape.

29 P. 284.
fabled to be but an abridgment, the whole amount being a krore, or ten millions of stanzas, or even a thousand millions. If all the fragmentary portions claiming in various parts of India to belong to the Puráñas were admitted, their extent would much exceed the lesser, though it would not reach the larger enumeration. The former is, however, as I have elsewhere stated, a quantity that an individual European scholar could scarcely expect to peruse with due care and attention, unless his whole time were devoted exclusively for many years to the task. Yet without some such labour being achieved, it was clear, from the crudity and inexactness of all that had been hitherto published on the subject, with one exception, that sound views on the subject of Hindu mythology and tradition were not to be expected. Circumstances, which I have already explained in the paper in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society referred to above, enabled me to avail myself of competent assistance, by which I made a minute abstract of most of the Puráñas. In course of time I hope to place a tolerably copious and connected analysis of the whole eighteen before Oriental scholars, and in the mean while offer a brief notice of their several contents.

In general the enumeration of the Puráñas is a simple nomenclature, with the addition in some cases of the number of verses; but to these the Matsya Puráña joins the mention of one or two circumstances peculiar to each, which, although scanty, are of value, as offering means of identifying the copies of the Puráñas now found with those to which the Matsya refers, or of discovering a difference between the present and the past. I shall therefore prefix the passage descriptive of each Puráña from the Matsya. It is necessary to remark, however, that in the comparison instituted between that description and the Puráña as it exists, I necessarily refer to the copy or copies which I employed for the purpose of examination and analysis, and which were procured with some trouble and cost in Benares and Calcutta. In some instances my manuscripts...
PREFACE.

have been collated with others from different parts of India, and the result has shewn, that, with regard at least to the Brahmá, Vishúu, Váyu, Matsya, Padma, Bhágavata, and Kúrma Puráñas, the same works, in all essential respects, are generally current under the same appellations. Whether this is invariably the case may be doubted, and farther inquiry may possibly shew that I have been obliged to content myself with mutilated or unauthentic works. It is with this reservation, therefore, that I must be understood to speak of the concurrence or disagreement of any Puráña with the notice of it which the Matsya P. has preserved.

1. Brahmá Puráña. “That, the whole of which was formerly repeated by Brahmá to Maríchi, is called the Bráhma Puráña, and contains ten thousand stanzas.” In all the lists of the Puránas, the Bráhma is placed at the head of the series, and is thence sometimes also entitled the Ádi or ‘first’ Puráña. It is also designated as the Saura, as it is in great part appropriated to the worship of Súrya, ‘the sun.’ There are, however, works bearing these names which belong to the class of Upa-puráñas, and which are not to be confounded with the Bráhma. It is usually said, as above, to contain ten thousand slokas; but the number actually occurring is between seven and eight thousand. There is a supplementary or concluding section called the Brahmottara Puráña, and which is different from a portion of the Skánda called the Brahmottara Khaéta, which contains about three thousand stanzas more; but there is every reason to conclude that this is a distinct and unconnected work.

The immediate narrator of the Brahmá Puráña is Lomaharshaña, who communicates it to the Rishis or sages assembled at Naimisháránya, as it was originally revealed by Brahmá, not to Maríchi, as the Matsya affirms, but to Daksha, another of the patriarchs: hence its denomination of the Brahmá Puráña.

32 Upon examining the translations of different passages from the Puránas, given by Col. Vans Kennedy in the work mentioned in a former note, and comparing them with the text of the manuscripts I have consulted, I find such an agreement as to warrant the belief that there is no essential difference between the copies in his possession and in mine. The varieties which occur in the MSS. of the East India Company’s Library will be noticed in the text.

33 तम्यामामति गुप्तमां मात्रे वर्तमान हुं दक्षालेः पुराभिः परिकृतिः
The early chapters of this work give a description of the creation, an account of the Manwantaras, and the history of the solar and lunar dynasties to the time of Krishña, in a summary manner, and in words which are common to it and several other Puráñas: a brief description of the universe succeeds; and then come a number of chapters relating to the holiness of Orissa, with its temples and sacred groves dedicated to the sun, to Śiva, and Jagannáth, the latter especially. These chapters are characteristic of this Puráña, and shew its main object to be the promotion of the worship of Krishña as Jagannáth 34. To these particulars succeeds a life of Krishña, which is word for word the same as that of the Vishńu Puráña; and the compilation terminates with a particular detail of the mode in which Yoga, or contemplative devotion, the object of which is still Vishńu, is to be performed. There is little in this which corresponds with the definition of a Pancha-lakshaṇa Puráña; and the mention of the temples of Orissa, the date of the original construction of which is recorded 35, shews that it could not have been compiled earlier than the thirteenth or fourteenth century.

The Uttara Khaṇḍa of the Bráhma P. bears still more entirely the character of a Máhámya, or local legend, being intended to celebrate the sanctity of the Balajá river, conjectured to be the same as the Banás in Marwar. There is no clue to its date, but it is clearly modern, grafting personages and fictions of its own invention on a few hints from older authorities 36.

34 Col. Vans Kennedy objects to this character of the Bráhma P., and observes that it contains only two short descriptions of pagodas, the one of Konáditya, the other of Jagannáth. In that case, his copy must differ considerably from those I have met with; for in them the description of Purushottama Kaheṭra, the holy land of Orissa, runs through forty chapters, or one-third of the work. The description, it is true, is interspersed, in the usual rambling strain of the Puráñas, with a variety of legends, some ancient, some modern; but they are intended to illustrate some local circumstance, and are therefore not incompatible with the main design, the celebration of the glories of Purushottama Kaheṭra. The specification of the temple of Jagannáth, however, is of itself sufficient, in my opinion, to determine the character and era of the compilation.

35 See Account of Orissa proper, or Cuttack, by A. Stirling, Esq.: Asiatic Res. vol. XV. p. 305.

2. Padma Purāṇa. "That which contains an account of the period when the world was a golden lotus (padma), and of all the occurrences of that time, is therefore called the Pādma by the wise: it contains fifty-five thousand stanzas." The second Purāṇa in the usual lists is always the Pādma, a very voluminous work, containing, according to its own statement, as well as that of other authorities, fifty-five thousand slokas; an amount not far from the truth. These are divided amongst five books, or Khaṇḍas; 1. the Srīshi Khaṇḍa, or section on creation; 2. the Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, description of the earth; 3. the Svarga Khaṇḍa, chapter on heaven; 4. Pātāla Khaṇḍa, chapter on the regions below the earth; and 5. the Uttara Khaṇḍa, last or supplementary chapter. There is also current a sixth division, the Kriyā Yoga Sāra, a treatise on the practice of devotion.

The denominations of these divisions of the Padma P. convey but an imperfect and partial notion of their contents. In the first, or section which treats of creation, the narrator is Ugraśravas the Sūta, the son of Lomaharshaṇa, who is sent by his father to the Rishis at Naimiharaṇya to communicate to them the Purāṇa, which, from its containing an account of the lotus (padma), in which Brahmā appeared at creation, is termed the Pādma or Padma Purāṇa. The Sūta repeats what was originally communicated by Brahmā to Pulastya, and by him to Bhīṣma. The early chapters narrate the cosmogony, and the genealogy of the patriarchal families, much in the same style, and often in the same words, as the Vishānu; and short accounts of the Manwantaras and regal dynasties: but these, which are legitimate Paurāṇik matters, soon make way for new and unauthentic inventions, illustrative of the virtues of the lake of Pushkara, or Pokher in Ajmir, as a place of pilgrimage.

The Bhūmi Khaṇḍa, or section of the earth, defers any description of the earth until near its close, filling up one hundred and twenty-seven chapters with legends of a very mixed description, some ancient and common to other Purāṇas, but the greater part peculiar to itself, illustrative of Tirthas either figuratively so termed—as a wife, a parent, or a

\[\text{\textsuperscript{37}}\text{रसरेष्टर्दा चर्मवेदकनं अति। गुरुचर्मवेदकनं प्राप्तिविद्युष्टे चुः। श्रावंघर्च पञ्चाश्चक्रं श्रावीं कामप्।} \]
Guru, considered as a sacred object—or places to which actual pilgrimage should be performed.

The Swarga Khaṇḍa describes in the first chapters the relative positions of the Lokas or spheres above the earth, placing above all Vaikuntha, the sphere of Vishnú; an addition which is not warranted by what appears to be the oldest cosmology. Miscellaneous notices of some of the most celebrated princes then succeed, conformably to the usual narratives; and these are followed by rules of conduct for the several castes, and at different stages of life. The rest of the book is occupied by legends of a diversified description, introduced without much method or contrivance; a few of which, as Daksha’s sacrifice, are of ancient date, but of which the most are original and modern.

The Páṭála Khaṇḍa devotes a brief introduction to the description of Páṭála, the regions of the snake-gods; but the name of Ráma having been mentioned, Śeṣa, who has succeeded Pulastya as spokesman, proceeds to narrate the history of Ráma, his descent and his posterity; in which the compiler seems to have taken the poem of Kálidaśa, the Raghu Vanśa, for his chief authority. An originality of addition may be suspected, however, in the adventures of the horse destined by Ráma for an Aśvamedha, which form the subject of a great many chapters. When about to be sacrificed, the horse turns out to be a Brahman, condemned by an imprecation of Durvásas, a sage, to assume the equine nature, and who, by having been sanctified by connexion with Ráma, is released from his metamorphosis, and dispatched as a spirit of light to heaven. This piece of Vaishnava fiction is followed by praises of the Śrí Bhágavata, an account of Krishná’s juvenilities, and the merits of worshipping Vishnú. These accounts are communicated through a machinery borrowed from the Tantras: they are told by Sadásiva to Párvati, the ordinary interlocutors of Tántrika compositions.

The Uttara Khaṇḍa is a most voluminous aggregation of very heterogeneous matters, but it is consistent in adopting a decidedly Vaishnava tone, and admitting no compromise with any other form of faith. The chief subjects are first discussed in a dialogue between king Dílipa and the Muni Vaśishṭha; such as the merits of bathing in the month of Māgha, and the potency of the Mantra or prayer addressed to Lakshmi Nārāyaṇa. But the nature of Bhakti, faith in Vishū—-the use of Vaishnava marks on the body—the legends of Vishū’s Avatāras, and especially of Rāma—and the construction of images of Vishū—are too important to be left to mortal discretion: they are explained by Śiva to Pārvatī, and wound up by the adoration of Vishū by those divinities. The dialogue then reverts to the king and the sage; and the latter states why Vishū is the only one of the triad entitled to respect; Śiva being licentious, Brahmā arrogant, and Vishū alone pure. Vaśishṭha then repeats, after Śiva, the Māhātmya of the Bhagavad Gītā; the merit of each book of which is illustrated by legends of the good consequences to individuals from perusing or hearing it. Other Vaishnava Māhātmyas occupy considerable portions of this Khaṇḍa, especially the Kārtika Māhātmya, or holiness of the month Kartika, illustrated as usual by stories, a few of which are of an early origin, but the greater part modern, and peculiar to this Purāṇa 39.

38 See p. 212.

The Kriyā Yoga Sāra is repeated by Sūta to the Rishis, after Vyāsa’s communication of it to Jaimini, in answer to an inquiry how religious merit might be secured in the Kali age, in which men have become incapable of the penances and abstraction by which final liberation was formerly to be attained. The answer is, of course, that which is intimated in the last book of the Vishū Purāṇa—personal devotion to Vishū: thinking of him, repeating his names, wearing his marks, worshipping in his temples, are a full substitute for all other acts of moral or devotional or contemplative merit.

The different portions of the Padma Purāṇa are in all probability as many different works, neither of which approaches to the original definition of a Purāṇa. There may be some connexion between the three first portions, at least as to time; but there is no reason to consider them as of high antiquity. They specify the Jains both by name and practices; they talk of Mlechchhas, ‘barbarians,’ flourishing in India; they commend the use of the frontal and other Vaishnava marks; and they notice other subjects which, like these, are of no remote origin. The Pāṭlā Khaṇḍa dwells copiously upon the Bhāgavata, and is consequently posterior to it. The Uttara Khaṇḍa is intolerantly Vaishnava, and is therefore unquestionably modern. It enjoins the veneration of the Sālagram stone and Tulasī plant, the use of the Tapta-mudra, or stamping with a hot iron the name of Vishū on the skin, and a variety of practices and observances undoubtedly no part of the original system. It speaks of the shrines of Śrī-rangam and Venkatadhri in the Dekhin, temples that have no pretension to remote antiquity; and it names Haripur on the Tungabhadra, which is in all likelihood the city of Vijayanagar, founded in the middle of the fourteenth century. The Kriyā Yoga Sāra is equally a modern, and apparently a Bengali composition. No portion of the Padma Purāṇa is probably older than the twelfth century, and the last parts may be as recent as the fifteenth or sixteenth.

39 One of them, the story of Jalandhara, is translated by Col. Vans Kennedy: Affinities of Ancient and Hindu Mythology, Appendix D.

2. Vishū Purāṇa. "That in which Parāśara, beginning with the events of the Varāha Kalpa, expounds all duties, is called the Vaishnava; and the learned know its extent to be twenty-three thousand stanzas." The third Purāṇa of the lists is that which has been selected for translation, the Vishū. It is unnecessary therefore to offer any general summary of its contents, and it will be convenient to reserve any remarks upon its character and probable antiquity for a subsequent page. It may here be observed, however, that the actual number of verses contained in it falls far short of the enumeration of the Matsya, with which the Bhāgavata concurs. Its actual contents are not seven thousand stanzas. All the copies, and in this instance they are not fewer than seven in number, procured both in the east and in the west of India, agree; and there is no appearance of any part being wanting. There is a beginning, a middle, and an end, in both text and comment; and the work as it stands is incontestably entire. How is the discrepancy to be explained?

40 The grounds of these conclusions are more particularly detailed in my Analysis of the Padma P.: J. R. As. Soc. vol. V. p. 285.

41 चरत्रायुतारुचारामधवजीवनीकाकणाथोऽवग्रहः। कसाकाः वर्णानवस्थान्तं हस्तेलाने बैलक्षण्ये रिख्यते।
स्वयं धर्मीश्वरे
साहसः हस्तमालयें रिख्ये।
4. "The Purāṇa in which Vāyu has declared the laws of duty, in connexion with the Śweta Kalpa, and which comprises the Māhātmya of Rudra, is the Vāyaviya Purāṇa: it contains twenty-four thousand verses." The Śiva or Saiva Purāṇa is, as above remarked, omitted in some of the lists; and in general, when that is the case, it is replaced by the Vāyu or Vāyaviya. When the Śiva is specified, as in the Bhāgavata, then the Vāyu is omitted; intimating the possible identity of these two works. This indeed is confirmed by the Matsya, which describes the Vāyaviya Purāṇa as characterised by its account of the greatness of Rudra or Śiva; and Balambhaṭṭa mentions that the Vāyaviya is also called the Śaiva, though, according to some, the latter is the name of an Upa-purāṇa. Col. Vans Kennedy observes, that in the west of India the Śaiva is commonly considered to be an Upa or 'minor' Purāṇa.

Another proof that the same work is intended by the authorities here followed, the Bhāgavata and Matsya, under different appellations, is their concurrence in the extent of the work, each specifying its verses to be twenty-four thousand. A copy of the Śiva Purāṇa, of which an index and analysis have been prepared, does not contain more than about seven thousand: it cannot therefore be the Śiva Purāṇa of the Bhāgavata; and we may safely consider that to be the same as the Vāyaviya of the Matsya.

The Vāyu Purāṇa is narrated by Śúta to the Rishis at Naimishārṇya, as it was formerly told at the same place to similar persons by Vāyu; a repetition of circumstances not uncharacteristic of the inartificial style of this Purāṇa. It is divided into four Padas, termed severally Prakriyā, Upodghāṭa, Anushanga, and Upasanhāra; a classification peculiar to this work. These are preceded by an index, or heads of chapters, in the manner of the Mahābhārata and Rāmāyaṇa; another peculiarity.

The Prakriyā portion contains but a few chapters, and treats chiefly

---

42 Commentary on the Mitākṣarā, Vya- vahāra Kaṇāa.
43 Analysis of the Vāyu Purāṇa: Journ. As. Soc. of Bengal, December 1832.
44 As Journ., March 1837, p. 242, note.
of elemental creation, and the first evolutions of beings, to the same purport as the Visháu, but in a more obscure and unmethodical style. The Upodgháta then continues the subject of creation, and describes the various Kalpas or periods during which the world has existed; a greater number of which is specified by the Śaiva than by the Vaisháváva Puráñnas. Thirty-three are here described, the last of which is the Śweta or 'white' Kalpa, from Śiva's being born in it of a white complexion. The genealogies of the patriarchs, the description of the universe, and the incidents of the first six Manwantaras, are all treated of in this part of the work; but they are intermixed with legends and praises of Śiva, as the sacrifice of Daksha, the Mahéswara Málátmya, the Nílántha Stotra, and others. The genealogies, although in the main the same as those in the Vaisháváva Puráñnas, present some variations. A long account of the Pítris or progenitors is also peculiar to this Puráña; as are stories of some of the most celebrated Rishis, who were engaged in the distribution of the Vedas.

The third division commences with an account of the seven Rishis and their descendants, and describes the origin of the different classes of creatures from the daughters of Daksha, with a profuse copiousness of nomenclature, not found in any other Puráña. With exception of the greater minuteness of detail, the particulars agree with those of the Visháu P. A chapter then occurs on the worship of the Pítris; another on Tírthas, or places sacred to them; and several on the performance of Sráddhas, constituting the Sráddha Kalpa. After this, comes a full account of the solar and lunar dynasties, forming a parallel to that in the following pages, with this difference, that it is throughout in verse, whilst that of our text, as noticed in its place, is chiefly in prose. It is extended also by the insertion of detailed accounts of various incidents, briefly noticed in the Visháu, though derived apparently from a common original. The section terminates with similar accounts of future kings, and the same chronological calculations, that are found in the Visháu.

The last portion, the Upasanhára, describes briefly the future Manwantaras, the measures of space and time, the end of the world, the efficacy of Yoga, and the glories of Śiva-pura, or the dwelling of Śiva, with whom the Yogi is to be united. The manuscript concludes with a different history of the successive teachers of the Váyu Puráṇa, tracing them from Brahmá to Váyu, from Váyu to Viśva-páti, and from him, through various deities and sages, to Dwāpáyaṇa and Śáta.

The account given of this Puráṇa in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal was limited to something less than half the work, as I had not then been able to procure a larger portion. I have now a more complete one of my own, and there are several copies in the East India Company's library of the like extent. One, presented by His Highness the Guicowar, is dated Samvat 1540, or A.D. 1483, and is evidently as old as it professes to be. The examination I have made of the work confirms the view I formerly took of it; and from the internal evidence it affords, it may perhaps be regarded as one of the oldest and most authentic specimens extant of a primitive Puráṇa.

It appears, however, that we have not yet a copy of the entire Váyu Puráṇa. The extent of it, as mentioned above, should be twenty-four thousand verses. The Guicowar MS. has but twelve thousand, and is denominated the Púrvárdha, or first portion. My copy is of the like extent. The index also shews that several subjects remain untold; as, subsequently to the description of the sphere of Śiva, and the periodical dissolution of the world, the work is said to contain an account of a succeeding creation, and of various events that occurred in it, as the birth of several celebrated Rishis, including that of Vyása, and a description of his distribution of the Vedas; an account of the enmity between Vaśishtha and Visvámitra; and a Naimisháraṇya Máhátmya. These topics are, however, of minor importance, and can scarcely carry the Puráṇa to the whole extent of the verses which it is said to contain. If the number is accurate, the index must still omit a considerable portion of the subsequent contents.

5. Śrí Bhágavata. "That in which ample details of duty are described, and which opens with (an extract from) the Gáyatri; that in which the death of the Asura Vítra is told, and in which the mortals and immortals of the Sáraswata Kalpa, with the events that then happened to them in the world, are related; that is, celebrated as the Bhágavata, and consists of eighteen thousand verses. The Bhágavata is a work of great celebrity in India, and exercises a more direct and powerful influence upon the opinions and feelings of the people than perhaps any other of the Puráñás. It is placed the fifth in all the lists; but the Padma Puráña ranks it as the eighteenth, as the extracted substance of all the rest. According to the usual specification, it consists of eighteen thousand ślokas, distributed amongst three hundred and thirty-two chapters, divided into twelve Skandhas or books. It is named Bhágavata from its being dedicated to the glorification of Bhagavat or Vishnú.
PREFACE.

xxv

The Bhágavata is communicated to the Rishis at Naimishárañya by Súta, as usual; but he only repeats what was narrated by Śuka, the son of Vyása, to Paríkshít, the king of Hastinápura, the grandson of Arjuna. Having incurred the imprecation of a hermit, by which he was sentenced to die of the bite of a venomous snake, at the expiration of seven days; the king, in preparation for this event, repairs to the banks of the Ganges; whither also come the gods and sages, to witness his death. Amongst the latter is Śuka; and it is in reply to Paríkshít’s question, what a man should do who is about to die, that he narrates the Bhágavata, as he had heard it from Vyása; for nothing secures final happiness so certainly, as to die whilst the thoughts are wholly engrossed by Vishnú.

The course of the narration opens with a cosmogony, which, although in most respects similar to that of other Puráñás, is more largely intermixed with allegory and mysticism, and derives its tone more from the Vedánta than the Sánkhya philosophy. The doctrine of active creation by the Supreme, as one with Vásudeva, is more distinctly asserted, with a more decided enunciation of the effects being resolvable into Márá, or illusion. There are also doctrinal peculiarities, highly characteristic of this Puráña; amongst which is the assertion that it was originally communicated by Brahmá to Nárada, that all men whatsoever, Hindus of every caste, and even Mlechchhas, outcastes or barbarians, might learn to have faith in Vásudeva.
PREFACE.

In the third book the interlocutors are changed to Maitreya and Vidura; the former of whom is the disciple in the Vishu Purana, the latter was the half-brother of the Kuru princes. Maitreya, again, gives an account of the Srishti-lilà, or sport of creation, in a strain partly common to the Puranas, partly peculiar; although he declares he learned it from his teacher Parásara, at the desire of Pulastya; referring thus to the fabulous origin of the Vishu Purana, and furnishing evidence of its priority. Again, however, the authority is changed, and the narrative is said to have been that which was communicated by Šesha to the Nágas. The creation of Brahmá is then described, and the divisions of time are explained. A very long and peculiar account is given of the Varáha incarnation of Vishu, which is followed by the creation of the Prajápati and Súyambhuva, whose daughter Devahutí is married to Kardda Rishi; an incident peculiar to this work, as is that which follows of the Avatára of Vishu as Kapila the son of Kardama and Devahutí, the author of the Sánkhya philosophy, which he expounds, after a Vaishnava fashion, to his mother, in the last nine chapters of this section.

The Manwantara of Súyambhuva, and the multiplication of the patriarchal families, are next described with some peculiarities of nomenclature, which are pointed out in the notes to the parallel passages of the Vishu Purana. The traditions of Dhruva, Véna, Prití, and other princes of this period, are the other subjects of the fourth Skandha, and are continued in the fifth to that of the Bhrata who obtained emancipation. The details generally conform to those of the Vishu Purana, and the same words are often employed, so that it would be difficult to determine which work had the best right to them, had not the Bhágavata itself indicated its obligations to the Vishu. The remainder of the fifth book is occupied with the description of the universe, and the same conformity with the Vishu continues.

This is only partially the case with the sixth book, which contains a variety of legends of a miscellaneous description, intended to illustrate the merit of worshipping Vishu: some of them belong to the early stock, but some are apparently novel. The seventh book is mostly occupied with the legend of Prahláda. In the eighth we have an account of the remaining Manwantaras; in which, as happening in the course of them, a variety of ancient legends are repeated, as the battle between the king of the elephants and an alligator, the churning of the ocean, and the dwarf and fish Avatáras. The ninth book narrates the dynasties of the Vaivaswata Manwantara, or the princes of the solar and lunar races to the time of Krishńa 48. The particulars conform generally with those recorded in the Vishńu.

47 See p. 5.

The tenth book is the characteristic part of this Puráná, and the portion upon which its popularity is founded. It is appropriated entirely to the history of Krishńa, which it narrates much in the same manner as the Vishńu, but in more detail; holding a middle place, however, between it and the extravagant prolixity with which the Hari Vana repeats the story. It is not necessary to particularize it farther. It has been translated into perhaps all the languages of India, and is a favourite work with all descriptions of people.

The eleventh book describes the destruction of the Yādavas, and death of Krishńa. Previous to the latter event, Krishńa instructs Udhava in the performance of the Yoga; a subject consigned by the Vishńu to the concluding passages. The narrative is much the same, but something more summary than that of the Vishńu. The twelfth book continues the lines of the kings of the Kali age prophetically to a similar period as the Vishńu, and gives a like account of the deterioration of all things, and their final dissolution. Consistently with the subject of the Puráná, the serpent Takshaka bites Parikshit, and he expires, and the work should terminate; or the close might be extended to the subsequent sacrifice of Janamejaya for the destruction of the whole serpent race. There is a rather awkwardly introduced description, however, of the arrangement of the Vedas and Puránas by Vyása, 48 A translation of the ninth, by Capt. Fell, was published in Calcutta in different numbers of the Monthly and Quarterly Magazine, in 1823 and 1824. The second volume of Maurice’s Ancient History of Hindustan contains a translation, by Mr. Halhed, of the tenth book, made through the medium of a Persian version.

and the legend of Márkaṇḍeya's interview with the infant Krishná, during a period of worldly dissolution. We then come to the end of the Bhágavata, in a series of encomiastic commendations of its own sanctity, and efficacy to salvation.

Mr. Colebrooke observes of the Bhágavata Puráña, "I am inclined to adopt an opinion supported by many learned Hindus, who consider the celebrated Śrí Bhágavata as the work of a grammarian (Vopadeva), supposed to have lived six hundred years ago. Col. Vans Kennedy considers this an incautious admission, because "it is unquestionable that the number of the Puráñas has been always held to be eighteen; but in most of the Puráñas the names of the eighteen are enumerated, amongst which the Bhágavata is invariably included; and consequently if it were composed only six hundred years ago, the others must be of an equally modern date." Some of them are no doubt more recent; but, as already remarked, no weight can be attached to the specification of the eighteen names, for they are always complete; each Puráña enumerates all. Which is the last which had the opportunity of naming its seventeen predecessors, and adding itself? The argument proves too much. There can be little doubt that the list has been inserted upon the authority of tradition, either by some improving transcriber, or by the compiler of a work more recent than the eighteen genuine Puráñas. The objection is also rebutted by the assertion, that there was another Puráña to which the name applies, and which is still to be met with, the Deví Bhágavata.

For, the authenticity of the Bhágavata is one of the few questions affecting their sacred literature which Hindu writers have ventured to discuss. The occasion is furnished by the text itself. In the fourth chapter of the first book it is said that Vyásá arranged the Vedas, and divided them into four; and that he then compiled the Itihása and Puráñas, as a fifth Veda. The Vedas he gave to Paila and the rest; the Itihása and Puráñas to Lomaharshaña, the father of Súta. Then reflecting that these works may not be accessible to women, Súdras, and mixed castes, he composed the Bhárata, for the purpose of placing religious knowledge within their reach. Still he felt dissatisfied, and wandered in much perplexity along the banks of the Saraswátí, where his hermitage was situated, when Nárada paid him a visit. Having confided to him his secret and seemingly causeless dissatisfaction, Nárada suggested that it arose from his not having sufficiently dwelt, in the works he had finished, upon the merit of worshipping Vásudeva. Vyása at once admitted its truth, and found a remedy for his uneasiness in the composition of the Bhágavata, which he taught to Šuka his son\textsuperscript{52}. Here therefore is the most positive assertion that the Bhágavata was composed subsequently to the Puráṇas, and given to a different pupil, and was not therefore one of the eighteen of which Romaharshaṅa the Súta was, according to all concurrent testimonies, the depository. Still the Bhágavata is named amongst the eighteen Puráṇas by the inspired authorities; and how can these incongruities be reconciled?

The principal point in dispute seems to have been started by an expression of Šrádhara Swámín, a commentator on the Bhágavata, who somewhat incautiously made the remark that there was no reason to suspect that by the term Bhágavata any other work than the subject of his labours was intended. This was therefore an admission that some suspicions had been entertained of the correctness of the nomenclature, and that an opinion had been expressed that the term belonged, not to the Śrí Bhágavata, but to the Deví Bhágavata; to a Śaiva, not a Vaishnava, composition. With whom doubts prevailed prior to Šrádhara Swámín, or by whom they were urged, does not appear; for, as far as we are aware, no works, anterior to his date, on which they are advanced have been met with. Subsequently, various tracts have been written on the subject. There are three in the library of the East India Company; the Durjana Mukha Chapétiká, ‘A slap of the face for the vile,’ by Rámaśrama; the Durjana Mukha Mahá Chapétiká, ‘A great slap of the face for the wicked,’ by Káśináth Bhatta; and the Durjana Mukha Padma Pádká, ‘A slipper’ for the same part of the same persons, by a \textsuperscript{52} Book I. 7, 8.

h
nameless disputant. The first maintains the authenticity of the Bhága-vata; the second asserts that the Deví Bhágavata is the genuine Puráña; and the third replies to the arguments of the first. There is also a work by Purushottama, entitled ‘Thirteen arguments for dispelling all doubts of the character of the Bhágavata’ (Bhágavata swarúpa vihsaya śanká nirása trayodasa); whilst Bálambhatta, a commentator on the Mitá-kshara, indulging in a dissertation on the meaning of the word Puráña, adduces reasons for questioning the inspired origin of this Puráña.

The chief arguments in favour of the authenticity of this Puráña are the absence of any reason why Vopadeva, to whom it is attributed, should not have put his own name to it; its being included in all lists of the Puráñas, sometimes with circumstances that belong to no other Puráña; and its being admitted to be a Puráña, and cited as authority, or made the subject of comment, by writers of established reputation, of whom Śankara Āchárya is one, and he lived long before Vopadeva.
The reply to the first argument is rather feeble, the controversialists being unwilling perhaps to admit the real object, the promotion of new doctrines. It is therefore said that Vyása was an incarnation of Nárá-yaña, and the purpose was to propitiate his favour. The insertion of a Bhágavata amongst the eighteen Puráñas is acknowledged; but this, it is said, can be the Deví Bhágavata alone, for the circumstances apply more correctly to it than to the Vaishnava Bhágavata. Thus a text is quoted by Káśináth from a Puráña—he does not state which—that says of the Bhágavata that it contains eighteen thousand verses, twelve books, and three hundred and thirty-two chapters. Káśináth asserts that the chapi-ters of the Śri Bhágavata are three hundred and thirty-five, and that the numbers apply throughout only to the Deví Bhágavata. It is also said that the Bhágavata contains an account of the acquirement of holy knowledge by Hayagríva; the particulars of the Sáraswata Kalpa; a dialogue between Ambarisha and Súka; and that it commences with the Gayatrí, or at least a citation of it. These all apply to the Deví Bhágavata alone, except the last; but it also is more true of the Śaiva than of the Vaish-náva work, for the latter has only one word of the Gayatrí, dhímahi, ‘we meditate,’ whilst the former to dhímahi adds, Yá nah prachodayát,
PREFACE.

"who may enlighten us." To the third argument it is in the first place objected, that the citation of the Bhágavata by modern writers is no test of its authenticity; and with regard to the more ancient commentary of Śankara Áchárya, it is asked, "Where is it?" Those who advocate the sanctity of the Bhágavata reply, "It was written in a difficult style, and became obsolete, and is lost." "A very unsatisfactory plea," retort their opponents, "for we still have the works of Śankara, several of which are quite as difficult as any in the Sanscrit language." The existence of this comment, too, rests upon the authority of Mádhwa or Mádhava, who in a commentary of his own asserts that he has consulted eight others. Now amongst these is one by the monkey Hanumán; and although a Hindu disputant may believe in the reality of such a composition, yet we may receive its citation as a proof that Mádhwa was not very scrupulous in the verification of his authorities.

There are other topics urged in this controversy on both sides, some of which are simple enough, some are ingenious: but the statement of the text is of itself sufficient to shew that according to the received opinion of all the authorities of the priority of the eighteen Puráñas to the Bhárata, it is impossible that the Śri Bhágavata, which is subsequent to the Bhárata, should be of the number; and the evidence of style, the superiority of which to that of the Puráñas in general is admitted by the disputants, is also proof that it is the work of a different hand. Whether the Deví Bhágavata have a better title to be considered as an original composition of Vyása, is equally questionable; but it cannot be doubted that the Śri Bhágavata is the product of uninspired erudition. There does not seem to be any other ground than tradition for ascribing it to Vopadeva the grammarian; but there is no reason to call the tradition in question. Vopadeva flourished at the court of Hemádri, Rájá of Devari, Deogur or Dowlutabad, and must consequently have lived prior to the conquest of that principality by the Mohammedans in the fourteenth century. The date of the twelfth century, commonly assigned to him, is probably correct, and is that of the Bhágavata Puráña.

6. Nárada or Naradiya Puráña. "Where Nárada has described the duties which were observed in the Vrihat Kalpa, that, is called the Nára-dīya, having twenty-five thousand stanzas. If the number of verses be here correctly stated, the Purāṇa has not fallen into my hands. The copy I have analysed contains not many more than three thousand sūkas. There is another work, which might be expected to be of greater extent, the Vrihat Nārādiya, or great Nārada Purāṇa; but this, according to the concurrence of three copies in my possession, and of five others in the Company's library, contains but about three thousand five hundred verses. It may be doubted, therefore, if the Nārada Purāṇa of the Mātsya exists.

According to the Mātsya, the Nārada Purāṇa is related by Nārada, and gives an account of the Vrihat Kalpa. The Nārādiya Purāṇa is communicated by Nārada to the Rishis at Naimishāranya, on the Gomati river. The Vrihanārādiya is related to the same persons, at the same place, by Sūta, as it was told by Nārada to Sanatkumāra. Possibly the term Vrihat may have been suggested by the specification which is given in the Mātsya; but there is no description in it of any particular Kalpa, or day of Brahmā.

From a cursory examination of these Purāṇas, it is very evident that they have no conformity to the definition of a Purāṇa, and that both are sectarian and modern compilations, intended to support the doctrine of Bhakti, or faith in Vishnū. With this view they have collected a variety of prayers addressed to one or other form of that divinity; a number of observances and holidays connected with his adoration; and different legends, some perhaps of an early, others of a more recent date, illustrative of the efficacy of devotion to Hari. Thus in the Nārada we have the stories of Dhruva and Prahlāda; the latter told in the words of the Vishnū: whilst the second portion of it is occupied with a legend of Mohini, the will-born daughter of a king called Rukmāṅgada: beguiled by whom, the king offers to perform for her whatever she may desire. She calls upon him either to violate the rule of fasting on the eleventh day of the fortnight, a day sacred to Vishńu, or to put his son to death; and he kills his son, as the lesser sin of the two. This shews the spirit of the work. Its date may also be inferred from its tenor, as such monstrous extravagancies in praise of Bhakti are certainly of modern origin. One limit it furnishes itself, for it refers to Śūka and Parikṣhit, the interlocutors of the Bhāgavata, and it is consequently subsequent to the date of that Purāṇa: it is probably considerably later, for it affords evidence that it was written after India was in the hands of the Mohammedans. In the concluding passage it is said, “Let not this Purāṇa be repeated in the presence of the ‘killers of cows’ and contemners of the gods.” It is possibly a compilation of the sixteenth or seventeenth century.

53 नन्दनवादी अधूम भक्तभाषयामधे । रंग
विनित्तसिद्धार्थीं मार्गतं तटस्थे ॥
54 The description of Vīhāru, translated by Col. Vans Kennedy (Affinity of Ancient and Hindu Mythology, p. 200) from the Nārādiya Purāṇa, occurs in my copy of the Vrihat Nārādiya. There is no Nārada Purāṇa in the East India Company's library, though, as noticed in the text, several of the Vrihat Nārādiya. There is a copy of the Rukmāṅgada Charitra, said to be a part of the Śrī Nārada Purāṇa.

The Vrihannárdiya is a work of the same tenor and time. It contains little else than panegyrical prayers addressed to Vishńu, and injunctions to observe various rites, and keep holy certain seasons, in honour of him. The earlier legends introduced are the birth of Márkaṇḍeya, the destruction of Ságra’s sons, and the dwarf Avatára; but they are subservient to the design of the whole, and are rendered occasions for praising Náráyaṇa: others, illustrating the efficacy of certain Vaishńava observances, are puerile inventions, wholly foreign to the more ancient system of Pauráṇik fiction. There is no attempt at cosmogony, or patriarchal or regal genealogy. It is possible that these topics may be treated of in the missing stanzas; but it seems more likely that the Nárada Puráṇa of the lists has little in common with the works to which its name is applied in Bengal and Hindustan.

7. Márkaṇḍeya or Márkaṇḍeśa Puráṇa. “That Puráṇa in which, commencing with the story of the birds that were acquainted with right and wrong, every thing is narrated fully by Márkaṇḍeya, as it was explained by holy sages in reply to the question of the Muni, is called the Márkaṇḍeya, containing nine thousand verses.” This is so called from its

55 ।

Digitized by Google being in the first instance narrated by Márkaṇḍeya Muni, and in the second place by certain fabulous birds; thus far agreeing with the account given of it in the Matsya. That, as well as other authorities, specify its containing nine thousand stanzas; but my copy closes with a verse affirming that the number of verses recited by the Muni was six thousand nine hundred; and a copy in the East India Company's library has a similar specification. The termination is, however, somewhat abrupt, and there is no reason why the subject with which it ends should not have been carried on farther. One copy in the Company’s library, indeed, belonging to the Guicowar’s collection, states at the close that it is the end of the first Khaṇḍa, or section. If the Purāṇa was ever completed, the remaining portion of it appears to be lost.

Jaimini, the pupil of Vṛṣaṇa, applies to Márkaṇḍeya to be made acquainted with the nature of Vāsudeva, and for an explanation of some of the incidents described in the Mahābhārata; with the ambrosia of which divine poem, Vṛṣaṇa he declares has watered the whole world: a reference which establishes the priority of the Bhārata to the Márkaṇdeya Purāṇa, however incompatible this may be with the tradition, that having finished the Purāṇas, Vṛṣaṇa wrote the poem.

Márkaṇḍeya excuses himself, saying he has a religious rite to perform; and he refers Jaimini to some very sapient birds, who reside in the Vindhyā mountains; birds of a celestial origin, found, when just born, by the Muni Śamīka, on the field of Kurukshetra, and brought up by him along with his scholars: in consequence of which, and by virtue of their heavenly descent, they became profoundly versed in the Vedas, and a knowledge of spiritual truth. This machinery is borrowed from the Mahābhārata, with some embellishment. Jaimini accordingly has recourse to the birds, Pingāksha and his brethren, and puts to them the questions he had asked of the Muni. "Why was Vāsudeva born as a mortal? How was it that Draupadī was the wife of the five Pāṇḍus?
Why did Baladeva do penance for Brahmānicide? and why were the children of Draupadī destroyed, when they had Krishnā and Arjuna to defend them?" The answers to these inquiries occupy a number of chapters, and form a sort of supplement to the Mahābhārata; supplying, partly by invention, perhaps, and partly by reference to equally ancient authorities, the blanks left in some of its narrations.

Legends of Vritrásura's death, Baladeva's penance, Haríśchandra's elevation to heaven, and the quarrel between Vaśishtha and Visvámitra, are followed by a discussion respecting birth, death, and sin; which leads to a more extended description of the different hells than is found in other Puráñas. The account of creation which is contained in this work is repeated by the birds after Márkaśinga's account of it to Kroshtuki, and is confined to the origin of the Vedas and patriarchal families, amongst whom are new characters, as Duhsaha and his wife Márahti, and their descendants; allegorical personages, representing intolerable iniquity and its consequences. There is then a description of the world, with, as usual to this Purána, several singularities, some of which are noticed in the following pages. This being the state of the world in the Swáyambhuva Manwantara, an account of the other Manwantaras succeeds, in which the births of the Manus, and a number of other particulars, are peculiar to this work. The present or Vaivaswata Manwantara is very briefly passed over; but the next, the first of the future Manwantaras, contains the long episodical narrative of the actions of the goddess Durgá, which is the especial boast of this Purána, and is the text-book of the worshippers of Káli, Chañdí, or Durgá, in Bengal. It is the Chañdí Pátha, or Durgá Máhátya, in which the victories of the goddess over different evil beings, or Asuras, are detailed with considerable power and spirit. It is read daily in the temples of Durgá, and furnishes the pomp and circumstance of the great festival of Bengal, the Durgá pujá, or public worship of that goddess 56.

After the account of the Manwantaras is completed, there follows a series of legends, some new, some old, relating to the sun and his posterity; continued to Vaivaswata Manu and his sons, and their immediate descendants; terminating with Dama, the son of Narishyanta 57. Of most of the persons noticed, the work narrates particulars not found elsewhere.

56 A translation into English by a Madras Pandit, Kávali Venkata Rámaswámi, was published at Calcutta in 1823.
57 See Visháú P., p. 253. n. 22.
This Purāṇa has a character different from that of all the others. It has nothing of a sectarial spirit, little of a religious tone, rarely inserting prayers and invocations to any deity, and such as are inserted are brief and moderate. It deals little in precepts, ceremonial or moral. Its leading feature is narrative, and it presents an uninterrupted succession of legends, most of which, when ancient, are embellished with new circumstances; and when new, partake so far of the spirit of the old, that they are disinterested creations of the imagination, having no particular motive; being designed to recommend no special doctrine or observance. Whether they are derived from any other source, or whether they are original inventions, it is not possible to ascertain. They are most probably, for the greater part at least, original; and the whole has been narrated in the compiler's own manner, a manner superior to that of the Purāṇas in general, with exception of the Bhāgavata.

It is not easy to conjecture a date for this Purāṇa: it is subsequent to the Mahābhārata, but how long subsequent is doubtful. It is unquestionably more ancient than such works as the Brahmā, Padma, and Nārādiya Purāṇas; and its freedom from sectarial bias is a reason for supposing it anterior to the Bhāgavata. At the same time, its partial conformity to the definition of a Purāṇa, and the tenor of the additions which it has made to received legends and traditions, indicate a not very remote age; and, in the absence of any guide to a more positive conclusion, it may conjecturally be placed in the ninth or tenth century.

8. Agni Purāṇa. "That Purāṇa which describes the occurrences of the Īśāna Kalpa, and was related by Agni to Vāishātha, is called the Āgneya: it consists of sixteen thousand stanzas. 58” The Agni or Agneya Purāṇa derives its name from its having being communicated originally by Agni, the deity of fire, to the Muni Vāishātha, for the purpose of instructing him in the twofold knowledge of Brahma. 59 By him it was taught to Vyāsa, who imparted it to Śūta; and the latter is represented as repeating it to the Rishis at Naimishārāṇya. Its contents are variously specified as sixteen thousand, fifteen thousand, or fourteen thousand 58 श्रवणवाचनवश्चक्कालवाचनवश्चक्कालवाचन; विभक्तवाचनवश्चक्कालवाचनवश्चक्कालवाचनवश्चक्कालवाचनवश्चक्कालवाचनवश्चक्कालवाचनवश्चक्कालवाचनवश्च. 59 See p. 642.

PREFACE.

stanzas. The two copies which were employed by me contain about fifteen thousand ślokas. There are two in the Company's library, which do not extend beyond twelve thousand verses; but they are in many other respects different from mine: one of them was written at Agra, in the reign of Akbar, in A.D. 1589.

The Agni Purāṇa, in the form in which it has been obtained in Bengal and at Benares, presents a striking contrast to the Mārkaṇḍeya. It may be doubted if a single line of it is original. A very great proportion of it may be traced to other sources; and a more careful collation—if the task was worth the time it would require—would probably discover the remainder.

The early chapters of this Purāṇa describe the Avatāras; and in those of Rāma and Krishnā avowedly follow the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata. A considerable portion is then appropriated to instructions for the performance of religious ceremonies; many of which belong to the Tāntrika ritual, and are apparently transcribed from the principal authorities of that system. Some belong to mystical forms of Śaiva worship, little known in Hindustan, though perhaps still practised in the south. One of these is the Dīkṣā, or initiation of a novice; by which, with numerous ceremonies and invocations, in which the mysterious monosyllables of the Tantras are constantly repeated, the disciple is transformed into a living personation of Śiva, and receives in that capacity the homage of his Guru. Interspersed with these, are chapters descriptive of the earth and of the universe, which are the same as those of the Vishnū Purāṇa; and Māhāmyas or legends of holy places, particularly of Gaya. Chapters on the duties of kings, and on the art of war, then occur, which have the appearance of being extracted from some older work, as is undoubtedly the chapter on judicature, which follows them, and which is the same as the text of the Mitākshara. Subsequent to these, we have an account of the distribution and arrangement of the Vedas and Purāṇas, which is little else than an abridgment of the 60 Analysis of the Agni Purāṇa: Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, March 1832. I have there stated incorrectly that the Agni is a Vaishnava Purāṇa; it is one of the Tāmāsa or Śaiva class, as mentioned above.

Vishāku: and in a chapter on gifts we have a description of the Purāṇas, which is precisely the same, and in the same situation, as the similar subject in the Matsya Purāṇa. The genealogical chapters are meagre lists, differing in a few respects from those commonly received, as hereafter noticed, but unaccompanied by any particulars, such as those recorded or invented in the Mārkaṇḍeya. The next subject is medicine, compiled avowedly, but injudiciously, from the Sāuṣruta. A series of chapters on the mystic worship of Śiva and Devī follows; and the work winds up with treatises on rhetoric, prosody, and grammar, according to the Sāstras of Pingala and Pāṇini.

The cyclopædical character of the Agni Purāṇa, as it is now described, excludes it from any legitimate claims to be regarded as a Purāṇa, and proves that its origin cannot be very remote. It is subsequent to the Itihāsas; to the chief works on grammar, rhetoric, and medicine; and to the introduction of the Tāṇtrika worship of Devī. When this latter took place is yet far from determined, but there is every probability that it dates long after the beginning of our era. The materials of the Agni Purāṇa are, however, no doubt of some antiquity. The medicine of Saṃsāra is considerably older than the ninth century; and the grammar of Pāṇini probably precedes Christianity. The chapters on archery and arms, and on regal administration, are also distinguished by an entirely Hindu character, and must have been written long anterior to the Mohammedan invasion. So far the Agni Purāṇa is valuable, as embodying and preserving relics of antiquity, although compiled at a more recent date.

Col. Wilford 61 has made great use of a list of kings derived from an appendix to the Agni Purāṇa, which professes to be the sixty-third or last section. As he observes, it is seldom found annexed to the Purāṇa. I have never met with it, and doubt its ever having formed any part of the original compilation. It would appear from Col. Wilford's remarks, that this list notices Mohammed as the institutor of an era; but his account of this is not very distinct. He mentions explicitly, however, that the list speaks of Śālivāhana and Vikramāditya; and this is quite sufficient to establish its character. The compilers of the Purāṇas were not such bunglers as to bring within their chronology so well known a personage as Vikramāditya. There are in all parts of India various compilations ascribed to the Purāṇas, which never formed any portion of their contents, and which, although offering sometimes useful local information, and valuable as preserving popular traditions, are not in justice to be confounded with the Purāṇas, so as to cause them to be charged with even more serious errors and anachronisms than those of which they are guilty.

The two copies of this work in the library of the East India Company appropriate the first half to a description of the ordinary and occasional observances of the Hindus, interspersed with a few legends: the latter half treats exclusively of the history of Rāma.

9. Bhavishya Purāṇa. "The Purāṇa in which Brahmā, having described the greatness of the sun, explained to Manu the existence of the world, and the characters of all created things, in the course of the Aghora Kalpa; that, is called the Bhavishya, the stories being for the most part the events of a future period. It contains fourteen thousand five hundred stanzas." This Purāṇa, as the name implies, should be a book of prophecies, foretelling what will be (bhavishyati), as the Matsya Purāṇa intimates. Whether such a work exists is doubtful. The copies, which appear to be entire, and of which there are three in the library of the East India Company, agreeing in their contents with two in my possession, contain about seven thousand stanzas. There is another work, entitled the Bhavishyottara, as if it was a continuation or supplement of the former, containing also about seven thousand verses; but the subjects of both these works are but to a very imperfect degree analogous to those to which the Matsya alludes.

The Bhavishya Purāṇa, as I have it, is a work in a hundred and

---

62 पृथ्विप्राणाय नामादिश्वर चद्धुरसः। चरोर क्रुद्धुरसासरकोर्ष भविष्योऽवेद न।
वालय तम्बेय चद्धुरसासरकोर्ष तथा भविष्योऽवेदि च ।
महिष्य धर्माभिश भविष्योऽवेदिः हृदये।

63 Col. Vans Kennedy states that he had not been able to procure the Bhavishya P., nor even ever to obtain any account of its contents: Anc. and Hindu Mythology, p. 153, note.
twenty-six short chapters, repeated by Sumantu to Šatánika, a king of the Pañḍu family. He notices, however, its having originated with Swayambhu or Brahmá; and describes it as consisting of five parts;
four dedicated, it should seem, to as many deities, as they are termed, Brahmá, Vaishnava, Šaiva, and Twáshtra; whilst the fifth is the Pratisarga, or repeated creation. Possibly the first part only may have come into my hands, although it does not so appear by the manuscript.

Whatever it may be, the work in question is not a Puráña. The first portion, indeed, treats of creation; but it is little else than a transcript of the words of the first chapter of Manu. The rest is entirely a manual of religious rites and ceremonies. It explains the ten Sanskáras, or initiatory rites; the performance of the Sandhya; the reverence to be shewn to a Guru; the duties of the different Ásramas and castes; and enjoins a number of Vratas, or observances of fasting and the like, appropriate to different lunar days. A few legends enliven the series of precepts. That of the sage Chyavana is told at considerable length, taken chiefly from the Mahábhárata. The Nága Panchami, or fifth lunciation, sacred to the serpent-gods, gives rise to a description of different sorts of snakes. After these, which occupy about one-third of the chapters, the remainder of them conform in subject to one of the topics referred to by the Matsya.
They chiefly represent conversations between Krishná, his son Śámba, who had become a leper by the curse of Durvásas, Vaśishtha, Nárada, and Vyásá, upon the power and glory of the sun, and the manner in which he is to be worshipped. There is some curious matter in the last chapters, relating to the Magas, silent worshippers of the sun, from Sákadwipa, as if the compiler had adopted the Persian term Magh, and con-ected the fire-worshippers of Iran with those of India. This is a subject, however, that requires farther investigation.

The Bhavishyottara is, equally with the preceding, a sort of manual of religious offices, the greater portion being appropriated to Vratas, and the remainder to the forms and circumstances with which gifts are to be presented. Many of the ceremonies are obsolete, or are observed in a different manner, as the Rath-yátra, or car festival; and the Madanots-sava, or festival of spring. The descriptions of these throw some light upon the public condition of the Hindu religion at a period probably prior to the Mohammedan conquest. The different ceremonies are illustrated by legends, which are sometimes ancient, as, for instance, the destruction of the god of love by Śiva, and his thence becoming Ananga, the disembodied lord of hearts. The work is supposed to be communicated by Krishñá to Yudhishthíra, at a great assemblage of holy persons at the coronation of the latter, after the conclusion of the great war.

10. Brahma-vaiśvāmī Purāṇa. "That Purāṇa which is related by Sávarná to Nárada, and contains the account of the greatness of Krishñá, with the occurrences of the Rathantara Kalpa, where also the story of Brahma-varáha is repeatedly told, is called the Brahma-vaiśvāmī, and contains eighteen thousand stanzas." The account here given of the Brahma-vaiśvāmī Purāṇa agrees with its present state as to its extent. The copies rather exceed than fall short of eighteen thousand stanzas. It also correctly represents its comprising a Máhámya or legend of Krishñá; but it is very doubtful, nevertheless, if the same work is intended.

The Brahma-vaiśvāmī, as it now exists, is narrated, not by Sávarná, but the Rishi Náráyaña to Nárada, by whom it is communicated to Vyása: he teaches it to Súta, and the latter repeats it to the Rishis at Naimishárayáya. It is divided into four Khañdas, or books; the Bráhma, Prakriti, Ganesá, and Krishñá Janma Khañdas; dedicated severally to describe the acts of Brahmá, Deví, Ganesá, and Krishñá; the latter, however, throughout absorbing the interest and importance of the work. In none of these is there any account of the Varáha Avatára of Vishnu, which seems to be intended by the Matsya; nor any reference to a Rathantara Kalpa. It may also be observed, that, in describing the merit of presenting a copy of this Puráṇa, the Matsya adds, "Whoever makes such gift, is honoured in the Brahma-loka;" a sphere which is of very inferior dignity to that to which a worshipper of Krishñá is taught to aspire by this Puráṇa. The character of the work is in truth so decidedly sectarial, and the sect to which it belongs so distinctly marked, that of the worshippers of the juvenile Krishná and Rádhá, a form of belief of known modern origin, that it can scarcely have found a notice in a work to which, like the Matsya, a much more remote date seems to belong. Although therefore the Matsya may be received in proof of there having been a Brahma-vaivartta Purána at the date of its compilation, dedicated especially to the honour of Krishná, yet we cannot credit the possibility of its being the same we now possess.

Although some of the legends believed to be ancient are scattered through the different portions of this Purána, yet the great mass of it is taken up with tiresome descriptions of Vrindavan and Goloka, the dwellings of Krishná on earth and in heaven; with endless repetitions of prayers and invocations addressed to him; and with insipid descriptions of his person and sports, and the love of the Gopíś and of Rádhá towards him. There are some particulars of the origin of the artificer castes, which is of value because it is cited as authority in matters affecting them, contained in the Bráhma Khańda; and in the Prákrita and Ganeśa Khańdas are legends of those divinities, not wholly, perhaps, modern inventions, but of which the source has not been traced. In the life of Krishná the incidents recorded are the same as those narrated in the Vishnú and the Bhágavata; but the stories, absurd as they are, are much compressed to make room for original matter, still more puerile and tiresome. The Brahma-vaivartta has not the slightest title to be regarded as a Purána.

11. Linga Purána. "Where Maheśwara, present in the Agni Linga, explained (the objects of life) virtue, wealth, pleasure, and final liberation at the end of the Agni Kalpa, that Purána, consisting of eleven thousand stanzas, was called the Lainga by Brahmá himself.

The Linga Purána conforms accurately enough to this description. The Kalpa is said to be the Isána, but this is the only difference. It consists of eleven thousand stanzas. It is said to have been originally composed by Brahmá; and the primitive Linga is a pillar of radiance, 65 Analysis of the Brahma-vaivartta Purána: Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, June 1832.

66 वचनार्थिके त्र्यम्बकमेवसमायां यस्मादपर्वत तत्स्यामायनां पुराणां तत्स्य साहित्यम्। in which Maheśwara is present. The work is therefore the same as that referred to by the Matsya.

A short account is given, in the beginning, of elemental and secondary creation, and of the patriarchal families; in which, however, Śiva takes the place of Vishńu, as the indescribable cause of all things. Brief accounts of Śiva’s incarnations and proceedings in different Kalpas next occur, offering no interest except as characteristic of sectarian notions. The appearance of the great fiery Linga takes place, in the interval of a creation, to separate Vishńu and Brahmá, who not only dispute the palm of supremacy, but fight for it; when the Linga suddenly springs up, and puts them both to shame; as, after travelling upwards and downwards for a thousand years in each direction, neither can approach to its termination. Upon the Linga the sacred monosyllable Om is visible, and the Vedas proceed from it, by which Brahmá and Vishńu become enlightened, and acknowledge and eulogize the superior might and glory of Śiva.

A notice of the creation in the Padma Kalpa then follows, and this leads to praises of Śiva by Vishńu and Brahmá. Śiva repeats the story of his incarnations, twenty-eight in number; intended as a counterpart, no doubt, to the twenty-four Avatáras of Vishńu, as described in the Bhágavata; and both being amplifications of the original ten Avatáras, and of much less merit as fictions. Another instance of rivalry occurs in the legend of Dadhíchi, a Muni and worshipper of Śiva. In the Bhágavata there is a story of Ambarísha being defended against Durvásas by the discus of Vishńu, against which that Śaiva sage is helpless: here Vishńu hurls his discus at Dadhíchi, but it falls blunted to the ground, and a conflict ensues, in which Vishńu and his partisans are all overthrown by the Muni.

A description of the universe, and of the regal dynasties of the Vaiśwānāta Manvantara to the time of Krishńa, runs through a number of chapters, in substance, and very commonly in words, the same as in other Puráṇas. After which, the work resumes its proper character, narrating legends, and enjoining rites, and reciting prayers, intending to do honour to Śiva under various forms. Although, however, the Linga holds a prominent place amongst them, the spirit of the worship is as little influenced by the character of the type as can well be imagined. There is nothing like the phallic orgies of antiquity: it is all mystical and spiritual. The Linga is twofold, external and internal. The ignorant, who need a visible sign, worship Śiva through a 'mark' or 'type'—which is the proper meaning of the word 'Linga'—of wood or stone; but the wise look upon this outward emblem as nothing, and contemplate in their minds the invisible, inscrutable type, which is Śiva himself. Whatever may have been the origin of this form of worship in India, the notions upon which it was founded, according to the impure fancies of European writers, are not to be traced in even the Śaiva Purāṇas.

Data for conjecturing the era of this work are defective, but it is more of a ritual than a Purāṇa, and the Paurāṇik chapters which it has inserted, in order to keep up something of its character, have been evidently borrowed for the purpose. The incarnations of Śiva, and their 'pupils,' as specified in one place, and the importance attached to the practice of the Yoga, render it possible that under the former are intended those teachers of the Śaiva religion who belong to the Yoga school\(^6\), which seems to have flourished about the eighth or ninth centuries. It is not likely that the work is earlier, it may be considerably later. It has preserved apparently some Śaiva legends of an early date, but the greater part is ritual and mysticism of comparatively recent introduction.

12. Varāha Purāṇa. " That in which the glory of the great Varāha is predominant, as it was revealed to Earth by Vishnū, in connexion, wise Munis, with the Mānavā Kalpa, and which contains twenty-four thousand verses, is called the Vārāha Purāṇa\(^6\)."

It may be doubted if the Varāha Purāṇa of the present day is here intended. It is narrated by Vishnū as Varāha, or in the boar incarnation, to the personified Earth. Its extent, however, is not half that specified, little exceeding ten thousand stanzas. It furnishes also itself

\(^{63}\) See Asiatic Researches, vol. XVII.
\(^{64}\) महानारास्थुपिंपेराहस्यकिर्कुलिषः । भाग्यं प्रहमेन
कतास्य गुणिकामः । शास्त्रिस्मयःशाल्यति शतुर्किलिः होष्ठे॥
evidence of the prior currency of some other work, similarly denominated; as, in the description of Mathurá contained in it, Sumantu, a Muni, is made to observe, “The divine Varáha in former times expounded a Puránya, for the purpose of solving the perplexity of Earth.”

Nor can the Varáha Puráña be regarded as a Puránya agreeably to the common definition, as it contains but a few scattered and brief allusions to the creation of the world, and the reign of kings: it has no detailed genealogies either of the patriarchal or regal families, and no account of the reigns of the Manus. Like the Linga Puráña, it is a religious manual, almost wholly occupied with forms of prayer, and rules for devotional observances, addressed to Vishú; interspersed with legendary illustrations, most of which are peculiar to itself, though some are taken from the common and ancient stock: many of them, rather incompatibly with the general scope of the compilation, relate to the history of Śiva and Durgá. A considerable portion of the work is devoted to descriptions of various Tirthas, places of Vaishávya pilgrimage; and one of Mathurá enters into a variety of particulars relating to the shrines of that city, constituting the Mathurá Máhátmyam.

In the sectarianism of the Varáha Puráña there is no leaning to the particular adoration of Krishúna, nor are the Rath-yátra and Janmá-shá- tamá included amongst the observances enjoined. There are other indications of its belonging to an earlier stage of Vaishávya worship, and it may perhaps be referred to the age of Rámánuja, the early part of the twelfth century.

13. Skanda Puráña. “The Skanda Puráña is that in which the six-faced deity (Skanda) has related the events of the Tatpurusha Kalpa, enlarged with many tales, and subservient to the duties taught by Maheśwara. It is said to contain eighty-one thousand one hundred stanzas: so it is ascertained amongst mankind.”

69 One of these is translated by Col. Vans Kennedy, the origin of the three Saktis, or goddesses, Saraswáti, Lakshmi, and Párvati. Ancient and Hindu Mythology, p. 209. The Tri Sakti Máhátmya occurs, as he gives it, in my copy, and is so far an indication of the identity of the Varáha Puránya in the different MSS.

70 यज्ञीयंत्रां त्रिवीणिमाहोत्कल्प च स्यातं। कते सन्तोषेः नृषि सूर्यस्त्रिमण्डि द्वितीय। त्रिवीणिमाहोत्कल्प च रवित्वमर्यादां च सहस्राणां श्रीमािविनितं नििमेयं। एवम्।
It is uniformly agreed that the Skanda Puráña in a collective form has no existence; and the fragments in the shape of Sanhitás, Khaúdás, and Máchátryas, which are affirmed in various parts of India to be portions of the Puráña, present a much more formidable mass of stanzas than even the immense number of which it is said to consist. The most celebrated of these portions in Hindustan is the Káśí Khaúdá, a very minute description of the temples of Śiva in or adjacent to Benares, mixed with directions for worshipping Maheśwara, and a great variety of legends explanatory of its merits, and of the holiness of Káśí: many of them are puerile and uninteresting, but some are of a higher character. The story of Agastya records probably, in a legendary style, the propagation of Hinduism in the south of India: and in the history of Divodásá, king of Káśí, we have an embellished tradition of the temporary depression of the worship of Śiva, even in its metropolis, before the ascendency of the followers of Buddha. There is every reason to believe the greater part of the contents of the Káśí Khaúdá anterior to the first attack upon Benares by Mahmud of Ghizni. The Káśí Khaúdá alone contains fifteen thousand stanzas.

Another considerable work ascribed in upper India to the Skanda Puráña is the Utkala Khaúdá, giving an account of the holiness of Urissa, and the Kshetra of Purushottama or Jagannátha. The same vicinage is the site of temples, once of great magnificence and extent, dedicated to Śiva, as Bhuvaneswara, which forms an excuse for attaching an account of a Vaishává Tirtha to an eminently Śaiva Puráña. There can be little doubt, however, that the Utkala Khaúdá is unwarrantably included amongst the progeny of the parent work. Besides these, there is a Brahmottara Khaúdá, a Revá Khaúdá, a Śiva Rahasya Khaúdá, a Himavat Khaúdá, and others. Of the Sanhitás, the chief are the Súta Sanhitá, Sanatkumárā Sanhitá, Saura Sanhitá, and Kapila Sanhitá: there are several other works denominated Sanhitás.

---

71 The legend is translated by Col. Vans Kennedy: Ancient and Hindu Mythology, Appendix B.

72 In a list of reputed portions of the Skanda Puráña in the possession of my friend Mr. C. P. Brown, of the Civil service of Madras, the Sanhitás are seven, the Khaúdás twelve, besides parts deno-Máhátmyas are more numerous still. According to the Súta Sanhitá, as quoted by Col. Vans Kennedy, the Skanda Puráña contains six Sanhitás, five hundred Khañdás, and five hundred thousand stanzas; more than is even attributed to all the Puráñas. He thinks, judging from internal evidence, that all the Khañdás and Sanhitás may be admitted to be genuine, though the Máhátmyas have rather a questionable appearance. Now one kind of internal evidence is the quantity; and as no more than eighty-one thousand one hundred stanzas have ever been claimed for it, all in excess above that amount must be questionable. But many of the Khañdás, like the Káśi Khañdá for instance, are quite as local as the Máhátmyas, being legendary stories relating to the erection and sanctity of certain temples or groups of temples, and to certain Lingas; the interested origin of which renders them very reasonably objects of suspicion. In the present state of our acquaintance with the reputed portions of the Skanda Puráña, my own views of their authenticity are so opposed to those entertained by Col. Vans Kennedy, that instead of admitting all the Sanhitás and Khañdás to be genuine, I doubt if any one of them was ever a part of the Skanda Puráña.

14. Vámana Puráña. "That in which the four-faced Brahmá taught the three objects of existence, as subservient to the account of the greatness of Trivikrama, which treats also of the Śiva Kalpa, and which consists of ten thousand stanzas, is called the Vámana Puráña."

The Vámana Puráña contains an account of the dwarf incarnation of Viṣhńu; but it is related by Pulastya to Nárada, and extends to but about seven thousand stanzas. Its contents can scarcely establish its claim to the character of a Puráña.

minated Gítá, Kalpa, Stotra, &c. In the collection of Col. Mackenzie, amongst the Máhátmyas thirty-six are said to belong to the Skanda P.: vol. I. p. 61. In the library at the India House are two Sanhitás, the Súta and Sanatkumára, fourteen Khañdás, and twelve Máhátmyas.

74 From the extracts from the Vámana Puráña translated by Col. Vans Kennedy, p. 293 et seq., it appears that his copy so far corresponds with mine, and the work is therefore probably the same: two copies in the Company's library also agree with mine.
There is little or no order in the subjects which this work recapitulates, and which arise out of replies made by Pulastya to questions put abruptly and unconnectedly by Nárada. The greater part of them relate to the worship of the Linga; a rather strange topic for a Vaishnava Puráña, but engrossing the principal part of the compilation. They are however subservient to the object of illustrating the sanctity of certain holy places; so that the Vámana Puráña is little else than a succession of Māhātmyas. Thus in the opening almost of the work occurs the story of Daksha’s sacrifice, the object of which is to send Śiva to Pápmochana tīrtha at Benares, where he is released from the sin of Brahmanicide. Next comes the story of the burning of Kámadeva, for the purpose of illustrating the holiness of a Śiva-linga at Kedareswara in the Himalaya, and of Badarikáśrama. The larger part of the work consists of the Saro-máhātmya, or legendary exemplifications of the holiness of Sthánu tīrtha; that is, of the sanctity of various Lingas and certain pools at Thanesar and Kurukhet, the country north-west from Delhi. There are some stories also relating to the holiness of the Godávari river; but the general site of the legends is in Hindustan. In the course of these accounts we have a long narrative of the marriage of Śiva with Umá, and the birth of Kártikeya. There are a few brief allusions to creation and the Manwantaras, but they are merely incidental; and all the five characteristics of a Puráña are deficient. In noticing the Svárochisha Manwantara, towards the end of the book, the elevation of Bali as monarch of the Daityas, and his subjugation of the universe, the gods included, are described; and this leads to the narration that gives its title to the Puráña, the birth of Krishña as a dwarf, for the purpose of humiliating Bali by fraud, as he was invincible by force. The story is told as usual, but the scene is laid at Kurukshetra.

A more minute examination of this work than that which has been given to it might perhaps discover some hint from which to conjecture its date. It is of a more tolerant character than the Puráñas, and divides its homage between Śiva and Vishnú with tolerable impartiality. It is not connected, therefore, with any sectarian principles, and may have preceded their introduction. It has not, however, the air of any antiquity, and its compilation may have amused the leisure of some Brahman of Benares three or four centuries ago.

15. Kúrma Puráña. "That in which Jánárdana, in the form of a tortoise, in the regions under the earth, explained the objects of life—duty, wealth, pleasure, and liberation—in communication with Indradyumna and the Rishis in the proximity of Sakra, which refers to the Lakshmi Kalpa, and contains seventeen thousand stanzas, is the Kúrma Puráña."

In the first chapter of the Kúrma Puráña it gives an account of itself, which does not exactly agree with this description. Súta, who is repeating the narration, is made to say to the Rishis, "This most excellent Kaurma Puráña is the fifteenth. Sanhitás are fourfold, from the variety of the collections. The Bráhmí, Bhágavatí, Saurí, and Vaishnaví, are well known as the four Sanhitás which confer virtue, wealth, pleasure, and liberation. This is the Bráhmí Sanhitá, conformable to the four Vedas; in which there are six thousand ślokas, and by it the importance of the four objects of life, O great sages, holy knowledge and Paramáwará is known." There is an irreconcilable difference in this specification of the number of stanzas and that given above. It is not very clear what is meant by a Sanhitá as here used. A Sanhitá, as observed above (p. xi), is something different from a Puráña. It may be an assemblage of prayers and legends, extracted professedly from a Puráña, but is not usually applicable to the original. The four Sanhitás here specified refer rather to their religious character than to their connexion with any specific work, and in fact the same terms are applied to what are called Sanhitás of the Skánda. In this sense a Puráña might be also a Sanhitá; that is, it might be an assemblage of formulæ and legends belonging to a division of the Hindu system; and the work in question, like the Vishúu Puráña, does adopt both titles. It says, "This is the excellent Kaurma Puráña, the fifteenth (of the series);" and again, "This is the Bráhmí Sanhitá." At any rate, no other work has been met with pretending to be the Kúrma Puráña.

76 मप्रसीचाः सन्निधिः सा ह करारे । न म हारे मप्रसीच गुणविधिः । निविंद्युत सर्वप्रक्षुणि परिवर्तिः
With regard to the other particulars specified by the Matsya, traces of them are to be found. Although in two accounts of the traditional communication of the Puráṇa, no mention is made of Vishnú as one of the teachers, yet Śúta repeats at the outset a dialogue between Vishnú, as the Kúrma, and Indradyumna, at the time of the churning of the ocean; and much of the subsequent narrative is put into the mouth of the former.

The name, being that of an Avatára of Vishnú, might lead us to expect a Vaishnava work; but it is always and correctly classed with the Śaiva Puráṇas, the greater portion of it inculcating the worship of Śiva and Durgá. It is divided into two parts, of nearly equal length. In the first part, accounts of the creation, of the Avatáras of Vishnú, of the solar and lunar dynasties of the kings to the time of Krushná, of the universe, and of the Manwantaras, are given, in general in a summary manner, but not unfrequently in the words employed in the Vishnú Puráṇa. With these are blended hymns addressed to Maheśwara by Brahmá and others; the defeat of Andhakásura by Bhairava; the origin of four Śaktás, Maheśwari, Śivá, Śatí, and Haimavatí, from Śiva; and other Śaiva legends. One chapter gives a more distinct and connected account of the incarnations of Śiva in the present age than the Linga; and it wears still more the appearance of an attempt to identify the teachers of the Yoga school with personations of their preferential deity. Several chapters form a Káši Mábātya, a legend of Benares. In the second part there are no legends. It is divided into two parts, the Īśvara Gíta77 and Vyása Gíta. In the former the knowledge of god, that is, of Śiva, through contemplative devotion, is taught. In the latter the same object is enjoined through works, or observance of the ceremonies and precepts of the Vedas.

The date of the Kúrma Puráṇa cannot be very remote, for it is avowedly posterior to the establishment of the Tántrika, the Šákta, and the Jain sects. In the twelfth chapter it is said, “The Bhairava, Váma, Árñata, and Yámalesa Śástras are intended for delusion.” There is no reason to believe that the Bhairava and Yāmala Tantras are very ancient works, or that the practices of the left-hand Śāktas, or the doctrines of Arhat or Jina were known in the early centuries of our era.

77 This is also translated by Col. Vans Kennedy (Anc. and Hindu Mythol., Appendix D. p. 444); and in this instance, as in other passages quoted by him from the Kúrma, his MS. and mine agree.

16. Matsya Purāṇa. "That in which, for the sake of promulgating the Vedas, Vishṇu, in the beginning of a Kalpa, related to Manu the story of Narasimha and the events of seven Kalpas, that, O sages, know to be the Matsya Purāṇa, containing twenty thousand stanzas."

We might, it is to be supposed, admit the description which the Matsya gives of itself to be correct, and yet as regards the number of verses there seems to be a mistatement. Three very good copies, one in my possession, one in the Company's library, and one in the Radcliffe library, concur in all respects, and in containing no more than between fourteen and fifteen thousand stanzas: in this case the Bhāgavata is nearer the truth, when it assigns to it fourteen thousand. We may conclude, therefore, that the reading of the passage is in this respect erroneous. It is correctly said that the subjects of the Purāṇa were communicated by Vishṇu, in the form of a fish, to Manu.

The Purāṇa, after the usual prologue of Sūta and the Rishis, opens with the account of the Matsya or 'fish' Avatāra of Vishṇu, in which he preserves a king named Manu, with the seeds of all things, in an ark, from the waters of that inundation which in the season of a Pralaya overspreads the world. This story is told in the Mahābhārata, with reference to the Matsya as its authority; from which it might be inferred that the Purāṇa was prior to the poem. This of course is consistent with the tradition that the Purāṇas were first composed by Vyāsa; but there can be no doubt that the greater part of the Mahābhārata is much older than any extant Purāṇa. The present instance is itself a proof; for the primitive simplicity with which the story of the fish Avatāra is told in the Mahābhārata is of a much more antique complexion than the mysticism and extravagance of the actual Matsya Purāṇa. In the former, Manu collects the seeds of existing things in the ark, it is not said how; in the latter, he brings them all together by the power of Yoga.

78 भूमिज्ञ यथा वर्मी वर्गाधिकार साक्षे वर्गाधिकार संभव वर्गाधिकार संभवताः। तदाधिकारिणि भानी तदाधिकारिणि भानी धर्म नवरत्रियस्य जयं जयं तिन्त्रिः॥
In the latter, the great serpents come to the king, to serve as cords wherewith to fasten the ark to the horn of the fish: in the former, a cable made of ropes is more intelligibly employed for the purpose.

Whilst the ark floats, fastened to the fish, Manu enters into conversation with him; and his questions, and the replies of Vishnú, form the main substance of the compilation. The first subject is the creation, which is that of Brahmá and the patriarchs. Some of the details are the usual ones; others are peculiar, especially those relating to the Pitrás, or progenitors. The regal dynasties are next described; and then follow chapters on the duties of the different orders. It is in relating those of the householder, in which the duty of making gifts to Brahmans is comprehended, that we have the specification of the extent and subjects of the Puráñas. It is meritorious to have copies made of them, and to give these away on particular occasions. Thus it is said of the Mātris: "Whoever gives it away at either equinox, along with a golden fish and a milk cow, gives away the whole earth;" that is, he reaps a like reward in his next migration. Special duties of the householder—Vratás, or occasional acts of piety—are then described at considerable length, with legendary illustrations. The account of the universe is given in the usual strain. Śaiva legends ensue; as, the destruction of Tripurásūra; the war of the gods with Tāraka and the Daityas, and the consequent birth of Kártikeya, with the various circumstances of Umá's birth and marriage, the burning of Kámadeva, and other events involved in that narrative; the destruction of the Ásuras Maya and Andhaka; the origin of the Mātris, and the like; interpersed with the Vaishnava legends of the Avatáras. Some Māhátmyas are also introduced; one of which, the Narmáda Māhátmya, contains some interesting particulars. There are various chapters on law and morals; and one which furnishes directions for building, houses, and making images. We then have an account of the kings of future periods; and the Puráña concludes with a chapter on gifts.

The Matsya Puráña, it will be seen even from this brief sketch of its contents, is a miscellaneous compilation, but including in its contents the elements of a genuine Puráña. At the same time it is of too mixed a character to be considered as a genuine work of the Paurānik class; and upon examining it carefully, it may be suspected that it is indebted to various works, not only for its matter, but for its words. The genealogical and historical chapters are much the same as those of the Vishāu; and many chapters, as those on the Pitris and Śrāddhas, are precisely the same as those of the Srishti Khaśā of the Padma Purāna. It has drawn largely also from the Mahābhārata: amongst other instances, it is sufficient to quote the story of Sāvitrī, the devoted wife of Satyavat, which is given in the Matsya in the same manner, but considerably abridged.

Although a Śaiva work, it is not exclusively so, and it has no such sectarian absurdities as the Kūrma and Linga. It is a composition of considerable interest; but if it has extracted its materials from the Padma, which it also quotes on one occasion, the specification of the Upa-purāṇas, it is subsequent to that work, and therefore not very ancient.

17. Gāruḍa Purāṇa. "That which Vishāu recited in the Gāruḍa Kalpa, relating chiefly to the birth of Gāruḍa from Vinatā, is here called the Gāruḍa Purāṇa; and in it there are read nineteen thousand verses."'

The Gāruḍa Purāṇa which has been the subject of my examination corresponds in no respect with this description, and is probably a different work, though entitled the Gāruḍa Purāṇa. It is identical, however, with two copies in the Company's library. It consists of no more than about seven thousand stanzas; it is repeated by Brahmā to Indra; and it contains no account of the birth of Gāruḍa. There is a brief notice of the creation; but the greater part is occupied with the description of Vratas, or religious observances, of holidays, of sacred places dedicated to the sun, and with prayers from the Tantrika ritual, addressed to the sun, to Śiva, and to Vishāu. It contains also treatises on astrology, palmistry, and precious stones; and one, still more extensive, on medicine. The latter portion, called the Preta Kalpa, is taken up with directions for the performance of obsequial rites. There is nothing in to justify the application of the name. Whether a genuine Gandharva exists is doubtful. The description given in the Matsya is less particular than even the brief notices of the other Purânas, and might have easily been written without any knowledge of the book itself, being, with exception of the number of stanzas, confined to circumstances that the title alone indicates.

79 तदा च मातृे काले विषमात्रेंकृत্তि । ब्राह्मणधारणशेषोऽस गाहें । तदादवेवसः ॥

0

18. Brahmânda Purâna. "That which has declared, in twelve thousand two hundred verses, the magnificence of the egg of Brahmá, and in which an account of the future Kalpas is contained, is called the Brahmaânda Purâna, and was revealed by Brahmá."[90]

The Brahmânda Purâna is usually considered to be in much the same predicament as the Skânda, no longer procurable in a collective body, but represented by a variety of Khââdas and Mâhâtmyas, professing to be derived from it. The facility with which any tract may be thus attached to the non-existent original, and the advantage that has been taken of its absence to compile a variety of unauthentic fragments, have given to the Brahmânda, Skanda, and Padma, according to Col. Wilford, the character of being the Purânas of thieves or impostors[91]. This is not applicable to the Padma, which, as above shewn, occurs entire and the same in various parts of India. The imposition of which the other two are made the vehicles can deceive no one, as the purpose of the particular legend is always too obvious to leave any doubt of its origin.

Copies of what profess to be the entire Brahmânda Purâna are sometimes, though rarely, procurable. I met with one in two portions, the former containing one hundred and twenty-four chapters, the latter seventy-eight; and the whole containing about the number of stanzas assigned to the Purâna. The first and largest portion, however, proved to be the same as the Váyu Purâna, with a passage occasionally slightly varied, and at the end of each chapter the common phrase 'Iti Brahmaânda Purâñe' substituted for 'Iti Váyu Purâñe.' I do not think there was any intended fraud in the substitution. The last section of the first part of the Váyu Purâna is termed the Brahmânda section, giving an account of the dissolution of the universe; and a careless or ignorant transcriber might have taken this for the title of the whole. The checks to the identity of the work have been honestly preserved, both in the index and the frequent specification of Vāyu as the teacher or narrator of it.

The second portion of this Brahmáñda is not any part of the Vāyu; it is probably current in the Dakhin as a Sanhitá or Khaúda. Agastya is represented as going to the city Kâñchí (Conjeeveram), where Vishńu, as Hayagríva, appears to him, and, in answer to his inquiries, imparts to him the means of salvation, the worship of Parasakti. In illustration of the efficacy of this form of adoration, the main subject of the work is an account of the exploits of Lalitá Deví, a form of Durgá, and her destruction of the demon Bháóndásura. Rules for her worship are also given, which are decidedly of a Śákti or Tántrika description; and this work cannot be admitted, therefore, to be part of a genuine Puráña.

Of these Upa-puráñas few are to be procured. Those in my possession are the Śiva, considered as distinct from the Vāyu; the Kālikā, and perhaps one of the Nāradiyas, as noticed above. I have also three of the Skandhas of the Devī Bhāgavata, which most undoubtedly is not the real Bhāgavata, supposing that any Purāṇa so named preceded the work of Vopadeva. There can be no doubt that in any authentic list the name of Bhāgavata does not occur amongst the Upa-purāṇas: it has been put there to prove that there are two works so entitled, of which the Purāṇa is the Devī Bhāgavata, the Upa-purāṇa the Śrī Bhāgavata. The true reading should be Bhārīgava, the Purāṇa of Bhrigu; and the Devī Bhāgavata is not even an Upa-purāṇa. It is very questionable if the entire work, which as far as it extends is eminently a Śākta composition, ever had existence.

The Śiva Upa-purāṇa contains about six thousand stanzas, distributed into two parts. It is related by Sanatkumāra to Vyāsa and the Rishis at Naimishāranya, and its character may be judged of from the questions to which it is a reply. “Teach us,” said the Rishis, “the rules of worshipping the Linga, and of the god of gods adored under that type; describe to us his various forms, the places sanctified by him, and the prayers with which he is to be addressed.” In answer, Sanatkumāra repeats the Śiva Purāṇa, containing the birth of Vishṇu and Brahmā; the creation and divisions of the universe; the origin of all things from the Linga; the rules of worshipping it and Śiva; the sanctity of times, places, and things, dedicated to him; the delusion of Brahmā and Vishṇu by the Linga; the rewards of offering flowers and the like to a Linga; rules for various observances in honour of Mahādeva; the mode of practising the Yoga; the glory of Benares and other Śaiva Tirthas; and the perfection of the objects of life by union with Maheśwara. These subjects are illustrated in the first part with very few legends; but the second is made up almost wholly of Śaiva stories, as the defeat of Tripurasura; the sacrifice of Daksha; the births of Kārtikeya and Ganeśa the sons of Śiva, and Nandi and Bhringarūti his attendants and others; together with descriptions of Benares and other places of pilgrimage, and rules for observing such festivals as the Śivaratri. This work is a Śaiva manual, not a Purāṇa.
The Káliká Puráňa contains about nine thousand stanzas in ninety-eight chapters, and is the only work of the series dedicated to recommend the worship of the bride of Śiva, in one or other of her manifold forms, as Girijá, Deví, Bhadrakáli, Káli, Mahámayá. It belongs therefore to the Śákta modification of Hindu belief, or the worship of the female powers of the deities. The influence of this worship shews itself in the very first pages of the work, which relate the incestuous passion of Brahmá for his daughter Sandhyá, in a strain that has nothing analogous to it in the Váyu, Linga, or Śiva Puráňas.

The marriage of Śiva and Párvatí is a subject early described, with the sacrifice of Daksha, and the death of Śatí: and this work is authority for Śiva’s carrying the dead body about the world, and the origin of the Pithasthánas, or places where the different members of it were scattered, and where Lingas were consequently erected. A legend follows of the births of Bhairava and Vetála, whose devotion to different forms of Deví furnishes occasion to describe in great detail the rites and formulae of which her worship consists, including the chapters on sanguinary sacrifices, translated in the Asiatic Researches. Another peculiarity in this work is afforded by very prolix descriptions of a number of rivers and mountains at Kámarápa-tírtha in Assam, and rendered holy ground by the celebrated temple of Durgá in that country, as Kámakshi or Kámakhyá. It is a singular, and yet uninvestigated circumstance, that Assam, or at least the north-east of Bengal, seems to have been in a great degree the source from which the Tántrika and Śákta corruptions of the religion of the Vedas and Puráňas proceeded.

The specification of the Upa-puráňas, whilst it names several of which the existence is problematical, omits other works, bearing the same designation, which are sometimes met with. Thus in the collection of Col. Mackenzie we have a portion of the Bhárgava, and a Mudgala-Puráña, which is probably the same with the Ganeśa Upa-puráña, cited by Col. Vans Kennedy. I have also a copy of the Ganeśa Puráña, which seems to agree with that of which he speaks; the second portion being entitled the Kriñátha Khaúnda, in which the pastimes of Ganeśa, including a variety of legendary matters, are described. The main subject of the work is the greatness of Ganeśa, and prayers and formulæ appropriate to him are abundantly detailed. It appears to be a work originating with the Gánapatya sect, or worshippers of Ganeśa. There is also a minor Puráṇa called Ádi, or 'first,' not included in the list. This is a work, however, of no great extent or importance, and is confined to a detail of the sports of the juvenile Krishńa.

82 Mackenzie Collection, i. 50, 51. 83 Anc. and Hindu Mythology, p. 251.

From the sketch thus offered of the subjects of the Puráṇas, and which, although admitting of correction, is believed to be in the main a candid and accurate summary, it will be evident that in their present condition they must be received with caution as authorities for the mythological religion of the Hindus at any remote period. They preserve, no doubt, many ancient notions and traditions; but these have been so much mixed up with foreign matter, intended to favour the popularity of particular forms of worship or articles of faith, that they cannot be unreservedly recognised as genuine representations of what we have reason to believe the Puráṇas originally were.

The safest sources for the ancient legends of the Hindus, after the Vedas, are no doubt the two great poems, the Rámáyána and Mahábhárata. The first offers only a few, but they are of a primitive character. The Mahábhárata is more fertile in fiction, but it is more miscellaneous, and much that it contains is of equivocal authenticity, and uncertain date. Still it affords many materials that are genuine, and it is evidently the great fountain from which most, if not all, of the Puráṇas have drawn; as it intimates itself, when it declares that there is no legend current in the world which has not its origin in the Mahábhárata.84

A work of some extent professing to be part of the Mahábhárata may more accurately be ranked with the Pauránik compilations of least authenticity, and latest origin. The Hari Vanśa is chiefly occupied with the adventures of Krishńa, but, as introductory to his era, it records particulars of the creation of the world, and of the patriarchal and regal

84 चन्द्रचैतविलसीलार्क्ष्यम् कथा भूति न विद्वदेवे। 'Unconnected with this narrative, no story is
PREFACE.

This is done with much carelessness and inaccuracy of compilation, as I have had occasion frequently to notice in the following pages. The work has been very industriously translated by M. Langlois.

A comparison of the subjects of the following pages with those of the other Puráñas will sufficiently shew that of the whole series the Vishñu most closely conforms to the definition of a Pancha-lakşña Puráña, or one which treats of five specified topics. It comprehends them all; and although it has infused a portion of extraneous and sectarian matter, it has done so with sobriety and with judgment, and has not suffered the fervour of its religious zeal to transport it into very wide deviations from the prescribed path. The legendary tales which it has inserted are few, and are conveniently arranged, so that they do not distract the attention of the compiler from objects of more permanent interest and importance.

The first book of the six, into which the work is divided, is occupied chiefly with the details of creation, primary (Sarga) and secondary (Pratisarga); the first explaining how the universe proceeds from Prakriti, or eternal crude matter; the second, in what manner the forms of things are developed from the elementary substances previously evolved, or how they reappear after their temporary destruction. Both these creations are periodical, but the termination of the first occurs only at the end of the life of Brahmá, when not only all the gods and all other forms are annihilated, but the elements are again merged into primary substance, besides which one only spiritual being exists: the latter takes place at the end of every Kalpa, or day of Brahmá, and affects only the forms of inferior creatures, and lower worlds, leaving the substance of the universe entire, and sages and gods unharmed. The explanation of these events involves a description of the periods of time upon which they depend, and which are accordingly detailed. Their character has been a source of very unnecessary perplexity to European writers, as they belong to a scheme of chronology wholly mythological, having no reference to any real or supposed history of the Hindus, but applicable, according to their system, to the infinite and eternal revolutions of the universe. In these notions, and in that of the coeternity of spirit and matter, the theogony and cosmogony of the Puráñas, as they appear in the Vishñu Puráña, belong to and illustrate systems of high antiquity, of which we have only fragmentary traces in the records of other nations.

The course of the elemental creation is in the Vishnu, as in other Puranas, taken from the Sankhya philosophy; but the agency that operates upon passive matter is confusedly exhibited, in consequence of a partial adoption of the illusory theory of the Vedanta philosophy, and the prevalence of the Pauranic doctrine of Pantheism. However incompatible with the independent existence of Pradhana or crude matter, and however incongruous with the separate condition of pure spirit or Purusha, it is declared repeatedly that Vishnu, as one with the supreme being, is not only spirit, but crude matter; and not only the latter, but all visible substance, and Time. He is Purusha, 'spirit;' Pradhana, 'crude matter;' Vyakta, 'visible form;' and Kal, 'time.' This cannot but be regarded as a departure from the primitive dogmas of the Hindus, in which the distinctness of the Deity and his works was enunciated; in which upon his willing the world to be, it was; and in which his interposition in creation, held to be inconsistent with the quiescence of perfection, was explained away by the personification of attributes in action, which afterwards came to be considered as real divinities, Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva, charged severally for a given season with the creation, preservation, and temporary annihilation of material forms. These divinities are in the following pages, consistently with the tendency of a Vaishnava work, declared to be no other than Vishnu. In Saiva Puranas they are in like manner identified with Siva. The Puranas thus displaying and explaining the seeming incompatibility, of which there are traces in other ancient mythologies, between three distinct hypostases of one superior deity, and the identification of one or other of those hypostases with their common and separate original.

After the world has been fitted for the reception of living creatures, it is peopled by the will-engendered sons of Brahma, the Prajapatis or patriarchs, and their posterity. It would seem as if a primitive tradition of the descent of mankind from seven holy personages had at first prevailed, but that in the course of time it had been expanded into complicated, and not always consistent, amplification. How could these Rishis or patriarchs have posterity? it was necessary to provide them with wives. In order to account for their existence, the Manu Sváyambhuva and his wife Satarupá were added to the scheme, or Brahmá becomes twofold, male and female, and daughters are then begotten, who are married to the Prajápatis. Upon this basis various legends of Brahmá's double nature, some no doubt as old as the Vedas, have been constructed: but although they may have been derived in some degree from the authentic tradition of the origin of mankind from a single pair, yet the circumstances intended to give more interest and precision to the story are evidently of an allegorical or mystical description, and conduced, in apparently later times, to a coarseness of realization which was neither the letter nor spirit of the original legend. Sváyambhuva, the son of the self-born or uncreated, and his wife Satarupá, the hundred-formed or multiform, are themselves allegories; and their female descendants, who become the wives of the Rishis, are Faith, Devotion, Content, Intelligence, Tradition, and the like; whilst amongst their posterity we have the different phases of the moon, and the sacrificial fires. In another creation the chief source of creatures is the patriarch Daksha (ability), whose daughters, Virtues or Passions or Astronomical Phenomena, are the mothers of all existing things. These legends, perplexed as they appear to be, seem to admit of allowable solution, in the conjecture that the Prajápatis and Rishis were real personages, the authors of the Hindu system of social, moral, and religious obligations, and the first observers of the heavens, and teachers of astronomical science.

The regal personages of the Sváyambhuva Manwantara are but few, but they are described in the outset as governing the earth in the dawn of society, and as introducing agriculture and civilisation. How much of their story rests upon a traditional remembrance of their actions, it would be useless to conjecture, although there is no extravagance in supposing that the legends relate to a period prior to the full establishment in India of the Brahmanical institutions. The legends of Dhruva and Prahláda, which are intermingled with these particulars, are in all probability ancient, but they are amplified, in a strain conformable to the Vaiśhávya purport of this Puráña, by doctrines and prayers asserting the identity of Vishńu with the supreme. It is clear that the stories do not originate with this Puráña. In that of Prahláda particularly, as hereafter pointed out, circumstances essential to the completeness of the story are only alluded to, not recounted; shewing indisputably the writer’s having availed himself of some prior authority for his narration.

The second book opens with a continuation of the kings of the first Manvantara; amongst whom, Bharata is said to have given a name to India, called after him Bhárata-varsha. This leads to a detail of the geographical system of the Puráñas, with mount Meru, the seven circular continents, and their surrounding oceans, to the limits of the world; all of which are mythological fictions, in which there is little reason to imagine that any topographical truths are concealed. With regard to Bhárata, or India, the case is different: the mountains and rivers which are named are readily verifiable, and the cities and nations that are particularized may also in many instances be proved to have had a real existence. The list is not a very long one in the Vishńu Puráña, and is probably abridged from some more ample detail like that which the Mahábhárata affords, and which, in the hope of supplying information with respect to a subject yet imperfectly investigated, the ancient political condition of India, I have inserted and elucidated.

The description which this book also contains of the planetary and other spheres is equally mythological, although occasionally presenting practical details and notions in which there is an approach to accuracy. The concluding legend of Bharata—in his former life the king so named, but now a Brahman, who acquires true wisdom, and thereby attains liberation—is palpably an invention of the compiler, and is peculiar to this Puráña.

The arrangement of the Vedas and other writings considered sacred by the Hindus, being in fact the authorities of their religious rites and belief, which is described in the beginning of the third book, is of much importance to the history of Hindu literature, and of the Hindu religion. The sage Vyásá is here represented, not as the author, but the arranger or compiler of the Vedas, the Ithásas, and Puráñas. His name denotes his character, meaning the ‘arranger’ or ‘distributor;’ and the recurrence of many Vyásas, many individuals who new modelled the Hindu scriptures, has nothing in it that is improbable, except the fabulous intervals by which their labours are separated. The rearranging, the refashioning, of old materials, is nothing more than the progress of time would be likely to render necessary. The last recognised compilation is that of Krishña Dwāpāyaṇa, assisted by Brahmans, who were already conversant with the subjects respectively assigned to them. They were the members of a college or school, supposed by the Hindus to have flourished in a period more remote, no doubt, than the truth, but not at all unlikely to have been instituted at some time prior to the accounts of India which we owe to Greek writers, and in which we see enough of the system to justify our inferring that it was then entire. That there have been other Vyásas and other schools since that date, that Brahmans unknown to fame have remodelled some of the Hindu scriptures, and especially the Puráṇas, cannot reasonably be contested, after dispassionately weighing the strong internal evidence which all of them afford of the intermixture of unauthorized and comparatively modern ingredients. But the same internal testimony furnishes proof equally decisive of the anterior existence of ancient materials; and it is therefore as idle as it is irrational to dispute the antiquity or authenticity of the greater portion of the contents of the Puráṇas, in the face of abundant positive and circumstantial evidence of the prevalence of the doctrines which they teach, the currency of the legends which they narrate, and the integrity of the institutions which they describe, at least three centuries before the Christian era. But the origin and development of their doctrines, traditions, and institutions, were not the work of a day; and the testimony that establishes their existence three centuries before Christianity, carries it back to a much more remote antiquity, to an antiquity that is probably not surpassed by any of the prevailing fictions, institutions, or belief, of the ancient world.

The remainder of the third book describes the leading institutions of the Hindus, the duties of castes, the obligations of different stages of life, and the celebration of obsequial rites, in a short but primitive strain, and in harmony with the laws of Manu. It is a distinguishing feature of the Vishnú Puráñã, and it is characteristic of its being the work of an earlier period than most of the Puráñás, that it enjoins no secatarial or other acts of supererogation; no Vratas, occasional self-imposed observances; no holidays, no birthdays of Krishná, no nights dedicated to Lakshmí; no sacrifices nor modes of worship other than those conformable to the ritual of the Vedas. It contains no Máhátmyas, or golden legends, even of the temples in which Vishnú is adored.

The fourth book contains all that the Hindus have of their ancient history. It is a tolerably comprehensive list of dynasties and individuals; it is a barren record of events. It can scarcely be doubted, however, that much of it is a genuine chronicle of persons, if not of occurrences. That it is discredited by palpable absurdities in regard to the longevity of the princes of the earlier dynasties must be granted, and the particulars preserved of some of them are trivial and fabulous: still there is an inartificial simplicity and consistency in the succession of persons, and a possibility and probability in some of the transactions which give to these traditions the semblance of authenticity, and render it likely that they are not altogether without foundation. At any rate, in the absence of all other sources of information, the record, such as it is, deserves not to be altogether set aside. It is not essential to its credibility or its usefulness that any exact chronological adjustment of the different reigns should be attempted. Their distribution amongst the several Yugas, undertaken by Sir Wm. Jones or his Pandits, finds no countenance from the original texts, farther than an incidental notice of the age in which a particular monarch ruled, or the general fact that the dynasties prior to Krishná precede the time of the great war, and the beginning of the Kali age; both which events we are not obliged, with the Hindus, to place five thousand years ago. To that age the solar dynasty of princes offers ninety-three descents, the lunar but forty-five, though they both commence at the same time. Some names may have been added to the former list, some omitted in the latter; and it seems most likely, that, notwithstanding their synchronous beginning, the princes of the lunar race were subsequent to those of the solar dynasty. They avowedly branched off from the solar line; and the legend of Sudyumna\textsuperscript{86}, that explains the connexion, has every appearance of having been contrived for the purpose of referring it to a period more remote than the truth. Deducting however from the larger number of princes a considerable proportion, there is nothing to shock probability in supposing that the Hindu dynasties and their ramifications were spread through an interval of about twelve centuries anterior to the war of the Mahábhárata, and, conjecturing that event to have happened about fourteen centuries before Christianity, thus carrying the commencement of the regal dynasties of India to about two thousand six hundred years before that date. This may or may not be too remote\textsuperscript{85}; but it is sufficient, in a subject where precision is impossible, to be satisfied with the general impression, that in the dynasties of kings detailed in the Puráñas we have a record which, although it cannot fail to have suffered detriment from age, and may have been injured by careless or injudicious compilation, preserves an account, not wholly undeserving of confidence, of the establishment and succession of regular monarchies amongst the Hindus, from as early an era, and for as continuous a duration, as any in the credible annals of mankind.

The circumstances that are told of the first princes have evident relation to the colonization of India, and the gradual extension of the authority of new races over an uninhabited or uncivilized region. It is commonly admitted that the Brahmansical religion and civilization were brought into India from without\textsuperscript{87}. Certainly, there are tribes on the continental writers, adopt the larger chronology." To these may be added the opinion of Dr. Mill, who, for reasons which he has fully detailed, identifies the commencement of the Kali age of the Hindus, B. C. 3102, with the era of the deluge. Christa Sangita, Introd., supplementary note.

\textsuperscript{85} P. 349.

\textsuperscript{86} However incompatible with the ordinary computation of the period that is supposed to have elapsed between the flood and the birth of Christ, this falls sufficiently within the larger limits which are now assigned, upon the best authorities, to that period. As observed by Mr. Milman, in his note on the annotation of Gibbon (II. 301.) which refers to this subject; "Most of the more learned modern English protestants, as Dr. Hales, Mr. Faber, Dr. Russell, as well as the \textsuperscript{87} Sir Wm. Jones on the Hindus (As. Res. vol. III.); Klaproth. Asia Polyglotta; Vans Kennedy on the Origin of Languages; A von Schlegel Origines des Hindous (Trans. R. Soc. of Literature).

PREFACE.

borders, and in the heart of the country, who are still not Hindus; and passages in the Rámayána and Mahábhárata and Manu, and the uniform traditions of the people themselves, point to a period when Bengal, Orissa, and the whole of the Dekhin, were inhabited by degraded or outcaste, that is, by barbarous, tribes. The traditions of the Puráñas confirm these views, but they lend no assistance to the determination of the question whence the Hindus came; whether from a central Asiatic nation, as Sir Wm. Jones supposed, or from the Caucasian mountains, the plains of Babylonia, or the borders of the Caspian, as conjectured by Klaproth, Vans Kennedy, and Schlegel. The affinities of the Sanscrit language prove a common origin of the now widely scattered nations amongst whose dialects they are traceable, and render it unquestionable that they must all have spread abroad from some centrical spot in that part of the globe first inhabited by mankind, according to the inspired record. Whether any indication of such an event be discoverable in the Vedas, remains to be determined; but it would have been obviously incompatible with the Pauráśik system to have referred the origin of Indian princes and principalities to other than native sources. We need not therefore expect from them any information as to the foreign derivation of the Hindus.

We have, then, wholly insufficient means for arriving at any information concerning the ante-Indian period of Hindu history, beyond the general conclusion derivable from the actual presence of barbarous and apparently aboriginal tribes—from the admitted progressive extension of Hinduism into parts of India where it did not prevail when the code of Manu was compiled—from the general use of dialects in India, more or less copious, which are different from Sanscrit—and from the affinities of that language with forms of speech current in the western world—that a people who spoke Sanscrit, and followed the religion of the Vedas, came into India, in some very distant age, from lands west of the Indus.
Whether the date and circumstances of their immigration will ever be ascertained is extremely doubtful, but it is not difficult to form a plausible outline of their early site and progressive colonization.

The earliest seat of the Hindus within the confines of Hindusthán was undoubtedly the eastern confines of the Panjab. The holy land of Manu and the Puráñas lies between the Drishadwati and Saraswati rivers, the Caggar and Sursooty of our barbarous maps. Various adventures of the first princes and most famous sages occur in this vicinity; and the Ásramas, or religious domiciles, of several of the latter are placed on the banks of the Saraswati. According to some authorities, it was the abode of Vyása, the compiler of the Vedas and Puráñas; and agreeably to another, when on one occasion the Vedas had fallen into disuse, and been forgotten, the Brahmans were again instructed in them by Sáraswata, the son of Saraswati. One of the most distinguished of the tribes of the Brahmans is known as the Sáraswata; and the same word is employed by Mr. Colebrooke to denote that modification of Sanscrit which is termed generally Prakrit, and which in this case he supposes to have been the language of “the Sáraswata nation, which occupied the banks of the river Saraswati.” The river itself receives its appellation from Saraswati, the goddess of learning, under whose auspices the sacred literature of the Hindus assumed shape and authority. These indications render it certain, that whatever seeds were imported from without, it was in the country adjacent to the Saraswati river that they were first planted, and cultivated and reared in Hindustán.
PREFACE.

The tract of land thus assigned for the first establishment of Hinduism in India is of very circumscribed extent, and could not have been the site of any numerous tribe or nation. The traditions that evidence the early settlement of the Hindus in this quarter, ascribe to the settlers more of a philosophical and religious, than of a secular character, and combine with the very narrow bounds of the holy land to render it possible that the earliest emigrants were the members, not of a political, so much as of a religious community; that they were a colony of priests, not in the restricted sense in which we use the term, but in that in which it still applies in India, to an Agraahára, a village or hamlet of Brahmans, who, although married, and having families, and engaging in tillage, in domestic duties, and in the conduct of secular interests affecting the community, are still supposed to devote their principal attention to sacred study and religious offices. A society of this description, with its artificers and servants, and perhaps with a body of martial followers, might have found a home in the Brahmá-vartta of Manu, the land which thence was entitled 'the holy,' or more literally 'the Brahman, region;' and may have communicated to the rude, uncivilized, unlettered aborigines the rudiments of social organization, literature, and religion; partly, in all probability, brought along with them, and partly devised and fashioned by degrees for the growing necessities of new conditions of society. Those with whom this civilization commenced would have had ample inducements to prosecute their successful work, and in the course of time the improvement which germinated on the banks of the Saraswati was extended beyond the borders of the Jumna and the Ganges.

PREFACE.

We have no satisfactory intimation of the stages by which the political organization of the people of Upper India traversed the space between the Saraswati and the more easterly region, where it seems to have taken a concentrated form, and whence it diverged in various directions, throughout Hindustan. The Manu of the present period, Vaivasvata, the son of the sun, is regarded as the founder of Ayodhyá; and that city continued to be the capital of the most celebrated branch of his descendants, the posterity of Ikshwáku. The Vísháu Puráña evidently intends to describe the radiation of conquest or colonization from this spot, in the accounts it gives of the dispersion of Vaivaswata's posterity: and although it is difficult to understand what could have led early settlers in India to such a site, it is not inconveniently situated as a commanding position, whence emigrations might proceed to the east, the west, and the south. This seems to have happened: a branch from the house of Ikshwáku spread into Tirhut, constituting the Maithilá kings; and the posterity of another of Vaivaswata's sons reigned at Vaisáli in southern Tirhut or Saran.

The most adventurous emigrations, however, took place through the lunar dynasty, which, as observed above, originates from the solar, making in fact but one race and source for the whole. Leaving out of consideration the legend of Sudyumna's double transformation, the first prince of Pratishthána, a city south from Ayodhyá, was one of Vaivaswata's children, equally with Ikshwáku. The sons of Pururavas, the second of this branch, extended, by themselves or their posterity, in every direction: to the east to Kási, Magadhá, Benares, and Behar; southwards to the Vindhyá hills, and across them to Vidarbha or Berar; westwards along the Narmadá to Kuśasthali or Dwáraká in Guzerat; and in a north-westerly direction to Mathurá and Hastinápura. These movements are very distinctly discoverable amidst the circumstances narrated in the fourth book of the Vishńu Puráña, and are precisely such as might be expected from a radiation of colonies from Ayodhya. Intimations also occur of settlements in Banga, Kalinga, and the Dakhin; but they are brief and indistinct, and have the appearance of additions subsequent to the comprehension of those countries within the pale of Hinduism.

Besides these traces of migration and settlement, several curious circumstances, not likely to be unauthorized inventions, are hinted in these historical traditions. The distinction of castes was not fully developed prior to the colonization. Of the sons of Vaivaswata, some, as kings, were Kshatriyas; but one, founded a tribe of Brahmans, another became a Vaisya, and a fourth a Súdra. It is also said of other princes, that they established the four castes amongst their subjects. There are also various notices of Brahmanical Gotras, or families, proceeding from Kshatriya races; and there are several indications of severe struggles between the two ruling castes, not for temporal, but for spiritual dominion, the right to teach the Vedas. This seems to be the especial purport of the inveterate hostility that prevailed between the Brahman Vaśishtha and the Kshatriya Visvámitra, who, as the Rámayaña relates, compelled the gods to make him a Brahman also, and whose posterity became very celebrated as the Kauśika Brahmans. Other legends, again, such as Daksha’s sacrifice, denote sectarian strife; and the legend of Paraśuráma reveals a conflict even for temporal authority between the two ruling castes. More or less weight will be attached to these conjectures, according to the temperament of different inquirers; but, even whilst \[93\] P. 443, 451, 454, &c.

fully aware of the facility with which plausible deductions may cheat the fancy, and little disposed to relax all curb upon the imagination, I find it difficult to regard these legends as wholly unsubstantial fictions, or devoid of all resemblance to the realities of the past.

After the date of the great war, the Vishńu Purāṇa, in common with those Purāṇas which contain similar lists, specifies kings and dynasties with greater precision, and offers political and chronological particulars, to which on the score of probability there is nothing to object. In truth their general accuracy has been incontrovertibly established. Inscriptions on columns of stone, on rocks, on coins, decyphered only of late years, through the extraordinary ingenuity and perseverance of Mr. James Prinsep, have verified the names of races, and titles of princes—the Gupta and Andhra Rájas, mentioned in the Puráṇas—and have placed beyond dispute the identity of Chandragupta and Sandrocoptus: thus giving us a fixed point from which to compute the date of other persons and events. Thus the Vishńu Purāṇa specifies the interval between Chandragupta and the great war to be eleven hundred years; and the occurrence of the latter little more than fourteen centuries B. C., as shewn in my observations on the passage, remarkably concurs with inferences of the like date from different premises. The historical notices that then follow are considerably confused, but they probably afford an accurate picture of the political distractions of India at the time when they were written; and much of the perplexity arises from the corrupt state of the manuscripts, the obscure brevity of the record, and our total want of the means of collateral illustration.

The fifth book of the Vishńu Purāṇa is exclusively occupied with the life of Krishna. This is one of the distinguishing characteristics of the Purāṇa, and is one argument against its antiquity. It is possible, though not yet proved, that Krishńa as an Avatāra of Vishńu, is mentioned in an indisputably genuine text of the Vedas. He is conspicuously prominent in the Mahábhárata, but very contradictorily described there. The part that he usually performs is that of a mere mortal, although the passages ⁰⁴ P. 484 n 81.

are numerous that attach divinity to his person. There are, however, no descriptions in the Mahábhárata of his juvenile frolics, of his sports in Vrindávan, his pastimes with the cow-boys, or even his destruction of the Asuras sent to kill him. These stories have all a modern complexion:

they do not harmonize with the tone of the ancient legends, which is generally grave, and sometimes majestic: they are the creations of a puerile taste, and grovelling imagination. These chapters of the Vishnú

Puráña offer some difficulties as to their originality: they are the same as those on the same subject in the Brahmá Puráña: they are not very dissimilar to those of the Bhágavata. The latter has some incidents which the Vishnú has not, and may therefore be thought to have improved upon the prior narrative of the latter. On the other hand, abridgment is equally a proof of posteriority as amplification. The simpler style of the Vishnú Puráña is however in favour of its priority; and the miscellaneous composition of the Brahmá Puráña renders it likely to have borrowed these chapters from the Vishnú. The life of Krishná in the Hari-vanśa and the Brahma-vaivartta are indisputably of later date.

The last book contains an account of the dissolution of the world, in both its major and minor cataclysms; and in the particulars of the end of all things by fire and water, as well as in the principle of their perpetual renovation, presents a faithful exhibition of opinions that were general in the ancient world. The metaphysical annihilation of the universe, by the release of the spirit from bodily existence, offers, as already remarked, other analogies to doctrines and practices taught by Pythagoras and Plato, and by the Platonic Christians of later days.

The Vishnú Puráña has kept very clear of particulars from which an approximation to its date may be conjectured. No place is described of which the sacredness has any known limit, nor any work cited of pro-

95 Burnet has collected the opinions of the ancient world on this subject, tracing them, as he says, "to the earliest people, and the first appearances of wisdom, after the flood." The Hindu account explains what is imperfect or contradictory in ancient tradition, as handed down from other and less carefully perpetuated sources.
Theory of the Earth, b. III. c. 3.
bible recent composition. The Vedas, the Puráñas, other works forming the body of Sanscrit literature, are named; and so is the Mahábhárata, to which therefore it is subsequent. Both Baudhñas and Jains are adverted to. It was therefore written before the former had disappeared; but they existed in some parts of India as late as the twelfth century at least; and it is probable that the Puráña was compiled before that period. The Gupta kings reigned in the seventh century; the historical record of the Puráña which mentions them was therefore later: and there seems little doubt that the same alludes to the first incursions of the Mohammedans, which took place in the eighth century; which brings it still lower. In describing the latter dynasties, some, if not all, of which were no doubt contemporary, they are described as reigning altogether one thousand seven hundred and ninety-six years. Why this duration should have been chosen does not appear, unless, in conjunction with the number of years which are said to have elapsed between the great war and the last of the Andhra dynasty, which preceded these different races, and which amounted to two thousand three hundred and fifty, the compiler was influenced by the actual date at which he wrote. The aggregate of the two periods would be the Kali year 4146, equivalent to A.D. 1045. There are some variety and indistinctness in the enumeration of the periods which compose this total, but the date which results from it is not unlikely to be an approximation to that of the Vishúu Puráña.

It is the boast of inductive philosophy, that it draws its conclusions from the careful observation and accumulation of facts; and it is equally the business of all philosophical research to determine its facts before it ventures upon speculation. This procedure has not been observed in the investigation of the mythology and traditions of the Hindus. Impatience to generalize has availed itself greedily of whatever promised to afford materials for generalization; and the most erroneous views have been confidently advocated, because the guides to which their authors trusted were ignorant or insufficient. The information gleaned by Sir Wm. Jones was gathered in an early season of Sanscrit study, before the field was cultivated. The same may be said of the writings of Paulinus a St. Bartolomaeus, with the further disadvantage of his having been imperfectly acquainted with the Sanscrit language and literature, and his veiling his deficiencies under loftiness of pretension and a prodigal display of missapplied erudition. The documents to which Wilford trusted proved to be in great part fabrications, and where genuine, were mixed up with so much loose and unauthenticated matter, and so overwhelmed with extravagance of speculation, that his citations need to be carefully and skilfully sifted, before they can be serviceably employed. The descriptions of Ward are too deeply tinctured by his prejudices to be implicitly confided in; and they are also derived in a great measure from the oral or written communications of Bengali pandits, who are not in general very deeply read in the authorities of their mythology. The accounts of Polier were in like manner collected from questionable sources, and his Mythologie des Hindous presents a heterogeneous mixture of popular and Paurânik tales, of ancient traditions, and legends apparently invented for the occasion, which renders the publication worse than useless, except in the hands of those who can distinguish the pure metal from the alloy. Such are the authorities to which Maurice, Faber, and Creuzer have exclusively trusted in their description of the Hindu mythology, and it is no marvel that there should have been an utter confounding of good and bad in their selection of materials, and an inextricable mixture of truth and error in their conclusions. Their labours accordingly are far from entitled to that confidence which their learning and industry would else have secured; and a sound and comprehensive survey of the Hindu system is still wanting to the comparative analysis of the religious opinions of the ancient world, and to a satisfactory elucidation of an important chapter in the history of the human race. It is with the hope of supplying some of the necessary means for the accomplishment of these objects, that the following pages have been translated.

The translation of the Vishnú Purâña has been made from a collation of various manuscripts in my possession. I had three when I commenced the work, two in the Devanagari, and one in the Bengali character: a fourth, from the west of India, was given to me by Major Jervis, when some progress had been made: and in conducting the latter half of the translation through the press, I have compared it with three other copies in the library of the East India Company. All these copies closely agree; presenting no other differences than occasional varieties of reading, owing chiefly to the inattention or inaccuracy of the transcriber. Four of the copies were accompanied by a commentary, essentially the same, although occasionally varying; and ascribed, in part at least, to two different scholiasts. The annotations on the first two books and the fifth are in two MSS. said to be the work of Śrīdhara Yati, the disciple of Parānanda, and who is therefore the same as Śrīdhara Svāmī, the commentator on the Bhāgavata. In the other three books these two MSS. concur with other two in naming the commentator Ratnagarbhā Bhāṭṭa, who in those two is the author of the notes on the entire work. The introductory verses of his comment specify him to be the disciple of Vidya-vāchaspātī, the son of Hiraṇyagarbha, and grandson of Mādhava, who composed his commentary by desire of Śrīvākara, son of Ratīnath, Miśrā, son of Chandrākara, hereditary ministers of some sovereign who is not particularized. In the illustrations which are attributed to these different writers there is so much conformity, that one or other is largely indebted to his predecessor. They both refer to earlier commentaries. Śrīdhara cites the works of Chit-sukha-yoni and others, both more extensive and more concise; between which, his own, which he terms Ātma- or Śwa-prakāśa, ‘self-illuminator,’ holds an intermediate character. Ratnagarbha entitles his, Vaishnāvākūta chandrikā, ‘the moon-light of devotion to Viṣṇu.’ The dates of these commentators are not ascertainable, as far as I am aware, from any of the particulars which they have specified.

96 Systema Brahmanicum, &c. 97 Asiatic Researches.

In the notes which I have added to the translation, I have been desirous chiefly of comparing the statements of the text with those of other Purāṇas, and pointing out the circumstances in which they differ or agree; so as to render the present publication a sort of concordance to the whole, as it is not very probable that many of them will be published or translated. The Index that follows has been made sufficiently copious to answer the purposes of a mythological and historical dictionary, as far as the Puráñas, or the greater number of them, furnish materials.
PREFACE.

In rendering the text into English, I have adhered to it as literally as was compatible with some regard to the usages of English composition. In general the original presents few difficulties. The style of the Puráñas is very commonly humble and easy, and the narrative is plainly and unpretendingly told. In the addresses to the deities, in the expatiations upon the divine nature, in the descriptions of the universe, and in argumentative and metaphysical discussion, there occur passages in which the difficulty arising from the subject itself is enhanced by the brief and obscure manner in which it is treated. On such occasions I derived much aid from the commentary, but it is possible that I may have sometimes misapprehended and misrepresented the original; and it is also possible that I may have sometimes failed to express its purport with sufficient precision to have made it intelligible. I trust, however, that this will not often be the case, and that the translation of the Vishńu Puráña will be of service and of interest to the few, who in these times of utilitarian selfishness, conflicting opinion, party virulence, and political agitation, can find a restingplace for their thoughts in the tranquil contemplation of those yet living pictures of the ancient world which are exhibited by the literature and mythology of the Hindus.
CONTENTS.

BOOK I.

CHAP. I.—Invocation. Maitreyá inquires of his teacher, Parásara, the origin and nature of the universe. Parásara performs a rite to destroy the demons: reproved by Vaisváthá, he desists: Pulastyá appears, and bestows upon him divine knowledge: he repeats the Vishųu Puráňa. Vishųu the origin, existence, and end of all things.—P. 1.

CHAP. II.—Prayer of Parásara to Vishųu. Successive narration of the Vishųu Puráňa. Explanation of Vásudeva: his existence before creation: his first manifestations. Description of Prádhána, or the chief principle of things. Cosmogony. Of Prákritá, or material creation; of time; of the active cause. Development of effects; Mahat; Ahanékára; Tanmátras; elements; objects of sense; senses; of the mundane egg. Vishųu the same as Brahmá the creator; Vishųu the preserver; Rudra the destroyer.—P. 5.

CHAP. III.—Measure of time. Moments or Káshţás, &c.; day and night, fortnight, month, year, divine year: Yugas, or ages: Mahýyuga, or great age: day of Brahmá: periods of the Manus: a Manwantara: night of Brahmá, and destruction of the world: a year of Brahmá: his life: a Kalpa: a Parárrítha: the past, or Pádma Kalpa: the present, or Váráha.—P. 21.

CHAP. IV.—Náráýána’s appearance, in the beginning of the Kalpa, as the Varáha or boar: Prithíví (Earth) addresses him: he raises the world from beneath the waters: hymned by Sanandana and the Yogás. The earth floats on the ocean: divided into seven zones. The lower spheres of the universe restored. Creation renewed.—P. 27.

CHAP. V.—Vishųu as Brahmá creates the world. General characteristics of creation. Brahmá meditates, and gives origin to immovable things, animals, gods, men. Specific creation of nine kinds; Mahat, Tanmátra, Aindríya, inanimate objects, animals, gods, men, Anugraha, and Kaumára. More particular account of creation. Origin of different orders of beings from Brahmá’s body under different conditions; and of the Vedas from his mouths. All things created again as they existed in a former Kalpa.—P. 34.

Chap. VII.—Creation continued. Production of the mind-born sons of Brahmá: of the Prajápati; of Sanandana and others; of Rudra and the eleven Rudras; of the Manu Swáyambhuva, and his wife Satarópa; of their children. The daughters of Daksha, and their marriage to Dharma and others. The progeny of Dharma and Adharma. The perpetual succession of worlds, and different modes of mundane dissolution.—P. 49.

Chap. VIII.—Origin of Rudra: his becoming eight Rudras: their wives and children. The posterity of Bhrigu. Account of Śrí in conjunction with Vishúu. (Sacrifice of Daksha.)—P. 58.

Chap. IX.—Legend of Lakshmi. Durváśas gives a garland to Indra: he treats it disrespectfully, and is cursed by the Muni. The power of the gods impaired: they are oppressed by the Dánavas, and have recourse to Vishúu. The churning of the ocean. Praises of Śrí.—P. 70.

Chap. X.—The descendants of the daughters of Daksha married to the Rishis.—P. 82.

Chap. XI.—Legend of Dhruva, the son of Uttánapáda: he is unkindly treated by his father's second wife: applies to his mother: her advice: he resolves to engage in religious exercises: sees the seven Rishis, who recommend him to propitiate Vishúu.—P. 86.

Chap. XII.—Dhruva commences a course of religious austerities. Unsuccessful attempts of Indra and his ministers to distract Dhruva's attention: they appeal to Vishúu, who allays their fears, and appears to Dhruva. Dhruva praises Vishúu, and is raised to the skies as the pole-star.—P. 90.

Chap. XIII.—Posternity of Dhruva. Legend of Veśá: his impiety: he is put to death by the Rishis. Anarchy ensues. The production of Nishádá and Prithú: the latter the first king. The origin of Súta and Mágadha: they enumerate the duties of kings. Prithú compels Earth to acknowledge his authority: he levels it: introduces cultivation: erects cities. Earth called after him Prithví: typified as a cow.—P. 98.
CONTENTS.

CHAP. XIV.—Descendants of Prithu. Legend of the Prachetasas: they are desired by their father to multiply mankind, by worshipping Vishnú: they plunge into the sea, and meditate on and praise him: he appears, and grants their wishes.—P. 106.

CHAP. XV.—The world overrun with trees: they are destroyed by the Prachetasas. Soma pacifies them, and gives them Máriahá to wife: her story: the daughter of the nymph Pramlochá. Legend of Kaśťū. Máriahá's former history. Daksha the son of the Prachetasas: his different characters: his sons: his daughters: their marriages and progeny: allusion to Prahláda, his descendant.—P. 110.

CHAP. XVI.—Inquiries of Maitreya respecting the history of Prahláda.—P. 125.

CHAP. XVII.—Legend of Prahláda. Hiraṇyakaśipu the sovereign of the universe: the gods dispersed, or in servitude to him: Prahláda, his son, remains devoted to Vishnú: questioned by his father, he praises Vishnú: Hiraṇyakaśipu orders him to be put to death, but in vain: his repeated deliverance: he teaches his companions to adore Vishnú.—P. 126.

CHAP. XVIII.—Hiraṇyakaśipu's reiterated attempts to destroy his son: their being always frustrated.—P. 134.

CHAP. XIX.—Dialogue between Prahláda and his father: he is cast from the top of the palace unhurt: baffles the incantations of Samvara: he is thrown fettered into the sea: he praises Vishnú.—P. 137.

CHAP. XX.—Vishnú appears to Prahláda. Hiraṇyakaśipu relents, and is reconciled to his son: he is put to death by Vishnú as the Nrisinha. Prahláda becomes king of the Daityas: his posterity: fruit of hearing his story.—P. 143.

CHAP. XXI.—Families of the Daityas. Descendants of Kaśyapa by Danu. Children of Kaśyapa by his other wives. Birth of the Mártas, the sons of Diti.—P. 147.

CHAP. XXII.—Dominion over different provinces of creation assigned to different beings. Universality of Vishnú. Four varieties of spiritual contemplation. Two conditions of spirit. The perceptible attributes of Vishnú types of his imperceptible properties. Vishnú every thing. Merit of hearing the first book of the Vishnú Puráña.—P. 153.
CONTENTS.

BOOK II.

CHAP. I.—Descendants of Priyavrata, the eldest son of Swáyambhuva Manu: his ten sons: three adopt a religious life; the others become kings of the seven Dwípas, or isles, of the earth. Agnídhra, king of Jambu-dwípa, divides it into nine portions, which he distributes amongst his sons. Nábhí, king of the south, succeeded by Rishabha; and he by Bharata: India named after him Bhárata: his descendants reign during the Swáyambhuva Manwantara.—P. 161.

CHAP. V.—Of the seven regions of Pátála, below the earth. Nárada’s praises of Pátála. Account of the serpent Sesa. First teacher of astronomy and astrology.—P. 204.

CHAP. VI.—Of the different hells, or divisions of Naraka, below Pátála: the crimes punished in them respectively: efficacy of expiation: meditation on Vishné the most effective expiation.—P. 207.

CHAP. VII.—Extent and situation of the seven spheres, viz. earth, sky, planets, Mahar-loka, Jana-loka, Tapo-loka, and Satya-loka. Of the egg of Brahmá, and its elementary envelopes. Of the influence of the energy of Vishné.—P. 212.

CHAP. VIII.—Description of the sun: his chariot: its two axles: his horses. The cities of the regents of the cardinal points. The sun’s course: nature of his rays: his path along the ecliptic. Length of day and night. Divisions of time: equinoxes and solstices, months, years, the cyclical Yuge, or age of five years. Northern and southern declinations. Saints on the Lokáloka mountain. Celestial paths of the Pitris, gods, Vishnú. Origin of Gangá, and separation, on the top of Meru, into four great rivers.—P. 217.
CONTENTS

Chap. IX.—Planetary system, under the type of a Sisumára, or porpoise. The earth nourished by the sun. Of rain whilst the sun shines. Of rain from clouds. Rain the support of vegetation, and thence of animal life. Nárâyana the support of all beings.—P. 230.

Chap. X.—Names of the twelve Ādityas. Names of the Rishis, Gandharbas, Apas-rasas, Yakshhas, Uragas, and Rákshasas, who attend the chariot of the sun in each month of the year. Their respective functions.—P. 233.

Chap. XI.—The sun distinct from, and supreme over, the attendants on his car: identical with the three Vedas and with Vishnú: his functions.—P. 235.

Chap. XII.—Description of the moon: his chariot, horses, and course: fed by the sun: drained periodically of ambrosia by the progenitors and gods. The chariots and horses of the planets: kept in their orbits by aerial chains attached to Dhrüva. Typical members of the planetary porpoise. Vásudeva alone real.—P. 238.

Chap. XIII.—Legend of Bharata. Bharata abdicates his throne, and becomes an ascetic: cherishes a fawn, and becomes so much attached to it as to neglect his devotions: he dies: his successive births: works in the fields, and is pressed as a palankin-bearer for the Rája of Sauvíra: rebuked for his awkwardness: his reply: dialogue between him and the king.—P. 243.

Chap. XIV.—Dialogue continued. Bharata expounds the nature of existence, the end of life, and the identification of individual with universal spirit.—P. 251.

Chap. XV.—Bharata relates the story of Ribhu and Nidágha. The latter, the pupil of the former, becomes a prince, and is visited by his preceptor, who explains to him the principles of unity, and departs.—P. 254.

Chap. XVI.—Ribhu returns to his disciple, and perfects him in divine knowledge. The same recommended to the Rája by Bharata, who thereupon obtains final liberation. Consequences of hearing this legend.—P. 257.
CONTENTS.

BOOK III.

Chap. I.—Account of the several Manus and Manwantaras. Śvārochisha the second Manu: the divinities, the Indra, the seven Rishis of his period, and his sons. Similar details of Auvatami, Tāmasa, Raivata, Chākshuṣas, and Vaivaswata. The forms of Vishnu, as the preserver, in each Manwantara. The meaning of Vishnu.—P. 259.

Chap. II.—Of the seven future Manus and Manwantaras. Story of Sanjña and Chhāyā, wives of the sun. Sāvarni, son of Chhāyā, the eighth Manu. His successors, with the divinities, &c. of their respective periods. Appearance of Vishnu in each of the four Yugas.—P. 266.

Chap. III.—Division of the Veda into four portions, by a Vyāsa, in every Dwāpara age. List of the twenty-eight Vyāsas of the present Manwantara. Meaning of the word Brahma.—P. 272.

Chap. IV.—Division of the Veda, in the last Dwāpara age, by the Vyāsa Krishna Dwaipāyana. Pāla made reader of the Rig; Vaiśampāyana of the Yajush; Jaimini of the Sāman; and Sumantu of the Atharvan. Sūta appointed to teach the historical poems. Origin of the four parts of the Veda. Sanhitās of the Rig-veda.—P. 275.

Chap. V.—Divisions of the Yajur-veda. Story of Yajñawalkya: forced to give up what he has learned: picked up by others, forming the Taittirīya-yajush. Yajñawalkya worships the sun, who communicates to him the Vājasaney-yaḥush.—P. 279.

Chap. VII.—By what means men are exempted from the authority of Yama, as narrated by Bhāhma to Nakula. Dialogue between Yama and one of his attendants. Worshippers of Vishnu not subject to Yama. How they are to be known.—P. 286.

Chap. VIII.—How Vishnu is to be worshipped, as related by Aurva to Sāgara. Duties of the four castes, severally and in common: also in time of distress.—P. 290.

Chap. IX.—Duties of the religious student, householder, hermit, and mendicant.—P. 294.
CONTENTS

CHAP. X.—Ceremonies to be observed at the birth and naming of a child. Of marrying, or leading a religious life. Choice of a wife. Different modes of marrying.—P. 297.

CHAP. XI.—Of the Sadāchāras, or perpetual obligations of a householder. Daily purifications, ablutions, libations, and oblations: hospitality: obsequial rites: ceremonies to be observed at meals, at morning and evening worship, and on going to rest.—P. 300.

CHAP. XII.—Miscellaneous obligations—purificatory, ceremonial, and moral.—P. 310.

CHAP. XIII.—Of Śrāddhas, or rites in honour of ancestors, to be performed on occasions of rejoicing. Obsequial ceremonies. Of the Ekoddhitā or monthly Śrāddhas, and the Sapiṇḍana or annual one. By whom to be performed.—P. 314.

CHAP. XIV.—Of occasional Śrāddhas, or obsequial ceremonies: when most efficacious, and at what places.—P. 320.

CHAP. XV.—What Brahmins are to be entertained at Śrāddhas. Different prayers to be recited. Offerings of food to be presented to deceased ancestors.—P. 325.

CHAP. XVI.—Things proper to be offered as food to deceased ancestors: prohibited things. Circumstances vitiating a Śrāddha: how to be avoided. Song of the Pitrīs, or progenitors, heard by Ikshwāku.—P. 332.

CHAP. XVII.—Of heretics, or those who reject the authority of the Vedas: their origin, as described by Vashishtha to Bhishma: the gods, defeated by the Daityas, praise Vashishtha: an illusory being, or Buddha, produced from his body.—P. 334.

CHAP. XVIII.—Buddha goes to the earth, and teaches the Daityas to contain the Vedas: his sceptical doctrines: his prohibition of animal sacrifices. Meaning of the term Baudhōṣa. Jainas and Baudhās; their tenets. The Daityas lose their power, and are overcome by the gods. Meaning of the term Nagna. Consequences of neglect of duty. Story of Satadhanu and his wife Saivyā. Communion with heretics to be shunned.—P. 340.
CONTENTS.

BOOK IV.

CHAP. III.—Saubhari and his wives adopt an ascetic life. Descendants of Mándhátri. Legend of Narmadá and Purukutana. Legend of Trišánu. Báhu driven from his kingdom by the Haihayas and Tálajanghas. Birth of Sagara: he conquers the barbarians, imposes upon them distinguishing usages, and excludes them from offerings to fire, and the study of the Vedas.—P. 369.

CHAP. IV.—The progeny of Sagara: their wickedness: he performs an Áśwamedha: the horse stolen by Kapila: found by Sagara’s sons, who are all destroyed by the sage: the horse recovered by Ánúmat: his descendants. Legend of Mitrasáha or Kalmáshapáda, the son of Sudásá. Legend of Khašwánga. Birth of Ráma and the other sons of Daśaratha. Epitome of the history of Ráma: his descendants, and those of his brothers. Line of Kuśa. Vrihadála, the last, killed in the great war.—P. 377.

CHAP. VI.—Kings of the lunar dynasty. Origin of Soma or the moon: he carries off Tárá, the wife of Vrihaspati: war between the gods and Asuras in consequence: appeared by Brahmá. Birth of Budha: married to Ilá, daughter of Vaivaswata. Legend of his son Purúravas, and the nymph Urvasi: the former institutes offerings with fire: ascends to the sphere of the Gandharbas.—P. 392.

CONTENTS.

the son of the former. (Legend of Paraśurāma.) Sunahāéphas and others the sons of Viśwámitra, forming the Kauśika race.—P. 398.

CHAP. IX.—Descendants of Raji, son of Ayus: Indra resigns his throne to him: claimed after his death by his sons, who apostatize from the religion of the Vedas, and are destroyed by Indra. Descendants of Pratikšaha, son of Kaśatravṛddha.—P. 411.

CHAP. X.—The sons of Nahusha. The sons of Yayáti: he is cursed by Śukra: wishes his sons to exchange their vigour for his infirmities. Puru alone consents. Yayáti restores him his youth: divides the earth amongst his sons, under the supremacy of Puru.—P. 413.

CHAP. XI.—The Yádava race, or descendants of Yadu. Kárttavírya obtains a boon from Dattátreya: takes Rávaṇa prisoner: is killed by Paraśuráma: his descendants.—P. 416.

CHAP. XII.—Descendants of Krohaírí. Jyámagha's connubial affection for his wife Śaivyá: their descendants kings of Vidarbha and Chedi.—P. 420.

CHAP. XIV.—Descendants of Śini, of Anamitra, of Swaphalka and Chitraika, of Andhaka. The children of Devaka and Ugrasena. The descendants of Bhajamána.
CONTENTS.

Children of Śūra: his son Vasudeva: his daughter Pritha married to Pāṇḍu: her children, Yudhisthīra and his brothers; also Karśa by Aditya. The sons of Pāṇḍu by Māñjī. Husbands and children of Śūra’s other daughters. Previous births of Śiśupāla.—P. 435.

CHAP. XV.—Explanation of the reason why Śiśupāla in his previous births as Hiraśyakṣapī and Rāvaṇa was not identified with Vishū on being slain by him, and was so identified when killed as Śiśupāla. The wives of Vasudeva: his children: Balarāma and Krishṇa his sons by Devakī: born apparently of Rohiṇī and Yāsodā. The wives and children of Krishṇa. Multitude of the descendants of Yadu.—P. 438.

CHAP. XVI.—Descendants of Turvasu.—P. 442.

CHAP. XVII.—Descendants of Druhyu.—P. 443.

CHAP. XVIII.—Descendants of Anu. Countries and towns named after some of them, as Anga, Banga, and others.—P. 444.

CHAP. XX.—Descendants of Kuru. Dravāpi abdicates the throne: assumed by Śīrānu: he is confirmed by the Brahmans: Bhīshma his son by Gangā: his other sons. Birth of Dhritarāshtra, Pāṇḍu, and Vidura. The hundred sons of Dhritarāshtra. The five sons of Pāṇḍu: married to Draupadī: their posterity. Parīkṣit, the grandson of Arījuna, the reigning king.—P. 457.

CHAP. XXI.—Future kings. Descendants of Parīkṣit, ending with Kāhemaka.—P. 461.

CHAP. XXII.—Future kings of the family of Ikshvākṣa, ending with Sumitra.—P. 463.

CHAP. XXIII.—Future kings of Magadhā, descendants of Vrihadratha.—P. 465.

CHAP. XXIV.—Future kings of Magadhā. Five princes of the line of Pradyota. Ten
CONTENTS.

BOOK V.

CHAP. I.—The death of Kansa announced. Earth, oppressed by the Daityas, applies to the gods. They accompany her to Viṣṇu, who promises to give her relief. Kansa imprisons Vasudeva and Devakī. Viṣṇu's instructions to Yoganidrā.—P. 491.

CHAP. II.—The conception of Devakī: her appearance: she is praised by the gods.—P. 500.

CHAP. III.—Birth of Kṛiṣṇa: conveyed by Vasudeva to Mathurā, and exchanged with the new-born daughter of Yaśodā. Kansa attempts to destroy the latter, who becomes Yoganidrā.—P. 502.

CHAP. IV.—Kansa addresses his friends, announces their danger, and orders male children to be put to death.—P. 504.

CHAP. V.—Nanda returns with the infants Kṛiṣṇa and Balarāma to Gokula. Pūtanā killed by the former. Prayers of Nanda and Yaśodā.—P. 506.

CHAP. VII.—Kṛiṣṇa combats the serpent Kāliya: alarm of his parents and companions: he overcomes the serpent, and is propitiated by him: commands him to depart from the Yamunā river to the ocean.—P. 512.

CHAP. VIII.—The demon Dhenuka destroyed by Rāma.—P. 517.

CHAP. IX.—Sports of the boys in the forest. Pralambha the Asura comes amongst them: is destroyed by Rāma, at the command of Kṛiṣṇa.—P. 518.
 CONTENTS.

CHAP. X.—Description of autumn. Krishná dissuades Nanda from worshipping Indra: recommends him and the Gopás to worship cattle and the mountains.—P. 522.

CHAP. XI.—Indra, offended by the loss of his offerings, causes heavy rains to deluge Gokula. Krishná holds up the mountain Govardhana to shelter the cowherds and their cattle.—P. 526.

CHAP. XII.—Indra comes to Gokula: praises Krishná, and makes him prince over the cattle. Krishná promises to befriend Arjuna.—P. 528.

CHAP. XIII.—Krishná praised by the cowherds: his sports with the Gopás: their imitation and love of him. The Rásá dance.—P. 531.

CHAP. XIV.—Krishná kills the demon Arajñá, in the form of a bull.—P. 536.

CHAP. XV.—Kansa informed by Nárada of the existence of Krishná and Balarámá: he sends Keśin to destroy them, and Akrúrá to bring them to Mathurá.—P. 537.

CHAP. XVI.—Keśin, in the form of a horse, slain by Krishná: he is praised by Nárada.—P. 539.

CHAP. XVII.—Akrúrá's meditation on Krishná: his arrival at Gokula: his delight at seeing Krishná and his brother.—P. 541.

CHAP. XVIII.—Grief of the Gopás on the departure of Krishná and Balarámá with Akrúrá: their leaving Gokula. Akrúrá bades in the Yamuná: beholds the divine forms of the two youths, and praises Vishúú.—P. 544.

CHAP. XX.—Krishná and Balarámá meet Kubja; she is made straight by the former: they proceed to the palace. Krishná breaks a bow intended for a trial of arms. Kansa's orders to his servants. Public games. Krishná and his brother enter the arena: the former wrestles with Cháúrá, the latter with Mushúka, the king's wrestlers; who are both killed. Krishná attacks and slays Kansa: he and Balarámá do homage to Vasudeva and Devakí: the former praises Krishná.—P. 550.
CONTENTS.

CHAP. XXI.—Krishna encourages his parents; places Ugrasena on the throne; becomes the pupil of Sandipani, whose son he recovers from the sea: he kills the marine demon Panchajana, and makes a horn of his shell.—P. 560.

CHAP. XXII.—Jarasandha besieges Mathura; is defeated, but repeatedly renew the attack.—P. 563.

CHAP. XXIII.—Birth of Kalyavana: he advances against Mathura. Krishna builds Dwarka, and sends thither the Yadava tribe: he leads Kalyavana into the cave of Muchukunda: the latter awakes, consumes the Yavana king, and praises Krishna.—P. 565.

CHAP. XXIV.—Muchukunda goes to perform penance. Krishna takes the army and treasures of Kalyavana, and repairs with them to Dwarka. Balarama visits Vraja: inquiries of its inhabitants after Krishna.—P. 569.

CHAP. XXV.—Balarama finds wine in the hollow of a tree; becomes inebriated; commands the Yamuna to come to him, and on her refusal drags her out of her course: Lakshmi gives him ornaments and a dress: he returns to Dwarka, and marries Revati.—P. 571.

CHAP. XXVI.—Krishna carries off Rukmini: the princes who come to rescue her repulsed by Balarama. Rukmin overthrown, but spared by Krishna, founds Bhojakasa. Pradyumna born of Rukmini.—P. 573.

CHAP. XXVII.—Pradyumna stolen by Sambara; thrown into the sea, and swallowed by a fish; found by Mayadevi: he kills Sambara, marries Mayadevi, and returns with her to Dwarka. Joy of Rukmini and Krishna.—P. 575.

CHAP. XXVIII.—Wives of Krishna. Pradyumna has Aniruddha: nuptials of the latter. Balaramabeat at dice, becomes incensed, and slays Rukmin and others.—P. 578.

CHAP. XXIX.—Indra comes to Dwarka, and reports to Krishna the tyranny of Naraka. Krishna goes to his city, and puts him to death. Earth gives the earrings of Aditi to Krishna, and praises him. He liberates the princesses made captive by Naraka, sends them to Dwarka, and goes to Swarga with Satyabhama.—P. 581.

CHAP. XXX.—Krishna restores her earrings to Aditi, and is praised by her: he visits...
CONTENTS.

the gardens of Indra, and at the desire of Satyabhāma carries off the Pārijāta tree. Sači excites Indra to its rescue. Conflict between the gods and Krishnā, who defeats them. Satyabhāma derides them. They praise Krishnā.—P. 584.

CHAP. XXXI.—Krishnā, with Indra's consent, takes the Pārijāta tree to Dwārakā; marries the princesses rescued from Naraka.—P. 589.

CHAP. XXXII.—Children of Krishnā. Ushā, the daughter of Bānā, sees Aniruddha in a dream, and becomes enamoured of him.—P. 591.

CHAP. XXXIII.—Bānā solicits Śīva for war: finds Aniruddha in the palace, and makes him prisoner. Krishnā, Balarāma, and Pradyumna come to his rescue. Śīva and Skanda aid Bānā: the former is disabled; the latter put to flight. Bānā encounters Krishnā, who cuts off all his arms, and is about to put him to death. Śīva intercedes, and Krishnā spares his life. Viśvānu and Śīva are the same.—P. 593.

CHAP. XXXIV.—Paunāraka, a Vāsudeva, assumes the insignia and style of Krishnā, supported by the king of Kāśi. Krishnā marches against, and destroys them. The son of the king sends a magical being against Krishnā: destroyed by his discus, which also sets Benares on fire, and consumes it and its inhabitants.—P. 597.

CHAP. XXXV.—Śāmba carries off the daughter of Duryodhana, but is taken prisoner. Balarāma comes to Hastinapura, and demands his liberation: it is refused: in his wrath he drags the city towards him, to throw it into the river. The Kuru chiefs give up Śāmba and his wife.—P. 601.

CHAP. XXXVI.—The Asura Dwivida, in the form of an ape, destroyed by Balarāma.—P. 604.

CHAP. XXXVII.—Destruction of the Yādavas. Śāmba and others deceive and ridicule the Rishis. The former bears an iron pestle: it is broken, and thrown into the sea. The Yādavas go to Prabhāsa by desire of Krishnā: they quarrel and fight, and all perish. The great serpent Sēsha issues from the mouth of Rāma. Krishnā is shot by a hunter, and again becomes one with universal spirit.—P. 606.

CHAP. XXXVIII.—Arjuna comes to Dwārakā, and burns the dead, and takes away the surviving inhabitants. Commencement of the Kali age. Shepherds and thieves attack Arjuna, and carry off the women and wealth. Arjuna regrets the loss of his prowess to Vyāsa; who consoles him, and tells him the story of Ashvāvakrā's cursing the Apsarasas. Arjuna and his brothers place Parikshit on the throne, and go to the forest. End of the fifth book.—P. 613.
CONTENTS.

BOOK VI.

CHAP. I.—Of the dissolution of the world: the four ages: the decline of all things, and deterioration of mankind, in the Kali age.—P. 621.

CHAP. II.—Redeeming properties of the Kali age. Devotion to Vishnu sufficient to salvation in that age for all castes and persons.—P. 627.

CHAP. III.—Three different kinds of dissolution. Duration of a Pararddha. The Clepsydra, or vessel for measuring time. The dissolution that occurs at the end of a day of Brahmas.—P. 630.

CHAP. IV.—Continuation of the account of the first kind of dissolution. Of the second kind, or elemental dissolution; of all being resolved into primary spirit.—P. 634.

CHAP. V.—The third kind of dissolution, or final liberation from existence. Evils of worldly life. Sufferings in infancy, manhood, old age. Pains of hell. Imperfect felicity of heaven. Exemption from birth desirable by the wise. The nature of spirit or god. Meaning of the terms Bhagavat and Vasudeva.—P. 638.

CHAP. VI.—Means of attaining liberation. Anecdotes of Khadika and Kesidhwaja. The former instructs the latter how to stone for permitting the death of a cow. Kesidhwaja offers him a requital, and he desires to be instructed in spiritual knowledge.—P. 645.

CHAP. VII.—Kesidhwaja describes the nature of ignorance, and the benefits of the Yoga, or contemplative devotion. Of the novice and the adept in the performance of the Yoga. How it is performed. The first stage, proficiency in acts of restraint and moral duty: the second, particular mode of sitting: the third, Pranayama, modes of breathing: the fourth, Pratyahara, restraint of thought: the fifth, apprehension of spirit: the sixth, retention of the idea. Meditation on the individual and universal forms of Vishnu. Acquisition of knowledge. Final liberation.—P. 649.

CORRECTIONS.

P. 11, note 14, for the sense of the latter read the sense of the former 12, note 16, for there was neither the existent cause nor the non-existent effect read the non-existent cause nor the existent effect
50, note, for son of Prachetas read son of the Prachetasas
98, note, for Puru read Prithu
176, note, refer to p. 431, n. 13, and add, ‘In the Mahābhārata, Adi P., the Suktimati river is said to flow by the capital of Chedi’
213, for Vaibhrajya read Vairājas
226, note 21, for Avashtahanas read Avasthānas 398, for his son was Suhotra, whose name was Jahnu read whose son was Jahnu
399, note 10, for Kuśānaba read Kuśāmbar
416, note 2, omit the second Aripu
457, for Jayasena Krāvin read Jayasena, his son was Krāvin OM! GLORY TO VĀSUDEA. — Victory be to thee, Puḍārikāksha;

1 ओऽम् नमः वाहुदेवस्. An address of this kind, to one or other Hindu divinity, usually introduces Sanscrit compositions, especially those considered sacred. The first term of this mantra or brief prayer, Om or Omkāra, is well known as a combination of letters invested by Hindu mysticism with peculiar sanctity. In the Vedas it is said to comprehend all the gods; and in the Purāṇas it is directed to be prefixed to all such formulae as that of the text. Thus in the Uttara Khatā of the Pādā Purāṇa: ‘The syllable Om, the mysterious name, or Brahma, is the leader of all pray- ers: let it therefore, O lovely-faced, (Siva addresses Durgā,) be employed in the beginning of all prayers.’ ओऽम् प्रवर्तकम् वेष सविस्तारेण नासक। चाँदी चाँदी पुण्यानं शास्त्रां च शुभानन्ते। According to the same authority, one of the mystical imports of the term is the collective enunciation of Viṣṇu expressed by A, of Śrī his bride intimated by u, and of their joint worshipper designated by m. A whole chapter of the Vāyu Purāṇa is devoted to this term. A text of the Vedas is there cited: ओऽमस्मादेव प्राणस्य भवे। ‘Om, the monosyllable Brahma,’ the latter meaning either the Supreme Being or the Vedas collectively, of which this monosyllable is the type. It is also said to typify the three spheres of the world, the three holy fires, the three steps of Viṣṇu, &c. श्रीविष्णुवर्तको वेदार्थोत्तरोवाचर्य। नमस्ते नमस्ते श्रीमाने — Frequent meditation upon it, and repetition of it, ensure release from worldly existence. इसीलिए प्रत्येक चरण में चार स्पीच्छं। नमस्ते स्पीच्छं सम्प्रथ्याग्यं स पुरान्तं। संसारसम्पुन्नस्य पुनः सहस्रतत्मस्य। । जनमेन निग्रेयं स्वाभीमान निर्वास्य प्राप्तसंसारं:। See also Menu, II. 76. Vāsudeva, a name of Viṣṇu or Krishnā, is, according to its grammatical etymology, a patronymic derivative implying son of Viṣṇu. The Viṣṇuāva Purāṇa, however, devise other explanations: see the next chapter, and again, b. VI. c. 5.
adoration be to thee, Viśwabhāvana; glory be to thee, Hrishikeśa, Mahápurusha, and Púrvaja.²

May that Vishúu, who is the existent, imperishable, Brahma, who is Íśwara³, who is spirit⁴; who with the three qualities⁵ is the cause of creation, preservation, and destruction; who is the parent of nature, intellect, and the other ingredients of the universe⁶; be to us the bestower of understanding, wealth, and final emancipation.

² In this stanza occurs a series of the appellations of Vishúu: 1. Puññārakāksha (पुन्नारकाक्ष), having eyes like a lotus, or heart-pervading; or Puññārakā is explained supreme glory, and Aksha imperishable: the first is the most usual etymon. 2. Viśwabhāvana (विश्वभवन), the creator of the universe, or the cause of the existence of all things. 3. Hrishikeśa (ह्रिषीकेश), lord of the senses. 4. Mahá purusha (महापुरुष), great or supreme spirit; purusha meaning that which abides or is quiescent in body (puṣī sētē). 5. Púrvaja (पूरवज), produced or appearing before creation; the Orphic πατερόγονος. In the fifth book, c. 18, Vishúu is described by five appellations, which are considered analogous to these; or, 1. Bhútátmā (भूतात्मा), one with created things, or Puññārakāksha; 2. Pradhánamá (प्रधानाम), one with crude nature, or Viśwabhāvana; 3. Indriyátmā (इन्द्रियात्म), one with the senses, or Hrishikeśa; 4. Paramátmá (परात्मा), supreme spirit, or Mahápurusha; and Átmá (आत्मा), soul; living soul, animating nature and existing before it, or Púrvaja.

³ Brahma (ब्रह्म), in the neuter form, is abstract supreme spirit; and Íśwara (इश्वर) is the Deity in his active nature, he who is able to do or leave undone, or to do any thing in any other manner than that in which it is done: कुमारकुमार-वर्षा कुं हृदि समये।

⁴ Pumán (पुमान) which is the same with Purusha, incorporated spirit. By this and the two preceding terms also the commentator understands the text to signify that Vishúu is any form of spiritual being that is acknowledged by different philosophical systems, or that he is the Brahma of the Vedánta, the Íśwara of the Púraná, and the Purusha of the Sámkhya school.

⁵ The three qualities, to which we shall have further occasion to advert, are, Satya (सत्य), goodness or purity, knowledge, quiescence; Rajas (रजस), fowlness, passion, activity; and Tamas (तमस), darkness, ignorance, inertia.

⁶ Pradhánaprabhandhádáśu (प्रद्धानप्रभापदाशु). This predicate of the Deity distinguishes most of the Puránas from several of the philosophical systems, which maintain, as did the earliest Grecian systems of cosmogony, the eternal and independent existence of the first principle of things, as nature, matter, or chaos. Accordingly, the commentator notices the objection. Pradháná being without beginning, it is said how can Vishúu be its parent? To which he replies, that this is not so, for in a period of worldly destruction (Pralaya), when the Creator desists from creating, nothing is generated by virtue of any other energy or parent. Or, if this be not satisfactory, then the text may be understood to imply that intellect (Buddhi) &c. are formed through the materiality of crude nature, or Pradhána.
MAITREYA’S INQUIRY.

Having adored Vishnu, the lord of all, and paid reverence to Brahma and the rest; having also saluted the spiritual preceptor; I will narrate a Purana equal in sanctity to the Vedas.

Maitreya, having saluted him reverentially, thus addressed Parashara, the excellent sage, the grandson of Vaishistha, who was versed in traditional history, and the Puranas; who was acquainted with the Vedas, and the branches of science dependent upon them; and skilled in law and philosophy; and who had performed the morning rites of devotion.

Maitreya said, Master! I have been instructed by you in the whole of the Vedas, and in the institutes of law and of sacred science: through your favour, other men, even though they be my foes, cannot accuse me of having been remiss in the acquirement of knowledge. I am now desirous, oh thou who art profound in piety! to hear from thee, how this world was, and how in future it will be? what is its substance, oh Brahman, and whence proceeded animate and inanimate things? into what has it been resolved, and into what will its dissolution again occur? how were the elements manifested? whence proceeded the gods and other beings? what are the situation and extent of the oceans and the 7 Vishnu is commonly derived in the Puranas from the root Vis (विस्), to enter, entering into, or pervading the universe, agreeably to the text of the Vedas, विसृज्यो शुद्धं प्रकृतिः। Having created that (world), he then afterwards enters into it.' being, as our comment observes, undistinguished by place, time, or property; विसृज्यो शुद्धं प्रकृतिः। According to the Mataya P. the name alludes to his entering into the mundane egg; according to the Padma P., to his entering into or combining with Prakriti, as Purusha or spirit: शुद्धं प्रकृतिः। In the Moksha Dharma of the Mahabharata, s. 1.5, the word is derived from the root vi (वी), signifying motion, pervasion, production, radiance; or, irregularly, from krama (क्रम), to go with the particle vi (वि), implying, variously, prefixed.

8 Brahma and the rest is said to apply to the series of teachers through whom this Purana was transmitted from its first reputed author, Brahma, to its actual narrator, the sage Parashara. See also b. VI. c. 8.

9 The Guru, or spiritual preceptor, is said to be Kapila or Saravatsa; the latter is included in the series of teachers of the Purana. Parashara must be considered also as a disciple of Kapila, as a teacher of the Sankhya philosophy.

10 Maitreya is the disciple of Parashara, who relates the Vishnu Purana to him; he is also one of the chief interlocutors in the Bhagavata, and is introduced in the Mahabharata (Vana Parva, s. 10.) as a great Rishi, or sage, who denounces Duryodhana's death. In the Bhagavata he is also termed Kausharavi, or the son of Kusharava.
mountains, the earth, the sun, and the planets? what are the families of the gods and others, the Menus, the periods called Manwantaras, those termed Kalpas, and their subdivisions, and the four ages: the events that happen at the close of a Kalpa, and the terminations of the several ages\(^\text{11}\): the histories, oh great Muni, of the gods, the sages, and kings; and how the Vedas were divided into branches (or schools), after they had been arranged by Vyása: the duties of the Brahmans, and the other tribes, as well as of those who pass through the different orders of life? All these things I wish to hear from you, grandson of Vaśishtha. Incline thy thoughts benevolently towards me, that I may, through thy favour, be informed of all I desire to know.

Parásara replied, Well inquired, pious Maitreya. You recall to my recollection that which was of old narrated by my father’s father, Vaśishtha. I had heard that my father had been devoured by a Rákshas employed by Viśvámītra: violent anger seized me, and I commenced a sacrifice for the destruction of the Rákshasas: hundreds of them were reduced to ashes by the rite, when, as they were about to be entirely extirpated, my grandfather Vaśishtha thus spake to me: Enough, my child; let thy wrath be appeased: the Rákshasas are not culpable: thy father’s death was the work of destiny. Anger is the passion of fools; it becometh not a wise man. By whom, it may be asked, is any one killed? Every man reaps the consequences of his own acts. Anger, my son, is the destruction of all that man obtains by arduous exertions, of fame, and of devout austerities; and prevents the attainment of heaven or of emancipation. The chief sages always shun wrath: be not thou, my child, subject to its influence. Let no more of these unoffending spirits of darkness be consumed. Mercy is the might of the righteous\(^\text{12}\).

\(^{11}\) One copy reads Yuga dharma, the duties peculiar to the four ages, or their characteristic properties, instead of Yu-gánta.

\(^{12}\) Sacrifice of Parásara. The story of Parásara’s birth is narrated in detail in the Mahábhárata (Ádi Parva, s. 176). King Kalmáshapáda meeting with Sakti, the son of Vaśishtha, in a narrow path in a thicket, desired him to stand out of his way. The sage refused: on which the Rája beat him with his whip, and Sakti cursed him to become a Rákshas, a man-devouring spirit. The Rája in this transformation killed and ate its author, or Sakti, together with all the other sons of Vaśishtha. Sakti left his wife Adriáyantí pregnant, and she gave birth to Parásara, who was brought up by COMING OF PULASTYA.

Being thus admonished by my venerable grandsire, I immediately desisted from the rite, in obedience to his injunctions, and Vasiṣṭha, the most excellent of sages, was content with me. Then arrived Pulastya, the son of Brahmā, who was received by my grandfather with the customary marks of respect. The illustrious brother of Pulaha said to me; Since, in the violence of animosity, you have listened to the words of your progenitor, and have exercised clemency, therefore you shall become learned in every science; since you have forborne, even though incensed, to destroy my posterity, I will bestow upon you another boon, and you shall become the author of a summary of the Purāṇas; you shall know his grandfather. When he grew up, and was informed of his father’s death, he instituted a sacrifice for the destruction of all the Rākshasas; but was dissuaded from its completion by Vasiṣṭha and other sages or Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu. The Mahābhārata adds, that when he desisted from the rite, he scattered the remaining sacrificial fire upon the northern face of the Himālaya mountain, where it still blazes forth at the phases of the moon, consuming Rākshasas, forests, and mountains. The legend alludes possibly to some trans-himalayan volcano. The transformation of Kalmāshapāda is ascribed in other places to a different cause; but he is every where regarded as the devourer of Sakti or Saktri, as the name also occurs. The story is told in the Linga Purāṇa (Pūrvārdha, s. 64) in the same manner, with the addition, conformably to the Saiva tendency of that work, that Parāśara begins his sacrifice by propitiating Mahādeva. Vasiṣṭha’s discussion, and Pulastya’s appearance, are given in the very words of our text; and the story concludes, ‘thus through the favour of Pulastya and of the wise Vasiṣṭha, Parāśara composed the Vaishñava (Vishnu) Purāṇa, containing ten thousand stanzas, and being the third of the Purāṇa compilations’ (Purāṇaṁ parāmbhāt. The Bhāgavata (b. III. s. 8) also alludes, though obscurely, to this legend. In recapitulating the succession of the narrators of part of the Bhāgavata, Maitreya states that this first Purāṇa was communicated to him by his Guru Parāśara, as he had been desired by Pulastya: शीतासमाय व श्रवां घर्भ (पराशारी) पुलास्यां पुराणमां i.e., according to the commentator, agreeably to the boon given by Pulastya to Parāśara, saying, ‘You shall be a narrator of Purāṇas’; (पुराणमां अर्हितां). The Mahābhārata makes no mention of the communication of this faculty to Parāśara by Pulastya; and as the Bhāgavata could not derive this particular from that source, it here most probably refers unavowedly, as the Linga does avowedly, to the Vishnu Purāṇa.

13 Pulastya, as will be presently seen, is one of the Rishis, who were the mind-born sons of Brahmā. Pulaha, who is here also named, is another. Pulastya is considered as the ancestor of the Rākshasas, as he is the father of Visravas, the father of Ravana and his brethren. Uttar Rāmāyana. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, s. 272. Pādma Pur. Linga Pur. s. 63.

14 Purāṇaṁ parāmbhāt kertā Bhavān bhathe true nature of the deities, as it really is; and, whether engaged in religious rites, or abstaining from their performance, your understanding, through my favour, shall be perfect, and exempt from doubts. Then my grandsire Vaśishtha added; Whatever has been said to thee by Pulastya, shall assuredly come to pass.

Now truly all that was told me formerly by Vaśishtha, and by the wise Palastya, has been brought to my recollection by your questions, and I will relate to you the whole, even all you have asked. Listen to the complete compendium of the Purāṇas, according to its tenour. The world was produced from Vishńu: it exists in him: he is the cause of its continuance and cessation: he is the world.

vishyati. You shall be a maker of the Sanhitā, or compendium of the Purāṇas, or of the Vishńu Purāṇa, considered as a summary or compendium of Pauranic traditions. In either sense it is incompatible with the general attribution of all the Purāṇas to Vyāsa.

15 Whether performing the usual ceremonies of the Brahmans, or leading a life of devotion and penance, which supersedes the necessity of rites and sacrifices.

16 These are, in fact, the brief replies to Maitreya’s six questions (p. 3), or, How was the world created? By Vishńu. How will it be? At the periods of dissolution it will be in Vishńu. Whence proceed animate and inanimate things? From Vishńu. Of what is the substance of the world? Vishńu. Into what has it been, and will it again be, resolved? Vishńu. He is therefore both the instrumental and material cause of the universe. ‘The answer to the “whence” replies to the query as to the instrumental cause: “He is the world” replies to the inquiry as to the material cause.’

‘And by this explanation of the agency of the materiality, &c. of Vishńu, as regards the universe, (it follows that) all will be produced from, and all will repose in him.’ We have here precisely the ṛ̥ā of the Orphic doctrines, and we might fancy that Brucker was translating a passage from a Purāṇa when he describes them in these words: “Continuise Jovem (lege Vishnum) sive summum deum in se omnia, omnibus ortum ex se dedisse, omnia ex se genuisse, et ex sua produsisse essentia. Spiritum esse universi qui omnia regit vivificat esseque; ex quibus necessario sequitur omnia in eum redivit.” Hist. Philos. I. 388. Jamblichus and Proclus also testify that the Pythagorean doctrines of the origin of the material world from the Deity, and its identity with him, were much the same. Cudworth, I. c. p. 348.
Prayer of Parāśara to Vishnū. Successive narration of the Vishnū Purāṇa. Explanation of Vāsudeva: his existence before creation: his first manifestations. Description of Pradhāna or the chief principle of things. Cosmogony. Of Prákṛita, or material creation; of time; of the active cause. Development of effects; Mahat; Ahaṅkāra; Tanmātras; elements; objects of sense; senses; of the mundane egg. Vishnū the same as Brahmā the creator; Vishnū the preserver; Rudra the destroyer.

Parāśara said, Glory to the unchangeable, holy, eternal, supreme Vishnū, of one universal nature, the mighty over all: to him who is Hiranyagarbhā, Hari, and Śankara1, the creator, the preserver, and destroyer of

1 The three hypostases of Vishnū. Hiranyagarbhā (हिरण्यगर्भ) is a name of Brahmā; he who was born from the golden egg. Hari (हरि) is Vishnū, and Śankara (शंकर) Śiva. The Vishnū who is the subject of our text is the supreme being in all these three divinities or hypostases, in his different characters of creator, preserver and destroyer. Thus in the Mārkaṇḍeya: 'Accordingly, as the primal all-pervading spirit is distinguished by attributes in creation and the rest, so he obtains the denomination of Brahmā, Vishnū, and Śiva. In the capacity of Brahmā he creates the worlds; in that of Rudra he destroys them; in that of Vishnū he is quiescent. These are the three Avasthās (lit. hypostases) of the self-born. Brahmā is the quality of activity; Rudra that of darkness; Vishnū, the lord of the world, is goodness: so, therefore, the three gods are the three qualities. They are ever combined with, and dependent upon one another; and they are never for an instant separate; they never quit each other.'
the world: to Vásudeva, the liberator of his worshippers: to him, whose essence is both single and manifold; who is both subtle and corporeal, indiscrete and discrete: to Vishúu, the cause of final emancipation. Glory to the supreme Vishúu, the cause of the creation, existence, and end of this world; who is the root of the world, and who consists of the world.

Having glorified him who is the support of all things; who is the smallest of the small; who is in all created things; the unchanging, imperishable Purushottama; who is one with true wisdom, as truly known; eternal and incorrupt; and who is known through false appearances by the nature of visible objects: having bowed to Vishúu, the

2 This address to Vishúu pursues the notion that he, as the supreme being, is one, whilst he is all: he is Avikára, not subject to change; Sadaikarúpa, one invariable nature: he is the liberator (tára), or he who bears mortals across the ocean of existence: he is both single and manifold (ekánékarúpa): and he is the indiscrete (avyakta) cause of the world, as well as the discrete (vyakta) effect; or the invisible cause, and visible creation.

3 Jagnamaya, made up, or consisting substantially (ए), of the world. Maya is an affix denoting 'made' or 'consisting of', as Káśíyá maya, 'made of wood.' The world is therefore not regarded by the Pauranics as an emanation or an illusion, but as consubstantial with its first cause.

4 Ániyánsam ániyásam (नतीयांसमतीयांसम), 'the most atomic of the atomic;' alluding to the atomic theory of the Nyáya or logical school.

5 Or Achyuta (अच्युत); a common name of Vishúu, from a, privative, and chyuta, fallen; according to our comment, 'he who does not perish with created things.' The Mahábhárata interprets it in one place to mean, 'he who is not distinct from final emancipation;' and in another to signify, 'exempt from decay.'

A commentator on the Kaúikhaúda of the Skánda Puráña explains it, 'he who never declines (or varies) from his own proper nature.'

6 'This is another common title of Vishúu, implying supreme, best (Uttama), spirit (Purusha), or male, or sacrifice, or, according to the Mahábh. Moksha Dharma, whatever sense Purusha may bear: देवो यद देवो यदे परं पतिसिद्धिः पुरुषस्वरुपे स्वाता संहारे हतुमयं समायत अः.

7 Paramááras (परमाराष्ट्र), 'by or through the real object, or sense; through actual truth.'

8 Bhiránti dersáanatas (भ्रंस्तदर्शानतरत), 'false appearances,' in opposition to actual truth. 'By the nature of visible objects' (वच्चकृत्वचे चेत): Artha is explained by drityá (द्रित्य), 'visible;' swarúpena by 'the nature of:' that is, visible objects are not what they seem to be, independent existences; they are essentially one with their original source; and knowledge of their true nature or relation to Vishúu, is knowledge of Vishúu himself. This is not the doctrine of Mayá, or the influence of illusion, FORMS OF THE SUPREME BRAHMA.

destroyer, and lord of creation and preservation; the ruler of the world; unborn, imperishable, undecaying: I will relate to you that which was originally imparted by the great father of all (Brâhma), in answer to the questions of Daksha and other venerable sages, and repeated by them to Purukutsa, a king who reigned on the banks of the Narmâda. It was next related by him to Sâraswata, and by Sâraswata to me. 9

Who can describe him who is not to be apprehended by the senses: who is the best of all things; the supreme soul, self-existent: who is devoid of all the distinguishing characteristics of complexion, caste, or the like; and is exempt from birth, vicissitude, death, or decay: who is always, and alone: who exists everywhere, and in whom all things here exist; and who is thence named Vâsudeva. 10 He is Brâhma, supreme, lord, eternal, unborn, imperishable, undecaying; of one essence; ever pure as free from defects. He, that Brâhma, was all things; comprehending in his own nature the indiscrete and discrete. He then existed in the forms of Purusha and of Kâla. Purusha (spirit) is the first form of the supreme; next proceeded two other forms, the discrete and indiscrete; and Kâla (time) was the last. These four—Pradhâna (primary or crude matter), Purusha (spirit), Vyakta (visible substance), and Kâla (time)—the wise consider to be the pure and supreme condition of Vishnû. 12 These four forms, in their due proportions, are the causes of which alone, according to Vedânta idealism, constitutes belief in the existence of matter: a doctrine foreign to most of the Purânas, and first introduced amongst them apparently by the Bhâgavata.

9 A different and more detailed account of the transmission of the Vishnû Purân is given in the last book, c. 8.

10 The ordinary derivation of Vâsudeva has been noticed above (p. 1): here it is derived from Vas, 'to dwell,' from Vishnû's abiding in all things, and all in him: वासु वासु वासु वासु. The Mahâbhârata explains Vâsû in the same manner, and Deva to signify radiant, shining: देव देव देव देव देव. 11 The commentator argues that Vâsudeva must be the Brâhma, or supreme being, of the Vedas, because the same circumstances are predicated of both, as eternity, omnipresence, omnipotence, &c.; but he does not adduce any scriptural text with the name Vâsudeva.

12 Time is not usually enumerated in the Purânas as an element of the first cause, but the Padma P. and the Bhâgathe production of the phenomena of creation, preservation, and destruction. Vishnu being thus discrete and indiscrete substance, spirit, and time, sports like a playful boy, as you shall learn by listening to his frolics.13

That chief principle (Pradhána), which is the indiscrete cause, is called by the sages also Prakriti (nature): it is subtile, uniform, and comprehends what is and what is not (or both causes and effects); is durable, self-sustained, illimitable, undecaying, and stable; devoid of sound or touch, and possessing neither colour nor form; endowed with the three qualities (in equilibrium); the mother of the world; without beginning; and that into which all that is produced is resolved.14 By vata agree with the Vishnu in including it. It appears to have been regarded at an earlier date as an independent cause: the commentator on the Moksha Dherma cites a passage from the Vedas, which he understands to allude to the different theories of the cause of creation: ज्ञान: समा प्रमाणो निर्वाति वैश्वम्य भूतार्थिके योऽस: पुरुष:। Time, inherent nature, consequence of acts, self-will, elementary atoms, matter, and spirit, asserted severally by the Astrologers, the Buddhists, the Mimánsakas, the Jains, the Logicians, the Sákhya, and the Vedánta. Kravas was also one of the first generated agents in creation, according to the Orphic theogony.

13 The creation of the world is very commonly considered to be the Lila (नृत्य), sport or amusement, of the Supreme Being.

14 The attributes of Pradhána, the chief (principle or element), here specified, conform generally to those ascribed to it by the Sákhya philosophy (Sákhya Kárriká, p.16, &c.), although some of them are incompatible with its origin from a first cause. In the Sákhya this incongruity does not occur; for there Pradhána is independent, and co-ordinate with primary spirit. The Puráñas give rise to the inconsistency by a lax use of both philosophical and pantheistical expressions. The most incongruous epithets in our text are however explained away in the comment. Thus nitya (नियत), 'eternal,' is said to mean 'uniform, not liable to increase or diminution:' नियतं वरिष्ठं यथं पुरुषारिष्ठं। Sadasadátmaka (सदसदात्मक), 'comprehending what is and what is not,' means 'having the power of both cause and effect' (उत्पन्नप्रभावसमाधिकृतम्), as proceeding from Vishnu, and as giving origin to material things. Anádi (अनादि), 'without beginning,' means 'without birth' (अतन्तोत्तरसु), not being engendered by any created thing, but proceeding immediately from the first cause. 'The mother,' or literally 'the womb of the world' (वन्यतोमिनेन), means 'the passive agent in creation,' operated on or influenced by the active will of the Creator. The first part of the passage in the text is a favourite one with several of the Puráñas, but they modify it and apply it after their own fashion. In the Vishnu the original is, वस्त्रंगुलि वाक्य वह यथा प्रमाणविहितवशेषे: प्रीतमं प्रकृति: पुरुषा निर्मित्सदसदात्मकाः। rendered as above. The Váyu, Brahmánda, and that principle all things were invested in the period subsequent to the last dissolution of the universe, and prior to creation. For Brahmins learned in the Vedas, and teaching truly their doctrines, explain such

Kūrma Purāṇas have वचनज्ञ भारत यात्रासेव सदस्यादि वर्णः प्रवर्त्तित प्रमून्ते यद्यादयित्वम्।

‘The indiscernible cause, which is uniform, and both cause and effect, and whom those who are acquainted with first principles call Pradhāna and Prakṛti—is the uncon- cognizable Brahma, who was before all.’ यस्मादिभ्रमणविलयम्। But the application of two synonyms of Prakṛti to Brahma seems unnecessary at least. The Brahmā P. corrects the reading apparently: the first line is as before; the second is, प्रवर्त्तित प्रमून्ते यद्यादयित्वम् निन्येन निन्यीर्यथेः। The passage is placed absolutely: ‘There was an indiscernible cause eternal, and cause and effect, which was both matter and spirit (Pradhāna and Purusha), from which this world was made. Instead of ‘such’ or ‘this,’ some copies read ‘from which Iswara or god (the active deity or Brahma) made the world.’ The Hari Vansa has the same reading, except in the last term, which it makes ‘Iswara’ that is, according to the commentator, ‘the world, which is Iswara, was made.’ The same authority explains this indiscernible cause, avyakta kāraṇa, to denote Brahmā, ‘the creator.’ तेन न विपि देवतां देवता स्वपदुहाराण! an identification very unusual, if not inaccurate, and possibly founded on misappre- hension of what is stated by the Bhāvishya P.: देवतां समपदुहाराण। यद्यादयित्वम् गौरिष्ण: देव मूर्त्ति: सत्त्वो शासितिविभेदकः। देव: देवतां भवतात् इत्यादिः। “That male or spirit which is endowed with that which is the indiscernible cause, &c. is known in the world as Brahmā: he being in the egg, &c.’ The passage is precisely the same in Manu, I. 11; except

11 The expression of the text is rather obscure: All was pervaded (or comprehended) by that chief principle before (re-creation), after the (last) destruction: भेदार्थे तदनुपायोऽवस्था यदादयित्वम्। The ellipses are filled up by the commentator. This, he adds, is to be regarded as the state of things at a Mahā Pralaya, or total dissolution; leaving, therefore, crude matter, nature, or chaos, as a coexistent element with the Supreme. This, which is conformable to the philosophical doctrine, is not how- ever that of the Purāṇas in general, nor passages as the following as intending the production of the chief principle (Pradhána). "There was neither day nor night, nor sky nor earth, nor darkness nor light, nor any other thing, save only One, unapprehensible by intellect, or That which is Brahma and Pumán (spirit) and Pradhána (matter)." The two forms which are other than the essence of unmodified Vishnú, are Pradhána (matter) and Purusha (spirit); and his other form, by which those two are connected or separated, is called Kála (time). When discrete substance is aggregated in crude nature, as in a foregone dissolution, that dissolution is termed elemental (Prákritá). The deity as Time is without beginning, and his end is not known; and from him the revolutions of creation, continuance, and dissolution unintermittingly succeed: for when, in the latter season, the equilibrium of the qualities (Pradhána) exists, and spirit (Pumán) is detached from matter, then the form of Vishnú which is Time abides. Then the

that of our text, which states (b. VI. c. 4), that at a Prákritá, or elementary dissolution, Pradhána itself merges into the deity. Neither is it apparently the doctrine of the Vedas, although their language is somewhat equivocal.

16 The metre here is one common to the Vedas, Trishtubh, but in other respects the language is not characteristic of those compositions. The purport of the passage is rendered somewhat doubtful by its close, and by the explanation of the commentator. The former is, राज्व या प्रामाणिकः यथा पुरुषाभासः दोक्षीयते. 'One Pradhánika Brahma Spirit: That, was. The commentator explains Pradhánika, Pradhána eva, the same word as Pradhána; but it is a derivative word, which may be used attributively, implying 'having, or conjoined with, Pradhána.' The commentator, however, interprets it as the substantive: for he adds, 'There was Pradhána and Brahma and Spirit; this triad was at the period of dissolution.'

17 Or it might be rendered, 'Those two other forms (which proceed) from his supreme nature;' या प्रामाणिकः रूपाद्वेषात: that is, from the nature of Vishnú, when he is Nírupádhí, or without adventitious attributes: निर्गण्याय निकृष्टं सहस्राद: 'other' (कथे); the commentator states they are other or separate from Vishnú only through Máyá, 'illusion,' but here implying 'false notion;' the elements of creation being in essence one with Vishnú, though in existence detached and different.

18 Pradhána, when unmodified, is, according to the Sánkhyas and Paurásícs, nothing more than the three qualities in equilibrio, or goodness, foulness, and darkness neutralising each other; (Sánkhyas...
supreme Brahma, the supreme soul, the substance of the world, the lord of all creatures, the universal soul, the supreme ruler, Hari, of his own will having entered into matter and spirit, agitated the mutable and immutable principles, the season of creation being arrived, in the same manner as fragrance affects the mind from its proximity merely, and not from any immediate operation upon mind itself: so the Supreme influenced the elements of creation. Purushottama is both the agitator and Kārikā, p. 52;) so in the Mathya P.: अम्रे नामकरणं गुणवन्दर्शनं। सादालसिद्धिः स्वरूपीः परिवृत्तिः। This state is synonymous with the non-evolution of material products, or with dissolution; implying, however, separate existence, and detached from spirit. This being the case, it is asked what should sustain matter and spirit whilst separate, or renew their combination so as to renovate creation? It is answered, Time, which is when every thing else is not; and which, at the end of a certain interval, unites Matter, Pradhāna, and Purusha, and produces creation. Conceptions of this kind are evidently comprised in the Orphic triad, or the ancient notion of the cooperation of three such principles in creation, as Phanes or Eros, which is the Hindu spirit or Purusha; Chaos, matter or Pradhāna; and Chronos, or Kála, time.

Pradhāna is styled Vyaya (व्याया), 'that which may be expended;' or Purāṇin (पुराणिन), 'which may be modified;' and Purusha is called Avyaya (अव्यय), 'inconsumable;' or aparāṇin (अपराणिन), 'immutable.' The expressions प्रविष्ट 'having entered into,' and बोधवस्त्र 'agitated,' recall the mode in which divine intelligence, mens, νοῦς, was conceived by the ancients to operate upon matter:

Spiritus intus alit totamque infusa per artus
Mens agitat molem et magno se corpore miscet:
or perhaps it more closely approximates to the Phoenician cosmogony, in which a spirit mixing with its own principles gives rise to creation. Brucker, I. 240. As presently explained, the mixture is not mechanical; it is an influence or effect exerted upon intermediate agents, which produce effects; as perfumes do not delight the mind by actual contact, but by the impression they make upon the sense of smelling, which communicates it to the mind. The entrance of the supreme Vishnu into spirit as well as matter is less intelligible than the view elsewhere taken of it, as the infusion of spirit, identified with the Supreme, into Prakriti or matter alone. Thus in the Padma Purāṇa: योथि प्रजायत: पुरुष: मौद्ये ते हार्यक्षु: त दद्ध भगवानिष्ठा प्रकटः समाप्पेति। 'He who is called the male (spirit) of Prakriti, is here named Achyuta; and that same divine Vishnu entered into Prakriti.' So the Vrihat Naradiya: प्रकृति चैव भृगुस्वरूपे पुरुषोपर्यं नाभिन्दी। 'The lord of the world, who is called Purusha, producing agitation in Prakriti.' From the notion of influence or agitation produced on matter through or with spirit, the abuse of personification led to actual or vicarious admixture. Thus the Bhāgavata, identifying Māyā with Prakriti, has, कालपुरुषा हु स्वायत्ते गुणवन्दर्शनं पुरुषेऽन्तर्बले स्वीयत्वमर्याद्यः। the thing to be agitated; being present in the essence of matter, both when it is contracted and expanded. Vishvù, supreme over the supreme, is of the nature of discrete forms in the atomic productions, Brahmá and the rest (gods, men, &c.)

Then from that equilibrium of the qualities (Pradhána), presided over by soul, proceeds the unequal development of those qualities (constituting the principle Mahat or Intellect) at the time of creation.

21 The term here is Kshetrajña, ‘embody spirit,’ or that which knows the kahatra or ‘body,’ implying the combination of spirit with form or matter, for the purpose of creating.

22 The first product of Pradhána sensible to divine, though not to mere human organs, is, both according to the Sánkhya and Pauránic doctrines, the principle called Mahat, literally ‘the Great,’ explained in other places, as in our text, ‘the production of the manifestation of the qualities.’

20 Contraction, Sankocha (संकोच), is explained by Sámya (साम्य), sameness or equilibrium of the three qualities, or inert Pradhána: and Expansion, Vikása (विकास), is the destruction of this equipoise, by previous agitation and consequent development of material products.
Chief principle then invests that Great principle, Intellect, and it becomes threefold, as affected by the quality of goodness, foulness, or darkness, and invested by the Chief principle (matter) as seed is by its skin. From the Great principle (Mahat) Intellect, threefold Egotism, (Ahan-kára) ²³, is that by which the concurrence of nature occupies and fills all bodies. Buddha is that which communicates to soul the knowledge of good and evil. Khyáti is the means of individual fruition, or the faculty of discriminating objects by appropriate designations, and the like. Iswara is that which knows all things as if they were present. Prajá is that by which the properties of things are known. Chiti is that by which the consequences of acts and species of knowledge are selected for the use of soul. Smriti is the faculty of recognising all things, past, present, or to come. Samvit is that in which all things are found or known, and which is found or known in all things: and Vipura is that which is free from the effects of contrarieties, as of knowledge and ignorance, and the like. Mahat is also called Iswara, from its exercising supremacy over all things; Bháva, from its elementary existence; Eka, or 'the one,' from its singleness; Purusha, from its abiding within the body; and from its being ungenerated it is called Swayambhu. Now in this nomenclature we have chiefly two sets of words; one, as Manas, Buddha, Mati, signifying mind, intelligence, knowledge, wisdom, design; and the other, as Brahma, Iswara, &c., denoting an active creator and ruler of the universe: as the Váyu adds, महात सृजित विपुर्णो च चित्तविद्याम् तिष्ठयोऽस्मि। 'Mahat, impelled by the desire to create, causes various creation;' and the Mahábhárata has, महात सन्तीचर्यार्थवाचः महात सन्तीचर्यार्थवाचः। 'Mahat created Ahan-kára.' The Puránas generally employ the same expression, attributing to Mahat or Intelligence the act of creating. Mahat is therefore the divine mind in creative operation, the νος ὁ διακόσμος τε καὶ ταπτὸν αῖτιος of Anaxagoras; 'an ordering and disposing mind, which was the cause of all things.' The word itself suggests some relationship to the Phœnician Mot, which, like Mahat, was the first product of the mixture of spirit and matter, and the first rudiment of creation: 'Ex connexione autem ejus spiritus proditi mot . . . hinc seminum omnis creaturae et omnium rerum creatio.' Brucker, I. 240. Mot, it is true, appears to be a purely material substance, whilst Mahat is an incorporeal substance; but they agree in their place in the cosmology, and are something alike in name: How far also the Phœnician system has been accurately described, is matter of uncertainty. See Sánkhya Káriká, p. 83.

²³ The sense of Ahan-kára cannot be very well rendered by any European term. It means the principle of individual existence, that which appropriates perceptions, and on which depend the notions, I think, I feel, I am. It might be expressed by the proposition of Descartes reversed; 'Sum, ergo cogito, sentio,' &c. The equivalent employed by Mr. Colebrooke, egotism, has the advantage of an analogous etymology, Ahan-kára being derived from Aham (अहम्), 'I,' as in the Hari Vansa: अहम निर्देश सहस्राण प्रमाण वास्तवार्थ भासि । 'He (Brahmá), oh Bhrá- rata, said, I will create creatures.' See also S. Káriká, p. 91.
denominated Vaikarika, ‘pure’; Taijasa, ‘passionate’; and Bhūtādi, ‘rudimental,’ is produced; the origin of the (subtile) elements, and of the organs of sense; invested, in consequence of its three qualities, by Intellect, as Intellect is by the Chief principle. Elementary Egotism then becoming productive, as the rudiment of sound, produced from it Ether, of which sound is the characteristic, investing it with its rudiment of sound. Ether becoming productive, engendered the rudiment of touch; whence originated strong wind, the property of which is touch; and Ether, with the rudiment of sound, enveloped the rudiment of touch. Then wind becoming productive, produced the rudiment of form (colour); whence light (or fire) proceeded, of which, form (colour) is the attribute; and the rudiment of touch enveloped the wind with the rudiment of colour. Light becoming productive, produced the rudiment of taste; whence proceed all juices in which flavour resides; and the rudiment of colour invested the juices with the rudiment of taste. The waters becoming productive, engendered the rudiment of smell; whence an aggregate (earth) originates, of which smell is the property.

In each several

24 These three varieties of Ahankāra are also described in the Sānkhyā Kārikā, p. 92. Vaikarika, that which is productive, or susceptible of production, is the same as the Sātwika, or that which is combined with the property of goodness. Taijasa Ahankāra is that which is endowed with Tejas, ‘heat’ or ‘energy,’ in consequence of its having the property of Rajas, ‘passion’ or ‘activity; and the third kind, Bhūtādi, or ‘elementary,’ is the Tāmasa, or has the property of darkness. From the first kind proceed the senses; from the last, the rudimental unconscious elements; both kinds, which are equally of themselves inert, being rendered productive by the cooperation of the second, the energetic or active modification of Ahankāra, which is therefore said to be the origin of both the senses and the elements.

25 The successive series of rudiments and elements, and their respectively engendering the rudiments and elements next in order, occur in most of the Purānas, in nearly the same words. The Vrihannáradiya P. observes, तत्त्व ज्ञान बनर्जीटर्पण ‘They (the elements) in successive order acquire the property of causality one to the other.’ The order is also the same; or, ether (ākāsa), wind or air (vāyu), fire or light (tejas), water and earth; except in one passage of the Mahābhārata (Moksha Dharma, c. 9), where it is ether, water, fire, air, earth. The order of Empedocles was ether, fire, earth, water, air. Cudworth, I. 97. The investment (āvarāṇa) of each element by its own rudiment, and of each rudiment by its preceding gross and rudimental elements, is also met with in most of the chief Purānas, as the Vāyu, Padma, Līnga, and Bhāgavata; and traces element resides its peculiar rudiment; thence the property of tanmātrātā 26 (type or rudiment) is ascribed to these elements. Rudimental elements are not endowed with qualities, and therefore they are neither soothing, nor terrific, nor stupifying 27. This is the elemental creation, proceeding from the principle of egotism affected by the property of darkness. The organs of sense are said to be the passionate products of the same principle, affected by foulness; and the ten divinities 28 proceed from egotism affected by the principle of goodness; as does Mind, which of it are found amongst the ancient cosmogonists; for Anaximander supposed, that 29 when the world was made, a certain sphere or flame of fire, separated from matter (the Infinite), encompassed the air, which invested the earth as the bark does a tree: 30 'Kata 'tān 'γίνεται τοῦ τοῦ κόσμου ἀποκρί-θηναι, καὶ τίνα ἐκ τούτου φλογὸς σφαῖραν περιφυναν τῇ περὶ τὴν γῆν ἄριστα, ὡς τῇ δέδομεν φλογὴν.' Euseb. Pr. I. 15. Some of the Purāṇas, as the Matsya, Vāyu, Līṅga, Bhāgavata, and Mārkaṇḍeya, add a description of a participation of properties amongst the elements, which is rather Vedānta than Sāṁkhya. According to this notion, the elements add to their characteristic properties those of the elements which precede them. Ākasas has the single property of sound: air has those of touch and sound: fire has colour, touch, and sound: water has taste, colour, touch, and sound: and earth has smell and the rest, thus having five properties: or, as the Linga P. describes the series, 'वायुः प्राकृतिक शासन

सत्त्ववेत्तकधीति भिविविद्ययति । ते वायुः प्राकृतिक । सत्त्ववेत्तकधीति भिविविद्ययति । ते वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣāntā kalyāṇa दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣāntā kalyāṇa दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣāntā kalyāṇa दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣāntā kalyāṇa दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवा: वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyांतां काल्याणं दिवाः वायुः प्राकृतिक dharmार्थानी
tiṣṭhāntā । द्वितीयोऽद्वितीय सत्त्ववेत्तकधीति भिविविद्ययति । वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmārtha
gata kartti. dhyāntā । estas pratyakṣान्तां काल्याणं दिवाः वायुः प्राकृतिक
dharmार्थानी
tiṣṭhāntā । द्वितीयोऽद्वितीय सत्त्ववेत्तकधीति भिविविद्ययति ।

26 Tanmātṛa, 'rudiment' or 'type,' from Tad (तद्), 'that,' for Tasmin (तस्मिन्), 'in that' gross element, and mātrā (मात्रा),

'subtle or rudimental form' (मात्रा बूझक हरे)'. The rudiments are also the characteristic properties of the elements: as the Bhāgavata; रघु नाथ गुन नाभी रोको यहुः प्रभुः

प्रभुः: ' The rudiment of it (ether) is also its quality, sound; as a common designation may denote both a person who sees an object, and the object which is to be seen:' that is, according to the commentator, suppose a person behind a wall called aloud, "An elephant! an elephant!"

the term would equally indicate that an elephant was visible, and that somebody saw it. Bhag. II. 5.

27 The properties here alluded to are not those of goodness &c., but other properties assigned to perceptible objects by the Sāṁkhya doctrines, or Śānti (सांति), 'pla-cidity;' Ghoratā (घोरता), 'terror;' and Moha

(मोह), 'dulness' or 'stupefaction.' S. Kā-rikā, v. 38. p. 119.

28 The Bhāgavata, which gives a similar statement of the origin of the elements, senses, and divinities, specifies the last to be Diś (space), air, the sun, Prachetas, the Aświns, fire, Indra, Upendra, Mitra, and Ku or Prajāpāti, presiding over the senses, according to the comment, or seeveral over the ear, skin, eye, tongue, nose, speech, hands, feet, and excretory and generative organs. Bhag. II. 5. 31.

is the eleventh. The organs of sense are ten: of the ten, five are the skin, eye, nose, tongue, and ear; the object of which, combined with Intellect, is the apprehension of sound and the rest: the organs of excretion and procreation, the hands, the feet, and the voice, form the other five; of which excretion, generation, manipulation, motion, and speaking, are the several acts.

Then, ether, air, light, water, and earth, severally united with the properties of sound and the rest, existed as distinguishable according to their qualities, as soothing, terrific, or stupifying; but possessing various energies, and being unconnected, they could not, without combination, create living beings, not having blended with each other. Having combined, therefore, with one another, they assumed, through their mutual association, the character of one mass of entire unity; and from the direction of spirit, with the acquiescence of the indiscrete Principle, Intellect and the rest, to the gross elements inclusive, formed an egg, which gradually expanded like a bubble of water. This vast egg, O sage, compounded of the elements, and resting on the waters, was the 29 Avyaktánugrahaṇa (अव्यक्तनृग्रहण). The expression is something equivocal, as Avyakta may here apply either to the First Cause or to matter. In either case the notion is the same, and the aggregation of the elements is the effect of the presidence of spirit, without any active interference of the indiscrete principle. The Avyakta is passive in the evolution and combination of Mahat and the rest. Pradhána is, no doubt, intended, but its identification with the Supreme is also implied. The term Anugraha may also refer to a classification of the order of creation, which will be again adverted to.

30 It is impossible not to refer this notion to the same origin as the widely diffused opinion of antiquity, of the first manifestation of the world in the form of an egg. "It seems to have been a favourite symbol, and very ancient, and we find it adopted among many nations." Bryant, III. 165. Traces of it occur amongst the Syrians, Persians, and Egyptians; and besides the Orphic egg amongst the Greeks, and that described by Aristophanes, Τέκτων πρώτων ἐπίθεμος ὑπὲ ἡ μελανόπτερος ὀὖ, part of the ceremony in the Dionysiac and other mysteries consisted of the consecration of an egg; by which, according to Porphyry, was signified the world: Ἰδρυθὲ αὐτῷ τὸ ἄλλο τῶν κόσμων. Whether this egg typified the ark, as Bryant and Faber suppose, is not material to the proof of the antiquity and wide diffusion of the belief that the world in the beginning existed in such a figure. A similar account of the first aggregation of the elements in the form of an egg is given in all the Purânas, with the usual epithet Haima or Hiranya, 'golden,' as it occurs in Menu, I. 9.
excellent natural abode of Vishńu in the form of Brahmá; and there Vishńu, the lord of the universe, whose essence is inscrutable, assumed a perceptible form, and even he himself abided in it in the character of Brahmá. Its womb, vast as the mountain Meru, was composed of the mountains; and the mighty oceans were the waters that filled its cavity. In that egg, O Brahman, were the continents and seas and mountains, the planets and divisions of the universe, the gods, the demons, and mankind. And this egg was externally invested by seven natural envelopes, or by water, air, fire, ether, and Ahankára the origin of the elements, each tenfold the extent of that which it invested; next came the principle of Intelligence; and, finally, the whole was surrounded by the indiscreet Principle: resembling thus the cocoa-nut, filled interiorly with pulp, and exteriorly covered by husk and rind.

Affecting then the quality of activity, Hari, the lord of all, himself becoming Brahmá, engaged in the creation of the universe. Vishńu with the quality of goodness, and of immeasurable power, preserves created things through successive ages, until the close of the period termed a Kalpa; when the same mighty deity, Janárdana, invested with the quality of darkness, assumes the awful form of Rudra, and swallows up the universe. Having thus devoured all things, and converted the world into one vast ocean, the Supreme reposes upon his mighty serpent couch amidst the deep: he awakes after a season, and again, as Brahmá, becomes the author of creation.

Thus the one only god, Janárdana, takes the designation of Brahmá, Vishńu, and Śiva, accordingly as he creates, preserves, or destroys.

31 Here is another analogy to the doctrines of antiquity relating to the mundane egg: and as the first visible male being, who, as we shall hereafter see, united in himself the nature of either sex, abode in the egg, and issued from it; so this first-born of the world, whom they represented under two shapes and characters, and who sprung from the mundane egg, was the person from whom the mortals and immortals were derived. He was the same as Dionysus, whom they styled, ἐννέα μεγαλός σώματος Ἀτρῆς ουράνιος, "Prince of the gods," having a thousand aspects, "or, with the omission of one epithet, Ἀτρῆς, Ἐλευθεριάς, Εὐεργείου Ἐρμήδης, "

32 Janárdana is derived from Jana (जान), 'men,' and Ardā (आर्दर), 'worship;' the object of adoration to mankind.

33 This is the invariable doctrine of the Puráñas, diversified only according to the Vishúu as creator, creates himself; as preserver, preserves himself; as destroyer, destroys himself at the end of all things. This world of earth, air, fire, water, ether, the senses, and the mind; all that is termed spirit\(^{34}\), that also is the lord of all elements, the universal form, and imperishable: hence he is the cause of creation, preservation, and destruction; and the subject of the vicissitudes inherent in elementary nature\(^{35}\). He is the object and author of creation: he preserves, destroys, and is preserved. He, Vishúu, as Brahmá, and as all other beings, is infinite form: he is the supreme, the giver of all good, the fountain of all happiness\(^{36}\).

individual divinity to whom they ascribe identity with Paramátmá or Paramásáwa. In our text this is Vishúu: in the Saíva Puráásas, as in the Linga, it is Síva: in the Brahma-vaivarta it is Krishúu. The identification of one of the hypostases with the common source of the triad was an incongruity not unknown to other theogonies; for Ëmep, amongst the Egyptians, appears on the one hand to have been identified with the Supreme Being, the indivisible unity, whilst on the other he is confounded with both Ëmep and Ëtha, the second and third persons of the triad of hypostases. Cudworth, I. 4. 18.

\(^{34}\) ‘The world, that is termed spirit;’ explained by the commentator, पुरुषकर्मसे ‘which indeed bears the appellation spirit;’ conformably to the text of the Vedas, पुरुषसे सहि, ‘this universe is indeed spirit.’ This is rather Vedánta than Sánkhya, and appears to deny the existence of matter: and so it does as an independent existence: for the origin and end of infinite substance is the Deity or universal spirit: but it does not therefore imply the non-existence of the world as real substance.

\(^{35}\) Vishúu is both Bhútesa (भूतेः), ‘lord of the elements,’ or of created things, and Viśvarúpa (विष्णुरुप), ‘universal substance;’ he is therefore, as one with sensible things, subject to his own control.

\(^{36}\) Vareśya (वरेश्वर), ‘most excellent;’ being the same, according to the commentator, with supreme felicity: चर्मवत् जानाति.
CHAP. III.

Measure of time. Moments or Kāshṭhās, &c.; day and night; fortnight, month, year, divine year: Yugas, or ages: Mahāyugas, or great age: day of Brahmā: periods of the Manus: a Manwantara: night of Brahmā, and destruction of the world: a year of Brahmā: his life: a Kalpa: a Parārdha: the past, or Pādma Kalpa: the present, or Vārāha.

MAITREYA.—How can creative agency be attributed to that Brahma, who is without qualities, illimitable, pure, and free from imperfection?

PARĂŚARA.—The essential properties of existent things are objects of observation, of which no foreknowledge is attainable; and creation, and hundreds of properties, belong to Brahma, as inseparable parts of his essence, as heat, oh chief of sages, is inherent in fire.1 Hear then how

1 Agency depends upon the Raja guna, the quality of foulness or passion, which is an imperfection. Perfect being is void of all qualities, and is therefore inert:

Omnis enim per se divum natura necesse est Immortali suo summa cum pace fruatur:

but if inert for ever, creation could not occur. The objection is rather evaded than answered. The ascribing to Brahma of innumerable and unappreciable properties is supported by the commentator with vague and scarcely applicable texts of the Vedas. "In him there is neither instrument nor effect: his like, his superior, is nowhere seen:" 2 तत्त्व वाची करण न विपाके न विलक्षणविपक्षादि: 3 That supreme soul is the subjugator of all, the ruler of all, the sovereign of all:" 4 शाक्माय यदेन पद्ध तदेक्य प्राणम: तस्वैव विपक्षादि: 5 In various places of the Vedas also it is said that his power is supreme, and that wisdom, power, and action are his essential properties: प्रायज्ञ तत्त्व विद्वैशस्यसूतः सत्तृष्णी तत्त्वस्वाधीनतार्थिः 6. The origin of creation is also imputed in the Vedas to the rise of will or desire in the Supreme: श्रीमानयान्तत्त्व यथो भवति यथा। 'He wished I may become manifold, I may create creatures.' The Bhāgavata expresses the same doctrine: 'The Supreme Being was before all things alone, the soul and lord of spiritual substance: in consequence of his own will he is secondarily defined, as if of various minds.' भगवान वैभवस्य चालान्य विद्वैशस्यसूतः 7 नानाध्वस्य सयन्य तत्त्वस्य महानमाचार्यः भाय नाम यदाभय वेदेन्ति तदेन्ति भवति। 'She (that desire) was the energy of the Supreme, who was contemplating (the uncreated world); and by her, whose name is Māyā, the Lord made the universe.' This, which was at first a mere poetical personification of the divine will, came, in such works as the Bhāgavata, to denote a female divinity, coequal and coeternal with the First Cause. It may be doubted if the Vedas authorize such a mystification, and no very decided vestige of it occurs in the Vishnu Purāṇa.
the deity Náráyána, in the person of Brahmá, the great parent of the world, created all existent things.

Brahmá is said to be born: a familiar phrase, to signify his manifestation; and, as the peculiar measure of his presence, a hundred of his years is said to constitute his life: that period is also called Param, and the half of it, Parárdham. I have already declared to you, oh sinless Brahman, that Time is a form of Vishú: hear now how it is applied to measure the duration of Brahmá, and of all other sentient beings, as well as of those which are unconscious, as the mountains, oceans, and the like.

Oh best of sages, fifteen twinklings of the eye make a Káshthá; thirty Káshthás, one Kalá; and thirty Kalás, one Muhúrtta. Thirty Muhúrttas

2 This term is also applied to a different and still more protracted period. See b. VI. c. 3.
3 The last proportion is rather obscurely expressed: तथा निमेषाः पुनरिष्कृतम् निरदेशः: ‘Thirty of them (Kalás) are the rule for the Muhúrtta.’ The commentator says it means that thirty Kalás make a Ghatiká (or Ghari), and two Ghatikás a Muhúrtta; but his explanation is gratuitous, and is at variance with more explicit passages elsewhere; as in the Matsya: शस्त्रं शस्त्रस्मान्यन्यां निर्देशः: A Muhúrtta is thirty Kalás. In these divisions of the twenty-four hours the Kúrma, Márkaideya, Matsya, Váyu, and Línga Puráñas exactly agree with our authority. In Menu, I. 64, we have the same computation, with a difference in the first article, eighteen Nimeshas being one Káshthá. The Bha-vishya P. follows Menu in that respect, and agrees in the rest with the Padma, which has,

12 Kásháas = 1 Muhúrtta
30 Muhúrttas = 1 day and night.

In the Mahábhárata, Moksha Dherma, it is said that thirty Kalás and one-tenth, or, according to the commentator, thirty Kalás and three Káshthás, make a Muhúrtta. A still greater variety, however, occurs in the Bhágavata and in the Brahma Vai-vartta P. These have,

2 Paramáni = 1 Ánu
3 Ánis = 1 Trasareni
3 Trasareni = 1 Truti
100 Trutí = 1 Vedha
3 Vedhas = 1 Lava
3 Lavas = 1 Nimesha
3 Nimeshas = 1 Káshaá
5 Káshaás = 1 Káshthá
15 Káshthás = 1 Laghu
15 Laghus = 1 Náriká
2 Nárikás = 1 Muhúrtta
6 or 7 Nárikás = 1 Yama, or watch of the day or night.

Allusions to this or either of the preceding computations, or to any other, have not been found in either of the other Puráñas.
constitute a day and night of mortals: thirty such days make a month, divided into two half-months: six months form an Ayana (the period of the sun's progress north or south of the ecliptic): and two Ayanas compose a year. The southern Ayana is a night, and the northern a day, of the gods. Twelve thousand divine years, each composed of (three hundred and sixty) such days, constitute the period of the four Yugas, or ages. They are thus distributed: the Krita age has four thousand divine years; the Tretá three thousand; the Dwápara two thousand; and the Kali age one thousand: so those acquainted with antiquity have declared. The period that precedes a Yuga is called a Sandhyá, and it is of as many hundred years as there are thousands in the Yuga: and the period that follows a Yuga, termed the Sandhyánisa, is of similar duration. The interval between the Sandhyá and the Sandhyánisa is the Yuga, denominated Krita, Tretá, &c. The Krita, Tretá, Dwápara, and Kali, constitute a great age, or aggregate of four ages: a thousand such aggregates are a day of Brahmá, and fourteen Menus reign within that term. Hear the division of time which they measure.

yet the work of Gopála Bhaṭta, from which Mr. Colebrooke states he derived his information on the subject of Indian weights and measures (A. R. 5. 105), the Sankhya Parimáni, cites the Varáha P. for a peculiar computation, and quotes another from the Bhavishya, different from that which occurs in the first chapter of that work, to which we have referred. The principle of the calculation adopted by the astronomical works is different: it is, 6 respirations (Práśana) = 1 Vikalá; 60 Vikalás = 1 Daídá; 60 Daídás = 1 sydereal day. The Nimesha, which is the base of one of the Pauránic modes, is a twinkle of the eye of a man at rest; whilst the Paramáni, which is the origin of the other, and apparently more modern system, considering the works in which it occurs, is the time taken by a Paramáni, or mote in the sunbeam, to pass through a crevice in a shutter. Some indications of this calculation being in common currency, occur in the Hindustani terms Reśu (Trasaréśu) and Lamhu (Laghu) in Indian horometry (A. R. 5. 81); whilst the more ordinary system seems derived from the astronomical works, being 60 Tilás = 1 Vipala; 60 Vipalás = 1 Pala; 60 Palás = 1 Daídá or Ghari. Ibid.

These calculations of time are found in most of the Puránicas, with some additions occasionally, of no importance, as that of the year of the seven Rishis, 3030 mortal years, and the year of Dhruva, 9090 such years, in the Linga P. In all essential points the computations accord, and the scheme, extravagant as it may appear, seems to admit of easy explanation. We have, in the first place, a computation of the years of the gods in the four ages, or,
Seven Rishis, certain (secondary) divinities, Indra, Menü, and the kings his sons, are created and perish at one period; and the interval, called a Manwantara, is equal to seventy-one times the number of years contained in the four Yugas, with some additional years: this is the duration of the Menü, the (attendant) divinities, and the rest, which is equal to 852,000 divine years, or to 306,720,000 years of mortals, independent of the additional period. Fourteen times this period constitutes any astronomical computations, or to any attempt to represent actual chronology.

The details of these, as occurring in each Manwantara, are given in the third book, c. 1 and 2.

If these divine years are converted into years of mortals, by multiplying them by 360, a year of men being a day of the gods, we obtain the years of which the Yugas of mortals are respectively said to consist:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Yuga</th>
<th>Years</th>
<th>Sandhyá</th>
<th>Sandhyásna</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Krita</td>
<td>400</td>
<td>400</td>
<td>400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tretá</td>
<td>300</td>
<td>300</td>
<td>300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dwápara</td>
<td>200</td>
<td>200</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Káli</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>1200</td>
<td>1200</td>
<td>1200</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

If these are multiplied by 360, the result is 432,000,000 years, a Maháyuga.

So that these periods resolve themselves into very simple elements: the notion of four ages in a deteriorating series expressed by descending arithmetical progression, as 4, 3, 2, 1; the conversion of units into thousands; and the mythical fiction, that these were divine years, each composed of 360 years of men. It does not seem necessary to refer the invention to 4,320,000 or a divine age, \( \times 1000 = 4320,000,000 \) years, or a day or night of Brahmá. But a day of Brahmá is also seventy-one times a great age multiplied by fourteen: 4,320,000,000 \( \times 71 \times 14 = 4294,080,000 \), or less than the preceding by 25,920,000; and it is to make up for this deficiency that a certain number of years must be added to the computation by Manwantaras. According to the Súrya Sídhdhánta, as cited by Mr. Davis (A. R. 2. 231), this addition consists of a Sandhi to each Manwantara, equal to the Satya age, or 1,728,000 years; and one similar Sandhi at the commencement of the Kalpa; thus a Brähma day, that is, a day of Brahmá; the term (Brähma) being the derivative form. At the end of this day a dissolution of the universe occurs, when all the three worlds, earth, and the regions of space, are consumed with fire. The dwellers of Maharloka (the region inhabited by the saints who survive the world), distressed by the heat, repair then to Janaloka (the region of holy men after their decease). When the three worlds are but one mighty ocean, Brahmá, who is one with Nárāyaña, satiate with the demolition of the universe, sleeps upon his serpent-bed—contemplated, the lotus born, by the ascetic inhabitants of the Janaloka—for a night of equal duration with his day; at the close of which he creates anew. Of such days and nights is a year of Brahmá composed; and a hundred such years constitute his whole life. One Parárdhá, or half his existence, has expired, terminating with the Mahá Kalpa called Pádma. The Kalpa (or day of Brahmá) termed Várāha is the first of the second period of Brahmá’s existence.

\[4320.000 \times 71 = 306720.000 + 1728.000 = 308448.000 \times 14 = 4318272.000 + 1728.000 = 4320000.000.\]

The Paurānics, however, omit the Sandhi of the Kalpa, and add the whole compensation to the Manwantaras. The amount of this in whole numbers is 1851.428 in each Manwantara, or 4320.000 × 71 = 306,720,000 + 1,851,428 = 308,571,428 × 14 = 4319,999,992; leaving a very small inferiority to the result of the calculation of a Kalpa by a thousand great ages. To provide for this deficiency, indeed, very minute subdivisions are admitted into the calculation; and the commentator on our text says, that the additional years, if of gods, are 5142 years, 10 months, 8 days, 4 watches, 2 Muhúrttas, 8 Kalás, 17 Kásthás, 2 Nimeshas, and 4th; if of mortals, 1851.428 years, 6 months, 24 days, 12 Nárás, 12 Kalás, 25 Kásthás, and 10 Nimeshas. It will be observed, that in the Kalpa we have the regular descending se-

\[7\] The Brahma Vaivarta says 108 years, but this is unusual. Brahmá’s life is but a Nimesha of Krishná, according to that work; a Nimesha of Siva, according to the Saiva Purána.

\[8\] In the last book the Parárdhá occurs as a very different measure of time, but it is employed here in its ordinary acceptance.

\[9\] In theory the Kalpas are infinite; as the Bhaviśhya: कौरों कौरों जवलयां जलवां गुणितां:। गतारंज नामेकाचाच।।

Excellent sages, thousands of millions of Kalpas have passed, and as many are to come.” In the Linga Purána, and others of the Saiva division, above thirty Kalpas are named, and some account given of several, but they are evidently sectarian embellishments. The only Kalpas usually specified are those which follow in the text: the one which was the last, or the Pádma, and the present or Váráha. The first is also commonly called the Brahmá; but the Bhágavata distinguishes the Brahmá, considering it to be the first of Brahmá's life, whilst the Pádma was the last of the first Parárdha. The term Mahé, or great Kalpa, applied to the Pádma, is attached to it only in a general sense; or, according to the commentator, because it comprises, as a minor Kalpa, that in which Brahmá was born from a lotus. Properly, a great Kalpa is not a day, but a life of Brahmá; as in the Brahma Vaivartta: प्रयत्नावपुस्त कल्सः वालदी धनिष्किलिपः । बुद्धकल्स महूर्तक्षेत्र तम्बौद्धः सुमाता। "Chronologers compute a Kalpa by the life of Brahmá. Minor Kalpas, as Samvartta and the rest, are numerous." Minor Kalpas here denote every period of destruction, or those in which the Samvartta wind, or other destructive agents, operate. Several other computations of time are found in different Puráñas, but it will be sufficient to notice one which occurs in the Hari Vansa, as it is peculiar, and because it is not quite correctly given in M. Langlois' translation. It is the calculation of the Mánava time, or time of a Menu.

10 divine years = a day and night of a Menu.
10 Mánava days = his fortnight.
10 Mánava fortn. = his month.
12 Mánava months = his season.
6 Mánava seasons = his year.

Accordingly the commentator says 72000 divine years make up his year. The French translation has, "dix années des dieux font un jour de Menu; dix jours des dieux font un pakcha de Menu," &c. The error lies in the expression "jours des dieux," and is evidently a mere inadverence; for if ten years make a day, ten days can scarcely make a fortnight.
CHAP. IV.

Nárayána’s appearance, in the beginning of the Kalpa, as the Varáha or boar: Prithiví (Earth) addresses him: he raises the world from beneath the waters: hymned by Sanandana and the Yogí. The earth floats on the ocean: divided into seven zones. The lower spheres of the universe restored. Creation renewed.

MAITREYA.—Tell me, mighty sage, how, in the commencement of the (present) Kalpa, Nárayána, who is named Brahmá, created all existent things¹.

Paráśara.—In what manner the divine Brahmá, who is one with Nárayána, created progeny, and is thence named the lord of progeny (Prajápati), the lord god, you shall hear.

At the close of the past (or Pádma) Kalpa, the divine Brahmá, endowed with the quality of goodness, awoke from his night of sleep, and beheld the universe void. He, the supreme Nárayána, the incomprehensible, the sovereign of all creatures, invested with the form of Brahmá, the god without beginning, the creator of all things; of whom, with respect to his name Nárayána, the god who has the form of Brahmá, the imperishable origin of the world, this verse is repeated, “The waters are called Nárá, because they were the offspring of Nara (the supreme spirit); and as in them his first (Ayana) progress (in the character of Brahmá) took place, he is thence named Nárayána (he whose place of moving was the waters)².” He, the lord, concluding that within the waters lay the

¹ This creation is of the secondary order, or Pratisarga (प्रतिसर्ग); water, and even the earth, being in existence, and consequently having been preceded by the creation of Mahat and the elements. It is also a different Pratisarga from that described by Menu, in which Swayambhu first creates the waters, then the egg: one of the simplest forms, and perhaps therefore one of the earliest in which the tradition occurs.

² This is the well known verse of Menu, I. 8, rendered by Sir Wm. Jones, “The waters are called Nárá, because they were the production of Nara, or ‘the spirit’ of God; and since they were his first Ayana, or place of motion, he thence is named Nárayána, or ‘moving on the waters.’” Now although there can be little doubt that this tradition is in substance the same as that of Genesis, the language of the translation is perhaps more scriptural than earth, and being desirous to raise it up, created another form for that purpose; and as in preceding Kalpas he had assumed the shape of a fish or a tortoise, so in this he took the figure of a boar. Having adopted a form composed of the sacrifices of the Vedas, for the preservation of the whole earth, the eternal, supreme, and universal soul, the great progenitor of created beings, eulogized by Sanaka and the other is quite warranted. The waters, it is said in the text of Menu, were the progeny of Nara, which Kullāka Bhatā explains Paramātma, 'the supreme soul;' that is, they were the first productions of God in creation. Ayana, instead of 'place of motion,' is explained by Āsraya, 'place of abiding.' Nārāyaṇa means, therefore, he whose place of abiding was the deep. The verse occurs in several of the Purāṇas, in general in nearly the same words, and almost always as a quotation, as in our text:

The Linga, Vāyu, and Mārkandeya Purāṇas, citing the same, have a somewhat different reading; or, भाष्या नारायण नाम सुधुका च भाष्या महान महावालय नाम ब्रह्म हे नारायण: नाम:।  'Āpa (as the same (as) Nārā, or bodies (Tanava); such, we have heard (from the Vedas), is the meaning of Āpa. He who sleeps in them, is thence called Nārāyaṇa.' The ordinary sense of Tanu is either 'minute' or 'body,' nor does it occur amongst the synonyms of water in the Nirukta of the Vedas. It may perhaps be intended to say, that Nāra or Āpa has the meaning of 'bodily forms,' in which spirit is enshrined, and of which the waters, with Vishnu resting upon them, are a type; for there is much mysticism in the Purāṇas in which the passage thus occurs. Even in them, however, it is introduced in the usual manner, by describing the world as water alone, and Vishnu reposing upon the deep: द्वारा

3 The Varaha form was chosen, says the Vāyu P., because it is an animal delighting to sport in water, but it is described in many Purāṇas, as it is in the Vishnu, as a type of the ritual of the Vedas, as we shall have further occasion to remark. The elevation of the earth from beneath the ocean in this form, was, therefore, probably at first an allegorical representation of the extrication of the world from a deluge of iniquity by the rites of religion. Geologists may perhaps suspect, in the original and unmystified tradition, an allusion to a geological fact, or the existence of lacustrine mammals in the early periods of the earth.
saints who dwell in the sphere of holy men (Janaloka); he, the supporter of spiritual and material being, plunged into the ocean. The goddess Earth, beholding him thus descending to the subterrene regions, bowed in devout adoration, and thus glorified the god:—

_Prithivi_ (Earth)._—Hail to thee, who art all creatures; to thee, the holder of the mace and shell: elevate me now from this place, as thou hast upraised me in days of old. From thee have I proceeded; of thee do I consist; as do the skies, and all other existing things. Hail to thee, spirit of the supreme spirit; to thee, soul of soul; to thee, who art discrete and indiscrete matter; who art one with the elements and with time. Thou art the creator of all things, their preserver, and their destroyer, in the forms, oh lord, of Brahman, Vishnu, and Rudra, at the seasons of creation, duration, and dissolution. When thou hast devoured all things, thou reposest on the ocean that sweeps over the world, meditated upon, oh Govinda, by the wise. No one knoweth thy true nature, and the gods adore thee only in the forms it hath pleased thee to assume. They who are desirous of final liberation, worship thee as the supreme Brahman; and who that adores not Vasudeva, shall obtain emancipation? Whatever may be apprehended by the mind, whatever may be perceived by the senses, whatever may be discerned by the intellect, all is but a form of thee. I am of thee, upheld by thee; thou art my creator, and to thee I fly for refuge: hence, in this universe, Madhavī (the bride of Madhava or Vishnu) is my designation. Triumph to the essence of all wisdom, to the unchangeable, the imperishable: triumph to the eternal; to the indiscriminate, to the essence of discrete things: to him who is both cause and effect; who is the universe; the sinless lord of sacrifice4; triumph. Thou art sacrifice; thou art the oblation; thou art the mystic Omkara; thou art the sacrificial fires; thou art the Vedas, and their dependent sciences; thou art, Hari, the object of all worship5. The sun, the stars, the planets, the whole world; all that is formless, or that has form; all that is visible, or invisible; all, Purushottama, that I have said,

4 Yajnapati (यज्ञपति), ‘the bestower of the beneficial results of sacrifices.’
5 Yajnapurusha (यज्ञपुरुष), ‘the male or soul of sacrifice,’ explained by Yajnamurtti (यज्ञमूर्ति), ‘the form or personification of sacrifice;’ or Yajnakrdhyas (यज्ञकर्द्य), ‘he who is to be propitiated by it.’
or left unsaid; all this, Supreme, thou art. Hail to thee, again and again! hail! all hail!

Parásara.—The auspicious supporter of the world, being thus hymned by the earth, emitted a low murmuring sound, like the chanting of the Sáma veda; and the mighty boar, whose eyes were like the lotus, and whose body, vast as the Níla mountain, was of the dark colour of the lotus leaves, uplifted upon his ample tusks the earth from the lowest regions. As he reared up his head, the waters shed from his brow purified the great sages, Sanandana and others, residing in the sphere of the saints. Through the indentations made by his hoofs, the waters rushed into the lower worlds with a thundering noise. Before his breath, the pious denizens of Janaloka were scattered, and the Munis sought for shelter amongst the bristles upon the scriptural body of the boar, trembling as he rose up, supporting the earth, and dripping with moisture. Then the great sages, Sanandana and the rest, residing continually in the sphere of saints, were inspired with delight, and bowing lowly they praised the stern-eyed upholder of the earth.

6 Varáha Avatára. The description of the figure of the boar is much more particularly detailed in other Puráñas. As in the Váyu: "The boar was ten Yojanas in breadth, a thousand Yojanas high; of the colour of a dark cloud; and his roar was like thunder; his bulk was vast as a mountain; his tusks were white, sharp, and fearful; fire flashed from his eyes like lightning, and he was radiant as the sun; his shoulders were round, fat, and large; he strode along like a powerful lion; his haunches were fat, his loins were slender, and his body was smooth and beautiful." The Matsya P. describes the Varáha in the same words, with one or two unimportant varieties. The Bhágavata indulges in that amplification which marks its more recent composition, and describes the Varáha as issuing from the nostrils of Brahmá, at first of the size of the thumb, or an inch long, and presently increasing to the stature of an elephant. That work also subjoins a legend of the death of the demon Hiranyákaśha, who in a preceding existence was one of Víshńu's doorkeepers, at his palace in Vaikuntha. Having refused admission to a party of Munis, they cursed him, and he was in consequence born as one of the sons of Diti. When the earth, oppressed by the weight of the mountains, sunk down into the waters, Víshńu was beheld in the subterranean regions, or Rasátala, by Hiranyákaśha in the act of carrying it off. The demon claimed the earth, and defied Víshńu to combat; and a conflict took place, in which Hiranyákaśha was slain. This legend has not been met with in any other Puráña, and certainly does not occur in the chief of them, any more than in our text. In the Moksha Dharma of the Mahábharata, c. 35, Víshńu destroys the demons in the form of the Varáha, but no particular individual is specified, nor does the elevation of the earth depend upon their discomfiture. The Káliká Upapuráña has an absurd legend of a conflict between Siva as a Sarabha, a fabulous animal, and Víshńu as the Varáha, in which the latter suffers himself and his offspring begotten upon earth to be slain.

The Yogis.—Triumph, lord of lords supreme; Keśava, sovereign of the earth, the wielder of the mace, the shell, the discus, and the sword: cause of production, destruction, and existence. Thou art, oh god: there is no other supreme condition, but thou. Thou, lord, art the person of sacrifice: for thy feet are the Vedas; thy tusks are the stake to which the victim is bound; in thy teeth are the offerings; thy mouth is the altar; thy tongue is the fire; and the hairs of thy body are the sacrificial grass. Thine eyes, oh omnipotent, are day and night; thy head is the seat of all, the place of Brahma; thy mane is all the hymns of the Vedas; thy nostrils are all oblations: oh thou, whose snout is the ladle of oblation; whose deep voice is the chanting of the Sáma veda; whose body is the hall of sacrifice; whose joints are the different ceremonies; and whose ears have the properties of both voluntary and obligatory rites: do thou, who art eternal, who art in size a mountain, be propitious. We acknowledge thee, who hast traversed the world, oh universal form, to be the beginning, the continuance, and the destruction of all things: thou art the supreme god. Have pity on us, oh lord of conscious and unconscious beings. The orb of the earth is seen seated on the tip of thy tusks, as if thou hadst been sporting amidst a lake where the lotus floats, and hast borne away the leaves covered with soil. The space between heaven and earth is occupied by thy body, oh thou of unequalled glory, resplendent with the power of pervading the universe, oh lord, for the benefit of all. Thou art the aim of all: there is none other than thee, sovereign of the world: this is thy might, by which all things, fixed or movable, are pervaded. This form, which is now beheld, is thy form, as one essentially with wisdom. Those who have not practised devotion, conceive erroneously of the nature of the world. The ignorant, 7 This, which is nothing more than the development of the notion that the Va- rāha incarnation typifies the ritual of the Vedas, is repeated in most of the Purāṇas in the same or nearly the same words.

---

who do not perceive that this universe is of the nature of wisdom, and judge of it as an object of perception only, are lost in the ocean of spiritual ignorance. But they who know true wisdom, and whose minds are pure, behold this whole world as one with divine knowledge, as one with thee, oh god. Be favourable, oh universal spirit: raise up this earth, for the habitation of created beings. Inscrutable deity, whose eyes are like lotuses, give us felicity. Oh lord, thou art endowed with the quality of goodness: raise up, Govinda, this earth, for the general good.
Grant us happiness, oh lotus-eyed. May this, thy activity in creation, be beneficial to the earth. Salutation to thee. Grant us happiness, oh lotus-eyed.

Parāśāra.—The supreme being thus eulogized, upholding the earth, raised it quickly, and placed it on the summit of the ocean, where it floats like a mighty vessel, and from its expansive surface does not sink beneath the waters. Then, having levelled the earth, the great eternal deity divided it into portions, by mountains: he who never wills in vain, created, by his irresistible power, those mountains again upon the earth which had been consumed at the destruction of the world. Having then divided the earth into seven great portions or continents, as it was before, he constructed in like manner the four (lower) spheres, earth, sky, heaven, and the sphere of the sages (Maharloka). Thus Hari, the four-faced god, invested with the quality of activity, and taking the form of Brahmā, accomplished the creation: but he (Brahmā) is only the instrumental cause of things to be created; the things that are capable of being created arise from nature as a common material cause: with exception of one instrumental cause alone, there is no need of any other cause, for (imperceptible) substance becomes perceptible substance ac-ccording to the powers with which it is originally imbued.

This seems equivalent to the ancient notion of a plastic nature: "All parts of matter, by reason of a certain life in them, being supposed able to form themselves artificially and methodically to the greatest advantage of their present respective capabilities." This, which Cudworth (c. III.) calls hylozoism, is not incompatible with an active creator: "not that he should, autougyē δῶνα, set his own hand to every work, which, as Aristotle says, would be, ἀπρεπές τῷ θεῷ, unbecoming God; but, as in the case of Brahmā and other subordinate agents, that they should occasion the various developments of crude nature to take place, by supplying that will, of which nature itself is incapable. Action being once instituted by an instrumental medium, or by the will of an intellectual agent, it is continued by powers or a vitality inherent in nature or the matter of creation itself. The efficiency of such subordinate causes was advocated by Plato, Aristotle, and others; and the opinion of Zeno, as stated by Laertius, might be taken for a translation of some such passage as that in our text: 'Εστι δὲ φύσις ἐσι ἢ αὐτῆς κινομένη κατὰ σπερματικὸς λόγου, ἀνεπολέσα τα καὶ συνήχουσα τὰ ἢ αὐτῆς ἐν ύμισμένοις χρόνοις, καὶ τοιαῦτα ἄρσεν ἀπεκρίθη. 'Nature is a habit moved from itself, according to seminal principles; perfecting and containing those several things which in determinate times are produced from it, and acting agreeably to that from which it was secreted.' Intell. System, I. 328. So the commentator illustrates our text by observing that the cause of the budding of rice is in its own seed, and its development is from itself, though its growth takes place only at a determinate season, in consequence of the instrumental agency of the rain.
CHAP. V.

Vishńu as Brahmá creates the world. General characteristics of creation. Brahmá meditates, and gives origin to, immovable things, animals, gods, men. Specific creation of nine kinds: Mahat, Tanmátra, Aindríya, inanimate objects, animals, gods, men, Anugraha, and Kaumára. More particular account of creation. Origin of different orders of beings from Brahmá's body under different conditions; and of the Vedas from his mouths. All things created again as they existed in a former Kalpa.

MAITREYA.—Now unfold to me, Brahman, how this deity created the gods, sages, progenitors, demons, men, animals, trees, and the rest, that abide on earth, in heaven, or in the waters: how Brahmá at creation made the world with the qualities, the characteristics, and the forms of things 1.

PARÁSARA.—I will explain to you, Maitreya, listen attentively, how this deity, the lord of all, created the gods and other beings.

Whilst he (Brahmá) formerly, in the beginning of the Kalpas, was meditating on creation, there appeared a creation beginning with ignorance, and consisting of darkness. From that great being appeared fivefold Ignorance, consisting of obscurity, illusion, extreme illusion, gloom, utter darkness 2. The creation of the creator thus plunged in

1 The terms here employed are for qualities, Gunas; which, as we have already noticed, are those of goodness, fowlness, and darkness. The characteristics, or Swabhávas, are the inherent properties of the qualities, by which they act, as, soothing, terrific, or stupifying; and the forms, Swarúpas, are the distinctions of biped, quadruped, brute, bird, fish, and the like.

2 Or Tamas (तमस्), Moha (मोह), Mahámoha (महमोह), Tamiśra (तमिश्र), Andhatamiśra (अन्धतमिश्र); they are the five kinds of obstruction, viparyya (विपर्यया), of soul's liberation, according to the Sánkhya: they are explained to be, 1. The belief of material substance being the same with spirit; 2. Notion of property or possession, and consequent attachment to objects, as children and the like, as being one's own; 3. Addiction to the enjoyments of sense; 4. Impatience or wrath; and 5. Fear of privation or death. They are called in the Páñjála philosophy, the five afflictions, Klesa (कले), but are similarly explained by Avidyá (वाच्य), 'ignorance;' Asmitá (अस्मिता), 'selfishness,' literally 'I-am-ness;' Rága (राग) 'love;' Dwésha (द्वेष), 'hatred;' and Abhinivesá (अभिनिवेश), 'dread of temporal suffering.' Sánkhya Káríká, p. 148—150. This creation by Brahmá abstraction, was the fivefold (immovable) world, without intellect or reflection, void of perception or sensation, incapable of feeling, and destitute of motion. Since immovable things were first created, this is called the first creation. Brahmas, beholding that it was defective, designed another; and whilst he thus meditated, the animal creation was manifested, to the products of which the term Tiryakaratottas is applied, from their nutriment following a winding course. These were called beasts, &c., and their characteristic was the quality of darkness, being destitute of knowledge, uncontrolled in their conduct, and mistaking error for wisdom; being formed of egotism and self-esteem, labouring under the twenty-eight kinds of imperfection, manifesting inward sensations, and associating with each other (according to their kinds).

in the Varsha Kalpa begins in the same way, and in the same words, in most of the Puranas. The Bhagavata reverses the order of these five products, and gives them, Andhatamisra, Tamisra, Mahamoh, Moha, and Tamas; a variation obviously more immemorial than the usual reading of the text, and adopted, no doubt, merely for the sake of giving the passage an air of originality.

This is not to be confounded with elementary creation, although the description would very well apply to that of crude nature, or Pradhana; but, as will be seen presently, we have here to do with final productions, or the forms in which the previously created elements and faculties are more or less perfectly aggregated. The first class of these forms is here said to be immovable things; that is, the mineral and vegetable kingdoms; for the solid earth, with its mountains and rivers and seas, was already prepared for their reception. The fivefold immovable creation is indeed, according to the comment, restricted to vegetables, five orders of which are enumerated, or, 1. trees; 2. shrubs; 3. climbing plants; 4. creepers; and 5. grasses.

1 Tiryak (तिर्यक्), 'crooked;' and Srotas (स्रोतस्), 'a canal.'

2 Twenty-eight kinds of Badhas (बधाः), which in the Sankhya system mean disabilities, as defects of the senses, blindness, deafness, &c.; and defects of intellect, discontent, ignorance, and the like. S. Kārikā, p. 148, 151. In place of Badha, however, the more usual reading, as in the Bhagavata, Vrasha, and Marakideya Puranas, is Vidha (विधा), 'kind,' 'sort,' as चाराणिर्मणि चालका, implying twenty-eight sorts of animals. These are thus specified in the Bhagavata, III. 10: Six kinds have single hoofs, nine have double or cloven hoofs, and thirteen have five claws or nails instead of hoofs. The first are the horse, the mule, the ass, the yak, the sarabha, and the gaura, or white deer. The second are the cow, the goat, the buffalo, the hog, the gayal, the black deer, the antelope, the camel, and the sheep. The last are the dog, shacal, wolf, tiger, cat, hare, porcupine, lion, monkey, elephant, tortoise, lizard, and alligator.
Beholding this creation also imperfect, Brahmá again meditated, and a third creation appeared, abounding with the quality of goodness, termed Úrdhhasrotas. The beings thus produced in the Úrdhhasrotas creation were endowed with pleasure and enjoyment, unencumbered internally or externally, and luminous within and without. This, termed the creation of immortals, was the third performance of Brahmá, who, although well pleased with it, still found it incompetent to fulfil his end. Continuing therefore his meditations, there sprang, in consequence of his infallible purpose, the creation termed Arváksrotas, from indiscrete nature. The products of this are termed Arváksrotasas, from the downward current (of their nutriment). They abound with the light of knowledge, but the qualities of darkness and of foulness predominate. Hence they are afflicted by evil, and are repeatedly impelled to action. They have knowledge both externally and internally, and are the instruments (of accomplishing the object of creation, the liberation of soul). These creatures were mankind.

I have thus explained to you, excellent Muni, six creations. The first creation was that of Mahat or Intellect, which is also called the creation of Brahmá. The second was that of the rudimental principles (Tannátras), thence termed the elemental creation (Bhútá serga). The third was the modified form of egotism, termed the organic creation, or creation of the senses (Aindriyaka). These three were the Prákrita creations, the developments of indiscrete nature, preceded by the indiscrete

---

6 Úrdhha (उर्ध्व), 'above,' and Srotas, as before; their nourishment being derived from the exterior, not from the interior of the body: according to the commentator; उैव त्वपि रेतादिदिशेऽरोद पारस्परण्य गहया सन्त्व: as a text of the Vedas has it; 'Through satiety derived from even beholding ambrosia;' धृष्ट द्वारानाभुतः.

7 Arvák (अर्बक्य), 'downwards,' and Srotas (स्रोतस्), 'canal.'

8 This reckoning is not very easily reconciled with the creations described; for, as presently enumerated, the stages of creation are seven. The commentator, however, considers the Úrdhhasrotas creation, or that of the superhuman beings, to be the same with that of the Indriyas, or senses over which they preside; by which the number is reduced to six.

9 This creation being the work of the supreme spirit, यजुर्वेदाय वह विषय जगी विषये; according to the commentator; or it might have been understood to mean, that Brahmá was then created, being, as we have seen, identified with Mahat, 'active intelligence,' or the operating will of the Supreme. See p. 15, note.
principle. The fourth or fundamental creation (of perceptible things) was that of inanimate bodies. The fifth, the Taivyag yonia creation, was that of animals. The sixth was the Urdhvasrotas creation, or that of the divinities. The creation of the Arvakaratats beings was the seventh, and was that of man. There is an eighth creation, termed Anugraha, which possesses both the qualities of goodness and darkness. Of these creations, five are secondary, and three are primary. But there is a ninth,

10 The text is, सामार्गि परिन्यासम्: which is, as rendered in the text, 'creation preceded by, or beginning with Buddhi, intelligence.' The rules of euphony would however admit of a mute negative being inserted, or सहस्त्रोऽपि पुनरुपयुक्तम्: 'preceded by ignorance;' that is, by the chief principle, crude nature or Pradhana, which is one with ignorance: but this seems to depend on notions of a later date, and more partial adoption, than those generally prevailing in our authority; and the first reading therefore has been preferred. It is also to be observed, that the first unintellectual creation was that of immovable objects (as in p. 35), the original of which is, चन्दनविन्यासः कविस्म राजसाष्टिदेवः: and all ambiguity of construction is avoided. The reading is also established by the text of the Linga Puranam, which enumerates the different series of creation in the words of the Vishnu, except in this passage, which is there transposed, with a slight variation of the reading. Instead of प्रथमं महत्: कविस्म निकेषे वरदाण्यः सः: it is प्रथमं महत्: सामार्गि परिन्यासम्: 'The first creation was that of Mahat: Intellect being the first in manifestation.' The reading of the Vayu P. is still more tautological, but confirms that here preferred: प्रथमं महत्: कविस्म निकेषे न नमुनः सः: See also n. 12.

11 The Anugraha creation, of which no notice has been found in the Mahabharata, seems to have been borrowed from the Sankhya philosophy. It is more particularly described in the Padma, Markandeya, Linga, and Matsya Puranas; as, प्रकृति पुनर्देव: कविस्म अपरिन्यासः पञ्चप्रधत्वाय विश्वानात्मका: सुगुणम् वृः वृः: The fifth is the Anugraha creation, which is subdivided into four kinds; by obstruction, disability, perfectness, and acquiescence.' This is the Pratyaya sarga, or intellectual, creation, of the Sankhyas (S. Karik, v. 46, p. 146); the creation of which we have a notion, or to which we give assent (Anugraha), in contradistinction to organic creation, or that existence of which we have sensible perception. In its specific subdivisions it is the notion of certain inseparable properties in the four different orders of beings: obstruction or stolidity in inanimate things; inability or imperfection in animals; perfectibility in man; and acquiescence or tranquil enjoyment in gods. So also the Vayu P.: का रोपः निपुनयायस्मेऽदश्ययायस्मात्मका: सिद्धान्तानां तनुष्मान्तुरं दृश्येद्यु: य सः: 12 Or Vaikrita, derived mediately from the first principle, through its Vikrita, 'productions' or 'developements;' and Prakrita, derived more immediately from the chief principle itself. Mahat and the two forms of Ahanka, or the rudimental elements and the senses, constitute the latter class; inanimate beings, &c. compose the former: or the latter are considered as the work of the Kaumára creation, which is both primary and secondary. These are the nine creations of the great progenitor of all, and, both as primary and other Sanátana; for the passage is corrupt. The French translation ascribes a share in creation to Sanatkumára: ‘Les sept Prajapatis, Roudra, Scanda, et Sanatkumára, se mirent à produire les êtres repandant partout l’inépuisable énergie de dieu.’ The original is, विष्णु रुद्र संतकुमार संसार कीमती तश्च्याण। संक्षिप्त्वता is not ‘repepandant,’ but ‘restraining;’ and T几天 being in the dual number, relates of course to only two of the series. The correct rendering is, ‘These seven (Prajapatis) created progeny, and so did Rudra; but Skanda and Sanatkumára, restraining their power, abstained (from creation).’ So the commentator: संगीताण्य निरेजु संहिरकामुख दास्तारहुः। These sages, however, live as long as Brahmá, and they are only created by him in the first Kalpa, although their generation is very commonly, but inconsistently, introduced in the Várúka or Pádmá Kalpas. This creation, says the text, is both primary (Prákritra) and secondary (Vaikritra). It is the latter, according to the commentator, as regards the origin of these saints from Brahmá: it is the former as affects Rudra, who, though proceeding from Brahmá, in a certain form was in essence equally an immediate production of the first principle. These notions, the birth of Rudra and the saints, seem to have been borrowed from the Saivas, and to have been awkwardly engraven upon the Vaishháva system. Sanatkumára and his brethren are always described in the Saiva Purúšas as Yogis; as the Kúrmá, after enumerating them, adds, भागवतेऽस्मिन रुद्र एव योगिः। These five, oh Brahmans, were Yogis, and secondary, are the radical causes of the world, proceeding from the sovereign creator. What else dost thou desire to hear?

Maitreya.—Thou hast briefly related to me, Muni, the creation of the gods and other beings: I am desirous, chief of sages, to hear from thee a more ample account of their creation.

Parāśara.—Created beings, although they are destroyed (in their individual forms) at the periods of dissolution, yet, being affected by the good or evil acts of former existence, they are never exempted from their consequences; and when Brahmā creates the world anew, they are the progeny of his will, in the fourfold condition of gods, men, animals, or inanimate things. Brahmā then, being desirous of creating the four orders of beings, termed gods, demons, progenitors, and men, collected his mind into itself. Whilst thus concentrated, the quality of darkness who acquired entire exemption from passion: and the Hari Vana, although rather Vaisnava than Saiva, observes, that the Yogis celebrate these six, along with Kapila, in Yoga works: ज्ञाती शरीरसं नैर घोषिता रोगिका । वह्माय: वेयन्यथा शुश्रुतः तथा सन्तोषः । The idea seems to have been amplified also in the Saiva works; for the Linga P. describes the repeated birth of Śiva, or Vāmadeva, as a Kumāra, or boy, from Brahmā, in each Kalpa, who again becomes four. Thus in the twenty-ninth Kalpa Swetalohita is the Kumāra, and he becomes Sananda, NANDana, Viswananda, Upanandana; all of a white complexion: in the thirtieth the Kumāra becomes Vīrajās, Vivāhu, Visoka, Visvabhavana; all of a red colour: in the thirty-first he becomes four youths of a yellow colour: and in the thirty-second the four Kumāras were black. All these are, no doubt, comparatively recent additions to the original notion of the birth of Rudra and the Kumāras; itself obviously a sectarian innovation upon the primitive doctrine of the birth of the Prajāpati, or will-born sons of Brahmā.

14 These reiterated, and not always very congruous accounts of the creation are explained by the Purāṇas as referring to different Kalpas, or renovations of the world, and therefore involving no incompatibility. A better reason for their appearance is the probability that they have been borrowed from different original authorities. The account that follows is evidently modified by the Yogi Saivas, by its general mysticism, and by the expressions with which it begins: सती देवारुपवर्त्तकाणां नामस्वरूपस्वरूपानां सरवस्य सदाचारां नामात्माः अभित्वते । 'Collecting his mind into itself,' मनो समाचे । According to the comment, is the performance of the Yoga (Yuyuṣ). The term Ambhānsi, lit. 'waters,' for the four orders of beings, gods, demons, men, and Pitrīs, is also a peculiar, and probably mystic term. The commentator says it occurs in the Vedas as a synonyme of gods, &c.: श्रवणसमाधिगिरी विष्णुर्वद्याय नमो नमो नगर: चित्रोऽसुरा इति चूक्षे । The Vāyu Purāṇa derives it from भ्र to shine, pervaded his body; and thence the demons (the Asuras) were first born, issuing from his thigh. Brahmá then abandoned that form which was composed of the rudiment of darkness, and which, being deserted by him, became night. Continuing to create, but assuming a different shape, he experienced pleasure; and thence from his mouth proceeded the gods, endowed with the quality of goodness. The form abandoned by him, became day, in which the good quality predominates; and hence by day the gods are most powerful, and by night the demons. He next adopted another person, in which the rudiment of goodness also prevailed; and thinking of himself, as the father of the world, the progenitors (the Pitris) were born from his side. The body, when he abandoned it, became the Sandhyá (or evening twilight), the interval between day and night. Brahmá then assumed another person, pervaded by the quality of foulness; and from this, men, in whom foulness (or passion) predominates, were produced. Quickly abandoning that body, it became morning twilight, or the dawn. At the appearance of this light of day, men feel most vigour; while the progenitors are most powerful in the evening season. In this manner, Maitreya, Jyotná (dawn), Rátri (night), Ahar (day), and Sandhyá (evening), are the four bodies of Brahmá invested by the three qualities.

because the different orders of beings shine or flourish severally by moonlight, night, day, and twilight: भारित वतानुसारे भारिति &c.

15 This account is given in several other Puráñás: in the Kúrma with more simplicity; in the Padma, Línga, and Váyu with more detail. The Bhágavata, as usual, amplifies still more copiously, and mixes up much absurdity with the account. Thus the person of Sandhyá, ‘evening twilight,’ is thus described: “She appeared with eyes rolling with passion, whilst her lotus-like feet sounded with tinkling ornaments: a muslin vest depended from her waist, secured by a golden zone: her breasts were protuberant, and close together; her nose was elegant; her tongue beautiful; her face was bright with smiles, and she modestly concealed it with the skirts of her robe; whilst the dark curls clustered round her brow.” The Asuras address her, and win her to become their bride. To the four forms of our text, the same work adds, Tándrí, ‘sloth;’ Jrimbhiká, ‘yawning;’ Nidrá, ‘sleep;’ Unmáda, ‘insanity;’ Antardhána, ‘disappearance;’ Pratibimba, ‘reflection;’ which become the property of Pááchás, Kinnáras, Bhútás, Gandhérbas, Vidyádharas, Sádhyás, Pitris, and Menus. The notions of night, day, twilight, and moonlight being derived from Brahmá, seem to have originated with the Vedas. Thus the commentator on the Bhágavata
Next from Brahmá, in a form composed of the quality of foulness, was produced hunger, of whom anger was born: and the god put forth in darkness beings emaciate with hunger, of hideous aspects, and with long beards. Those beings hastened to the deity. Such of them as exclaimed, Oh preserve us! were thence called Rakshasas\textsuperscript{16}: others, who cried out, Let us eat, were denominated from that expression Yakshas\textsuperscript{17}. Beholding them so disgusting, the hairs of Brahmá were shrivelled up, and first falling from his head, were again renewed upon it: from their falling they became serpents, called Sarpa from their creeping, and Ahi because they had deserted the head\textsuperscript{18}. The creator of the world, being incensed, then created fierce beings, who were denominated goblins, Bhútás, malignant fiends and eaters of flesh. The Gandharbas were next born, imbibing melody: drinking of the goddess of speech, they were born, and thence their appellation\textsuperscript{19}.

The divine Brahmá, influenced by their material energies, having created these beings, made others of his own will. Birds he formed from his vital vigour; sheep from his breast; goats from his mouth; kine from his belly and sides; and horses, elephants, Sarabhás, Gayals, deer, camels, mules, antelopes, and other animals, from his feet: whilst from the hairs of his body sprang herbs, roots, and fruits.

Brahmá having created, in the commencement of the Kalpa, various plants, employed them in sacrifices, in the beginning of the Tretá age. Animals were distinguished into two classes, domestic (village) and wild (forest): the first class contained the cow, the goat, the hog, the sheep, the horse, the ass, the mule: the latter, all beasts of prey, and many animals with cloven hoofs, the elephant, and the monkey. The fifth order were the birds; the sixth, aquatic animals; and the seventh, reptiles and insects\textsuperscript{20}.

\textsuperscript{16} From Raksha (रक्षा), 'to preserve.'
\textsuperscript{17} From Yaksha (यक्ष), 'to eat.'
\textsuperscript{18} From Srip (स्रीप), serpo, 'to creep,' and from Há (हा), 'to abandon.'
\textsuperscript{19} Gám dhayantah (गम धयताः), 'drinking speech.'
\textsuperscript{20} This and the preceding enumeration
PRODUCTION OF THE VEDAS.

From his eastern mouth Brahmá then created the Gayatrí metre, the Rig veda, the collection of hymns termed Trivrit, the Rathantara portion of the Sáma veda, and the Agnishtoma sacrifice: from his southern mouth he created the Yajur veda, the Tristhubb metre, the collection of hymns called Panchadása, the Vrihat Sáma, and the portion of the Sáma veda termed Uktha: from his western mouth he created the Sáma veda, the Jayati metre, the collection of hymns termed Saptadasa, the portion of the Sáma called Vairúpa, and the Atirátra sacrifice: and from his northern mouth he created the Ekavinsa collection of hymns, the Atharva veda, the Áptoryámá rite, the Anushtubb metre, and the Vairája portion of the Sáma veda.

In this manner all creatures, great or small, proceeded from his limbs. The great progenitor of the world having formed the gods, demons, and Pitris, created, in the commencement of the Kalpa, the Yakshas, Pisáchás (goblins), Gandharbas and the troops of Apsarasas the nymphs of heaven, Naras (centaurs, or beings with the limbs of horses and human of the origin of vegetables and animals occurs in several Puránicas, precisely in the same words. The Lingá adds a specification of the Aranya, or wild animals, which are said to be the buffalo, gáyal, bear, monkey, sarabha, wolf, and lion.

21 This specification of the parts of the Vedas that proceed from Brahmá occurs, in the same words, in the Véyu, Lingá, Kúrma, Padma, and Márkaúnya Puráñas. The Bhágavata offers some important varieties: "From his eastern and other mouths he created the Rich, Yajush, Sáma, and Atharvan vedas; the Sástra (सूत्र), or 'the unuttered incantation'; Ijá (ईजा), 'oblation'; Stuti (स्तुति) and Sóma (सोम), 'prayers' and 'hymns'; and Práyaśchitta (प्रयास्थत्त), 'expiation' or 'sacred philosophy' (Bráhma): also the Vedas of medicine, arms, music, and mechanics; and the Itihásas and Puráñas, which are a fifth Veda: also the portions of the Vedas called Sórasi, Uktha, Púrishi, Agnishút, Áptoryámá, Atirátra, Vájapeya, Gosava; the four parts of virtue, purity, liberality, piety, and truth; the orders of life, and their institutes and different religious rites and professions; and the sciences of logic, ethics, and polity. The mystic words and monosyllable proceeded from his heart; the metre Usháni from the hairs of his body; Gayatrí from his skin; Trishtubbh from his flesh; Anushtubb from his tendons; Jagati from his bones; Púntki from his marrow; Vrihati from his breath. The consonants were his life; the vowels his body; the sibilants his senses; the semi-vowels his vigour." This mysticism, although perhaps expanded and amplified by the Pauránics, appears to originate with the Vedas: as in the text, धनुष्कङ्गः काव्रत। 'The metre was of the tendons.' The different portions of the Vedas specified in the text are yet, for the most part, uninvestigated. bodies) and Kinnaras (beings with the heads of horses), Rákshasas, birds, beasts, deer, serpents, and all things permanent or transitory, movable or immovable. This did the divine Brahmá, the first creator and lord of all: and these things being created, discharged the same functions as they had fulfilled in a previous creation, whether malignant or benign, gentle or cruel, good or evil, true or false; and accordingly as they are actuated by such propensities will be their conduct.

And the creator displayed infinite variety in the objects of sense, in the properties of living things, and in the forms of bodies: he determined in the beginning, by the authority of the Vedas, the names and forms and functions of all creatures, and of the gods; and the names and appropriate offices of the Rishis, as they also are read in the Vedas. In like manner as the products of the seasons designate in periodical revolution the return of the same season, so do the same circumstances indicate the recurrence of the same Yuga, or age; and thus, in the beginning of each Kalpa, does Brahmá repeatedly create the world, possessing the power that is derived from the will to create, and assisted by the natural and essential faculty of the object to be created.
CHAP. VI.

MAITREYA.—Thou hast briefly noticed, illustrious sage, the creation termed Arváksrotas, or that of mankind: now explain to me more fully how Brahmá accomplished it; how he created the four different castes; what duties he assigned to the Brahman and the rest.

PARÁSÁRA.—Formerly, oh best of Brahmanas, when the truth-meditating Brahmá was desirous of creating the world, there sprang from his mouth beings especially endowed with the quality of goodness; others from his breast, pervaded by the quality of foulness; others from his thighs, in whom foulness and darkness prevailed; and others from his feet, in whom the quality of darkness predominated. These were, in succession, beings of the several castes, Brahmanas, Kshtetiyas, Vaisyas, and Súdras, produced from the mouth, the breast, the thighs, and the feet of Brahmá. These he created for the performance of sacrifices, the four castes being the fit instruments of their celebration. By sacrifices, oh thou who knowest the truth, the gods are nourished; and by the rain which they bestow, mankind are supported: and thus sacrifices, the source of happiness, are performed by pious men, attached to their duties, attentive to prescribed obligations, and walking in the paths of virtue. Men acquire (by them) heavenly fruition, or final felicity: they go, after death, to whatever sphere they aspire to, as the consequence of their human

1 The creation of mankind here described is rather out of its place, as it precedes the birth of the Prajápatis, or their progenitors: but this want of method is common to the Puránas, and is evidence of their being compilations from various sources.

2 This original of the four castes is given in Manu, and in most of the Puránas. We shall see, however, that the distinctions are subsequently ascribed to voluntary election, to accident, or to positive institutions.

3 According to Manu, oblations ascend to and nourish the sun; whence the rain falls upon earth, and causes the growth of corn: burnt-offerings are therefore the final causes of the support of mankind.
nature. The beings who were created by Brahmá, of these four castes, were at first endowed with righteousness and perfect faith; they abode wherever they pleased, unchecked by any impediment; their hearts were free from guile; they were pure, made free from soil, by observance of sacred institutes. In their sanctified minds Hari dwelt; and they were filled with perfect wisdom, by which they contemplated the glory of Vishńu. After a while (after the Tretá age had continued for some period), that portion of Hari which has been described as one with Kála (time) infused into created beings sin, as yet feeble though formidable, or passion and the like: the impediment of soul’s liberation, the seed of iniquity, sprung from darkness and desire. The innate perfectness of human nature was then no more evolved: the eight kinds of perfection, Rasollásá and the rest, were impaired; and these being enfeebled, and sin gaining strength, mortals were afflicted with pain, arising from susceptibility to contrasts, as heat and cold, and the like. They therefore constructed places of refuge, protected by trees, by mountains, or by water; surrounded them by a ditch or a wall, and formed villages and cities; and in them erected appropriate dwellings, as defences against the sun and the cold. Having thus provided security against 4 This description of a pure race of beings is not of general occurrence in the Puránás. It seems here to be abridged from a much more detailed account in the Brahmádáya, Váyu, and Márkańdeya Puránás. In those works Brahmá is said to create, in the beginning of the Kalpa, a thousand pairs of each of the four classes of mankind, who enjoy perfect happiness during the Krita age, and only gradually become subject to infirmities as the Tretá or second age advances.

5 These eight perfections, or Siddhis, are not the supernatural faculties obtained by the performance of the Yoga. They are described, the commentator says, in the Skánda and other works; and from them he extracts their description: 1. Rasollásá, the spontaneous or prompt evolution of the juices of the body, independently of nutriment from without; 2. Tripti, mental satisfaction, or freedom from sensual desire; 3. Sánya, sameness of degree; 4. Tulyatá, similarity of life, form, and feature; 5. Visoká, exemption alike from infirmity or grief; 6. Consummation of penance and meditation, by attainment of true knowledge; 7. The power of going everywhere at will; 8. The faculty of reposing at any time or in any place. These attributes are alluded to, though obscurely, in the Váyu, and are partly specified in the Márkańdeya Puránás.

6 In the other three Puránás, in which this legend has been found, the different kinds of inhabited places are specified and the weather, men next began to employ themselves in manual labour, as a means of livelihood, (and cultivated) the seventeen kinds of useful grain—rice, barley, wheat, millet, sesame, panic, and various sorts of lentils, beans, and pease. These are the kinds cultivated for domestic introduced by a series of land measures. Thus the Márkaṇḍeya states, that 10 Pa-ramásūnas = 1 Parasūkshma; 10 Parasūkshmas = 1 Trasareṇu; 10 Trasareṇus = 1 particle of dust, or Mahārajas; 10 Mahārajasas = 1 Bāḷāgra, ‘hair’s point;’ 10 Bāḷāgras = 1 Līkhyā; 10 Līkhyās = 1 Yūka; 10 Yūkas = 1 heart of barley (Yavodara); 10 Yavodaras = 1 grain of barley of middle size; 10 barley grains = 1 finger, or inch; 6 fingers = a Pada, or foot (the breadth of it); 2 Padus = 1 Vitasti, or span; 2 spans = 1 Hasta, or cubit; 4 Hastas = a Dhanu, a Danda, or staff, or 2 Nārikaś; 2000 Dhanus = a Gavyūt; 4 Gavyūtis = a Yo-jana.

The measurement of the Brahmāḍā is less detailed. A span from the thumb to the first finger is a Pradeva; to the middle finger, a Nāla;

2.5. 104) The Vāyu, giving similar measurements upon the authority of Manu (मनुसामीत्र मनुष्यमानी), although such a statement does not occur in the Manu Sanhitā, adds, that 21 fingers = 1 Ratni;
24 fingers = 1 Hasta, or cubit; 2 Ratnis =
1 Kishku; 4 Hastas = 1 Dhanu; 2000
Dhanus = 1 Gavyūt; and 8000 Dhanus = 1 Yojana. Durgas, or strong holds, are of four kinds; three of which are natural, from their situation in mountains, amidst water, or in other inaccessible spots; the fourth is the artificial defences of a village (Grāma), a hamlet (Khēkāra), or a city (Pura or Nagara), which are severally half the size of the next in the series. The best kind of city is one which is about a mile long by half a mile broad, built in the form of a parallelogram, facing the northeast, and surrounded by a high wall and ditch. A hamlet should be a Yojana distant from a city; a village half a Yojana from a hamlet. The roads leading to the cardinal points from a city should be twenty Dhanus (above 100 feet) broad:
a village road should be the same: a boundary road ten Dhanus: a royal or principal road or street should be ten Dhanus (above fifty feet) broad: a cross or branch road should be four Dhanus.

Lanes and paths amongst the houses are two Dhanus in breadth: footpaths four cubits: the entrance of a house three cubits: the private entrances and paths about the mansion of still narrower dimensions.
Such were the measurements adopted by the first builders of cities, according to the Purāṇas specified.

7 These are enumerated in the text, as well as in the Vāyu and Márkaṇḍeya P., and are, Udāra, a sort of grain with long stalks (perhaps a holcus); Kodrava (Pa-salum kora); Chūnaka, a sort of panic
(P. miliaceum); Māsha, kidney bean (Pha-esia radiatus); Mudga (Phaseolus mun-go); Masūra, lentil (Ervum hirsutum); Nishpāva, a sort of pulse; Kulatta (Do-
KINDS OF GRAIN USED FOR FOOD OR IN SACRIFICE.

use: but there are fourteen kinds which may be offered in sacrifice; they are, rice, barley, Mâsha, wheat, millet, and sesamum; Priyangu is the seventh, and kulattha, pulse, the eighth: the others are, Syâmâka, a sort of panic; Nivára, uncultivated rice; Jartita, wild sesamum; Gavedukâ (coix); Markata, wild panic; and (a plant called) the seed or barley of the Bambu (Venu-yava). These, cultivated or wild, are the fourteen grains that were produced for purposes of offering in sacrifice; and sacrifice (the cause of rain) is their origin also: they again, with sacrifice, are the great cause of the perpetuation of the human race, as those understand who can discriminate cause and effect. Thence sacrifices were offered daily; the performance of which, oh best of Munis, is of essential service to mankind, and expiates the offences of those by whom they are observed. Those, however, in whose hearts the dross of sin derived from Time (Kála) was still more developed, assented not to sacrifices, but reviled both them and all that resulted from them, the gods, and the followers of the Vedas. Those abusers of the Vedas, of evil disposition and conduct, and seceders from the path of enjoined duties, were plunged in wickedness.

The means of subsistence having been provided for the beings he had created, Brahmá prescribed laws suited to their station and faculties, the duties of the several castes and orders, and the regions of those of the different castes who were observant of their duties. The heaven of the Pitris is the region of devout Brahmans. The sphere of Indra, of lichos biflorus); Arhaki (Cythisus Cajan); Chansaka, chick pea (Cicer arietinum); and Sana (Crotolaria).

8 This allusion to the sects hostile to the Vedas, Buddhists or Jains, does not occur in the parallel passages of the Váyu and Máraññeya Puráñas.

9 The Váyu goes farther than this, and states that the castes were now first divided according to their occupations; having, indeed, previously stated that there was no such distinction in the Krita age: धीरज्ञानबत्तया न हदामां सिद्ध: | Brahman now appointed those who were robust and violent to be Kshetriyas, to protect the rest; those who were pure and pious he made Brahmans; those who were of less power, but industrious, and addicted to cultivate the ground, he made Vaisyas; whilst the feeble and poor of spirit were constituted Súdras: and he assigned them their several occupations, to prevent that interference with one another which had occurred as long as they recognised no duties peculiar to castes: बहुर्वेधिणां श्रेष्ठाः (मानाः) सहामच वर्तमानवर्षाः |
Kshetriyas who fly not from the field. The region of the winds is assigned to the Vaisyas who are diligent in their occupations and submissive. Súdras are elevated to the sphere of the Gandharbas. Those Brahmins who lead religious lives go to the world of the eighty-eight thousand saints: and that of the seven Rishis is the seat of pious anchorites and hermits. The world of ancestors is that of respectable householders: and the region of Brahmá is the asylum of religious mendicants. The imperishable region of the Yogis is the highest seat of Vishnú, where they perpetually meditate upon the supreme being, with minds intent on him alone: the sphere where they reside, the gods themselves cannot behold. The sun, the moon, the planets, shall repeatedly be, and cease to be; but those who internally repeat the mystic adoration of the divinity, shall never know decay. For those who neglect their duties, who revile the Vedas, and obstruct religious rites, the places assigned after death are the terrific regions of darkness, of deep gloom, of fear, and of great terror; the fearful hell of sharp swords, the hell of scourges and of a waveless sea.

10 These worlds, some of which will be more particularly described in a different section, are the seven Lokas or spheres above the earth: 1. Prájápatya or Pitri loka: 2. Indra loka or Swarga: 3. Marut loka or Diva loka, heaven: 4. Gandharba loka, the region of celestial spirits; also called Maharloka: 5. Janaloka, or the sphere of saints; some copies read eighteen thousand; others, as in the text, which is also the reading of the Padma Puráña: 6. Tápaloka, the world of the seven sages: and 7. Brahma loka or Satya loka, the world of infinite wisdom and truth. The eighth, or high world of Vishnú, विष्णु: परम पर्वत is a sectarial addition, which in the Bhágavata is called Vaikuntha, and in the Brahma Vaivarta, Goloka: both apparently, and most certainly the last, modern inventions.

11 The divisions of Naraka, or hell, here named, are again more particularly enumerated, b. II. c. 6.
CHAP. VII.

Creation continued. Production of the mind-born sons of Brahmá; of the Prajápatis; of Sanandana and others; of Rudra and the eleven Rudras; of the Manu Swáyambhuva, and his wife Satarúpá; of their children. The daughters of Daksha, and their marriage to Dharma and others. The progeny of Dharma and Adharma. The perpetual succession of worlds, and different modes of mundane dissolution.

PARÁŚARA.—From Brahmá, continuing to meditate, were born mind-engendered progeny, with forms and faculties derived from his corporeal nature; embodied spirits, produced from the person of that all-wise deity. All these beings, from the gods to inanimate things, appeared as I have related to you¹, being the abode of the three qualities: but as they did not multiply themselves, Brahmá created other mind-born sons, like himself; namely, Bhrigu, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Angiras, Marichi, Daksha, Atri, and Vaśishtha: these are the nine Brahmás (or Brahma rishis) celebrated in the Puránas². Sanandana and the other sons of Brahmá then created mind-begotten sons, of whom Daksha was the seventh, with Maríchi, &c. These seven sons of Brahmá are also identified with the seven Rishis: as in the Váyu; भृगु: ब्राह्मणवन्त रावणा रथमा रथमा गुरुले राज्यमण्डल: विशेषाः। although, with palpable inconsistency, eight are immediately enumerated, or, Bhrigu, Marichi, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, and Vaśishtha. The Utára Khanda of the Padma P. substitutes Kardama for Vaśishtha. The Bhágavata includes Daksha, enumerating nine. The Mataya agrees with Manu in adding Nárada to the list of our text. The Kúrma P. adds Dharma and Sankalpa. The Linga, Brahmáúáda, and Váyu P. also add them, and extend the list to Adharma and Ruchi. The Hari Vánsa in one place inserts Gautama, and ¹ It is not clear which of the previous narratives is here referred to, but it seems most probable that the account in p. 35, 36, is intended.

² Considerable variety prevails in this list of Prajápatis, Brahmáputras, Bráhmanas, or Brahmarahis; but the variations are of the nature of additions made to an apparently original enumeration of but seven, whose names generally recur. Thus in the Mahábhárata, Moksha Dharma, we have in one place, Marichi, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, and Vaśishtha, प्राच्य सूक्ष्मं गृहालग्नः रत्नशस्माः: 'the seven highminded sons of the self-born Brahmá.' In another place of the same, however, we have Daksha substituted for Vaśishtha: महानामुक्ति पुरुष नानाध्यात्मा हृदस्य नाना अंतर्वत्तायामः पुरुषं पुरुषं अर्नः। "Brah-
Brahmá were previously created by him, but they were without desire or passion, inspired with holy wisdom, estranged from the universe, and undesirous of progeny. This when Brahmá perceived, he was filled with wrath capable of consuming the three worlds, the flame of which invested, like a garland, heaven, earth, and hell. Then from his forehead, in another Manu. Altogether therefore we have seventeen, instead of seven. But the accounts given of the origin of several of these, show that they were not originally included amongst the Mánasa putras, or sons of Brahmá’s mind; for even Daksha, who finds a place in all the lists except one of those given in the Mahábhárata, is uniformly said to have sprung from Brahmá’s thumb: and the same patriarch, as well as Dharma, is included in some accounts, as in the Bhágavata and Matsya P., amongst a different series of Brahmá’s progeny, or virtues and vices; or, Daksha (dexterity), Dharma (virtue), Káma (desire), Krodha (passion), Lobha (covetousness), Moha (infatuation), Mada (insanity), Pramoda (pleasure), Mrityu (death), and Angaja (lust). These are severally derived from different parts of Brahmá’s body: and the Bhágavata, adding Kardama (soil or sin) to this enumeration, makes him spring from Brahmá’s shadow. The simple statement, that the first Prajápati sprang from the mind or will of Brahmá, has not contended the depraved taste of the mystics, and in some of the Puráñas, as the Bhágavata, Linga, and Váyu, they also are derived from the body of their progenitor; or, Bhrigu from his skin, Marichi from his mind, Atri from his eyes, Angiras from his mouth, Pulastya from his ear, Pulaha from his navel, Kratu from his hand, Vaśishtha from his breath, Daksha from his thumb, and Nárada from his hip. They do not exactly agree, however, in the places whence these beings proceed; as for instance, according to the Linga, Marichi springs from Brahmá’s eyes, not Atri, who there proceeds, instead of Pulastya, from his ears. The Váyu has also another account of their origin, and states them to have sprung from the fires of a sacrifice offered by Brahmá; an allegorical mode of expressing their probable original, considering them to be in some degree real persons, from the Brahmanical ritual, of which they were the first institutors and observers. The Váyu P. also states, that besides the seven primitive Rishis, the Prajápati are numerous, and specifies Kardama, Kasyapa, Seaha, Vikrán, Susravas, Bahuputra, Kumár, Vivasvat, Suchisravas, Práchetas (Daksha), Arijanemi, Bahula. These and many others were Prajápati: निखिलाधिष्ठानोऽविशेषं परमप्रायोगिकं।
In the beginning of the Mahábhárata (A. P.) we have again a different origin, and first Daksha, the son of Pråchetas, it is said, had seven sons, after whom the twenty-one Prajápati were born, or appeared. According to the commentator, the seven sons of Daksha were the allegorical persons Krodha, Tamas, Dama, Vikrita, Angiras, Kardama, and Aswa; and the twenty-one Prajápati, the seven usually specified Marichi and the rest, and the fourteen Manus. This looks like a blending of the earlier and later notions.
darkened with angry frowns, sprang Rudra,\(^3\) radiant as the noon-tide sun, fierce, and of vast bulk, and of a figure which was half male, half female. Separate yourself, Brahmá said to him; and having so spoken, disappeared. Obedient to which command, Rudra became twofold, disjoining his male and female natures. His male being he again divided into eleven persons, of whom some were agreeable, some hideous, some fierce, some mild; and he multiplied his female nature manifold, of complexions black or white.\(^4\)

Then Brahmá\(^5\) created himself the Manu Swáyambhuva, born of, and identical with, his original self, for the protection of created beings; and the female portion of himself he constituted Śatarúpá, whom austerity

\(^3\) Besides this general notice of the origin of Rudra and his separate forms, we have in the next chapter an entirely different set of beings so denominated; and the eleven alluded to in the text are also more particularly enumerated in a subsequent chapter. The origin of Rudra, as one of the agents in creation, is described in most of the Puránas. The Mahábhárata, indeed, refers his origin to Vishúu, representing him as the personification of his anger, whilst Brahmá is that of his kindness: चच्च ने सकाताद युधी देशम ने द्वंत्र। यदि हो निबुन्धनी व्रजाक्रोधार्गुणी व्रजावेशिधोष्कर्मी। महादेवस्य भक्तिः! The Kúrma P. makes him proceed from Brahmá’s mouth, whilst engaged in meditating on creation. The Varáha P. makes this appearance of Rudra the consequence of a promise made by Siva to Brahmá, that he would become his son. In the parallel passages in other Puránas the progeny of the Rudra created by Brahmá is not confined to the eleven, but comprehends infinite numbers of beings in person and equipments like their parent; until Brahmá, alarmed at their fierceness, numbers, and immortality, desires his son Rudra, or, as the Mataya calls him, Vámadeva, to form creatures of a different and mortal nature. Rudra refusing to do this, desists; whence his name Sthánu, from Sthá, ‘to stay.’ Linga, Váyu P. &c.\(^4\) According to the Váyu, the female became first twofold, or one half white, and the other black; and each of these, again, becomes manifold, being the various energies, or Saktis, of Mahádeva, as stated by the Kúrma, after the words स्वस्तितीतिन: विभ्री: which are those of our text: ते च विनुयं हेष विनुयं हेष विनुयं हेष विनुयं हेष: The Lingas and Váyu specify many of their names. Those of the white complexion, or mild nature, include Lakshmi, Saraswati, Gaurí, Umá, &c. Those of the dark hue, and fierce disposition, Durgá, Káli, Chandí, Mahárátri, and others.\(^5\) Brahmá, after detaching from himself the property of anger, in the form of Rudra, converted himself into two persons, the first male, or the Manu Swáyambhuva, and the first woman, or Śatarúpá: so in the Vedas; राम जाला वे मुपो नमातीत: ‘So himself was indeed (his) son.’ The commencement of production through sexual agency is here described with sufficient distinctness, but the subject has been renpurified from the sin (of forbidden nuptials), and whom the divine Manu Swáyambhúva took to wife. From these two were born two sons, Pridered obscure by a more complicated succession of agents, and especially by the introduction of a person of a mythic or mystical character, Viráj. The notion is thus expressed in Manu: “Having divided his own substance, the mighty power Brahmá became half male and half female;
and from that female he produced Viráj.
Know me to be that person whom the tale Viráj produced by himself.” I. 32, 33. We have therefore a series of Brahmá, Viráj, and Manu, instead of Brahmá and Manu only: also the generation of progeny by Brahmá, begotten on Satarúpá, instead of her being, as in our text, the wife of Manu. The idea seems to have originated with the Vedas, as Kullúka Bhatta quotes a text: तत्र विराजाय मुनि। “Then (or thence) Viráj was born.” The procreation of progeny by Brahmá, however, is at variance with the whole system, which almost invariably refers his creation to the operation of his will: and the expression in Manu, पति नै पित्रपुत्रायमः। ‘he created Viráj in her,’ does not necessarily imply sexual intercourse. Viráj also creates, not begets, Manu. And in neither instance does the name of Satarúpá occur.
The commentator on Manu, however, understands the expression asrijat to imply the procreation of Viráj; नैप्रेम्वेद वमेव। and the same interpretation is given by the Mataya Puráná, in which the incestuous passion of Brahmá for Satarúpá, his daughter in one sense, his sister in another, is described; and by her he begets Viráj, who there is called, not the progenitor of Manu, but Manu himself: तत: कर्नेन महान
पता: पुनःब्रह्मवत: सतरुप्भवत: इति मातां: महारानी।
This therefore agrees with our text, as far as it makes Manu the son of Brahmá, though not as to the nature of the connexion. The reading of the Agni and Padma P. is that of the Vashínu; and the Bhágavata agrees with it in one place, stating distinctly that the male half of Brahmá was Manu, the other half, Satarúpá: यहुः तद्वुष्णो वृषभ्वनोः सतारुप्भवत: क्षरां यो
पद्मोऽत्तोऽन्तः क्षतिगताः प्रामाण्यं महर्षान:। Bhágav.
III. 12. 35; and although the production of Viráj is elsewhere described, it is neither as the son of Brahmá, nor the father of Manu. The original and simple idea, therefore, appears to be, the identity of Manu with the male half of Brahmá, and his being thence regarded as his son. The Kúrma P. gives the same account as Manu, and in the same words. The Linga P.
and Víkyu P. describe the origin of Viráj and Satarúpá from Brahmá; and they intimate the union of Satarúpá with Purusha or Viráj, the male portion of Brahmá, in the first instance; and in the second, with Manu, who is termed Vairája, or the son of Viráj: वैराजः मनः मृतः। The Bráhma
P., the words of which are repeated in the Hari Vánsa, introduces a new element of perplexity in a new name, that of Ápava.
According to the commentator, this is a name of the Prajápati Váishíkha: आपवयोऽ प्रज्ञापरिवर्तकं नामाद्य:। As, however, he performs the office of Brahmá, he should be regarded as that divinity: but this is not exactly the case, although it has been so rendered by the French translator. Ápava becomes twofold, and in the capacity of his male half begets offspring by the female. Again, it is said Vashínu created yavrata and Uttánapáda, and two daughters, named Prasúti and Ákúti, Viráj and Viráj created the male, which is Vairája or Manu; who was thus the second interval (Antaram), or stage, in creation. That is, according to the commentator, the first stage was the creation of Āpava, or Vaśishtha, or Viráj, by Vishnú, through the agency of Hiranyagarbha or Brahmá; and the next was that of the creation of Manu by Viráj. Satarúpá appears as first the bride of Āpava, and then as the wife of Manu. This account therefore, although obscurely expressed, appears to be essentially the same with that of Manu; and we have Brahmá, Viráj, Manu, instead of Brahmá and Manu. It seems probable that this difference, and the part assigned to Viráj, has originated in some measure from confusing Brahmá with the male half of his individuality, and considering as two beings that which was but one. If the Purusha or Viráj be distinct from Brahmá, what becomes of Brahmá? The entire whole and its two halves cannot co-exist; although some of the Purānáicas and the author of Manu seem to have imagined its possibility, by making Viráj the son of Brahmá. The perplexity, however, is still more ascribable to the personification of that which was only an allegory. The division of Brahmá into two halves designates, as is very evident from the passage in the Vedas given by Mr. Colebrooke, (As. R. VIII. 425), the distinction of corporeal substance into two sexes; Viráj being all male animals, Satarúpá all female animals. So the commentator on the Hari Vansa explains the former to denote the horse, the bull, &c.; and the latter, the mare, the cow, and the like. In the Bhágavata the term Viráj implies, Body, collectively, as the commentator observes; समाधि तीर्थों सरिष्यन्त प्राप्तं प्राप्तं विभक्तसमन्वये सदा विचारं प्रसंग्यम विचारं नामात्मा. As the sun illuminates his own inner sphere, as well as the exterior regions, so soul, shining in body (Viráj), irradiates all without and within. विचारं हैं विचारं विचारं प्रसंग्यम विचारं नामात्मा. All therefore that the birth of Viráj was intended to express, was the creation of living body, of creatures of both sexes: and as in consequence man was produced, he might be said to be the son of Viráj, or bodily existence. Again, Satarúpá, the bride of Brahmá, or of Viráj, or of Manu, is nothing more than beings of varied or manifold forms, from Sata, a hundred, and तथा ‘form,’ explained by the annotator on the Hari Vansa by Anantarúpá (अन्तरुप्त), ‘of infinite,’ and Vividadharúpá (विविधधारुप्त), ‘of diversified shape,’ being, as he states, the same as Múya, ‘illusion,’ or the power of multiform metamorphosis; िनित्रित्यक्ष्यात्मक वाचनम्. The Mataya P. has a little allegory of its own, on the subject of Brahmá’s intercourse with Satarúpá; for it explains the former to mean the Vedas, and the latter the Savitri, or holy prayer, which is their chief text; and in their cohabitation there is therefore no evil; िनित्रित्यक्ष्यात्मक वाचनम् सार्वत्र सार्वत्र साहित्येन निर्भरिता।

6 The Bráhma P. has a different order, and makes Vira the son of the first pair, who has Uttánapáda, &c. by Kámyá. The commentator on the Hari Vansa quotes the Váyu for a confirmation of this account; but the passage there is, िेदालारु दृष्टवाक्यं विद्वते। ‘Satarúpá bore to the male Vairája (Manu) two Víras,’ i. e. heroes or heroic sons, P.
graced with loveliness and exalted merit. Prasūtī he gave to Daksha, after giving Ákúti to the patriarch Ruchi, who espoused her. Ákúti bore to Ruchi twins, Yajna and Dakshinā, who afterwards became husband and wife, and had twelve sons, the deities called Yāmas, in the Manwantara of Śvāyambhuva.

The patriarch Daksha had by Prasūtī twenty-four daughters: hear from me their names: Sraiddhā (faith), Lakshmi (prosperity), Dhriti (steadiness), Tushiti (resignation), Pushti (thriving), Medhā (intelligence), Kriyā (action, devotion), Buddhī (intelllect), Lajjā (modesty), Vapu (body), Sānti (expiation), Siddhi (perfection), Kīrtti (fame): these thirteen daughters of Daksha, Dharma (righteousness) took to wife. The other eleven bright-eyed and younger daughters of the patriarch were, Khyāti (celebrity), Sati (truth), Sambhūtī (fitness), Smrīti (memory), Priti (affection), Kshamā (patience), Sannati (humility), Anasūyā (charity), Úrjjā (energy), with Śvāhā (offering), and Śwadhā (oblation). These maidens were respectively wedded to the Munis, Bhṛigu, Bhava, Marichi, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Atri, and Vaśishtha; to Fire (Vahni), and to the Pitris (progenitors).

Uttanpāda and Priyavrata. It looks as if the compiler of the Brāhma P. had made some very unaccountable blunder, and invented upon it a new couple, Vīra and Kāmyā: no such person as the former occurs in any other Purāṇa, nor does Kāmyā, as his wife.

7 The Bhāgavata adds a third daughter, Devahūtī; for the purpose apparently of introducing a long legend of the Rishi Kardama, to whom she is married, and of their son Kapila: a legend not met with any where else.

8 Ruchi is reckoned amongst the Prajāpatis by the Linga and Vāyu Purāṇas.

9 These descendants of Śvāyambhuva are all evidently allegorical: thus Yajna (यज्ञ) is 'sacrifice,' and Dakshinā (दक्षिणा) 'donation' to Brahmanas.

10 The Bhāgavata (b. IV. c. 1) says the Tushitas, but they are the divinities of the second, not of the first Manwantara, as appears also in another part of the same, where the Yāmas are likewise referred to the Śvāyambhuva Manwantara.

11 These twenty-four daughters are of much less universal occurrence in the Purāṇas than the more extensive series of fifty or sixty, which is subsequently described, and which appears to be the more ancient legend.

12 The twenty-four daughters of Daksha are similarly named and disposed of in most of the Purāṇas which notice them. The Bhāgavata, having introduced a third daughter of Śvāyambhuva, has a rather different enumeration, in order to assign some of them, the wives of the Prajāpatis, to
The progeny of Dharma by the daughters of Daksha were as follows: by Sraddhâ he had Káma (desire); by Lakshmi, Darpa (pride); by Dhriti, Niyama (precept); by Tushti, Santosha (content); by Pushâti, Lobha (cupidity); by Medhâ, Sruta (sacred tradition); by Kriyâ, Daâdâ, Naya, and Vinaya (correction, polity, and prudence); by Buddhâ, Bodha (understanding); by Lajjâ, Vinaya (good behaviour); by Vapu, Vyavasaya (perseverance). Sánti gave birth to Kshema (prosperity); Siddhi to Sukha (enjoyment); and Kirtti to Yasas (reputation). These were the sons of Dharma; one of whom, Káma, had Hersha (joy) by his wife Nandi (delight).

The wife of Adharma (vice) was Hinsâ (violation), on whom he begot Kardama and Devahûti. Daksha had therefore, it is there said (b. IV. c. 1), sixteen daughters, thirteen of whom were married to Dharma, named Sraddhâ, Maitri (friendship), Dayâ (elemency), Sánti Tushâ, Pushâti, Kriyâ, Unnati (elevation), Buddhâ, Medhâ, Tâtikshâ (patience), Hri (modesty), Mûrtti (form); and three, Sati, Swâhâ, and Swadhrâ, married, as in our text. Some of the daughters of Devahûti repeat these appellations, but that is of slight consideration. They are, Kalâ (a moment), married to Marichi; Anasîyâ to Atri; Sraddhâ to Angîras; Havîrîbu (oblation-born) to Pulastya; Gati (movement) to Pulaha; Kriyâ to Kratu; Khyâtì to Bhrigu; Arundhati to Vasishthâ; and Sánti to Atharvan. In all these instances the persons are manifestly allegorical, being personifications of intelligences and virtues and religious rites, and being therefore appropriately wedded to the probable authors of the Hindu code of religion and morals, or to the equally allegorical representation of that code, Dharma, moral and religious duty.

13 The same remark applies here. The Purâñas that give these details generally concur with our text, but the Bhágavata specifies the progeny of Dharma in a somewhat different manner; or, following the order observed in the list of Dharma's wives, their children are, Rita (truth), Prasâda (favour), Abhayâ (fearlessness), Sukha, Muda (pleasure), Smaya (wonder), Yoga (devotion), Darpa, Artha (meaning), Smriti (memory), Kshema, Prasraya (affection), and the two saints Nara and Nârâyana, the sons of Dharma by Mûrtti. We have occasional varieties of nomenclature in other authorities; as, instead of Sruta, Sama; Kûrma P.: instead of Dandanaya, Samaya; and instead of Bodha, Apramâda; Linga P.: and Siddha in place of Sukha; Kûrma P.

14 The text rather abruptly introduces Adharma and his family. He is said by the commentator to be the son of Brahmâ, and the Linga P. enumerates him among the Prâjapatis, as well as Dharma. According to the Bhágavata, he is the husband of Mrishâ (falsehood), and the father of Dambha (hypocrisy) and Mâyâ (deceit), who were adopted by Nirritti. The series a son Anrita (falsehood), and a daughter Nikriti (immorality): they intermarried, and had two sons, Bhaya (fear) and Naraka (hell); and twins to them, two daughters, Mayá (deceit) and Vedaná (torture), who became their wives. The son of Bhaya and Mayá was the destroyer of living creatures, or Mrityu (death); and Dukha (pain) was the offspring of Naraka and Vedaná. The children of Mrityu were Vyádhi (disease), Jará (decay), Soka (sorrow), Trishñá (greediness), and Krodha (wrath). These are all called the inflictors of misery, and are characterised as the progeny of Vice (Adharma). They are all without wives, without posterity, without the faculty to procreate; they are the terrific forms of Vishnu, and perpetually operate as causes of the destruction of this world. On the contrary, Daksha and the other Rishis, the elders of mankind, tend perpetually to influence its renovation: whilst the Manus and their sons, the heroes endowed with mighty power, and treading in the path of truth, as constantly contribute to its preservation.

Maítreyá.—Tell me, Brähman, what is the essential nature of these revolutions, perpetual preservation, perpetual creation, and perpetual destruction.

Parásara.—Madhusúdana, whose essence is incomprehensible, in the forms of these (patriarchs and Manus), is the author of the uninterrupted vicissitudes of creation, preservation, and destruction. The dissolution of all things is of four kinds; Naimittika, ‘occasional’; Prákritika, ‘elemental’; Atyantika, ‘absolute’; Nitya, ‘perpetual’. The first, also of their descendants is also somewhat varied from our text; being in each descent, however, twins which intermarry, or Lobha (covetousness) and Nikriti, who produce Krodha (wrath) and Hinsa: their children are, Kali (wickedness) and Duruki (evil speech); their progeny are, Mrityu and Bhí (fear); whose offspring are, Niraya (hell) and Yátaná (torment).

14 The three first of these are more particularly described in the last book: the last, the Nitya, or constant, is differently described by Col. Vans Kennedy (Ancient and Hindu Mythology, p. 224, note). “In the 7th chapter,” he observes, “of the Vishnu Puráña four kinds of Pralaya are described. The Naimittika takes place when Bráhma slumbers: the Prákritika when this universe returns to its original nature: Atyantika proceeds from divine knowledge: and Nitya is the extinction of life, like the extinction of a lamp, in sleep at night.” For this last characteristic, however, our text furnishes no warrant; nor can it be explained to signify, that the Nitya Pralaya means no more termed the Brāhma dissolution, occurs when the sovereign of the world reclines in sleep. In the second, the mundane egg resolves into the primary element, from whence it was derived. Absolute non-existence of the world is the absorption of the sage, through knowledge, into supreme spirit. Perpetual destruction is the constant disappearance, day and night, of all that are born. The productions of Prakriti form the creation that is termed the elemental (Prákrita). That which ensues after a (minor) dissolution is called ephemeral creation: and the daily generation of living things is termed, by those who are versed in the Puráñas, constant creation. In this manner the mighty Vishnú, whose essence is the elements, abides in all bodies, and brings about production, existence, and dissolution. The faculties of Vishnú to create, to preserve, and to destroy, operate successively, Maitreya, in all corporeal beings and at all seasons; and he who frees himself from the influence of these three faculties, which are essentially composed of the three qualities (goodness, foulness, and darkness), goes to the supreme sphere, from whence he never again returns.

than “a man’s falling into a sound sleep at night.” All the copies consulted on the present occasion concur in reading, निजः सर्वं नानात्तिस्व श्रवणवेयां देवायां निषादाज्ञाः | as rendered above. The commentator supplies the illustration, दीपक्षामहस्तः: ‘like the flame of a lamp;’ but he also writes, नानात्तिस्व निषादाज्ञाः स निजः: ‘That which is the destruction of all that are born, night and day, is the Nitya, or constant.’ Again, in a verse presently following we have the Nitya Sarga, ‘constant or perpetual creation,’ as opposed to constant dissolution: भूतानां निषादाज्ञाः तद प्राप्ते िचिन्द्रांकाः निजः श्रवणवेयां देवायां निषादाज्ञाः: ‘That which, oh excellent sages, being are daily born, is termed constant creation, by those learned in the Puráñas.’ The commentator explains this, अस्मात् निषादाज्ञाः निजः से िचिन्द्रांकाः: ‘The constant flow or succession of the creation of ourselves and other creatures is the Nitya or constant creation: this is the meaning of the text.’ It is obvious, therefore, that the alternation intended is that of life and death, not of waking and sleep.
CHAP. VIII.

Pārāśara.—I have described to you, oh great Muni, the creation of Brahmā, in which the quality of darkness prevailed. I will now explain to you the creation of Rudra

In the beginning of the Kalpa, as Brahmā purposed to create a son, who should be like himself, a youth of a purple complexion appeared, crying with a low cry, and running about. Brahmā, when he beheld him thus afflicted, said to him, “Why dost thou weep?” “Give me a name,” replied the boy. “Rudra be thy name,” rejoined the great father of all creatures: “be composed; desist from tears.” But, thus addressed, the boy still wept seven times, and Brahmā therefore gave to him seven other denominations; and to these eight persons regions and wives and posterity belong. The eight manifestations, then, are named Rudra, Bhava, Sarva, Iśāna, Paśupati, Bhīma, Ugra, and Mahādeva, which were given to them by their great progenitor. He also assigned to them their respective stations, the sun, water, earth, air, fire, ether, the ministrant Brahma, and the moon; for these are their several forms. The wives

1 The creation of Rudra has been already adverted to, and that seems to be the primitive form of the legend. We have here another account, grounded apparently upon Śaiva or Yogi mysticism.

2 The appearance of Rudra as a Kumāra, ‘a boy,’ is described as of repeated occurrence in the Linga and Vāyu Purāṇas, as already noticed (p. 38); and these Kumāras are of different complexes in different Kalpas. In the Vaishñava Purāṇas, however, we have only one original form, to which the name of Nilalohita, the blue and red or purple complexioned is assigned. In the Kūrma this youth comes from Brahmā’s mouth: in the Vāyu, from his forehead.

3 This is the Paurāṇic etymology: रुद्र । रुद्र: 1 or rud, ‘to weep,’ and dru, ‘to run.’ The grammarians derive the name from rud, ‘to weep,’ with ra suffix.

4 The Vāyu details the application of each name severally. These eight Rudras are therefore but one, under as many appellations, and in as many types. The Padma, Mārkaṇḍeya, Kūrma, Linga, and Vāyu agree with our text in the nomenclature of the Rudras, and their types, their wives, and progeny. The types are those which are enumerated in the Nāndi, of the sun and the other manifestations, termed Rudra and the rest, were respectively, Suverchalá, Ushá, Vikesí, Sivá, Swáhá, Diśá, Dikshá, and Rohiní. Now hear an account of their progeny, by whose successive generations this world has been peopled. Their sons, then, were severally, Sanaíschara (Saturn), Śukra (Venus), the fiery-bodied Mars, Manojava (Hanumán), Skanda, Swarga, Santána, and Budha (Mercury).

It was the Rudra of this description that married Satí, who abandoned her corporeal existence in consequence of the displeasure of Daksha. She afterwards was the daughter of Himaván (the snowy mountains) by Mená; and in that character, as the only Umá, the mighty Bhava again married her. The divinities Dhatá and Vidhátá were born to Bhrigu by Khyáti, as was a daughter, Śrí, the wife of Náráyaña, the god of gods.

Maïtreya.—It is commonly said that the goddess Śrí was born from the sea of milk, when it was churned for ambrosia; how then can you say that she was the daughter of Bhrigu by Khyáti.

Paráśara.—Śrí, the bride of Vishnú, the mother of the world, is or opening benedictory verse, of Sakuntalá; and the passage of the Vishnú P. was found by Mons. Chezy on the envelope of his copy. He has justly corrected Sir Wm. Jones's version of the term हिरण्य 'the sacrifice is performed with solemnity;' as the word means, 'Brahmane officiant,' हिरण्य आवर्त: 'the Bráhmaṇ who is qualified by initiation (Dikshá) to conduct the rite.' These are considered as the bodies, or visible forms, of those modifications of Rudra which are variously named, and which, being praised in them, severally abstain from harming them: रेवु पूजन प्रव: क्षार: । हृदाराम्बीनवने । Váyu P. The Bhágavata, III. 12, has a different scheme, as usual; but it confounds the notion of the eleven Rudras, to whom the text subsequently adverts, with that of the eight here specified. These eleven it terms Manyu, Manu, Mahínass, Mahán, Siva, Ritadhwajá, Ugarcetas, Bhava, Kála, Vámadeva, and Dhritavrata: their wives are, Dhí, Dhriti, Rasalómá, Niyut, Sarpí, Ilá, Ambiká, Irátá, Swadha, Dikshá, Rudrání: and their places are, the heart, senses, breath, ether, air, fire, water, earth, sun, moon, and tapas, or ascetic devotion. The same allegory or mystification characterises both accounts.

5 See the story of Daksha's sacrifice at the end of the chapter.
6 The story of Umá's birth and marriage occurs in the Siva P. and in the Káśi Khandá of the Skanda P.: it is noticed briefly, and with some variation from the Puráñas, in the Rámáyana, first book: it is also given in detail in the Kumára Sambhava of Kálidásá.
7 The family of Bhrigu is more particularly described in the tenth chapter; it is here mentioned merely to introduce the story of the birth of the goddess of prosperity, Śrí.
eternal, imperishable; in like manner as he is all-pervading, so also is she, oh best of Brahmans, omnipresent. Vishńu is meaning; she is speech. Hari is polity (Naya); she is prudence (Niti). Vishńu is understanding; she is intellect. He is righteousness; she is devotion. He is the creator; she is creation. Śrī is the earth; Hari the support of it. The deity is content; the eternal Lakshmi is resignation. He is desire; Śrī is wish. He is sacrifice; she is sacrificial donation (Dakshiná). The goddess is the invocation which attends the oblation; Janárdana is the oblation. Lakshmi is the chamber where the females are present (at a religious ceremony); Madhusúdana the apartment of the males of the family. Lakshmi is the altar; Hari the stake (to which the victim is bound). Śrī is the fuel; Hari the holy grass (Kusa). He is the personified Sáma veda; the goddess, lotus-throned, is the tone of its chanting. Lakshmi is the prayer of oblation (Swáhá); Vásudeva, the lord of the world, is the sacrificial fire. Saurí (Vishńu) is Śankara (Śiva); and Śrī is the bride of Śiva (Gaurí). Kesava, oh Maitreya, is the sun; and his radiance is the lotus-seated goddess. Vishńu is the tribe of progenitors (Pitrígana); Padmá is their bride (Swadhá), the eternal bestower of nutriment. Śrī is the heavens; Vishńu, who is one with all things, is wide extended space. The lord of Śrī is the moon; she is his unfading light. She is called the moving principle of the world; he, the wind which bloweth every where. Govinda is the ocean; Lakshmi its shore. Lakshmi is the consort of Indra (Indrání); Madhusúdana is Devendra. The holder of the discus (Vishńu) is Yama (the regent of Tartarus); the lotus-throned goddess is his dusky spouse (Dhúmorná). Śrī is wealth; Śrídhará (Vishńu) is himself the god of riches (Kuvera). Lakshmi, illustrious Brahman, is Gaurí; and Kesava is the deity of ocean (Varuna). Śrī is the host of heaven (Devaséná); the deity of war, her lord, is Hari. The wielder of the mace is resistance; the power to oppose is Śrī. Lakshmi is the Káshthá and the Kála; Hari the Nimesha and the Muhúrta. Lakshmi is the light; and Hari, who is all, and lord of all, the lamp. She, the mother of the world, is the creeping vine; and Vishńu the tree round which she clings. She is the night; the god who is armed with the mace and discus is the day. He, the bestower of blessings, is the bridegroom; the lotus-throned goddess is the bride,
The god is one with all male—the goddess one with all female, rivers. The lotus-eyed deity is the standard; the goddess seated on a lotus the banner.  Lakshmí is cupidity; Nárâyana, the master of the world, is covetousness. Oh thou who knowest what righteousness is, Govinda is love; and Lakshmí, his gentle spouse, is pleasure. But why thus diffusely enumerate their presence: it is enough to say, in a word, that of gods, animals, and men, Hari is all that is called male; Lakshmí is all that is termed female: there is nothing else than they.

SACRIFICE OF DAKSHA\(^1\).

(From the Váyu Puráña.)

"There was formerly a peak of Meru, named Sávitra, abounding with gems, radiant as the sun, and celebrated throughout the three worlds;

\(^1\) The sacrifice of Daksha is a legend of some interest, from its historical and archaeological relations. It is obviously intended to intimate a struggle between the worshippers of Siva and of Vishnu, in which at first the latter, but finally the former, acquired the ascendancy. It is also a favourite subject of Hindu sculpture, at least with the Hindus of the Sáiva division, and makes a conspicuous figure both at Elephanta and Ellora. A representation of the dispersion and mutilation of the gods and sages by Virabhadra, at the former, is published in the Archaeologia, VII. 326, where it is described as the Judgment of Solomon! a figure of Virabhadra is given by Niebuhr, vol. II. tab. 10; and the entire group in the Bombay Transactions, vol. I. p. 220. It is described, p. 229; but Mr. Erskine has not verified the subject, although it cannot admit of doubt. The groupe described, p. 224, probably represents the introductory details given in our text. Of the Ellora sculptures, a striking one occurs in what Sir C. Malet calls the Doomar Leyna cave, where is "Veer Budder, with eight hands. In one is suspended the slain Rajah Dutz," A. R. VI. 396. And there is also a representation of 'Ehr Budr,' in one of the colonades of Kailas; being, in fact, the same figure as that at Elephanta. Bombay Tr. III. 287. The legend of Daksha therefore was popular when those cavern temples were excavated. The story is told in much more detail in several other Puráñas, and with some variations, which will be noticed: but the above has been selected as a specimen of the style of the Váyu Puráña, and as being a narration which, from its inartificial, obscure, tautological, and uncircumstantial construction, is probably of an ancient date. The same legend, in the same words, is given in the Bráhma P.
of immense extent, and difficult of access, and an object of universal veneration. Upon that glorious eminence, rich with mineral treasures, as upon a splendid couch, the deity Śiva reclined, accompanied by the daughter of the sovereign of mountains, and attended by the mighty Ādityas, the powerful Vasus, and by the heavenly physicians, the sons of Asvinī; by Kuvera, surrounded by his train of Guhyakas, the lord of the Yakshas, who dwells on Kailāsa. There also was the great Muni Usnas: there, were Rishis of the first order, with Sanat Kumāra at their head; divine Rishis, preceded by Angiras; Viswvasu, with his bands of heavenly choristers; the sages Nárada and Pārvata; and innumerable troops of celestial nymphs. The breeze blew upon the mountain, bland, pure, and fragrant; and the trees were decorated with flowers, that blossomed in every season. The Vidyādharas and Siddhas, affluent in devotion, waited upon Mahādeva, the lord of living creatures; and many other beings, of various forms, did him homage. Rākshasas of terrific semblance, and Piśāchas of great strength, of different shapes and features, armed with various weapons, and blazing like fire, were delighted to be present, as the followers of the god. There stood the royal Nandī, high in the favour of his lord, armed with a fiery trident, shining with inherent lustre; and there the best of rivers, Gangā, the assemblage of all holy waters, stood adoring the mighty deity. Thus worshipped by all the most excellent of sages and of gods, abode the omnipotent and all-glorious Mahādeva.

"In former times, Daksha commenced a holy sacrifice on the side of Himavān, at the sacred spot Gangadhvāra, frequented by the Rishis. The gods, desirous of assisting at this solemn rite, came, with Indra at their head, to Mahādeva, and intimated their purpose; and having received his permission, departed in their splendid chariots to Gangadhvāra, as tradition reports². They found Daksha, the best of the devout, ² Or this may be understood to imply, that the original story is in the Vedas; the term being, as usual in such a reference, गंगाघारः. Gangadhvāra, the place where the Ganges descends to the plains—or Haridwar, as it is more usually termed—is usually specified as the scene of action. The Līnga is more precise, calling it Kanakha, which is the village still called Kankhal, near Haridwar (Megha Dūta, surrounded by the singers and nymphs of heaven, and by numerous sages, beneath the shade of clustering trees and climbing plants; and all of them, whether dwellers on earth, in air, or in the regions above the skies, approached the patriarch with outward gestures of respect. The Ádityas, Vasus, Rudras, Maruts, all entitled to partake of the oblations, together with Jishúu, were present. The four classes of Pitris, Ushmapás, Somapás, Ájyapás, and Dhumapás, or those who feed upon the flame, the acid juice, the butter, or the smoke of offerings, the Aswins and the progenitors, came along with Brahmá. Creatures of every class, born from the womb, the egg, from vapour, or vegetation, came upon their invocation; as did all the gods, with their brides, who in their resplendent vehicles blazed like so many fires. Beholding them thus assembled, the sage Dadhícha was filled with indignation, and observed, 'The man who worships what ought not to be worshipped, or pays not reverence where veneration is due, is guilty, most assuredly, of heinous sin.' Then addressing Daksha, he said to him, 'Why do you not offer homage to the god who is the lord of life (Paubhartri)?' Daksha spake; 'I have already many Rudras present, armed with tridents, wearing braided hair, and existing in eleven forms: I recognise no other Mahádeva.' Dadhícha spake; 'The invocation that is not addressed to Isa, is, for all, but a solitary (and imperfect) summons. Inasmuch as I behold no other divinity who is superior to Śankara, this sacrifice of Daksha will not be completed.' Daksha spake; 'I offer, in a golden cup, this entire oblation, which has been consecrated by many prayers, as an offering ever due to the unequalled Vishúu, the sovereign lord of all.'

p. 59). It rather inaccurately, however, describes this as upon Hansa peak, a point of the Himalaya:

Dadhícha apparently evades the objection, and claims a share for Rudra, consisting of the triad of gods, as one with the sun, who is undoubtedly hymned by the several ministering priests of the Vedas: Daksha replies, that the twelve Ádityas receive special oblations; that they are all the suns; and “In the meanwhile, the virtuous daughter of the mountain king, observing the departure of the divinities, addressed her lord, the god of living beings, and said—Umá spake—‘Whither, oh lord, have the gods, preceded by Indra, this day departed? Tell me truly, oh thou who knowest all truth, for a great doubt perplexes me.’ Mahéśwara spake; ‘Illustrious goddess, the excellent patriarch Daksha celebrates the sacrifice of a horse, and thither the gods repair.’ Devi spake; ‘Why then, most mighty god, dost thou also not proceed to this solemnity? by what hinderance is thy progress thither impeded?’ Mahéśwara spake; ‘This is the contrivance, mighty queen, of all the gods, that in all sacrifices no portion should be assigned to me. In consequence of an arrangement formerly devised, the gods allow me, of right, no participation of sacrificial offerings.’ Devi spake; ‘The lord god lives in all bodily forms, and his might is eminent through his superior faculties; he is unsurpassable, he is unapproachable, in splendour and glory and power. That such as he should be excluded from his share of oblations, fills me with deep sorrow, and a trembling, oh sinless, seizes upon my frame. Shall I now practise bounty, restraint, or penance, so that my lord, who is inconceivable, may obtain a share, a half or a third portion, of the sacrifice? ’

that he knows of no other. The Munis, who overhear the dispute, concur in his sentiments: य रघु रामवनमार्गम् विनं नार्यसुभाष्य िकारस रघु दुर्गुष्टि हर्ष क्षुद् राजसुभाषं िकारस रघुसुभाषं समाधि िविनं िकारस रघुसुभाषं िकारस रघुसुभाषं समाधि िविनं िकारस रघुसुभाषं समाधि िविनं िकारस रघुसुभाषं समाधि िविनं िकारस रघु

These notions seem to have been exchanged for others in the days of the Padma P. and Bhágavata, as they place Daksha’s neglect of Siva to the latter’s filthy practices, his going naked, smearing himself with ashes, carrying a skull, and behaving as if he were drunk or crazed: alluding, no doubt, to the practices of Sáiva mendicants, who seem to have abounded in the days of SANKARÁTKHA, and since. There is no discussion in the Bhágavata, but Rudra is described as present at a former assembly, when his father-in-law censured him before the guests, and in consequence he departed in a rage. His follower Nandí curses the company, and Bhágavata retorts in language descriptive of the Vámácháris, or left hand worshippers of Siva. “May all those,” he says, “who adopt the worship of Bhava (Siva), all those who follow the practices of his worshippers, become heretics, and oppugners of holy doctrines; may they neglect the observances of purification; may they be of infirm intellects, wearing clotted hair, and ornamenting themselves with ashes and bones; and may they enter the Saiva initiation, in which spirituous liquors is the libation.”

4 This simple account of Sati’s share in the transaction is considerably modified in PRODUCTION OF VÍRABHADRA.

"Then the mighty and incomprehensible deity, being pleased, said to his bride, thus agitated; and speaking; 'Slender-waisted queen of the gods, thou knowest not the purport of what thou sayest; but I know it, oh thou with large eyes, for the holy declare all things by meditation. By thy perplexity this day are all the gods, with Mahendra and all the three worlds, utterly confounded. In my sacrifice, those who worship me, repeat my praises, and chant the Rathantara song of the Sáma veda; my priests worship me in the sacrifice of true wisdom, where no officiating Brahman is needed; and in this they offer me my portion.' Devi spoke; 'The lord is the root of all, and assuredly, in every assemblage of the female world, praises or hides himself at will.' Mahádeva spake; 'Queen of the gods, I praise not myself: approach, and behold whom I shall create for the purpose of claiming my share of the rite.'

"Having thus spoken to his beloved spouse, the mighty Mahésvara created from his mouth a being like the fire of fate; a divine being, with a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, a thousand feet; wielding a thousand clubs, a thousand shafts; holding the shell, the discus, the mace, and bearing a blazing bow and battle-axe; fierce and terrific, shining with dreadful splendour, and decorated with the crescent moon; clothed in a tiger’s skin, dripping with blood; having a capacious stomach, and a vast mouth, armed with formidable tusks: his ears were erect, his lips were pendulous, his tongue was lightning; his hand brandished the thunder-other accounts. In the Kúrma, the quarrel begins with Dakaha the patriarch’s being, as he thinks, treated by his son-in-law with less respect than is his due. Upon his daughter Satí’s subsequently visiting him, he abuses her husband, and turns her out of his house. She in spite destroys herself: दुःखातालामाताम्। Siva, hearing of this, comes to Dakaha, and curses him to be born as a Kabetriya, the son of the Prachetasas, and to beget a son on his own daughter: সুখীয় তৃতীয় মূহালাম্ পুষ্পকুস্তাদিষ্চাপিতঃ। It is in this subsequent birth that the sacrifice occurs. The Linga and Matsya allude to the dispute between Dakaha and Satí, and to the latter’s putting an end to herself by Yoga: भगवान् को रेष भेदानिष्ठार्य वा पुष्प। The Padma, Bhágavata, and Skánda in the Kásí Khandá, relate the dispute between father and daughter in a like manner, and in more detail. The first refers the death of Satí, however, to a prior period; and that and the Bhágavata both ascribe it to Yoga: कसी वक्र । प्रेमारंभ समाहितार्य। The Kásí Khandá, with an improvement indicative of a later age, makes Satí throw herself into the fire prepared for the solemnity.

Vírabhadra sent to spoil Daksha's sacrifice.

bolt; flames streamed from his hair; a necklace of pearls wound round his neck; a garland of flame descended on his breast: radiant with lustre, he looked like the final fire that consumes the world. Four tremendous tusks projected from a mouth which extended from ear to ear: he was of vast bulk, vast strength, a mighty male and lord, the destroyer of the universe, and like a large fig-tree in circumference; shining like a hundred moons at once; fierce as the fire of love; having four heads, sharp white teeth, and of mighty fierceness, vigour, activity, and courage; glowing with the blaze of a thousand fiery suns at the end of the world; like a thousand undimmed moons: in bulk like Himádri, Kailása, or Meru, or Mandara, with all its gleaming herbs; bright as the sun of destruction at the end of ages; of irresistible prowess, and beautiful aspect; irascible, with lowering eyes, and a countenance burning like fire; clothed in the hide of the elephant and lion, and girt round with snakes; wearing a turban on his head, a moon on his brow; sometimes savage, sometimes mild; having a chaplet of many flowers on his head, anointed with various unguents, and adorned with different ornaments and many sorts of jewels; wearing a garland of heavenly Karnikára flowers, and rolling his eyes with rage. Sometimes he danced; sometimes he laughed aloud; sometimes he stood wrapt in meditation; sometimes he trampled upon the earth; sometimes he sang; sometimes he wept repeatedly: and he was endowed with the faculties of wisdom, dispassion, power, penance, truth, endurance, fortitude, dominion, and self-knowledge.

"This being, then, knelt down upon the ground, and raising his hands respectfully to his head, said to Mahádeva, 'Soveraign of the gods, command what it is that I must do for thee.' To which Mahéśwara replied, 'Spoil the sacrifice of Daksha.' Then the mighty Vírabhadra, having heard the pleasure of his lord, bowed down his head to the feet of Prajápati; and starting like a lion loosed from bonds, despoiled the sacrifice of Daksha, knowing that he had been created by the displeasure of Deví. She too in her wrath, as the fearful goddess Rudrákáli, accompanied him, with all her train, to witness his deeds. Vírabhadra the fierce, abiding in the region of ghosts, is the minister of the anger of Devī. And he then created, from the pores of his skin, powerful demi-gods, the mighty attendants upon Rudra, of equal valour and strength, who started by hundreds and thousands into existence. Then a loud and confused clamour filled all the expanse of ether, and inspired the denizens of heaven with dread. The mountains tottered, and earth shook; the winds roared, and the depths of the sea were disturbed; the fires lost their radiance, and the sun grew pale; the planets of the firmament shone not, neither did the stars give light; the Rishis ceased their hymns, and gods and demons were mute; and thick darkness eclipsed the chariots of the skies.

"Then from the gloom emerged fearful and numerous forms, shouting the cry of battle; who instantly broke or overturned the sacrificial columns, trampled upon the altars, and danced amidst the oblations. Running wildly hither and thither, with the speed of wind, they tossed about the implements and vessels of sacrifice, which looked like stars precipitated from the heavens. The piles of food and beverage for the gods, which had been heaped up like mountains; the rivers of milk; the banks of curds and butter; the sands of honey and butter-milk and sugar; the mounds of condiments and spices of every flavour; the undulating knoll of flesh and other viands; the celestial liquors, pastes, and confections, which had been prepared; these the spirits of wrath devoured or defiled or scattered abroad. Then falling upon the host of the gods, these vast and resistless Rudras beat or terrified them, mocked and insulted the nymphae and goddesses, and quickly put an end to the rite, although defended by all the gods; being the ministers of Rudra's wrath, and similar to himself. Some then made a hideous clamour, whilst others fearfully shouted, when Yajna was decapitated. For the 5 The description of Virabhadra and his followers is given in other Purāṇas in the same strain, but with less detail.

6 Their exploits, and those of Virabhadra, are more particularly specified elsewhere, especially in the Linga, Kūrma, and Bhāga-vata Purāṇas. Indra is knocked down and trampled on; Yama has his staff broken; Saraswati and the Mātris have their noses cut off; Mitra or Bhaga has his eyes pulled out; Pushā has his teeth knocked down his throat; Chandra is pummelled; Vahni's hands are cut off; Bhrigu loses his beard; the Brahmans are pelted with stones; the Prajāpatis are beaten; and the gods and demigods are run through with swords or stuck with arrows.
divine Yajna, the lord of sacrifice, then began to fly up to heaven, in the shape of a deer; and Vīrabhadra, of immeasurable spirit, apprehending his power, cut off his vast head, after he had mounted into the sky. Daksha the patriarch, his sacrifice being destroyed, overcome with terror, and utterly broken in spirit, fell then upon the ground, where his head was spurned by the feet of the cruel Vīrabhadra. The thirty scores of sacred divinities were all presently bound, with a band of fire, by their lion-like foe; and they all then addressed him, crying, 'Oh Rudra, have mercy upon thy servants: oh lord, dismiss thine anger.' Thus spake Brahmā and the other gods, and the patriarch Daksha; and raising their hands, they said, 'Declare, mighty being, who thou art.' Vīrabhadra said, 'I am not a god, nor an Āditya; nor am I come hither for enjoyment, nor curious to behold the chiefs of the divinities: know that I am come to destroy the sacrifice of Daksha, and that I am called Vīrabhadra, the issue of the wrath of Rudra. Bhadrakāli also, who has sprung from the anger of Devī, is sent here by the god of gods to destroy this rite. Take refuge, king of kings, with him who is the lord of Umā; for better is the anger of Rudra than the blessings of other gods.'

7 This is also mentioned in the Linga and in the Hari Vansa: and the latter thus accounts for the origin of the constellation Mrigasīrṣas; Yajna, with the head of a deer, being elevated to the planetary region, by Brahmā.

8 As he prays to Śiva presently, it could not well be meant here that Daksha was decapitated, although that is the story in other places. The Linga and Bhāgavata both state that Vīrabhadra cut off Daksha's head, and threw it into the fire. After the fray therefore, when Śiva restored the dead to life, and the mutilated to their limbs, Daksha's head was not forthcoming: it was therefore replaced by the head of a goat, or, according to the Kāśi Khandā, that of a ram. No notice is taken in our text of the conflict elsewhere described between Vīrabhadra and Vīshnū. In the Linga, the latter is beheaded, and his head is blown by the wind into the fire. The Kūrma, though a Śaiva Purāṇa, is less irreverent towards Vīshnū, and after describing a contest in which both parties occasionally prevail, makes Brahmā interpose, and separate the combatants. The Kāśi Khandā of the Skandha P. describes Vīshnū as defeated, and at the mercy of Vīrabhadra, who is prohibited by a voice from heaven from destroying his antagonist; whilst in the Hari Vansa, Vīshnū compels Śiva to fly, after taking him by the throat and nearly strangling him. The blackness of Śiva's neck arose from this throttling, and not, as elsewhere described, from his drinking the poison produced at the churning of the ocean.
"Having heard the words of Virabhadra, the righteous Daksha propitiated the mighty god, the holder of the trident, Maheśwara. The hearth of sacrifice, deserted by the Brahmins, had been consumed; Yajna had been metamorphosed to an antelope; the fires of Rudra’s wrath had been kindled; the attendants, wounded by the tridents of the servants of the god, were groaning with pain; the pieces of the uprooted sacrificial posts were scattered here and there; and the fragments of the meat-offerings were carried off by flights of hungry vultures, and herds of howling jackals. Suppressing his vital airs, and taking up a posture of meditation, the many-sighted victor of his foes, Daksha fixed his eyes everywhere upon his thoughts. Then the god of gods appeared from the altar, resplendent as a thousand suns, and smiled upon him, and said, ‘Daksha, thy sacrifice has been destroyed through sacred knowledge: I am well pleased with thee;’ and then he smiled again, and said, ‘What shall I do for thee; declare, together with the preceptor of the gods.’

"Then Daksha, frightened, alarmed, and agitated, his eyes suffused with tears, raised his hands reverentially to his brow, and said, ‘If, lord, thou art pleased; if I have found favour in thy sight; if I am to be the object of thy benevolence; if thou wilt confer upon me a boon, this is the blessing I solicit, that all these provisions for the solemn sacrifice, which have been collected with much trouble and during a long time, and which have now been eaten, drunk, devoured, burnt, broken, scattered abroad, may not have been prepared in vain.’ ‘So let it be,’ replied Hara, the subduer of Indra. And thereupon Daksha knelt down upon the earth, and praised gratefully the author of righteousness, the three-eyed god Mahādeva, repeating the eight thousand names of the deity whose emblem is a bull."
CHAP. IX.

Legend of Lakshmi. Durvasas gave a garland to Indra: he treats it disrespectfully, and is cursed by the Muni. The power of the gods impaired: they are oppressed by the Danavas, and have recourse to Vishnu. The churning of the ocean. Praises of Sri.

PARASARA.—But with respect to the question thou hast asked me, Maitreya, relating to the history of Sri, hear from me the tale as it was told to me by Marichi.

Durvasas, a portion of Shankara (Siva), was wandering over the earth; when he beheld, in the hands of a nymph of air, a garland of flowers culled from the trees of heaven, the fragrant odour of which spread throughout the forest, and enraptured all who dwelt beneath its shade. The sage, who was then possessed by religious phrensy, when he beheld that garland, demanded it of the graceful and full-eyed nymph, who, bowing to him reverentially, immediately presented it to him. He, as one frantic, placed the chaplet upon his brow, and thus decorated resumed his path; when he beheld (Indra) the husband of Sachi, the ruler of the three worlds, approach, seated on his infuriated elephant Airavata, and attended by the gods. The phrensied sage, taking from his head the garland of flowers, amidst which the bees collected ambrosia, threw it to the king of the gods, who caught it, and suspended it on the brow of Airavata, where it shone like the river Jahnava, glittering on the dark summit of the mountain Kailasa. The elephant, whose eyes were dim with inebriety, and attracted by the smell, took hold of the garland with his trunk, and cast it on the earth. That chief of sages, Durvasas, was 1 Durvasas was the son of Atri by Anasuya, and was an incarnation of a portion of Siva.

2 A Vidyadhar. These beings, male and female, are spirits of an inferior order, tenanting the middle regions of the atmosphere. According to the Vayu, the garland was given to the nymph by Devi.
3 He observed the Vrata, or vow of insanity; उष्णाःसत्तताः equivalent to the ecstasies of some religious fanatics. ‘In this state,’ says the commentator, ‘even saints are devils.’
highly incensed at this disrespectful treatment of his gift, and thus angrily addressed the sovereign of the immortals: "Inflated with the intoxication of power, Vásava, vile of spirit, thou art an idiot not to respect the garland I presented to thee, which was the dwelling of Fortune (Śri). Thou hast not acknowledged it as a largess; thou hast not bowed thyself before me; thou hast not placed the wreath upon thy head, with thy countenance expanding with delight. Now, fool, for that thou hast not infinitely prized the garland that I gave thee, thy sovereignty over the three worlds shall be subverted. Thou confoundest me, Śakra, with other Brahmans, and hence I have suffered disrespect from thy arrogance: but in like manner as thou hast cast the garland I gave thee down on the ground, so shall thy dominion over the universe bewhelmed in ruin. Thou hast offended one whose wrath is dreaded by all created things, king of the gods, even me, by thine excessive pride."

Descending hastily from his elephant, Mahendra endeavoured to appease the sinless Durvásás: but to the excuses and prostrations of the thousand-eyed, the Muni answered, "I am not of a compassionate heart, nor is forgiveness congenial to my nature. Other Munis may relent; but know me, Śakra, to be Durvásás. Thou hast in vain been rendered insolent by Gautama and others; for know me, Indra, to be Durvásás, whose nature is a stranger to remorse. Thou hast been flattered by Vašishtha and other tender-hearted saints, whose loud praises have made thee so arrogant, that thou hast insulted me. But who is there in the universe that can behold my countenance, dark with frowns, and surrounded by my blazing hair, and not tremble? What need of words? I will not forgive, whatever semblance of humility thou mayest assume."

Having thus spoken, the Brahman went his way; and the king of the gods, remounting his elephant, returned to his capital Amarávati. Thenceforward, Maitreya, the three worlds and Śakra lost their vigour, and all vegetable products, plants, and herbs were withered and died; sacrifices were no longer offered; devout exercises no longer practised; men were no more addicted to charity, or any moral or religious obligation;
all beings became devoid of steadiness⁴; all the faculties of sense were obstructed by cupidity; and men’s desires were excited by frivolous objects. Where there is energy, there is prosperity; and upon prosperity energy depends. How can those abandoned by prosperity be possessed of energy; and without energy, where is excellence? Without excellence there can be no vigour nor heroism amongst men: he who has neither courage nor strength, will be spurned by all: and he who is universally treated with disgrace, must suffer abasement of his intellectual faculties.

The three regions being thus wholly divested of prosperity, and deprived of energy, the Dánavas and sons of Diti, the enemies of the gods, who were incapable of steadiness, and agitated by ambition, put forth their strength against the gods. They engaged in war with the feeble and unfortunate divinities; and Indra and the rest, being overcome in fight, fled for refuge to Brahmá, preceded by the god of flame (Hutáśana). When the great father of the universe had heard all that had come to pass, he said to the deities, “Repair for protection to the god of high and low; the tamer of the demons; the causeless cause of creation, preservation, and destruction; the progenitor of the progenitors; the immortal, unconquerable Vishú; the cause of matter and spirit, of his unengendered products; the remover of the grief of all who humble themselves before him: he will give you aid.” Having thus spoken to the deities, Brahmá proceeded along with them to the northern shore of the sea of milk; and with reverential words thus prayed to the supreme Hari:

“We glorify him who is all things; the lord supreme over all; unborn, imperishable; the protector of the mighty ones of creation; the unperceived, indivisible Náráyaña; the smallest of the smallest, the largest of the largest, of the elements; in whom are all things, from whom are all things; who was before existence; the god who is all beings; who is the end of ultimate objects; who is beyond final spirit, and is one with supreme soul; who is contemplated as the cause of final liberation by sages anxious to be free; in whom are not the qualities of goodness, foulness, or darkness, that belong to undeveloped nature. May that purest of all pure spirits this day be propitious to us. May that Hari be propitious to us, whose inherent might is not an object of the progressive chain of moments or of days, that make up time. May he who is called the supreme god, who is not in need of assistance, Hari, the soul of all embodied substance, be favourable unto us. May that Hari, who is both cause and effect; who is the cause of cause, the effect of effect; he who is the effect of successive effect; who is the effect of the effect of the effect himself; the product of the effect of the effect of the effect, or elemental substance; to him I bow. The cause of the cause; the cause of the cause of the cause; the cause of them all; to him I bow. To him who is the enjoyer and thing to be enjoyed; the creator and thing to be created; who is the agent and the effect; to that supreme being I bow. The infinite nature of Vishúu is pure, intelligent, perpetual, unborn, undecayable, inexhaustible, inscrutable, immutable; it is neither gross nor subtle, nor capable of being defined: to that ever holy nature of Vishúu I bow. To him whose faculty to create the universe abides in but a part of but the ten-millionth part of him; to him who is one with the inexhaustible supreme spirit, I bow: and to the glorious nature of the supreme Vishúu, which nor gods, nor sages, nor I, nor Śankara apprehend; that nature which the Yógis, after incessant effort, effacing both moral merit and demerit, behold to be contemplated in the mystical monosyllable Om: the supreme glory of Vishúu, who is the first of all; of whom, one only god, the triple energy is the same with Brahmá, Vishúu, and Śiva: oh lord of all, great soul of all, asylum of all, undecayable, have pity upon thy servants; oh Vishúu, be manifest unto us."

⁴ They became (निन: सत्व), Nih-satwa; and Satwa is explained throughout by Dhairyya (धार्यो), ‘steadiness,’ ‘fortitude.’

The first effect of primary cause is nature, or Prákriti: the effect of the effect, or of Prákriti, is Mahá: effect in the third degree is Ahaṅkára: in the fourth, or the effect of the effect (Ahaṅkára) of the effect (Mahá) of the effect (Prákriti), is elementary substance, or Bhúta. Vishúu is each and all. So in the succeeding ascending scale, Brahmá is the cause of mortal life; the cause of Brahmá is the egg, or aggregate elementary matter: its cause is, therefore, elementary matter; the cause of which is subtle or rudimental matter, which originates from Ahaṅkára, and so on. Vishúu is also each and all of these.
Parásara continued.—The gods, having heard this prayer uttered by Brahmá, bowed down, and cried, “Be favourable to us; be present to our sight: we bow down to that glorious nature which the mighty Brahmá does not know; that which is thy nature, oh imperishable, in whom the universe abides.” Then the gods having ended, Vrihaspati and the divine Rishis thus prayed: “We bow down to the being entitled to adoration; who is the first object of sacrifice; who was before the first of things; the creator of the creator of the world; the undefinable: oh lord of all that has been or is to be; imperishable type of sacrifice; have pity upon thy worshippers; appear to them, prostrate before thee. Here is Brahmá; here is Trilochana (the three-eyed Śiva), with the Rudras; Pushá (the sun), with the Ádityas; and Fire, with all the mighty lumina ries: here are the sons of Aswini (the two Aswini Kumáras), the Vasus and all the winds, the Sádhyas, the Viśwadevas, and Indra the king of the gods: all of whom bow lowly before thee: all the tribes of the immortals, vanquished by the demon host, have fled to thee for succour.”

Thus prayed to, the supreme deity, the mighty holder of the conch and discus, shewed himself to them: and beholding the lord of gods, bearing a shell, a discus, and a mace, the assemblage of primeval form, and radiant with embodied light, Pitámahá and the other deities, their eyes moistened with rapture, first paid him homage, and then thus addressed him: “Repeated salutation to thee, who art indefinable: thou art Brahmá; thou art the wielder of the Pináka bow (Śiva); thou art Indra; thou art fire, air, the god of waters, the sun, the king of death (Yama), the Vasus, the Mávuts (the winds), the Sádhyas, and Viśwadevas. This assembly of divinities, that now has come before thee, thou art; for, the creator of the world, thou art every where. Thou art the sacrifice, the prayer of oblation, the mystic syllable Om, the sovereign of all creatures: thou art all that is to be known, or to be unknown: oh universal soul, the whole world consists of thee. We, discomfited by the Daityas, have fled to thee, oh Viṣhnu, for refuge. Spirit of all, have compassion upon us; defend us with thy mighty power. There will be affliction, desire, trouble, and grief, until thy protection is obtained: but thou art the remover of all sins. Do thou then, oh pure of spirit, shew favour unto us, who have fled to thee: oh lord of all, protect us with thy great power, in union with the goddess who is thy strength." Hari, the creator of the universe, being thus prayed to by the prostrate divinities, smiled, and thus spake: "With renovated energy, oh gods, I will restore your strength. Do you act as I enjoin. Let all the gods, associated with the Asuras, cast all sorts of medicinal herbs into the sea of milk; and then taking the mountain Mandara for the churning-stick, the serpent Vasuki for the rope, churn the ocean together for ambrosia; depending upon my aid. To secure the assistance of the Daityas, you must be at peace with them, and engage to give them an equal portion of the fruit of your associated toil; promising them, that by drinking the Amrita that shall be produced from the agitated ocean, they shall become mighty and immortal. I will take care that the enemies of the gods shall not partake of the precious draught; that they shall share in the labour alone."
DIRECTS THEM TO CHURN THE OCEAN.

Being thus instructed by the god of gods, the divinities entered into alliance with the demons, and they jointly undertook the acquirement of the beverage of immortality. They collected various kinds of medicinal herbs, and cast them into the sea of milk, the waters of which were radiant as the thin and shining clouds of autumn. They then took the mountain Mandara for the staff; the serpent Vasuki for the cord; and commenced to churn the ocean for the Amrita. The assembled gods were stationed by Krishna at the tail of the serpent; the Daityas and Danavas at its head and neck. Scorched by the flames emitted from his inflated hood, the demons were shorn of their glory; whilst the clouds driven towards his tail by the breath of his mouth, refreshed the gods with revivifying showers. In the midst of the milky sea, Hari himself, in the form of a tortoise, served as a pivot for the mountain, as it was whirled around. The holder of the mace and discus was present in other forms amongst the gods and demons, and assisted to drag the monarch of the serpent race: and in another vast body he sat upon the summit of the mountain. With one portion of his energy, unseen by gods or demons, he sustained the serpent king; and with another, infused vigour into the gods.

6 With thy Sakti, or the goddess Sri or Lakshmi.
From the ocean, thus churned by the gods and Dánavas, first uprose the cow Surabhi, the fountain of milk and curds, worshipped by the divinities, and beheld by them and their associates with minds disturbed, and eyes glistening with delight. Then, as the holy Siddhas in the sky wondered what this could be, appeared the goddess Vārūni (the deity of wine), her eyes rolling with intoxication. Next, from the whirlpool of the deep, sprang the celestial Pārijāta tree, the delight of the nymphs of heaven, perfuming the world with its blossoms. The troop of Ápsarasas, the nymphs of heaven, were then produced, of surprising loveliness, endowed with beauty and with taste. The cool-rayed moon next rose, and was seized by Mahádeva: and then poison was engendered from the sea, of which the snake gods (Nágas) took possession. Dhanwantari, robed in white, and bearing in his hand the cup of Amrita, next came forth: beholding which, the sons of Diti and of Danu, as well as the Munis, were filled with satisfaction and delight. Then, seated on a full-blown lotus, and holding a water-lily in her hand, the goddess Śrī, radiant with beauty, rose from the waves. The great sages, enraptured, hymned her with the song dedicated to her praise.7 Viswawasu and other heavenly quiristers sang, and Ghritáchá and other celestial nymphs danced before her. Gangá and other holy streams attended for her ablutions; and the elephants of the skies, taking up their pure waters in vases of gold, poured them over the goddess, the queen of the universal world. The sea of milk in person presented her with a wreath of never-fading flowers; and the artist of the gods (Viswakermá) decorated her person with heavenly ornaments. Thus bathed, attired, and adorned, the goddess, in the view of the celestials, cast herself upon the breast of Hari; and there reclining, turned her eyes upon the deities, who were inspired with rapture by her gaze. Not so the Dáityas, who, with Viprachitti at their head, were filled with indignation, as Vishúu turned away from them, and they were abandoned by the goddess of prosperity (Lakshmí).

The powerful and indignant Dáityas then forcibly seized the Amrita-cup, that was in the hand of Dhanwantari: but Vishúu, assuming a female form, fascinated and deluded them; and recovering the Amrita from them, delivered it to the gods. Śakra and the other deities quaffed the ambrosia. The incensed demons, grasping their weapons, fell upon them; but the gods, into whom the ambrosial draught had infused new vigour, defeated and put their host to flight, and they fled through the regions of space, and plunged into the subterranean realms of Pātāla. The gods thereat greatly rejoiced, did homage to the holder of the discus and mace, and resumed their reign in heaven. The sun shone with renovated splendour, and again discharged his appointed task; and the celestial luminaries again circled, oh best of Munis, in their respective orbits. Fire once more blazed aloft, beautiful in splendour; and the minds of all beings were animated by devotion. The three worlds again were rendered happy by prosperity; and Indra, the chief of the gods, was restored to power.

7 Or with the Súkta, or hymn of the Vedas, commencing, "Hiranya vernán," &c.

* The churning of the ocean does not occur in several of the Purāṇas, and is but cursorily alluded to in the Śiva, Linga, and Kūrma Purāṇas. The Vāyu and Padma have much the same narrative as that of our text; and so have the Agni and Bhāgavata, except that they refer only briefly to the anger of Durvasas, without narrating the circumstances; indicating their being posterior, therefore, to the original tale. The part, however, assigned to Durvasas appears to be an embellishment added to the original, for no mention of him occurs in the Mataya P. nor even in the Hari Vanssa, neither does it occur in what may be considered the oldest extant versions of the story, those of the Rāmāyana and Mahābhārata: both these ascribe the occurrence to the desire of the gods and Daityas to become immortal. The Mataya assigns a similar motive to the gods, instigated by observing that the Daityas slain by them in battle were restored to life by Śukra with the Sanjīvini, or herb of immortality, which he had discovered. The account in the Hari Vanssa is brief and obscure, and is explained by the commentator as an allegory, in which the churning of the ocean typifies ascetic penance, and the ambrosia is final liberation: but this is mere mystification. The legend of the Rāmāyana is translated, vol. 1. p. 410. of the Serampore edition; and that of the Mahābhārata by Sir C. Wilkins, in the notes to his translation of the Bhāgavata Gita. See also the original text, Cal. ed. p. 40. It has been presented to general readers in a more attractive form by my friend H. M. Parker, in his Draught of Immortality, printed with other poems, Lond. 1827. The Mataya P. has many of the stanzas of the Mahābhārata interspersed with others. There is some variety in the order and number of articles produced from the ocean. As I have observed elsewhere (Hindu Theatre, I. 59. Lond. ed.), the popular enumeration is fourteen; but the Rāmāyana specifies but nine; the Mahābhārata, nine; the Bhāgavata, ten; the Padma, nine; the Vāyu, twelve; the heaven, exercising sovereignty over the gods, Śakra thus eulogized the goddess who bears a lotus in her hand:—

"I bow down to Śrí, the mother of all beings, seated on her lotus throne, with eyes like full-blown lotuses, reclining on the breast of Vishńu.
Thou art Siddhi (superhuman power): thou art Swádhá and Swáhá:
thou art ambrosia (Sudhá), the purifier of the universe: thou art evening, night, and dawn: thou art power, faith, intellect: thou art the goddess of letters (Saraswati). Thou, beautiful goddess, art knowledge of devotion, Matya, perhaps, gives the whole number. Those in which most agree, are, 1. the Há-láhala or Kálaúkita poison, swallowed by Śiva: 2. Váruní or Surá, the goddess of wine, who being taken by the gods, and rejected by the Daityas, the former were termed Suras, and the latter Asuras: 3. the horse Uchcháśárvas, taken by Indra: 4. Kaustubha, the jewel worn by Vishńu:

5. the moon: 6. Dhanwantari, with the Amrita in his Kamaśálana, or vase; and these two articles are in the Váyu considered as distinct products: 7. the goddess Pádmá or Śrí: 8. the Apsarasás, or nymphs of heaven: 9. Surabhí, or the cow of plenty:
10. the Párijátá tree, or tree of heaven:
11. Airávata, the elephant taken by Indra.
The Matya adds, 12. the umbrella taken by Varuna: 13. the earrings taken by Indra, and given to Aditi: and apparently another horse, the white horse of the sun:
or the number may be completed by counting the Amrita separately from Dhanwan-tari. The number is made up in the polar lists by adding the bow and the conch of Vishńu; but there does not seem to be any good authority for this, and the addition is a sectarian one: so is that of the Tulaśí tree, a plant sacred to Krishńa, which is one of the twelve specified by the Váyu P. The Uttara Khand of the Padma P. has a peculiar enumeration, or, Poison; Jyeshthá or Alakshmi, the goddess of misfortune, the elder born to fortune; the goddess of wine; Nidrá, or sloth; the Apsarasás, the elephant of Indra; Lakshmi; the moon; and the Tulaśí plant. The reference to Mohini, the female form assumed by Vishńu, is very brief in our text; and no notice is taken of the story told in the Mahábhárata and some of the Puráñas, of the Daitya Ráhu’s insinuating himself amongst the gods, and obtaining a portion of the Amrita: being beheaded for this by Vishńu, the head became immortal, in consequence of the Amrita having reached the throat, and was transferred as a constellation to the skies; and as the sun and moon detected his presence amongst the gods, Ráhu pursues them with implacable hatred, and his efforts to seize them are the causes of eclipses; Ráhu typifying the ascending and descending nodes. This seems to be the simplest and oldest form of the legend.

The equal immortality of the body, under the name Ketu, and his being the cause of meteorical phenomena, seems to have been an after-thought. In the Padma and Bhágavata, Ráhu and Ketu are the sons of Sinhiká, the wife of the Dénava Vıprachitti.
great knowledge, mystic knowledge, and spiritual knowledge; which confers eternal liberation. Thou art the science of reasoning, the three Vedas, the arts and sciences: thou art moral and political science.
The world is peopled by thee with pleasing or displeasing forms. Who doth thou, oh goddess, is seated on that person of the god of gods, the wielder of the mace, which is made up of sacrifice, and contemplated by holy ascetics? Abandoned by thee, the three worlds were on the brink of ruin; but they have been reanimated by thee. From thy propitious gaze, oh mighty goddess, men obtain wives, children, dwelling, friends, harvests, wealth. Health and strength, power, victory, happiness, are easy of attainment to those upon whom thou smilest.
Thou art the mother of all beings, as the god of gods, Hari, is their father; and this world, whether animate or inanimate, is pervaded by thee and Vishnu. Oh thou who purifiest all things, forsake not our treasures, our granaries, our dwellings, our dependants, our persons, our wives: abandon not our children, our friends, our lineage, our jewels, oh thou who abidest on the bosom of the god of gods. They whom thou deserest are forsaken by truth, by purity, and goodness, by every amiable and excellent quality; whilst the base and worthless upon whom thou lookest favourably become immediately endowed with all excellent qualifications, with families, and with power. He on whom thy countenance is turned is honourable, amiable, prosperous, wise, and of exalted birth; a hero of irresistible prowess: but all his merits and his advantages are converted into worthlessness from whom, beloved of Vishnu, mother of the world, thou avertest thy face. The tongues of Brahma are unequal to celebrate thy excellence. Be propitious to me, oh goddess, lotus-eyed, and never forsake me more.”

Being thus praised, the gratified Sri, abiding in all creatures, and 9 The four Vidya, or branches of knowledge, are said to be, Yajna vidya, knowledge or performance of religious rites; Mahavidya, great knowledge, the worship of the female principle, or Tantra worship; Guhya vidya, knowledge of man-tras, mystical prayers, and incantations; and Atma vidya, knowledge of soul, true wisdom.

10 Or Varta, explained to mean the Silpa Sashtra, mechanics, sculpture, and architecture; Ayur Veda, medicine, &c.
heard by all beings, replied to the god of a hundred rites (Śatakratu); “I am pleased, monarch of the gods, by thine adoration. Demand from me what thou desirest: I have come to fulfil thy wishes.” “If, goddess,” replied Indra, “thou wilt grant my prayers; if I am worthy of thy bounty; be this my first request, that the three worlds may never again be deprived of thy presence. My second supplication, daughter of ocean, is, that thou wilt not forsake him who shall celebrate thy praises in the words I have addressed to thee.” “I will not abandon,” the goddess answered, “the three worlds again: this thy first boon is granted; for I am gratified by thy praises: and further, I will never turn my face away from that mortal who morning and evening shall repeat the hymn with which thou hast addressed me.”

Parásara proceeded—Thus, Maitreyā, in former times the goddess Śrī conferred these boons upon the king of the gods, being pleased by his adorations; but her first birth was as the daughter of Bhrigu by Khyáti: it was at a subsequent period that she was produced from the sea, at the churning of the ocean by the demons and the gods, to obtain ambrosia. For in like manner as the lord of the world, the god of gods, Janárdana, descends amongst mankind (in various shapes), so does his coadjutrix Śrī. Thus when Hari was born as a dwarf, the son of Aditi, Lakshmí appeared from a lotus (as Padmá or Kamalá); when he was born as Ráma, of the race of Bhrigu (or Parasarámá), she was Dharaní; when he was Rághava (Rámachandra), she was Sítā; and when he was Krishńa, she became Rukmíni. In the other descents of Vishńu, she is his associate. If he takes a celestial form, she appears as divine; if a mortal, she becomes a mortal too, transforming her own person agreeably to whatever character it pleases Vishńu to put on. Whosoever hears this 11 The cause of this, however, is left unexplained. The Padma P. inserts a legend to account for the temporary separation of Lakshmí from Vishńu, which appears to be peculiar to that work. Bhrigu was lord of Lakshmipur, a city on the Narmadá, given him by Brahmá. His daughter Lakshmí instigated her husband to request its being conceded to her, which offending Bhrigu, he cursed Vishńu to be born upon earth ten times, to be separated from his wife, and to have no children. The legend is an insipid modern embellishment.

account of the birth of Lakshmi, whosoever reads it, shall never lose the goddess Fortune from his dwelling for three generations; and misfortune, the fountain of strife, shall never enter into those houses in which the hymns to Sri are repeated.

Thus, Brahman, have I narrated to thee, in answer to thy question, how Lakshmi, formerly the daughter of Bhrigu, sprang from the sea of milk; and misfortune shall never visit those amongst mankind who daily recite the praises of Lakshmi uttered by Indra, which are the origin and cause of all prosperity.
CHAP. X.

The descendants of the daughters of Daksha married to the Rishis.

MAITREYA.—Thou hast narrated to me, great Muni, all that I asked of thee: now resume the account of the creation subsequently to Bhrigu.

PÁRAŚARA.—Lakshmi, the bride of Vishúu, was the daughter of Bhrigu by Khyáti. They had also two sons, Dhátri and Vidhátri, who married the two daughters of the illustrious Meru, Áyáti and Niriyáti; and had by them each a son, named Práña and Mrikaúda. The son of the latter was Márkaúdea, from whom Vedaúras was born. The son of Práña was named Dyuúitímat, and his son was Rájávat; after whom, the race of Bhrigu became infinitely multiplied.

Sambhúti, the wife of Marichi, gave birth to Paurnamása, whose sons were Virajás and Sarvágá. I shall hereafter notice his other descendants, when I give a more particular account of the race of Marichi.

The wife of Angiras, Smriti, bore daughters named Siníválí, Kuhu,

1 The commentator interprets the text ततो वेदाभिषेकाः न देवतीया प्राक्षा वेदाभिषेकाः as "Vedaúras was born the son of Práña." So the Bhágavata has मारणेश्वरे मुक्तिसालं क्रियाक्षेत्रं भूतिः: The Linga, the Váyu, and Márkaúdea, however, confirm our reading of the text, making Vedaúras the son of Márkaúdea. Práña, or, as read in the two former, Páúdu, was married to Puúitáriká, and had by her Dyuúitímat, whose sons were Sriúverá and Asútra or Asútravára. Mrikaúda (also read Mrikaúdu) married Manaswini, and had Márkaúdea, whose son, by Murá dhanyá, was Vedaúras: he married Pivári, and had many children, who constituted the family, or Brahmanical tribe, of Bhrigavas, sons of Bhrigu. The most celebrated of these was Ušanas, the preceptor of the Daityas, who, according to the Bhágavata, was the son of Vedaúras; but the Váyu makes him the son of Bhrigu by Paulomi, and born at a different period.

2 Alluding especially to Kaúyapa, the son of Marichi, of whose posterity a full detail is subsequently given. The Bhágavata adds a daughter, Devakúlyá; and the Váyu and Linga, four daughters, Tushí, Pushí, Twisá, and Apachiti. The latter inserts the grandsons of Paurnamása. Virajás, married to Gauri, has Sudháman, a Lokaúka, or ruler of the east quarter; and Parvás (quasi Sarvágá) has, by Parvasi, Yajnavála and Kaúyapa, who were both founders of Gotras, or families. The names of all these occur in different forms in different MSS.
Ráká, and Anumati (phases of the moon). Anasóyá, the wife of Atri, was the mother of three sinless sons, Soma (the moon), Durvásas, and the ascetic Dattáreya. Pulastya had, by Príti, a son called in a former birth, or in the Swáyambhuva Manwantara, Dattoli, who is now known as the sage Agastya. Kshamá, the wife of the patriarch Pulaha, was the mother of three sons, Karmasa, Arvariát, and Sahishnú. The wife of Kratu, Sannati, brought forth the sixty thousand Bálakhilyas, pigmy sages, no bigger than a joint of the thumb, chaste, pious, resplendent as the rays of the sun. Vaśishtha had seven sons by his wife Urjía, Rajas, Gátra, Úrdhhabáhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas, and Sukra, the seven pure sages. The Agni named Abhimáni, who is the eldest born of 3 The Bhágavata adds, that in the Swárochisha Manwantara the sages Uttathya and Viśvaspatí were also sons of Angirás; and the Váyu, &c. specify Agni and Kritimáta as the sons of the patriarch in the first Manwantara. Agni, married to Sadvati, has Parjanya, married to Marichi; and their son is Hiranyaróman, a Lokapála. Kritimáta has, by Dhenuká, two sons, Charishnú and Dhrítimáta.

4 The Bhágavata gives an account of Atri’s penance, by which the three gods, Brahmá, Vishnú, and Siva, were propitiated, and became, in portions of themselves, severally his sons, Soma, Datta, and Durvásas. The Váyu has a totally different series, or five sons, Satyanetra, Havya, Apomurtti, Saní, and Soma; and one daughter, Srutí, who became the wife of Kardama.

5 The text would seem to imply that he was called Agastya in a former Manwantara, but the commentator explains it as above. The Bhágavata calls the wife of Pulastya, Havirbhú, whose sons were the Muni Agastya, called in a former birth Dhrágni or Jñáharágni, and Visravas.

6 The latter had by Ilavilá, the deity of wealth, Kuvera; and by Kesiní, the Rákshasas Rávaná, Kumbhakarnás, and Vibhishnú. The Váyu specifies three sons of Pulastya, Dattoli, Vedábháhu, and Vinitá; and one daughter, Sadwati, married (see note 3) to Agni.

7 The Bhágavata reads Karmaśreśhóha, Varíyas, and Sahishnú. The Váyu and Linga have Kardama and Ambarísha in place of the two first, and add Vanakapiva and a daughter, Pivári, married to Vedásíras (see note 1). Kardama married Srutí (note 4), and had by her Sankhapáda, one of the Lokapálás, and a daughter, Kámyá, married to Priyavarta (note 6, p. 53). Vana-kapiva, also read Dhana-k. and Ghana-k., had a son, Sahishnú, married to Yásodhará, and they were the parents of Kámadeva.

8 The Bhágavata has an entirely different set of names, or Chitraketu, Surochish, Virajas, Mitra, Ulwana, Vasúbhrídya, and Brahmá, had, by Swáhá, three sons of surpassing brilliancy, Pávaka, Pavamána, and Suchí, who drinks up water: they had forty-five sons, who, with the original son of Brahmad and his three descendants, constitute the forty-nine fires. The progenitors (Pitrí), who, as I have mentioned, were created by Brahmá, were the Agnishwáttas and Varishhads; the former being devoid of, and the latter possessed of, fires. By them, Swadhá had two daughters, Méná and Dháráni, who were both acquainted with theological truth, and both addicted to religious meditation; both accomplished in perfect wisdom, and adorned with all estimable qualities. Thus has been explained the progeny of the Dyumat. It also specifies Saktri and others, as the issue of a different marriage. The Váyu and Linga have the same sons as in our text, reading Putra and Hastá in place of Gátra: they add a daughter, Puñáariká, married to Páñdu (see note 1). The eldest son, according to the Váyu, espoused a daughter of Márdáideya, and had by her the Lokapála of the west, Ketumát. The seven sons of Vaisishtha are termed in the text the seven Rishis, appearing in that character in the third Manvantara.

9 The eldest son of Brahmá, according to the commentator, upon the authority of the Vedas: वेदाणि वर्णितं भवसिद्धवाणिवासिद्धिः सारस्याः हृद्योऽहे निर्मल्येन ग्रहणुः. explained by the commentator, वेदाणि वर्णितं भवसिद्धवाणिवासिद्धिः सारस्याः हृद्योऽहे निर्मल्येन ग्रहणुः तत्र तारत चार्योऽहे तीर्थः.

10 According to the commentator, this distinction is derived from the Vedas. The first class, or Agnishwáttas, consists of those householders who, when alive, did not maintain their domestic fires, nor offer burnt-sacrifices: the second, of those who kept up the household flame, and presented oblations with fire. Manu calls these Agnidagdhas and the reverse, which Sir W. Jones renders, ‘consumable by fire,’ &c. Kulláka Bháfí gives no explanation of them. The Bhágavata adds other classes of Pitrí; or, the Adayapás, ‘drinkers of ghee;’ and Somapás, ‘drinkers of the acid juice.’ The commentator, explaining the meaning of the terms Sángayas and Anángyas, has, वेदाणि वर्णितं भवसिद्धवाणिवासिद्धिः सारस्याः हृद्योऽहे निर्मल्येन ग्रहणुः: which might be understood to signify, that the Pitrí who are ‘without fire’ are those to whom oblations are not offered; and those ‘with fire’ are they to whom oblations are presented.

11 The Váyu carries this genealogy forward. Dháráni was married to Meru, and DAUGHTERS OF THE PITRIS.

85

daughters of Daksha. He who with faith recapitulates the account, shall never want offspring.

had by him Mandara and three daughters, Niyati, Ayati, and Velá: the two first were married to Dhátri and Vidhátri (p. 81). Velá was the wife of Samudra, by whom she had Sámudri, married to Prachinavarsi, and the mother of the ten Prachetasas, the fathers of Daksha, as subsequently narrated. Méná was married to Himávat, and was the mother of Maináka, and of Gangá, and of Párvatí or Umá.

12 No notice is here taken of Sati, married to Bhava, as is intimated in c. 8 (p. 59), when describing the Rudras. Of these genealogies the fullest and apparently the oldest account is given in the Váyu P.: as far as that of our text extends, the two nearly agree, allowing for differences of appellation originating in inaccurate transcription, the names frequently varying in different copies of the same work, leaving it doubtful which reading should be preferred. The Bhágavata, as observed above (p. 54, n. 12), has created some further perplexity by substituting, as the wives of the patriarchs, the daughters of Kármanda for those of Daksha. Of the general statement it may be observed, that although in some respects allegorical, as in the names of the wives of the Rishis (p. 54); and in others astronomical, as in the denominations of the daughters of Angiras (p. 82); yet it seems probable that it is not altogether fabulous, but that the persons in some instances had a real existence, the genealogies originating in imperfectly preserved traditions of the families of the first teachers of the Hindu religion, and of the descent of individuals who took an active share in its propagation.
CHAP. XI.

Legend of Dhruva, the son of Uttánapáda: he is unkindly treated by his father’s second wife: applies to his mother: her advice: he resolves to engage in religious exercises: sees the seven Rishis, who recommend him to propitiate Vishnu.

Parásara continued.—I mentioned to you, that the Menu Swáyambhuva had two heroic and pious sons, Priyavrata and Uttánapáda. Of these two, the latter had a son whom he dearly loved, Uttama, by his favourite wife Suruchi. By his queen, named Suníti, to whom he was less attached, he also had a son, called Dhruva. Observing his brother Uttama on the lap of his father, as he was seated upon his throne, Dhruva was desirous of ascending to the same place; but as Suruchi was present, the Raja did not gratify the desire of his son, respectfully wishing to be taken on his father’s knee. Beholding the child of her rival thus anxious to be placed on his father’s lap, and her own son already seated there, Suruchi thus addressed the boy: “Why, child, do you vainly indulge in such presumptuous hopes? You are born from a different mother, and are no son of mine, that you should aspire inconsiderately to a station fit for the excellent Uttama alone. It is true you are the son of the Raja, but I have not given you birth. This regal throne, the seat of the king of kings, is suited to my son only; why should you aspire to its occupation? why idly cherish such lofty ambition, as if you were my son? do you forget that you are but the offspring of Suníti.”

The boy, having heard the speech of his step-mother, quitted his father, and repaired in a passion to the apartment of his own mother; who, beholding him vexed, took him upon her lap, and, gently smiling, asked him what was the cause of his anger, who had displeased him, and if any one, forgetting the respect due to his father, had behaved ill to him. Dhruva, in reply, repeated to her all that the arrogant Suruchi had said to him in the presence of the king. Deeply distressed by the narrative of the boy, the humble Suniti, her eyes dimmed with tears, sighed, and said, "Suruchi has rightly spoken; thine, child, is an unhappy fate: those who are born to fortune are not liable to the insults of their rivals. Yet be not afflicted, my child, for who shall efface what thou hast formerly done, or shall assign to thee what thou hast left undone. The regal throne, the umbrella of royalty, horses and elephants, are his whose virtues have deserved them: remember this, my son, and be consoled. That the king favours Suruchi is the reward of her merits in a former existence. The name of wife alone belongs to such as I, who have not equal merit. Her son is the progeny of accumulated piety, and is born as Uttama: mine has been born as Dhruva, of inferior moral worth. Therefore, my son, it is not proper for you to grieve; a wise man will be contented with that degree which appertains to him: but if you continue to feel hurt at the words of Suruchi, endeavour to augment that religious merit which bestows all good; be amiable, be pious, be friendly, be assiduous in benevolence to all living creatures; for prosperity descends upon modest worth as water flows towards low ground."

1 The Matsya, Bráhma, and Váyu Puránas speak of but one wife of Uttánapáda, and call her Suníti: they say also that she had four sons, Apaspati (or Vasu), Ayushmanta, Kírttimat, and Dhruva. The Bhágavata, Padma, and Náradiya have the same account as that of the text.

Dhruva answered; "Mother, the words that you have addressed to me for my consolation find no place in a heart that contumely has broken. I will exert myself to obtain such elevated rank, that it shall be revered by the whole world. Though I be not born of Suruchi, the beloved of the king, you shall behold my glory, who am your son. Let Uttama my brother, her child, possess the throne given to him by my father; I wish for no other honours than such as my own actions shall acquire, such as even my father has not enjoyed."

Having thus spoken, Dhruva went forth from his mother's dwelling: he quitted the city, and entered an adjoining thicket, where he beheld seven Munnis sitting upon hides of the black antelope, which they had taken from off their persons, and spread over the holy kusa grass. Saluting them reverentially, and bowing humbly before them, the prince said, "Behold in me, venerable men, the son of Uttānapāda, born of Dhruva Consults the Rishis: Their Advice.

Sunti. Dissatisfied with the world, I appear before you.” The Rishis replied; “The son of a king, and but four or five years of age, there can be no reason, child, why you should be dissatisfied with life; you cannot be in want of any thing whilst the king your father reigns; we cannot imagine that you suffer the pain of separation from the object of your affections; nor do we observe in your person any sign of disease. What is the cause of your discontent? Tell us, if it is known to yourself.”

Dhruva then repeated to the Rishis what Suruchi had spoken to him; and when they had heard his story, they said to one another, “How surprising is the vehemence of the Kshetriya nature, that resentment is cherished even by a child, and he cannot efface from his mind the harsh speeches of a step-mother. Son of a Kshetriya, tell us, if it be agreeable to thee, what thou hast proposed, through dissatisfaction with the world, to accomplish. If thou wishest our aid in what thou hast to do, declare it freely, for we perceive that thou art desirous to speak.”

Dhruva said; “Excellent sages, I wish not for riches, neither do I want dominion: I aspire to such a station as no one before me has attained. Tell me what I must do to effect this object; how I may reach an elevation superior to all other dignities.” The Rishis severally thus replied.—Marichi said; “The best of stations is not within the reach of men who fail to propitiate Govinda. Do thou, prince, worship the undecaying (Achyuta).” Atri said; “He with whom the first of spirits, Janárddana, is pleased, obtains imperishable dignity. I declare unto you the truth.” Angiras said; “If you desire an exalted station, worship that Govinda in whom, immutable and undecaying, all that is, exists.” Pulastya said; “He who adores the divine Hari, the supreme soul, supreme glory, who is the supreme Brahma, obtains what is difficult of attainment, eternal liberation.” When that Janárddana,” observed Kratu, “who in sacrifices is the soul of sacrifice, and who in abstract contemplation is supreme spirit, is pleased, there is nothing man may not acquire.” Pulaha said; “Indra, having worshipped the lord of the world, obtained the dignity of king of the celestials. Do thou adore, pious youth, that Vishńu, the lord of sacrifice.” “Any thing, child, that the mind covets,” exclaimed Vaśishtha, “may be obtained by propitiating
HOW VISṆHUV IS TO BE PROPITIATED.

Vishńu, even though it be the station that is the most excellent in the three worlds."

Dhruva replied to them: "You have told me, humbly bending before you, what deity is to be propitiated: now inform me what prayer is to be meditated by me, that will offer him gratification. May the great Rishis, looking upon me with favour, instruct me how I am to propitiate the god." The Rishis answered: "Prince, thou deservest to hear how the adoration of Vishńu has been performed by those who have been devoted to his service. The mind must first be made to forsake all external impressions, and a man must then fix it steadily on that being in whom the world is. By him whose thoughts are thus concentrated on one only object, and wholly filled by it; whose spirit is firmly under control; the prayer that we shall repeat to thee is to be inaudibly recited: 'Om! glory to Vásudeva, whose essence is divine wisdom; whose form is inscrutable, or is manifest as Brahmá, Vishńu, and Śiva?'. This prayer, which was formerly uttered by your grandsire, the Menu Swáyambhuva, and propitiated by which, Vishńu conferred upon him the prosperity he desired, and which was unequalled in the three worlds, is to be recited by thee. Do thou constantly repeat this prayer, for the gratification of Govinda."

2 The instructions of the Rishis amount to the performance of the Yoga. External impressions are first to be obviated by particular positions, modes of breathing, &c.: the mind must then be fixed on the object of meditation; this is Dhárana: next comes the meditation, or Dhyána; and then the Japa, or inaudible repetition of a Mantra, or short prayer; as in the text. The subject of the Yoga is more fully detailed in a subsequent book.
CHAP. XII.

Dhruva commences a course of religious austerities. Unsuccessful attempts of Indra and his ministers to distract Dhruva's attention: they appeal to Vishńu, who allays their fears, and appears to Dhruva. Dhruva praises Vishńu, and is raised to the skies as the pole-star.

The prince, having received these instructions, respectfully saluted the sages, and departed from the forest, fully confiding in the accomplishment of his purposes. He repaired to the holy place, on the banks of the Yamuna, called Madhu or Madhuvana, the grove of Madhu, after the demon of that name, who formerly abided there. Satrughna (the younger brother of Rama) having slain the Rakshas Lavana, the son of Madhu, founded a city on the spot, which was named Mathura. At this holy shrine, the purifier from all sin, which enjoyed the presence of the sanctifying god of gods, Dhruva performed penance, as enjoined by Marichi and the sages: he contemplated Vishńu, the sovereign of all the gods, seated in himself. Whilst his mind was wholly absorbed in meditation, the mighty Hari, identical with all beings and with all natures, took possession of his heart.) Vishńu being thus present in his mind, the earth, the supporter of elemental life, could not sustain the weight of the ascetic. As he stood upon his left foot, one hemisphere bent beneath him; and when he stood upon his right, the other half of the earth sank down. When he touched the earth with his toes, it shook with all its mountains, and the rivers and the seas were troubled, and the gods partook of the universal agitation.

The celestials called Yamás, being excessively alarmed, then took counsel with Indra how they should interrupt the devout exercises of Dhruva; and the divine beings termed Kushmándas, in company with their king, commenced anxious efforts to distract his meditations. One, assuming the semblance of his mother Sunítí, stood weeping before him, and calling in tender accents, "My son, my son, desist from destroying thy strength by this fearful penance. I have gained thee, my son, after much anxious hope: thou canst not have the cruelty to quit me, helpless, alone, and unprotected, on account of the unkindness of my rival. Thou art my only refuge; I have no hope but thou. What hast thou, a child but five years old, to do with rigorous penance? Desist from such fearful practices, that yield no beneficial fruit. First comes the season of youthful pastime; and when that is over, it is the time for study: then succeeds the period of worldly enjoyment; and lastly, that of austere devotion.
This is thy season of pastime, my child. Hast thou engaged in these practices to put an end to thine existence? Thy chief duty is love for me: duties are according to time of life. Lose not thyself in bewildering error: desist from such unrighteous actions. If not, if thou wilt not desist from these austerities, I will terminate my life before thee.”

But Dhrúva, being wholly intent on seeing Vishnú, beheld not his mother weeping in his presence, and calling upon him; and the illusion, crying out, “Fly, fly, my child, the hideous spirits of ill are crowding into this dreadful forest with uplifted weapons,” quickly disappeared.
Then advanced frightful Rákshasas, wielding terrible arms, and with countenances emitting fiery flame; and nocturnal fiends thronged around the prince, uttering fearful noises, and whirling and tossing their threatening weapons. Hundreds of jackals, from whose mouths gushed flame¹ as they devoured their prey, were howling aloud, to appal the boy, wholly engrossed by meditation. The goblins called out, “Kill him, kill him; cut him to pieces; eat him, eat him;” and monsters, with the faces of lions and camels and crocodiles, roared and yelled with horrible cries, to terrify the prince. But all these uncouth spectres, appalling cries, and threatening weapons, made no impression upon his senses, whose mind was completely intent on Govinda. The son of the monarch of the earth, engrossed by one only idea, beheld uninterruptedly Vishnú seated in his soul, and saw no other object.

All their delusive stratagems being thus foiled, the gods were more perplexed than ever. Alarmed at their discomfiture, and afflicted by ¹ A marginal note by a Bengali Pundit asserts it to be a fact, then when a jackal carries a piece of meat in his mouth, it shews in the dark as if it was on fire.

the devotions of the boy, they assembled and repaired for succour to Hari, the origin of the world, who is without beginning or end; and thus addressed him: “God of gods, sovereign of the world, god supreme, and infinite spirit, distressed by the austerities of Dhrùva, we have come to thee for protection. As the moon increases in his orb day by day, so this youth advances incessantly towards superhuman power by his devotions. Terrified by the ascetic practices of the son of Uttánânapáda, we have come to thee for succour. Do thou allay the fervour of his meditations. We know not to what station he aspires: to the throne of Indra, the regency of the solar or lunar sphere, or to the sovereignty of riches or of the deep. Have compassion on us, lord; remove this affliction from our breasts; divert the son of Uttánânapáda from persevering in his penance.” Vishṇú replied to the gods; “The lad desireth neither the rank of Indra, nor the solar orb, nor the sovereignty of wealth or of the ocean: all that he solicits, I will grant. Return therefore, deities, to your mansions as ye list, and be no more alarmed: I will put an end to the penance of the boy, whose mind is immersed in deep contemplation.”

The gods, being thus pacified by the supreme, saluted him respectfully and retired, and, preceded by Indra, returned to their habitations: but Hari, who is all things, assuming a shape with four arms, proceeded to Dhrùva, being pleased with his identity of nature, and thus addressed him: “Son of Uttánânapáda, be prosperous. Contented with thy devotions, I, the giver of boons, am present. Demand what boon thou desirest. In that thou hast wholly disregarded external objects, and fixed thy thoughts on me, I am well pleased with thee. Ask, therefore, a suitable reward.” The boy, hearing these words of the god of gods, opened his eyes, and beholding that Hari whom he had before seen in his meditations actually in his presence, bearing in his hands the shell, the discus, the mace, the bow, and scimitar, and crowned with a diadem, he bowed his head down to earth; the hair stood erect on his brow, and his heart was depressed with awe. He reflected how best he should offer thanks to the god of gods; what he could say in his adoration; what words were capable of expressing his praise: and being overwhelmed with perplexity, he had recourse for consolation to the deity. “If,” he exclaimed, "the lord is contented with my devotions, let this be my reward, that I may know how to praise him as I wish. How can I, a child, pronounce his praises, whose abode is unknown to Brahma and to others learned in the Vedas? My heart is overflowing with devotion to thee: oh lord, grant me the faculty worthily to lay mine adorations at thy feet."

Whilst lowly bowing, with his hands uplifted to his forehead, Govinda, the lord of the world, touched the son of Uttánápáda with the tip of his conch-shell, and immediately the royal youth, with a countenance sparkling with delight, praised respectfully the imperishable protector of living beings. "I venerate," exclaimed Dhrúva, "him whose forms are earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, intellect, the first element (Ahamkára), primeval nature, and the pure, subtle, all-pervading soul, that surpasses nature. Salutation to that spirit that is void of qualities; that is supreme over all the elements and all the objects of sense, over intellect, over nature and spirit. I have taken refuge with that pure form of thine, oh supreme, which is one with Brahma, which is spirit, which transcends all the world. Salutation to that form which, pervading and supporting all, is designated Brahma, unchangeable, and contemplated by religious sages. Thou art the male with a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, a thousand feet, who traversest the universe, and passest ten inches beyond its contact. Whatever has been, or is to be, that, Purushottama, thou art. From thee sprang Vírát, Swárat, Samrátt, and Adhipurusha. The lower, and upper, and middle parts of the earth are not independent of thee: from thee is all this universe, all that has been, and that shall be: and all this world is in thee, assuming this universal form. From thee is sacri-

---

1 The commentator understands this passage to imply merely that the supreme pervades both substance and space, being infinitely vast, and without limit. 'Having a thousand heads,' &c. denotes only infinite extension: and the 'ten inches beyond the contact of the universe' expresses merely non-restriction by its boundaries.

2 Explained severally the Brahmánda, or material universe; Brahma, the creator; Manu, the ruler of the period; and preemine or presiding spirit.

3 So the inscription upon the temple of Sais: 'Εγώ είμι πάν το γηνος, και δι', και εσοχάνου. So the Orphic verse, cited by Eusebius, beginning

4 One regal body in which all things are fice derived, and all oblations, and curds, and ghee, and animals of either class (domestic or wild). From thee the Rig-Veda, the Sāma, the metres of the Vedas, and the Yajur-Veda are born. Horses, and cows having teeth in one jaw only, proceed from thee; and from thee come goats, sheep, deer. Brahmins sprang from thy mouth; warriors from thy arms; Vaisyas from thy thighs; and Śúdras from thy feet. From thine eyes come the sun; from thine ears, the wind; and from thy mind, the moon: the vital airs from thy central vein; and fire from thy mouth: the sky from thy navel; and heaven from thy head: the regions from thine ears; the earth from thy feet. All this world was derived from thee. As the wide-spreading Nyagrodha (Indian fig) tree is compressed in a small seed, so, at the time of dissolution, the whole universe is comprehended in thee as its germ. As the Nyagrodha germinates from the seed, and becomes first a shoot, and then rises into loftiness, so the created world proceeds from thee, and expands into magnitude. As the bark and leaves of the Plantain tree are to be seen in its stem, so thou art the stem of the universe, and all things are visible in thee. The faculties of the intellect, that are the cause of pleasure and of pain, abide in thee as one with all existence; but the sources of pleasure and of pain, singly or blended, do not exist in thee, who art exempt from all qualities. Salutation to thee, the subtle rudiment, which, being single, becomes comprehended (viz. Virát), fire, and water, and earth, and air, and night, and day, and Intelligence (viz. Mahat) the first generator, and divine love; for all these does Jupiter include in his expansive form. It proceeds also, precisely in the Pauránic strain, to describe the members of this universal form: the heaven is his head, the stars his hair, the sun and moon his eyes, &c.

3 A piece of natural history quite correct as applied to the front teeth, which in the genus ox occur in the lower jaw only.

4 This is also conformable to the doctrine, that the rudiments of plants exist in their cotyledons.

7 In life, or living beings, perception depends not, according to Hindu metaphysics, upon the external senses, but the impressions made upon them are communicated to the mental organ or sense, and by the mind to the understanding—Samvid (सम्बिद्) in the text—by which they are distinguished as pleasurable, painful, or mixed. But pleasure depends upon the quality of goodness, pain on that of darkness, and their mixture on that of fonness, inherent in the understanding; properties belonging to Jīveśvara, or god, as one with life, or to embodied spirit, but not as Pārameśvara, or supreme spirit.
FORMER CONDITION OF DHRUVA.

manifold. Salutation to thee, soul of existent things, identical with the great elements. Thou, imperishable, art beheld in spiritual knowledge as perceptible objects, as nature, as spirit, as the world, as Brahmá, as Manu, by internal contemplation. But thou art in all, the element of all; thou art all, assuming every form; all is from thee, and thou art from thyself. I salute thee, universal soul: glory be to thee. Thou art one with all things: oh lord of all, thou art present in all things. What can I say unto thee? thou knowest all that is in the heart, oh soul of all, sovereign lord of all creatures, origin of all things. Thou, who art all beings, knowest the desires of all creatures. The desire that I cherished has been gratified, lord, by thee: my devotions have been crowned with success, in that I have seen thee."

Vishnú said to Dhruva; "The object of thy devotions has in truth been attained, in that thou hast seen me; for the sight of me, young prince, is never unproductive. Ask therefore of me what boon thou desirest; for men in whose sight I appear obtain all their wishes." To this, Dhruva answered; "Lord god of all creatures, who abidest in the hearts of all, how should the wish that I cherish be unknown to thee? I will confess unto thee the hope that my presumptuous heart has entertained; a hope that it would be difficult to gratify, but that nothing is difficult when thou, creator of the world, art pleased. Through thy favour, Indra reigns over the three worlds. The sister-queen of my mother has said to me, loudly and arrogantly, 'The royal throne is not for one who is not born of me;' and I now solicit of the support of the universe an exalted station, superior to all others, and one that shall endure for ever." Vishnú said to him; "The station that thou askest thou shalt obtain; for I was satisfied with thee of old in a prior existence. Thou wast formerly a Brahman, whose thoughts were ever devoted to me, ever dutiful to thy parents, and observant of thy duties. In course of time a prince became thy friend, who was in the period of youth, indulged in all sensual pleasures, and was of handsome appearance and elegant form. Beholding, in consequence of associating with him, his affluence, you formed the desire that you might be subsequently born as the son of a king; and, according to your wish, you obtained a princely birth in the illustrious mansion of Uttánapáda. But that which would have been thought a great boon by others, birth in the race of Swáyambhuvá, you have not so considered, and therefore have propitiated me. The man who worships me obtains speedy liberation from life. What is heaven to one whose mind is fixed on me? A station shall be assigned to thee, Dhruva, above the three worlds⁸; one in which thou shalt sustain the stars and the planets; a station above those of the sun, the moon, Mars, the son of Soma (Mercury), Venus, the son of Súrya (Saturn), and all the other constellations; above the regions of the seven Rishis, and the divinities who traverse the atmosphere⁹. Some celestial beings endure for four ages; some for the reign of a Manu: to thee shall be granted the duration of a Kalpa. Thy mother Súñiti, in the orb of a bright star, shall abide near thee for a similar term; and all those who, with minds attentive, shall glorify thee at dawn or at eventide, shall acquire exceeding religious merit.

Thus the sage Dhruva, having received a boon from Janárddana, the god of gods, and lord of the world, resides in an exalted station. Beholding his glory, Uśanas, the preceptor of the gods and demons, repeated these verses: "Wonderful is the efficacy of this penance, marvellous is its reward, that the seven Rishis should be preceded by Dhruva. This too is the pious Súñiti, his parent, who is called Súñritá." Who can

⁸ The station or sphere is that of the north pole, or of the polar star. In the former case, the star is considered to be Súñiti, the mother of Dhruva. The legend, although as it is related in our text it differs in its circumstances from the story told by Ovid of Callisto and her son Arcas, whom Jove

Imposuit cele vicinque sidera fecit, suggests some suspicion of an original identity. In neither of the authorities have we, perhaps, the primitive fable. It is evident from the quotation that presently follows in the text, of a stanza by Uśanas, that the Puráñás has not the oldest version of the legend; and Ovid's representation of it is after a fashion of his own: all that has been retained of the original is the conformity of the characters and of the main incident, the translation of a mother and her son to the heavens as constellations, in which the pole-star is the most conspicuous luminary.

⁹ The Vaimánika devas, the deities who travel in Vimánas, 'heavenly cars,' or rather 'moving spheres.'

¹⁰ The text says merely वमल्लकच्चुभास्मि; the commentator says, 'perhaps formerly so called;' प्रेमिताः. We have already remarked that some Puráñás so denominate her.
celebrate her greatness, who, having given birth to Dhruva, has become the asylum of the three worlds, enjoying to all future time an elevated station, a station eminent above all? He who shall worthily describe the ascent into the sky of Dhruva, for ever shall be freed from all sin, and enjoy the heaven of Indra. Whatever be his dignity, whether upon earth or in heaven, he shall never fall from it, but shall long enjoy life, possessed of every blessing.

The legend of Dhruva is narrated in the Bhágavata, Padma (Swarga Khaiḍa), Agni, and Naradīya, much to the same purport, and partly in the same words, as our text. The Bráhma and its double the Hari Vansa, the Matya, and Vāyu merely allude to Dhruva's having been transferred by Brahmá to the skies, in reward of his austerities. The story of his religious penance, and adoration of Viśhū, seems to be an embellishment interpolated by the Vaishává Puráñjas, Dhruva being adopted as a saint by their sect. The allusion to Śúrifí in our text concurs with the form of the story as it appears elsewhere, to indicate the priority of the more simple legend.
CHAP. XIII.

PARÁŚARA.—The sons of Dhruva, by his wife Śambhu, were Bhavya and Slishí. Suchchháyá, the wife of the latter, was the mother of five virtuous sons, Ripu, Ripunjaya, Vipra, Vrikala, and Vrikatejas. The son of Ripu, by Vrihatí, was the illustrious Chakshusha, who begot the Manu Chákshusha on Pushkariñí, of the family of Varuáa, the daughter of the venerable patriarch Anaraáya. The Manu had, by his wife Navalá, the daughter of the patriarch Vairája, ten noble sons, Uru, Puru, Satadyumna, Tapaswi, Satyavák, Kávi, Agnishtoma, Atirátra, Sudyumna, and Abhimanyu. The wife of Uru, Ágneýí, bore six excellent sons, Anga, Sumanas, Swáti, Kratu, Angiras, and Śíva. Anga had, by his wife Suníthá, only one son, named Veña, whose right arm was rubbed by the Rishis, for the purpose of producing from it progeny. From the arm of Veña, thus rubbed, sprang a celebrated monarch, named Prithu, by whom, in olden time, the earth was milked for the advantage of mankind.

1 The descent of Puru from Dhruva is similarly traced in the Mataya Puráña, but with some variety of nomenclature: thus the wife of Dhruva is named Dhanyá; and the eldest son of the Manu, Taru. The Váyu introduces another generation, making the eldest son of Slishí, or as there termed Pushhi, father of Udrádhí; and the latter the father of Ripu, the father of Chakshusha, the father of the Manu. The BHágavata has an almost entirely different set of names, having converted the family of Dhruva into personifications of divisions of time and of day and night. The account there given is, Dhruva had, by his wife Bhrami (revolving), the daughter of Súsumára (the sphere), Kalpa and Vatsara. The latter married Suvíthí, and had six sons, Pushpáriá, Tigmaketu, Isha, Urjí, Vasu, Jaya. The first married Prabhá and Doshá, and had by the former, Práthah (dawn), Madhyadína (noon), and Skya (evening); and by the latter, Pradosha, Niśitha, and Vyushá, or the beginning, middle, and end of night. The last has, by Pushkariñí, Chakshush, mar-Maitreya.—Best of Munis, tell me why was the right hand of Veña rubbed by the holy sages, in consequence of which the heroic Prithu was produced.

Parásara.—Sunithá was originally the daughter of Mrityu, by whom she was given to Anga to wife. She bore him Veña, who inherited the evil propensities of his maternal grandfather. When he was inaugurated by the Rishis monarch of the earth, he caused it to be every where proclaimed, that no worship should be performed, no oblations offered, no gifts bestowed upon the Brahmans. "I, the king," said he, "am the lord of sacrifice; for who but I am entitled to the oblations." The Rishis, respectfully approaching the sovereign, addressed him in melodious accents, and said, "Gracious prince, we salute you; hear what we have to represent. For the preservation of your kingdom and your life, and for the benefit of all your subjects, permit us to worship Hari, the lord of all sacrifice, the god of gods, with solemn and protracted rites; a portion of the fruit of which will revert to you. Vishña, the god of oblations, being propitiated with sacrifice by us, will grant you, oh king, all your desires. Those princes have all their wishes gratified, in whose realms Hari, the lord of sacrifice, is adored with sacrificial rites." "Who," exclaimed Veña, "is superior to me? who besides me is entitled to worship? who is this Hari, whom you style the lord of sacrifice? Brahmá, Janárddana, Śambhu, Indra, Váyu, Yama, Ravi (the sun), Hutabhuk ried to Ākúti, and the father of Chákhusha Manu. He has twelve sons, Puru, Kritana, Ríta, Dhyumna, Satyavat, Dhritá, Vrata, Agnishórma, Atírátra, Pradyumna, Sivi, and Ulmuka. The last is the father of six sons, named as in our text, except the last, who is called Gaya. The eldest, Anga, is the father of Veña, the father of Prithu. These additions are evidently the creatures of the author's imagination. The Bráhma Puráña and Hari Vansa have the same genealogy as the Vishña, reading, as do the Matya and Váyu, Púshkarini or Virañi, the daughter of Virañi, instead of Varúña. They, as well as copies of the text, present several other varieties of nomenclature. The Padma P. (Bhúmi Khañda) says Anga was of the family of Atri, in allusion perhaps to the circumstance mentioned in the Bráhma P. of Uttánapáda's adoption by that Rishi.

2 With the Dírghasatrá, 'long sacrifice,' a ceremony lasting a thousand years.

3 That is, the land will be fertile in proportion as the gods are propitiated, and the king will benefit accordingly, as a sixth part of the merit and of the produce will be his. So the commentator explains the word 'portion.' जल: जरोमान.
(fire), Varuṇa, Dātā, Pūshā (the sun), Bhūmi (earth), the lord of night (the moon); all these, and whatever other gods there be who listen to our vows; all these are present in the person of a king: the essence of a sovereign is all that is divine. Conscious of this, I have issued my commands, and look that you obey them. You are not to sacrifice, not to offer oblations, not to give alms. As the first duty of women is obedience to their lords, so observance of my orders is incumbent, holy men, on you." "Give command, great king," replied the Rishis, "that piety may suffer no decrease. All this world is but a transmutation of oblations; and if devotion be suppressed, the world is at an end." But Veṇa was entreated in vain; and although this request was repeated by the sages, he refused to give the order they suggested. Then those pious Munis were filled with wrath, and cried out to each other, "Let this wicked wretch be slain. The impious man who has reviled the god of sacrifice who is without beginning or end, is not fit to reign over the earth." And they fell upon the king, and beat him with blades of holy grass, consecrated by prayer, and slew him, who had first been destroyed by his impiety towards god.

Afterwards the Munis beheld a great dust arise, and they said to the people who were nigh, "What is this?" and the people answered and said, "Now that the kingdom is without a king, the dishonest men have begun to seize the property of their neighbours. The great dust that you behold, excellent Munis, is raised by troops of clustering robbers, hastening to fall upon their prey." The sages, hearing this, consulted, and together rubbed the thigh of the king, who had left no offspring, to produce a son. From the thigh, thus rubbed, came forth a being of the complexion of a charred stake, with flattened features (like a negro), and of dwarfish stature. "What am I to do?" cried he eagerly to the Munis. "Sit down" (Nishāda), said they; and thence his name was Nishāda. His descendants, the inhabitants of the Vindhya mountain, great Muni, are still called Nishādās, and are characterized by the exterior tokens of depravity ⁴. By this means the wickedness of Veṇa was expelled; those

---

⁴ The Mataya says there were born outcast or barbarous races, Mlechchas (मल्यचचा), as black as collyrium. The Bhāgavata describes an individual of dwarfish Nishádas being born of his sins, and carrying them away. The Brahmans then proceeded to rub the right arm of the king, from which friction was engendered the illustrious son of Veña, named Prithu, re-splendent in person, as if the blazing deity of Fire had been manifested.

There then fell from the sky the primitive bow (of Mahádeva) named Ajagava, and celestial arrows, and panoply from heaven. At the birth of Prithu all living creatures rejoiced; and Veña, delivered by his being born from the hell named Put, ascended to the realms above. The seas and rivers, bringing jewels from their depths, and water to perform the ablations of his installation, appeared. The great parent of all, Brahmá, with the gods and the descendants of Angiras (the fires), and with all things animate or inanimate, assembled and performed the ceremony of consecrating the son of Veña. Beholding in his right hand the (mark of the) discus of Vishú, Brahmá recognised a portion of that divinity in Prithu, and was much pleased; for the mark of Vishú's discus is visible in the hand of one who is born to be a universal emperor, one whose power is invincible even by the gods.

The mighty Prithu, the son of Veña, being thus invested with universal dominion by those who were skilled in the rite, soon removed the grievances of the people whom his father had oppressed, and from win-stature, with short arms and legs, of a complexion as black as a crow, with projecting chin, broad flat nose, red eyes, and tawny hair; whose descendants were mountaineers and foresters: निरुक्तामनवरिष्टि. The Padma (Bhu. Kh.) has a similar description, adding to the dwarfish stature and black complexion, a wide mouth, large ears, and a protuberant belly. It also particularizes his posterity as Nishádas, Kirátas, Bhillas, Bahanaksas, Brar-maras, Pulindas, and other barbarians, or Mlechchas, living in woods and on mountains. These passages intend, and do not much exaggerate, the uncouth appearance of the Goands, Koles, Bhils, and other uncivilized tribes, scattered along the forests and mountains of central India, from Behar to Kandesh, and who are not improbably the predecessors of the present occupants of the cultivated portions of the country. They are always very black, ill-shapen, and dwarffish, and have countenances of a very African character.

A Chakra-vertí, or, according to the text, one in whom the Chakra, the discus of Vishú, abides (varutate); such a figure being delineated by the lines of the hand. The grammatical etymology is, he who abides in, or rules over, an extensive territory called a Chakra.
ning their affections he derived the title of Rája, or king. The waters became solid, when he traversed the ocean: the mountains opened him a path: his banner passed unbroken (through the forests): the earth needed not cultivation: and at a thought food was prepared: all kine were like the cow of plenty: honey was stored in every flower. At the sacrifice of the birth of Prithu, which was performed by Brahmá, the intelligent Súta (herald or bard) was produced, in the juice of the moon-plant, on the very birth-day: at that great sacrifice also was produced the accomplished Mágadha: and the holy sages said to these two persons, "Praise ye the king Prithu, the illustrious son of Veña; for this is your especial function, and here is a fit subject for your praise." But they respectfully replied to the Brahmans, "We know not the acts of the new-born king of the earth; his merits are not understood by us; his fame is not spread abroad: inform us upon what subject we may dilate in his praise." "Praise the king," said the Rishis, "for the acts this heroic monarch will perform; praise him for the virtues he will display."

The king, hearing these words, was much pleased, and reflected that persons acquire commendation by virtuous actions, and that consequently his virtuous conduct would be the theme of the eulogium which the bards were about to pronounce: whatever merits, then, they should panegyrize in their encomium, he determined that he would endeavour to acquire; and if they should point out what faults ought to be avoided, he would try to shun them. He therefore listened attentively, as the sweet-voiced encomiasts celebrated the future virtues of Prithu, the enlightened son of Veña.

"The king is a speaker of truth, bounteous, an observer of his promises; he is wise, benevolent, patient, valiant, and a terror to the wicked; he knows his duties; he acknowledges services; he is compassionate and

6 From rága (राग), 'passion' or 'affection'; but the more obvious etymology is rāj (राज), 'to shine' or 'be splendid.'

7 The birth of Prithu is to be considered as the sacrifice, of which Brahmá, the creator, was the performer; but in other places, as in the Padma, it is considered that an actual sacrificial rite was celebrated, at which the first encomiasts were produced. The Bhágavata does not account for their appearance.
PRITHU SUBDUES EARTH.

kind-spoken; he respects the venerable; he performs sacrifices; he reverences the Brahmans; he cherishes the good; and in administering justice is indifferent to friend or foe."

The virtues thus celebrated by the Súta and the Mágadha were cherished in the remembrance of the Raja, and practised by him when occasion arose. Protecting this earth, the monarch performed many great sacrificial ceremonies, accompanied by liberal donations. His subjects soon approached him, suffering from the famine by which they were afflicted, as all the edible plants had perished during the season of anarchy. In reply to his question of the cause of their coming, they told him, that in the interval in which the earth was without a king all vegetable products had been withheld, and that consequently the people had perished. "Thou," said they, "art the bestower of subsistence to us; thou art appointed, by the creator, the protector of the people: grant us vegetables, the support of the lives of thy subjects, who are perishing with hunger."

On hearing this, Prithu took up his divine bow Ajagava, and his celestial arrows, and in great wrath marched forth to assail the Earth. Earth, assuming the figure of a cow, fled hastily from him, and traversed, through fear of the king, the regions of Brahmá and the heavenly spheres; but wherever went the supporter of living things, there she beheld Vaiñya with uplifted weapons: at last, trembling with terror, and anxious to escape his arrows, the Earth addressed Prithu, the hero of resistless prowess. "Know you not, king of men," said the Earth, "the sin of killing a female, that you thus perseveringly seek to slay me." The prince replied; "When the happiness of many is secured by the destruction of one malignant being, the death of that being is an act of virtue." "But," said the Earth, "if, in order to promote the welfare of your subjects, you put an end to me, whence, best of monarchs, will thy people derive their support." "Disobedient to my rule," rejoined Prithu, "if I destroy thee, I will support my people by the efficacy of my own devotions." Then the Earth, overcome with apprehension, and trembling in every limb, respectfully saluted the king, and thus spake: "All undertakings are successful, if suitable means of effecting them are employed.
I will impart to you means of success, which you can make use of if you please. All vegetable products are old, and destroyed by me; but at your command I will restore them, as developed from my milk. Do you therefore, for the benefit of mankind, most virtuous of princes, give me that calf, by which I may be able to secrete milk. Make also all places level, so that I may cause my milk, the seed of all vegetation, to flow every where around."

Prithu accordingly uprooted the mountains, by hundreds and thousands, for myriads of leagues, and they were thenceforth piled upon one another. Before his time there were no defined boundaries of villages or towns, upon the irregular surface of the earth; there was no cultivation, no pasture, no agriculture, no highway for merchants: all these things (or all civilization) originated in the reign of Prithu. Where the ground was made level, the king induced his subjects to take up their abode. Before his time, also, the fruits and roots which constituted the food of the people were procured with great difficulty, all vegetables having been destroyed; and he therefore, having made Swáyambhuva Manu the calf, milked the Earth, and received the milk into his own hand, for the benefit of mankind. Thence proceeded all kinds of corn and vegetables upon which people subsist now and perpetually. By granting life to the Earth, Prithu was as her father, and she thence derived the patronymic appellation Prithiví (the daughter of Prithu). Then the gods, the sages, the demons, the Rákshasas, the Gandharbhas, Yakshas, Pitris, serpents, mountains, and trees, took a milking vessel suited to their kind, and milked the earth of appropriate milk, and the milker and the calf were both peculiar to their own species.

8 'Having willed or determined the Manu Swáyambhuva to be the calf?' संकल्पति विश्वास च नृ च नुवं त्रास्मुर्षणः So the Padma P.: चर्च तत्तद्य प्रभृतिप्रेमः नृवं त्रास्मुर्षण दुः परिवर्तनं पुनः पुनः The Bhágavata has, "चर्च तत्तद्य प्रभृतिप्रेमः नृवं । 'Having made the Manu the calf.' By the 'calf,' or Manu in that character, is typified, the commentator observes, the promoter of the multiplication of progeny: प्रभृतिप्रेमः प्रभृतिप्रेमः ।

9 'The Matsya, Bráhma, Bhágavata, and Padma enter into a greater detail of this milking, specifying typically the calf, the milker, the milk, and the vessel. Thus, according to the Matsya, the Rishis milked the earth through Vrihaspati; their calf MERIT OF REPEATING AND HEARING THE STORY.

This Earth, the mother, the nurse, the receptacle, and nourisher of all existent things, was produced from the sole of the foot of Vishúu. And thus was born the mighty Prithu, the heroic son of Veña, who was the lord of the earth, and who, from conciliating the affections of the people, was the first ruler to whom the title of Rája was ascribed. Whoever shall recite this story of the birth of Prithu, the son of Veña, shall never suffer any retribution for the evil he may have committed: and such is the virtue of the tale of Prithu's birth, that those who hear it repeated shall be relieved from affliction.

was Soma; the Vedas were the vessel; and the milk was devotion. When the gods milked the earth, the milker was Mitra (the sun); Indra was the calf; superhuman power was the produce. The gods had a gold, the Pitrí a silver vessel; and for the latter, the milker was Antaka (death); Yama was the calf; the milk was Swadhá, or oblation. The Nága, or snake-gods, had a gourd for their pail; their calf was Takshaka; Dhrítaráshtra (the serpent) was their milker; and their milk was poison. For the Asuras, Mâyá was the milk; Virochana, the son of Prahláda, was the calf; the milker was Dwimurddhá; and the vessel was of iron. The Yákhas made Vaisravána their calf; their vessel was of unbaked earth; the milk was the power of disappearing. The Rákshásas and others employed Raupyanátha as the milker; their calf was Sumáli; and their milk was blood. Chitraratha was the calf, Vasu- ruchi the milker, of the Gandharbas and nymphs, who milked fragrant odours into a cup of lotus leaves. On behalf of the mountains, Meru was the milker; Himavat the calf; the pail was of crystal; and the milk was of herbs and gems. The trees extracted sap in a vessel of the Pa láá, the Sál being the milker, and the Plaksha the calf. The descriptions that occur in the Bhágavata, Padma, and Bráhmas Puráñas are occasionally slightly varied, but they are for the most part in the same words as that of the Matsya. These mystifications are all probably subsequent modifications of the original simple allegory, which typified the earth as a cow, who yielded to every class of beings the milk they desired, or the object of their wishes.

Another reading is, दुःखितराष्ट्र संन्यासी।

'It counteracts evil dreams.' The legend of Prithu is briefly given in the Mahábhá- rata, Rája Dharma, and occurs in most of the Puráñas, but in greatest detail in our text, in the Bhágavata, and especially in the Padma, Bhúmi Kháśiá, s. 29, 30. All the versions, however, are essentially the same.
CHAP. XIV.

Descendants of Prithu. Legend of the Prachetasas: they are desired by their father to multiply mankind, by worshipping Vishnu: they plunge into the sea, and meditate on and praise him: he appears, and grants their wishes.

PRITHU had two valiant sons, Antardhāna and Pāli. The son of Antardhāna, by his wife Śikhāṣṭi, was Havirdhāna, to whom Dhisbhāna, a princess of the race of Agni, bore six sons, Prachinnavarhis, Śukra, Gayā, Krishṇa, Vraja, and Ajīna. The first of these was a mighty prince and patriarch, by whom mankind was multiplied after the death of Havirdhāna. He was called Prachinnavarhis from his placing upon the earth the sacred grass, pointing to the east. At the termination of a

1 The text of the Vāyu and Brāhma (or Hari Vanṣa) read, like that of the Vīṣṇu, पुष्पोऽकारार्द्धसिंहासिनी। Mons.
Langlois understands the two last words as a compound epithet; "Se jouirent du pouvoir de se rendre invisibles." The construction would admit of such a sense, but it seems more probable that they are intended for names. The lineage of Prithu is immediately continued through one of them, Antardhāna, which is the same as Antardhāni; as the commentator states with regard to that appellation, "महानविदर्शितानि:" and as the commentator on the Hari Vanṣa remarks of the succeeding name, "वायु: नातसम्वशस्त्रादिविश्वासः" one of the brothers being called Antardhāna or Antardhāni, leaves no other sense for Pālin but that of a proper name. The Bhāgavata gives Prithu five sons, Viṣṇujitā, Haryakshā, Dharmarākṣa, Vriśka, and Dārvinā, and adds that the elder was also named Antardhāna, in consequence of having obtained from Indra the power of making himself invisible:

2 The Bhāgavata, as usual, modifies this genealogy; Antardhāna has by Śikhāṣṭi three sons, who were the three fires, Pāvaka, Pavamāna, and Suchi, condemned by a curse of Vaishnava to be born again: by another wife, Nabhaswatī, he has Havirdhāna, whose sons are the same as those of the text, only giving another name, Varhishad as well as Prachinnavarhis, to the first. According to the Mahābhārata (Moksha Dharmā), which has been followed by the Padma P., Prachinnavarhis was born in the family of Atri: वर्षा भवािनिः वर्षामिवः वननी:।

3 The text is, प्राचीनवहरिः त्रिभुवन; वर्षाविमुखः अर्द्धसिंह

Kuśa or varhis is properly 'sacrificial grass' (Poa): and Prachinnavara, literally, 'having its tips towards the east,' the direction in which it should be placed upon the ground, as a seat for the gods on occasion of offerings made to them. The name therefore intimates, either that the practice originated with him, or, as the commentator explains it, that he was exceedingly devout, offering sacrifices or in-rigid penance he married Savarā, the daughter of the ocean, who had been previously betrothed to him, and who had by the king ten sons, who were all styled Prāchetasas, and were skilled in military science: they all observed the same duties, practised religious austerities, and remained immersed in the bed of the sea for ten thousand years.

MAITREYA.—You can inform me, great sage, why the magnanimous Prāchetasas engaged in penance in the waters of the sea.

PAṆḍARA.—The sons of Prāchīnavarhis were originally informed by their father, who had been appointed as a patriarch, and whose mind was intent on multiplying mankind, that he had been respectfully en¬joined by Brahmā, the god of gods, to labour to this end, and that he had promised obedience: “now therefore,” continued he, “do you, my sons, to oblige me, diligently promote the increase of the people, for the orders of the father of all creatures are entitled to respect.” The sons of the king, having heard their father’s words, replied, “So be it;” but they then inquired of him, as he could best explain it, by what means they might accomplish the augmentation of mankind. He said to them;

“Whoever worships Viśhū, the bestower of good, attains undoubt¬edly the object of his desires: there is no other mode. What further can I tell you? Adore therefore Govinda, who is Hari, the lord of all beings, in order to effect the increase of the human race, if you wish to succeed.

voking the gods everywhere: सनी वर्गतूऽ माराः। The Hari Vansa adds a verse to that of our text, reading, प्राचीनवर्खस् बुधाः। पुरीचायां तस्मान प्राचीनसिद्धांगाय पुरीचायों रिह। which Mons. Langlois has rendered, ‘Quand il marchait sur la terre les points de couva étoient courbées vers l’Orient;’ which he supposes to mean, ‘Que ce prince avait tourné ses pensées et porté sa domination vers l’Orient;’ a supposition that might have been obviated by a little further consideration of the verse of Manu to which he refers. “If he have sitten on culma of grass with their points towards the east,” &c. The commentary explains the passage as above, referring पुरीचायों संस्कृतोऽपितम्: to बुधाः; not to तस्माः। as, पुरीचायां तत स्त्राणाम् मुक्तं पुरीचायों रिह। मुक्तं संस्कृतोऽपितम्। संस्कृत: प्राचीनसिद्धार्था। ल। ‘He was called Prāchīn¬varhis, because his sacred grass, pointing east, was going upon the very earth, or was spread over the whole earth.’ The text of the Bhāgavata also explains clearly what is meant: वसें देबलणवर्खाः। प्राचीनसिद्धाः। पुरीचायों घुरः। ‘By whose sacred grass, pointing to the east, as he performed sacrifice after sacrifice, the whole earth, his sacrificial ground, was overspread.'
The eternal Purushottama is to be propitiated by him who wishes for virtue, wealth, enjoyment, or liberation. Adore him, the imperishable, by whom, when propitiated, the world was first created, and mankind will assuredly be multiplied."

Thus instructed by their father, the ten Prachetasas plunged into the depths of the ocean, and with minds wholly devoted to Náráyaña, the sovereign of the universe, who is beyond all worlds, were engrossed by religious austerity for ten thousand years: remaining there, they with fixed thoughts praised Hari, who, when propitiated, confers on those who praise him all that they desire.

Máitreya.—The excellent praises that the Prachetasas addressed to Vishńu, whilst they stood in the deep, you, oh best of Munis, are qualified to repeat to me.

Parásara.—Hear, Máitreya, the hymn which the Prachetasas, as they stood in the waters of the sea, sang of old to Govinda, their nature being identified with him:

"We bow to him whose glory is the perpetual theme of every speech; him first, him last; the supreme lord of the boundless world; who is primeval light; who is without his like; indivisible and infinite; the origin of all existent things, movable or stationary. To that supreme being who is one with time, whose first forms, though he be without form, are day and evening and night, be adoration. Glory to him, the life of all living things, who is the same with the moon, the receptacle of ambrosia, drunk daily by the gods and progenitors: to him who is one with the sun, the cause of heat and cold and rain, who dissipates the gloom, and illuminates the sky with his radiance: to him who is one with earth, all-pervading, and the asylum of smell and other objects of sense, supporting the whole world by its solidity. We adore that form of the deity Hari which is water, the womb of the world, the seed of all living beings. Glory to the mouth of the gods, the eater of the Havya; to the eater of the Kavya, the mouth of the progenitors; to Vishńu, who is identical with fire; to him who is one with air, the origin of ether, existing as the five vital airs in the body, causing constant vital action; to him who is identical with the atmosphere, pure, illimitable, shapeless, separating all creatures. Glory to Krishṇa, who is Brahmā in the form of sensible objects, who is ever the direction of the faculties of sense. We offer salutation to that supreme Hari who is one with the senses, both subtle and substantial, the recipient of all impressions, the root of all knowledge: to the universal soul, who, as internal intellect, delivers the impressions received by the senses to soul: to him who has the properties of Prakriti; in whom, without end, rest all things; from whom all things proceed; and who is that into which all things resolve. We worship that Purushottama, the god who is pure spirit, and who, without qualities, is ignorantly considered as endowed with qualities. We adore that supreme Brahma, the ultimate condition of Vishṇu, unproductive, unborn, pure, void of qualities, and free from accidents; who is neither high nor low, neither bulky nor minute, has neither shape, nor colour, nor shadow, nor substance, nor affection, nor body; who is neither etherial nor susceptible of contact, smell, or taste; who has neither eyes, nor ears, nor motion, nor speech, nor breath, nor mind, nor name, nor race, nor enjoyment, nor splendour; who is without cause, without fear, without error, without fault, undecaying, immortal, free from passion, without sound, imperceptible, inactive, independent of place or time, detached from all investing properties; but (illusively) exercising irresistible might, and identified with all beings, dependent upon none. Glory to that nature of Vishṇu which tongue can not tell, nor has eye beheld."

Thus glorifying Vishṇu, and intent in meditation on him, the Prachetasas passed ten thousand years of austerity in the vast ocean; on which Hari, being pleased with them, appeared to them amidst the waters, of the complexion of the full-blown lotus leaf. Beholding him mounted on the king of birds, Garuḍa, the Prachetasas bowed down their heads in devout homage; when Vishṇu said to them, "Receive the boon you have desired; for I, the giver of good, am content with you, and am present." The Prachetasas replied to him with reverence, and told him that the cause of their devotions was the command of their father to effect the multiplication of mankind. The god, having accordingly granted to them the object of their prayers, disappeared, and they came up from the water.
CHAP. XV.

The world overrun with trees: they are destroyed by the Prachetasas. Soma pacifies them, and gives them Márişhá to wife: her story: the daughter of the nymph Pramlochá. Legend of Kañđu. Márişhá's former history. Daksha the son of the Prachetasas: his different characters: his sons: his daughters: their marriages and progeny: allusion to Prahláda, his descendant.

WHILST the Prachetasas were thus absorbed in their devotions, the trees spread and overshadowed the unprotected earth, and the people perished: the winds could not blow; the sky was shut out by the forests; and mankind was unable to labour for ten thousand years. When the sages, coming forth from the deep, beheld this, they were angry, and, being incensed, wind and flame issued from their mouths. The strong wind tore up the trees by their roots, and left them sear and dry, and the fierce fire consumed them, and the forests were cleared away. When Soma (the moon), the sovereign of the vegetable world, beheld all except a few of the trees destroyed, he went to the patriarchs, the Prachetasas, and said, "Restrain your indignation, princes, and listen to me. I will form an alliance between you and the trees. Prescient of futurity, I have nourished with my rays this precious maiden, the daughter of the woods. She is called Márişhá, and is assuredly the offspring of the trees. She shall be your bride, and the multiplier of the race of Dhrúva. From a portion of your lustre and a portion of mine, oh mighty sages, the patriarch Daksha shall be born of her, who, endowed with a part of me, and composed of your vigour, shall be as resplendent as fire, and shall multiply the human race.

"There was formerly (said Soma) a sage named Kañđu, eminent in holy wisdom, who practised pious austerities on the lovely borders of the Gomáti river. The king of the gods sent the nymph Pramlochá to disturb his penance, and the sweet-smiling damsel diverted the sage from his devotions. They lived together, in the valley of Mandara, for a hundred and fifty years; during which, the mind of the Muni was wholly given up to enjoyment. At the expiration of this period the nymph requested his permission to return to heaven; but the Muni, still fondly attached to her, prevailed upon her to remain for some time longer; and the graceful damsel continued to reside for another hundred years, and delight the great sage by her fascinations. Then again she preferred her suit to be allowed to return to the abodes of the gods; and again the Muni desired her to remain. At the expiration of more than a century the nymph once more said to him, with a smiling countenance, 'Brahman, I depart;' but the Muni, detaining the fine-eyed damsel, replied, 'Nay, stay yet a little; you will go hence for a long period.' Afraid of incurring an imprecation, the graceful nymph continued with the sage for nearly two hundred years more, repeatedly asking his permission to go to the region of the king of the gods, but as often desired by him to remain. Dreading to be cursed by him, and excelling in amiable manners, well knowing also the pain that is inflicted by separation from an object of affection, she did not quit the Muni, whose mind, wholly subdued by love, became every day more strongly attached to her.

"On one occasion the sage was going forth from their cottage in a great hurry. The nymph asked him where he was going. 'The day,' he replied, 'is drawing fast to a close: I must perform the Sandhyá worship, or a duty will be neglected.' The nymph smiled mirthfully as she rejoined, 'Why do you talk, grave sir, of this day drawing to a close: your day is a day of many years, a day that must be a marvel to all: explain what this means.' The Muni said, 'Fair damsel, you came to the river-side at dawn; I beheld you then, and you then entered my hermitage. It is now the revolution of evening, and the day is gone. What is the meaning of this laughter? Tell me the truth.' Pramlochá answered, 'You say rightly,' venerable Brahman, 'that I came hither at morning dawn, but several hundred years have passed since the time of my arrival. This is the truth.' The Muni, on hearing this, was seized with astonishment, and asked her how long he had enjoyed her society: to which the nymph replied, that they had lived together nine hundred and seven years, six months, and three days. The Muni asked her if she spoke the truth, or if she was in jest; for it appeared to him that they had spent but one day together: to which Pramlochá replied, that she should not dare at any time to tell him who lived in the path of piety an untruth, but particularly when she had been enjoined by him to inform him what had passed.

"When the Muni, princes, had heard these words, and knew that it was the truth, he began to reproach himself bitterly, exclaiming, 'Fie, fie upon me; my penance has been interrupted; the treasure of the learned and the pious has been stolen from me; my judgment has been blinded: this woman has been created by some one to beguile me: Brahma is beyond the reach of those agitated by the waves of infirmity'. I had subdued my passions, and was about to attain divine knowledge. This was foreseen by him by whom this girl has been sent hither. Fie on the passion that has obstructed my devotions. All the austerities that would have led to acquisition of the wisdom of the Vedas have been rendered of no avail by passion that is the road to hell.' The pious sage, having thus reviled himself, turned to the nymph, who was sitting nigh, and said to her, 'Go, deceitful girl, whither thou wilt: thou hast performed the office assigned thee by the monarch of the gods, of disturbing my penance by thy fascinations. I will not reduce thee to ashes by the fire of my wrath. Seven paces together is sufficient for the friendship of the virtuous, but thou and I have dwelt together. And in truth what fault hast thou committed? why should I be wroth with thee? The sin is wholly mine, in that I could not subdue my passions; yet fie upon thee, who, to gain favour with Indra, hast disturbed my devotions; vile bundle of delusion.'

"Thus spoken to by the Muni, Pramlochá stood trembling, whilst big drops of perspiration started from every pore; till he angrily cried to her, 'Depart, begone.' She then, reproached by him, went forth from his dwelling, and, passing through the air, wiped the perspiration from her person with the leaves of the trees. The nymph went from tree to tree, and as with the dusky shoots that crowned their summits she dried her limbs, which were covered with moisture, the child she had conceived by the Rishi came forth from the pores of her skin in drops of perspiration. The trees received the living dews, and the winds collected them into one mass. This," said Soma, "I matured by my rays, and gradually it increased in size, till the exhalation that had rested on the tree tops became the lovely girl named Mārishā. The trees will give her to you, Prachetasas: let your indignation be appeased. She is the progeny of Kañū, the child of Pramlochā, the nursling of the trees, the daughter of the wind and of the moon. The holy Kañū, after the interruption of his pious exercises, went, excellent princes, to the region of Vishnéu, termed Purushottama, where, Maitreya, with his whole mind he devoted himself to the adoration of Hari; standing fixed, with uplifted arms, and repeating the prayers that comprehend the essence of divine truth."

1 Or, 'immersed in the six Īrmis' (आँधेबद्र); explained hunger, thirst, sorrow, stupefaction, decay, and death.

The Prachetasas said, "We are desirous to hear the transcendental

---

2 There is some confusion here in regard to the person addressed, but the context shows that the insertion of Maitreya's name is an inadvertence, and that the passage is a continuation of Soma's speech to the Prachetasas.

3 The phrase is ब्रह्माण्डवर्त्तमानं: 'made up of the farther boundary of Brahma;' implying either 'comprehending the supreme, or Brahma, and transcendental wisdom, Pára;' or, 'consisting of the farthest limits (Pára) or truths of the Vedas or Brahma;' that is, being the essence of the Vedánta philosophy. The hymn that follows is in fact a mantra or mystical prayer, commencing with the reiteration of the word Para and Pára; as, पारं परं विकृत्यार अवरं विद्वचारं: परमेषोऽवरं रत्नादित्तरं:। स विभवं: परमार्थं: पतं पराशिवाय वाचारं। Para means 'supreme, infinite;' and Pára, 'the farther bank or limit,' the point that is to be attained by crossing a river or sea, or figuratively the world or existence. Vishňú, then, is Para, that which nothing surpasses; and Pára, the end or object of existence: he is Apára pára, the farthest bound of that which is illimitable, or space and time: he is Param parebhyaḥ, above or beyond the highest, being beyond or superior to all the elements: he is Paramártha rúpi, or identical with final truth, or knowledge of soul: he is Brahma pára, the object or essence of spiritual wisdom. Paraśvabúta is said to imply the farther limit (Pára) of rudimental matter (Para). He is Para, or chief Paránam, of those objects which are beyond the senses: and he is Párapára, or the boundary of boundaries; that is, he is the comprehensive investiture of, and exterior to, those limits by which soul is confined; he is free from all incumbrance or impediment. The passage may be interpreted in different ways, according to the ingenuity with which the riddle is read.

a g
prayers, by inaudibly reciting which the pious Kańđu propitiated Keśáva.” On which Soma repeated as follows: “Vishúu is beyond the boundary of all things: he is the infinite: he is beyond that which is boundless: he is above all that is above: he exists as finite truth: he is the object of the Veda; the limit of elemental being; unappreciable by the senses; possessed of illimitable might: he is the cause of cause; the cause of the cause of cause; the cause of finite cause; and in effects, he, both as every object and agent, preserves the universe: he is Brahma the lord; Brahma all beings; Brahma the progenitor of all beings; the imperishable: he is the eternal, undecaying, unborn Brahma, incapable of increase or diminution: Purushottama is the everlasting, uncreated, immutable Brahma. May the imperfections of my nature be annihilated through his favour.” Reciting this eulogium, the essence of divine truth, and propitiating Kesáva, Kańđu obtained final emancipation.

“Who Márishá was of old I will also relate to you, as the recital of her meritorious acts will be beneficial to you. She was the widow of a prince, and left childless at her husband’s death: she therefore zealously worshipped Vishúu, who, being gratified by her adoration, appeared to her, and desired her to demand a boon; on which she revealed to him the wishes of her heart. ‘I have been a widow, lord,’ she exclaimed, ‘even from my infancy, and my birth has been in vain: unfortunate have I been, and of little use, oh sovereign of the world. Now therefore I pray thee that in succeeding births I may have honourable husbands, and a son equal to a patriarch amongst men: may I be possessed of affluence and beauty: may I be pleasing in the sight of all: and may I be born out of the ordinary course. Grant these prayers, oh thou who art propitious to the devout.’ Hrishikeśa, the god of gods, the supreme giver of all blessings, thus prayed to, raised her from her prostrate attitude, and said, ‘In another life you shall have ten husbands of mighty prowess, and renowned for glorious acts; and you shall have a son magnanimous and valiant, distinguished by the rank of a patriarch, from whom the various races of men shall multiply, and by whose posterity the universe shall be filled. You, virtuous lady, shall be of marvellous birth, and you shall be endowed with grace and loveliness, delighting the hearts of men.’ Thus having spoken, the deity disappeared, and the princess was accordingly afterwards born as Márishá, who is given to you for a wife."

Soma having concluded, the Prachetasas took Márishá, as he had enjoined them, righteously to wife, relinquishing their indignation against the trees: and upon her they beget the eminent patriarch Daksha, who had (in a former life) been born as the son of Brahmá. This great sage, for the furtherance of creation, and the increase of mankind, created progeny. Obeying the command of Brahmá, he made movable and immovable things, bipeds and quadrupeds; and subsequently, by his will, gave birth to females, ten of whom he bestowed on Dharma, thirteen on Kaśyapa, and twenty-seven, who regulate the course of time, on the moon. Of these, the gods, the Titans, the snake-gods, cattle, and birds, the singers and dancers of the courts of heaven, the spirits of evil, and other beings, were born. From that period forwards living creatures

4 This part of the legend is peculiar to our text, and the whole story of Márishá’s birth is nowhere else so fully detailed. The penance of the Prachetasas, and its consequences, are related in the Agni, Bhágavata, Mataya, Padma, Váyu, and Bráhma Puráñas, and allusion is briefly made to Márishá’s birth. Her origin from Kaśóu and Pramlochá is narrated in a different place in the Bráhma Puráña, where the austerities of Kaśóu, and the necessity for their interruption, are described. The story, from that authority, was translated by the late Professor Chezy, and is published in the first number of the Journal Asiatique.

5 The second birth of Daksha, and his share in the peopling of the earth, is narrated in most of the Puráñas in a similar manner. It is perhaps the original legend, for Daksha seems to be an irregular adjunct to the Prajápati, or mind-born sons of Brahmá (see p. 49. n. 2); and the allegorical nature of his posterity in that character (p. 54) intimates a more recent origin. Nor does that series of descendants apparently occur in the Mahâbhárata, although the existence of two Dakshas is especially remarked there (Moksha Dh.); तलालाभ नामस्य निर्भेकतः हस्यः 6 दूसर १५४! In the Adi Parva, which seems to be the freest from subsequent improvements, the Daksha noticed is the son of the Prachetasas. The incompatibility of the two accounts is reconciled by referring the two Dakshas to different Manvantaras. The Daksha who proceeded from Brahmá as a Prajápati being born in the first, or Swáyambhuva, and the son of the Prachetasas in the Chákhusha Manwantara. The latter however, as descended from Uttánapáda, should belong to the first period also. It is evident that great confusion has been made by the Puráñas in Daksha’s history.

6 That is, they are the Nakshatras, or lunar asterisms.
were engendered by sexual intercourse: before the time of Daksha they were variously propagated, by the will, by sight, by touch, and by the influence of religious austerities practised by devout sages and holy saints.

Maitreya.—Daksha, as I have formerly heard, was born from the right thumb of Brahmá: tell me, great Muni, how he was regenerate as the son of the Prachetasas. Considerable perplexity also arises in my mind, how he, who, as the son of Márichá, was the grandson of Soma, could be also his father-in-law.

Parásara.—Birth and death are constant in all creatures: Rishis and sages, possessing divine vision, are not perplexed by this. Daksha and the other eminent Munis are present in every age, and in the interval of destruction cease to be: of this the wise man entertains no doubt. Amongst them of old there was neither senior nor junior; rigorous penance and acquired power were the sole causes of any difference of degree amongst these more than human beings.

7 'They are removed' (निहिलावं) which the commentator explains by मुक्तमस्तिक्षाये | 'are absorbed, as if they were fast asleep;' but in every age or Yuga, according to the text—in every Manwantara, according to the comment—the Rishis reappear, the circumstances of their origin only being varied. Daksha therefore, as remarked in the preceding note, is the son of Brahmá in one period, the son of the Prachetasas in another. So Soma, in the Sváyambhuva Manwantara, was born as the son of Atri; in the Chákhshuha, he was produced by churning the ocean. The words of our text occur in the Hari Vansa, with an unimportant variation: उपत्ति ब्रह्मणाय निधिं भूतं पार्वित्यं | जनयोग म भूतम निधिरंचिन्य नाना। | 'Birth and obstruction are constant in all beings, but Rishis and those men who are wise are not perplexed by this; that is, not, as rendered above, by the alternation of life and death; but, according to the commentator on the Hari Vansa, by a very different matter, the prohibition of unlawful marriages. Utpatti, 'birth of progeny,' is the result of their will; Nirodha, 'obstruction,' is the law prohibiting the intermarriage of persons connected by the offering of the funeral cake; निधिरंतिकसमस्तमनुष्यपुरुषे निधिं । to which Rishis and sages are not subject, either from their matrimonial unions being merely platonic, or from the bad example set by Brahmá, who, according to the Vedas, approached his own daughter; शनय म रत्नहितर्वसादर्शिनितुचितं । a mystery we have already had occasion to advert to (p. 51. n. 5). The explanation of the text, however, given by the commentator appears forced, and less natural than the interpretation preferred above.
MAITREYA.—Narrate to me, venerable Brahman, at length, the birth of the gods, Titans, Gandharbas, serpents, and goblins.

PARÁŚARA.—In what manner Daksha created living creatures, as commanded by Brahmá, you shall hear. In the first place he willed into existence the deities, the Rishis, the quiristers of heaven, the Titans, and the snake-gods. Finding that his will-born progeny did not multiply themselves, he determined, in order to secure their increase, to establish sexual intercourse as the means of multiplication. For this purpose he espoused Asikná, the daughter of the patriarch Víraña, a damsel addicted to devout practices, the eminent supportress of the world. By her the great father of mankind begot five thousand mighty sons, through whom he expected the world should be peopled. Nárada, the divine Rishi, observing them desirous to multiply posterity, approached them, and addressed them in a friendly tone: “Illustrious Haryaswas, it is evident that your intention is to beget posterity; but first consider this: why should you, who, like fools, know not the middle, the height, and depth of the world, propagate offspring? When your intellect is no more obstructed by interval, height, or depth, then how, fools, shall ye not all behold the term of the universe?” Having heard the words of Nárada, the sons of Daksha dispersed themselves throughout the regions, and to the present day have not returned; as rivers that lose themselves in the ocean come back no more.

The Haryaswas having disappeared, the patriarch Daksha begot by the daughter of Víraña a thousand other sons. They, who were named Savaláswas, were desirous of engendering posterity, but were dissuaded by Nárada in a similar manner. They said to one another, “What the Muni has observed is perfectly just.

We must follow the path that our brothers have travelled, and when we have ascertained the extent of the universe, we will multiply our race.” Accordingly they scattered themselves through the regions, and, like rivers flowing into the sea, they returned not again. Henceforth brother seeking for brother disappears, through ignorance of the products of the first principle of things. Daksha the patriarch, on finding that all these his sons had vanished, was incensed, and denounced an imprecation upon Nárada.¹⁰

¹⁰ Nárada’s interference, and the fruitless generation of the first progeny of Daksha, is an old legend. The Mahábhárata (Xii P. p. 113) notices only one set of sons, who, it is said, obtained Moksha, or liberation, through Nárada’s teaching them the Súkhya philosophy. The Bráhma, Matsya, Váyu, Linga, Padma, Agni, and Bhágavata Puráñas tell the story much as in the text, and not unfrequently in the same words. In general they merely refer to the imprecation denounced upon Nárada, as above. The Bhágavata specifies the imprecation to be perpetual peripateticism. Daksha says to him, ‘There shall not be a resting-place for thee in all these regions:’ शस्त्रार्जनमेव सर्वमेव न म भवेश्वर मह: पर्। The Kúrma repeats the imprecation merely to the effect that Nárada shall perish, and gives no legend. In the Bráhma Vaivarta, Nárada is cursed by Brahmá, on a similar occasion, to become the chief of the Gandharbas, whence his musical propensities: but the Bhágavata, VI. 7, has the reverse of this legend, and makes him first a Gandharba, then a Súdra, then the son of Brahmá. The Bráhma P., and after it the Hari Vansá and the Váyu P., have a different and not very intelligible story. Daksha, being about to pronounce an imprecation upon Nárada, was appeased by Brahmá and the Rishis, and it was agreed between them that Nárada should be again born, as the son of Kaśyapa, by one of Daksha’s daughters. This seems to be the gist of the legend, but it is very confusedly told. The version of the Bráhma P., which is the same as that of Hari Vansá, may be thus rendered: “The smooth-speaking Nárada addressed the sons of Daksha for their destruction and his own; for the Muni Kaśyapa begot him as a son, who was the son of Brahmá, on the daughter of Daksha, through fear of the latter’s imprecation. He was formerly the son of Parmeshhá (Brahmá), and the excellent sage Kaśyapa next begot him, as if he were his father, on Asíkní, the daughter of Vírañá. Whilst he was engaged in beguiling the sons of the patriarch, Daksha, of resistless power, determined on his destruction; but he was solicited by Brahmá, in the presence of the great sages, and it was agreed between them that Nárada, the son of Brahmá, should be born of a daughter of Daksha. Consequently Daksha gave his daughter to Parmeshhá, and by her was Nárada born.” Now several difficulties occur here. Asíkní is the wife, not the daughter, of Daksha; but this may be a blunder of the compiler, for in the parallel passage of the Váyu no name occurs. In the next place, who is this daughter? for, as we shall see, the progeny of all Daksha’s daughters are fully detailed, and in no
Then, Maitreyya, the wise patriarch, it is handed down to us, being anxious to people the world, created sixty daughters of the daughter of Viraña; ten of whom he gave to Dharma, thirteen to Kaśyapa, and twenty-seven to Soma, four to Arishtanemi, two to Bahuputra, two to Angiras, and two to Kriśáśwa. I will tell you their names. Arundhati, Vasu, Yámi, Lambá, Bhánú, Marutwati, SankaLPá, Muhúrttá, Sádhya, and Viśvá were the ten wives of Dharma, and bore him the following authority consulted is Nárada mentioned as the son of either of them, or as the son of Kaśyapa. Daksha, too, gives his daughter, not to Kaśyapa, but to Paramesháhi, or Bráhmá. The commentator on the Hari Vansá solves this by saying he gives her to Bráhmá for Kaśyapa. The same bargain is noticed in the Váyu, but Nárada is also said there to be adopted by Kaśyapa: न निर्धारित: जन्मसयक्त्व मूर्तिम् | न निर्धारित: जन्मसयक्त्व मूर्तिम् | । Again, however, it gives Daksha's imprecation in the same words as the Hari Vansá; a passage, by the way, omitted in the Bráhma: मात्र न जन्मसयक्त्व मूर्तिम् न निर्धारित: | । 'Nárada, perish (in your present form), and take up your abode in the womb.' Whatever may be the original of this legend, it is evidently imperfectly given by the authorities here cited. The French translation of the passage in the Hari Vansá can scarcely be admitted as correct: assuredly जन्मसयमानुष्य निर्धारित: जन्मसयक्त्व मूर्तिम् | न निर्धारित: | is not 'le Devarchi Daksha, époux d'Askini, fille de Viraña, fut l'aïeul de cet illustre mouni ainsi régénéré.' निर्धारित: is more consistently said by the commentator to mean Kaśyapa. The Váyu P. in another part, a description of the different orders of Rishis, states that the Devarshis Parvata and Náreola were sons of Kaśyapa: जन्मसयमानुष्य जन्मसयक्त्व मूर्तिम् | न निर्धारित: | । In the account of Kárttavírya, in the Bráhma P. and Hari Vansá, Nárada is introduced as a Gandharbha, the son of Varidása; being the same, according to the commentator on the latter, as the Gandharbha elsewhere called Upavartana.

11 The prior specification (p. 115) was fifty. The Mahábharata, Adi P. 113, and, again, Moksha Dharma, has the same number. The Bhágavata, Kúrma, Padma, Linga, and Váyu P. state sixty. The former is perhaps the original, as the fullest and most consistent details relate to them and their posterity.

12 This is the usual list of Dharma's wives. The Bhágavata substitutes Kakud for Arundhatí. The Padma P., Matsya P., and Hari Vansá contain two different accounts of Daksha's descendants: the first agrees with our text; the second, which is supposed to occur in the Padma Kalpa, is somewhat varied, particularly as to the wives of Dharma, who are said to be five.

The nomenclature varies, or,

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Padma P.</td>
<td>Hari Vansá</td>
<td>Mahaṣya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lakshmi</td>
<td>Lakshmi</td>
<td>Lakshmis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saraswati</td>
<td>Kirtti</td>
<td>Saraswati</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gangá</td>
<td>Sádhya</td>
<td>Sádhya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Viśvesá</td>
<td>Viśvá</td>
<td>Viśvesá</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sávitrí</td>
<td>Marutwati</td>
<td>Urjaswati</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

There is evident inaccuracy in all the copies, and the names may in some instances be erroneous. From the succeeding enumeration of their descendants, it appears that Káma was the son of Lakshmi; the progeny. The sons of Viśvá were the Viśvádevas\textsuperscript{13}; and the Sádhyas\textsuperscript{14}, those of Sádhyá. The Máruts, or winds, were the children of Marutwati; the Vasus, of Vasu. The Bhánus (or sons) of Bhánu; and the deities presiding over moments, of Muhárttá. Ghosha was the son of Lambá (an arc of the heavens); Nágavíthi (the milky way), the daughter of Yámí (night). The divisions of the earth were born of Arundhatí; and Sankalpa (pious purpose), the soul of all, was the son of Sankal pá. The deities called Vasus, because, preceded by fire, they abound in splendour and might\textsuperscript{15}, are severally named Ápa, Dhruva, Soma, Dhava (fire), Anila (wind), Anná (fire), Pratyáshá (day-break), and Prabhása (light). The four sons of Ápa were Vaitañáya, Árama (weariness), Áránta (fatigue), and Dhur (burthen). Kála (time), the cherisher of the world, was the son of Dhúrva. The son of Soma was Varchas (light), who was the father of Varchasví (radiance). Dhava had, by his wife Manohará (loveliness), Draviña, Hutañáváhá, Śiśára, Práúa, and Ramaña. The two sons of Anila (wind), by his wife Śivá, were Manojaya (swift as thought) and Avijnátagati (untraceable motion). The son of Agni (fire), Kumára, was born in a clump of Śara reeds: his sons were Sákha, Visákha, Naigameya, and Prishtája. The offspring of the Krittikás was named Kártikéya. The son of Pratyáshá was the Rishi named Devala, who had two philosophic and intelligent sons\textsuperscript{16}. The sister of Váchaspati, lovely and virtuous, Yogasiddhá, who pervades the whole world without Sádhyas, of Sádhyá; the Viśvádevas, of Viśvá; the Máruts, of Marutwati; and the Vasus, of Deví, who may be either the Saraswati or Sávitrí of the previous enumeration.

\textsuperscript{13} The Viśvádevas are a class of gods to whom sacrifices should be offered daily. Manu, III. 121. They are named in some of the Puránas, as the Váyu and Matsya: the former specifying ten; the latter, twelve.

\textsuperscript{14} The Sádhyas, according to the Váyu, are the personified rites and prayers of the Vedas, born of the metres, and partakers of the sacrifices: साध्यानां नाम महाभागा इत्यादिन।

\textsuperscript{15} The same work names twelve, which are all names of sacrifices and formulae, as Dáksha, Pauramása, Vrihadásáwa, Rathantara, &c. The Matsya P., Padma P., and Hari V. have a different set of seventeen appellations, apparently of arbitrary selection, as Bhava, Prabhava, Tá, Aruú, &c.

\textsuperscript{16} Or, according to the Padma P., because they are always present in light, or luminous irradiation: अंतरितमाय तु ये देवा यायत्रा कालकाले दिन। वर्तवेत समाक्षा। being devoted to it, was the wife of Prabhása, the eighth of the Vasus, and born to him the patriarch Viswakarma, the author of a thousand arts, the mechanist of the gods, the fabricator of all ornaments, the chief of artists, the constructor of the self-moving chariots of the deities, and by whose skill men obtain subsistence. Ajaiakapád, Ahirvradhna, and the wise Rudra Twashtri, were born; and the self-born son of Twashtri was also the celebrated Viśvarūpa. There are eleven well-known Rudras, lords of the three worlds, or Hara, Bahurúpa, Tryambaka, Aparājīta, Vrishakapi, Sambhu, Kapardí, Raivata, Mrigavyádha, Sarva, and Kapáli; but there are a hundred appellations of the immeasurably mighty Rudras.

\textsuperscript{16} The Váyu supplies their names, Kahamávarta (patient) and Manaswin (wise).

The passage is, चत्वारविकारविन्दतः, तत्त्वः वृक्षमाय। न तत्त्वमायिनां पुषो रिविन्दतो नमः वर्षः। Whose sons they are does not appear; the object being, according to the comment, to specify only the 'eleven divisions or modifications of the youngest Rudra, Twashtra.' नुवर्नवसं हस्तेष्वाद्वस्त्रां निधि। We have, however, an unusual variety of reading here in two copies of the comment: 'The eleven Rudras, in whom the family of Twashtra (a synonyme, it may be observed, sometimes of Viswakarma) is included, were born. The enumeration of the Rudras ends with Aparājīta, of whom Tryambaka is the epithet.' चत्वारविकारविन्दतं शाक्रयं संयतौ वृक्षमायिनां नमः स्वविन्दतो नमः। Accordingly the three last names in all the other copies of the text are omitted in these two; their places being supplied by the third first, two of whom are always named in the lists of the Rudras. According to the Váyu and Bráhma P. the Rudras are the children of Kaśyapa by Surabhi: the Bhágavata makes them the progeny of Bhúta and Sarúpá; the Matsya, Padma, and Hara V. in the second series, the offspring of Surabhi by Brahmá. The names in three of the Paurádic authorities run thus:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Váyu</th>
<th>Matsya</th>
<th>Bhágavata</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ajaiakapád</td>
<td>Ajaiakapád</td>
<td>Ajaiakapád</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ahirvradhna</td>
<td>Ahirvradhna</td>
<td>Ahirvradhna</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hara</td>
<td>Hara</td>
<td>Ugra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nírrita</td>
<td>Nírrita</td>
<td>Bhima</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Táwara</td>
<td>Pingala</td>
<td>Váma</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhuvana</td>
<td>Dahan</td>
<td>Mahána</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Angáraka</td>
<td>Aparájita</td>
<td>Bahurúpa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arddhaketu</td>
<td>Mrigavyádha</td>
<td>Vrishakapi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Múryu</td>
<td>Senání</td>
<td>Aja</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sarpa</td>
<td>Sajja</td>
<td>Bhava</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kapáli</td>
<td>Kapáli</td>
<td>Raivata</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Bráhma or Hari V., the Padma, the Linga, &c. have other varieties; and the Lexicons have a different reading from all, as in that of Jatádhara they are Ajaiakapad, Ahirvradhna, Virúpáksha, Súreśvara, Jayanta, Bahurúpaka, Tryambaka, Aparájita, Vaivasvata, Sávitra, and Hara. The variety seems to proceed from the writers applying to the Rudras, as they may legitimately do, different appellations of the common prototype, or synonyms of Rudra or Siva, selected at will from his thousand and eight names, according to the Linga P.

The posterity of Daksáha's daughters...
The daughters of Daksha who were married to Kaśyapa were Aditi, Diti, Danu, Arishṭá, Surasā, Surabhī, Vinatā, Tāmrā, Krodhavaśā, Īḍā, Khasā, Kadru, and Muni; whose progeny I will describe to you. There were twelve celebrated deities in a former Manwantara, called Tushitās, who, upon the approach of the present period, or in the reign of the last Manu, Chākshusha, assembled, and said to one another, “Come, let us quickly enter into the womb of Aditi, that we may be born in the next Manwantara, for thereby we shall again enjoy the rank of gods;” and accordingly they were born the sons of Kaśyapa, the son of Maríchi, by Aditi, the daughter of Daksha; thence named the twelve Ādityas; whose appellations were respectively, Visháu, Śakra, Áryaman, Dhúti, Twáshtri, Púshan, Vivasvat, Savitri, Mitra, Varuṇa, Anā, and Bhaga. These, who in the Chākshusha Manwantara were the gods called Tushitās, were called the twelve Ādityas in the Manwantara of Vaivasvata.

The twenty-seven daughters of the patriarch who became the virtuous wives of the moon were all known as the nymphs of the lunar constelby Dharma are clearly allegorical personifications chiefly of two classes, one consisting of astronomical phenomena, and the other of portions or subjects of the ritual of the Vedas.

There is some, though not much, variation in these names in different Purāṇas. The Bhāṣavata has Saramá, Kaśabya, and Timi, the parents severally of canine animals, beasts with unclawed hoofs, and fishes, in place of Vinatā, Khasā, and Kadru; disposing of the first and last differently. The Vāyu has Pravā in place of Arishṭá, and Anáyush or Danáyush for Surasā. The Padma P., second series, substitutes Kālā, Anáyush, Sinhiká, Piśáchā, Váč for Arishṭá, Surasā, Surabhī, Tāmrā, and Muni; and omits Īḍā and Khasā. In the Uttarā Khanda of the same, Kaśyapa’s wives are said to be but four, Aditi, Diti, Kadru, and Vinatā.

In the sixth reign, or that of Chākshusha Manu, according to the text; but in book III. ch. 1. the Tushitās are the gods of the second or Svarochisha Manvantara. The Váyu has a much more complete legend than any other Purāṇa on this subject. In the beginning of the Kalpa twelve gods, named Jayas, were created by Bráhma, as his deputies and assistants in the creation. They, lost in meditation, neglected his commands; on which he cursed them to be repeatedly born in each Manwantara till the seventh. They were accordingly, in the several successive Manvantaras, Ajitas, Tushitās, Satyas, Haris, Vaiśamthas, Sádhyas, and Ādityas. Our authority and some others, as the Bráhma, have apparently intended to refer to this account, but have confused the order of the series.
lations, which were called by their names, and had children who were brilliant through their great splendour. The wives of Arishtanemi bore him sixteen children. The daughters of Bahuputra were the four lightnings. The excellent Pratyangirasa Richas were the children of Angiras, descended from the holy sage: and the deified weapons of the gods were the progeny of Kriśāwa.

These classes of thirty-three divinities are born again at the end of a thousand ages, according to their own pleasure; and their appearance and disappearance is here spoken of as birth and death: but, Maitreya, these divine personages exist age after age in the same manner as the sun sets and rises again.

It has been related to us, that Diti had two sons by Kaśyapa, named Hiraṇyakaśipu and the invincible Hiraṇyaṇkṣa: she had also a daughter, \[21\] The Purāṇas that contain this genealogy agree tolerably well in these names. The Bhāgavata adds many details regarding some of the Adityas and their descendants.

\[22\] The Nakshatra Yoginis, or chief stars of the lunar mansions, or asterisms in the moon’s path.

\[23\] None of the authorities are more specific on the subject of Arishtanemi’s progeny. In the Mahābhārata this is said to be another name of Kaśyapa: महाभारत: कस्यपे नामसः। चैतन्यमेतेऽवस्त्राः कस्यपेरस्मां निर्मिता। The Bhāgavata substitutes Tārksha for this personage, said by the commentator to be likewise another name of Kaśyapa. His wives are, Kadru, Vinatā, Patangi, and Yāminī, mothers of snakes, birds, grasshoppers, and locusts.

\[24\] Enumerated in astrological works as brown, red, yellow, and white; portending severally wind, heat, rain, famine.

\[25\] The Richas, or verses, thirty-five in number, addressed to presiding divinities, denominated Pratyangirassā. The Bhāga-vata calls the wives of Angiras, Swadhā and Sati, and makes them the mothers of the Pitrīs and the Atharvan Veda severally.

\[26\] The Sastra devatas, gods of the divine weapons; a hundred are enumerated in the Rāmāyaṇa, and they are there termed the sons of Kriśāwa by Jayā and Vijayā, daughters of the Prajāpatī; that is, of Daksha. The Bhāgavata terms the two wives of Kriśāwa, Archish (flame) and Dhishanā; the former is the mother of Dhūmaketu (comet); the latter, of four sages, Devala, Vedasārīs, Vayuṇa, and Manu. The allegorical origin of the weapons is undoubtedly the more ancient.

\[27\] This number is founded upon a text of the Vedas, which to the eight Vasus, eleven Rudras, and twelve Adityas, adds Prajāpatī, either Brahmā or Daksha, and Vasatākāra, ‘deified oblation’: चरीय चरण स्वदेशमति द्वारायान्ति प्रभुपालित चरणकार्यमित्र खुशः। They have the epithet Chhandajā, as born in different Manwantaras, of their own will: इति: वैभववान्ति नावते इत्यवः।
Sinhiká, the wife of Viprachittí. Hirañyakaśipú was the father of four mighty sons, Anuháda, Hláda, the wise Prahláda, and the heroic Sanhláda, the augmentor of the Daitya race. Amongst these, the illustrious Prahláda, looking on all things with indifference, devoted his whole faith to Janárddana. The flames that were lighted by the king of the Daityas consumed not him, in whose heart Vásudeva was cherished; and all the earth trembled when, bound with bonds, he moved amidst the waters of the ocean. His firm body, fortified by a mind engrossed by Achyuta, was unwounded by the weapons hurled on him by order of the Daitya monarch; and the serpents sent to destroy him breathed their venomous flames upon him in vain. Overwhelmed with rocks, he yet remained unhurt; for he never forgot Vishúu, and the recollection of the deity was his armour of proof. Hurled from on high by the king of the Daityas, residing in Swarga, earth received him unharmed. The wind sent into his body to wither him up was itself annihilated by him, in whom Madhusúdaná was present. The fierce elephants of the spheres broke their tusks, and vailed their pride, against the firm breast which the lord of the Daityas had ordered them to assault. The ministrant priests of the monarch were baffled in all their rites for the destruction of one so steadily attached to Govinda: and the thousand delusions of the fraudulent Samvara, counteracted by the discus of Krishná, were practised without success. The deadly poison administered by his father's officers he partook of unhesitatingly, and without its working any visible change; for he looked upon the world with mind undisturbed, and, full of benignity, regarded all things with equal affection, and as identical with himself. He was righteous; an inexhaustible mine of purity and truth; and an unfailing model for all pious men.

28 The Puráñas generally concur in this genealogy, reading sometimes Anuháda, Hráda, &c. for Anuhláda and the rest. Although placed second in the order of Káśyapa's descendents, the Daityas are in fact the elder branch. Thus the Mahábhárata, Moksha Dharma, calls Diti the senior wife of Káśyapa: प्रवा ज्येष्ठासहिताः and the Váyu terms Hirañyakaśipu and Hirañyáksha the eldest of all the sons of that patriarch: कवमपत्ताकाशी ती ने चौम्भ: पुत्री मृत ती। So, "Titan and his enormous brood" were "heaven's first born."
CHAP. XVI.

Inquiries of Maitreya respecting the history of Prahláda.

MAITREYA.—Venerable Muni, you have described to me the races of human beings, and the eternal Vishúu, the cause of this world; but who was this mighty Prahláda, of whom you have last spoken; whom fire could not burn; who died not, when pierced by weapons; at whose presence in the waters earth trembled, shaken by his movements, even though in bonds; and who, overwhelmed with rocks, remained unhurt. I am desirous to hear an account of the unequalled might of that sage worshipper of Vishúu, to whose marvellous history you have alluded. Why was he assailed by the weapons of the sons of Diti? why was so righteous a person thrown into the sea? wherefore was he overwhelmed with rocks? why bitten by venomous snakes? why hurled from the mountain crest? why cast into the flames? why was he made a mark for the tusks of the elephants of the spheres? wherefore was the blast of death directed against him by the enemies of the gods? why did the priests of the Dāityas practise ceremonies for his destruction; why were the thousand illusions of Samvára exercised upon him? and for what purpose was deadly poison administered to him by the servants of the king, but which was innocuous as food to his sagacious son? All this I am anxious to hear: the history of the magnanimous Prahláda; a legend of great marvels. Not that it is a wonder that he should have been uninjured by the Dāityas; for who can injure the man that fixes his whole heart on Vishúu? but it is strange that such inveterate hatred should have been shewn, by his own kin, to one so virtuous, so unweariedly occupied in worshipping Vishúu. You can explain to me for what reason the sons of Diti offered violence to one so pious, so illustrious, so attached to Vishúu, so free from guile. Generous enemies wage no war with such as he was, full of sanctity and every excellence; how should his own father thus behave towards him? Tell me therefore, most illustrious Muni, the whole story in detail: I wish to hear the entire narrative of the sovereign of the Dāitya race.
Legend of Prahláda. Hiraṇyakaśipu, the sovereign of the universe: the gods dispersed or in servitude to him: Prahláda, his son, remains devoted to Vishnú: questioned by his father, he praises Vishnú: Hiraṇyakaśipu orders him to be put to death, but in vain: his repeated deliverance: he teaches his companions to adore Vishnú.

PARÁSARA.—Listen, Maitreya, to the story of the wise and magnanimous Prahláda, whose adventures are ever interesting and instructive. Hiraṇyakaśipu, the son of Diti, had formerly brought the three worlds under his authority, confiding in a boon bestowed upon him by Brahmá. He had usurped the sovereignty of Indra, and exercised of himself the functions of the sun, of air, of the lord of waters, of fire, and of the moon. He himself was the god of riches; he was the judge of the dead; and he appropriated to himself, without reserve, all that was offered in sacrifice to the gods. The deities therefore, flying from their seats in heaven, wandered, through fear of the Dáitya, upon the earth, disguised in mortal shapes. Having conquered the three worlds, he was inflated with pride, and, eulogized by the Gandharbas, enjoyed whatever he desired. The Gandharbas, the Siddhas, and the snake-gods all attended upon the mighty Hiraṇyakaśipu, as he sat at the banquet. The Siddhas delighted stood before him, some playing on musical instruments, some singing songs in his praise, and others shouting cries of victory; whilst the nymphs of heaven danced gracefully in the crystal palace, where the Asura with pleasure quaffed the inebriating cup.

The illustrious son of the Dáitya king, Prahláda, being yet a boy, resided in the dwelling of his preceptor, where he read such writings as are studied in early years. On one occasion he came, accompanied by his teacher, to the court of his father, and bowed before his feet as he was drinking. Hiraṇyakaśipu desired his prostrate son to rise, and said

1 The boon, according to the Váyu Puráṇa, was, that he should not be slain by any created being: the Kúrma adds, except by Vishnú. The Bhágavata has a similar boon as the Váyu, and therefore, says the commentator, Vishnú assumed the form of the Nrisinha, as being that of neither a man nor an animal.
to him, “Repeat, boy, in substance, and agreeably, what during the period of your studies you have acquired.” “Hear, sire,” replied Prahláda, what in obedience to your commands I will repeat, the substance of all I have learned: listen attentively to that which wholly occupies my thoughts. I have learned to adore him who is without beginning, middle, or end, increase or diminution; the imperishable lord of the world, the universal cause of causes.” On hearing these words, the sovereign of the Daityas, his eyes red with wrath, and lip swollen with indignation, turned to the preceptor of his son, and said, “Vile Brahman, what is this preposterous commendation of my foe, that, in disrespect to me, you have taught this boy to utter?” “King of the Daityas,” replied the Guru, “it is not worthy of you to give way to passion: that which your son has uttered, he has not been taught by me.” “By whom then,” said Hirañyakaśipu to the lad, “by whom has this lesson, boy, been taught you? your teacher denies that it proceeds from him.” “Vishńu, father,” answered Prahláda, “is the instructor of the whole world: what else should any one teach or learn, save him the supreme spirit?” “Block-head,” exclaimed the king, “who is this Vishńu, whose name you thus reiterate so impertinently before me, who am the sovereign of the three worlds?” “The glory of Vishńu,” replied Prahláda, “is to be meditated upon by the devout; it cannot be described: he is the supreme lord, who is all things, and from whom all things proceed.” To this the king rejoined, “Are you desirous of death, fool, that you give the title of supreme lord to any one whilst I survive?” “Vishńu, who is Brahma,” said Prahláda, “is the creator and protector, not of me alone, but of all human beings, and even, father, of you: he is the supreme lord of all.
Why should you, sire, be offended?” Hirañyakaśipu then exclaimed, “What evil spirit has entered into the breast of this silly boy, that thus, like one possessed, he utters such profanity?” “Not into my heart alone,” said Prahláda, “has Vishńu entered, but he pervades all the regions of the universe, and by his omnipresence influences the conduct of all beings, mine, father, and thine.” “Away with the wretch,” cried

2 The Puráñas teach constantly incompasage, the Supreme Being is not the inertpatible doctrines. According to this pas-cause of creation only, but exercises the the king; "take him to his preceptor's mansion. By whom could he have been instigated to repeat the lying praises of my foe."

According to the commands of his father, Prahláda was conducted by the Daityas back to the house of his Guru; where, assiduous in attendance on his preceptor, he constantly improved in wisdom. After a considerable time had elapsed, the sovereign of the Asuras sent for him again; and on his arrival in his presence, desired him to recite some poetical composition. Prahláda immediately began, "May he from whom matter and soul originate, from whom all that moves or is unconscious proceeds, he who is the cause of all this creation, Vishúu, be favourable unto us." On hearing which, Hirañyakaśipu exclaimed, "Kill the wretch; he is not fit to live, who is a traitor to his friends, a burning brand to his own race:" and his attendants, obedient to his orders, snatched up their weapons, and rushed in crowds upon Prahláda, to destroy him. The prince calmly looked upon them, and said, "Daityas, as truly as Vishúu is present in your weapons and in my body, so truly shall those weapons fail to harm me:" and accordingly, although struck heavily and repeatedly by hundreds of the Daityas, the prince felt not the least pain, and his strength was ever renewed. His father then endeavoured to persuade him to refrain from glorifying his enemy, and promised him immunity if he would not be so foolish as to persevere: but Prahláda replied, that he felt no fear as long as his immortal guardian against all dangers was present in his mind, the recollection of whom was alone sufficient to dissipate all the perils consequent upon birth or human infirmities.

Hirañyakaśipu, highly exasperated, commanded the serpents to fall upon his disobedient and insane son, and bite him to death with their envenomed fangs: and thereupon the great snakes Kuhaka, Takshaka, and Andhaka, charged with fatal poison, bit the prince in every part of his body; but he, with thoughts immovably fixed on Krishńa, felt no pain from their wounds, being immersed in rapturous recollections of that divinity. Then the snakes cried to the king, and said, “Our fangs are broken; our jewelled crests are burst; there is fever in our hoods, and fear in our hearts; but the skin of the youth is still unscathed: have recourse, monarch of the Dāityas, to some other expedient.” “Ho, elephants of the skies!” exclaimed the demon; “unite your tusks, and destroy this deserter from his father, and conspirer with my foes. It is thus that often our progeny are our destruction, as fire consumes the wood from which it springs.” The young prince was then assailed by the elephants of the skies, as vast as mountain peaks; cast down upon the earth, and trampled on, and gored by their tusks: but he continued to call to mind Govinda, and the tusks of the elephants were blunted against his breast. “Behold,” he said to his father, “the tusks of the elephants, as hard as adamant, are blunted; but this is not by any strength of mine: calling upon Janárdana is my defence against such fearful affliction.”

Then said the king to his attendants, “Dismiss the elephants, and let fire consume him; and do thou, deity of the winds, blow up the fire, that this wicked wretch may be consumed.” And the Danávas piled a mighty heap of wood around the prince, and kindled a fire, to burn him, as their master had commanded. But Prahláda cried, “Father, this fire, though blown up by the winds, burneth me not; and all around I behold the face of the skies, cool and fragrant, with beds of lotus flowers.”

Then the Brahmans who were the sons of Bhárgava, illustrious priests, and reciters of the Sáma-Veda, said to the king of the Dāityas, “Sire, restrain your wrath against your own son. How should anger succeed in finding a place in heavenly mansions? As for this lad, we will be his instructors, and teach him obediently to labour for the destruction of your foes. Youth is the season, king, of many errors; and you should not therefore be relentlessly offended with a child. If he will not listen to us, and abandon the cause of Hari, we will adopt infallible measures to work his death.” The king of the Dāityas, thus solicited by the priests, commanded the prince to be liberated from the midst of the flames.

Again established in the dwelling of his preceptor, Prahláda gave lessons himself to the sons of the demons, in the intervals of his leisure. "Sons of the offspring of Diti," he was accustomed to say to them, "hear from me the supreme truth; nothing else is fit to be regarded; nothing else here is an object to be coveted. Birth, infancy, and youth are the portion of all creatures; and then succeeds gradual and inevitable decay, terminating with all beings, children of the Daityas, in death: this is manifestly visible to all; to you as it is to me. That the dead are born again, and that it cannot be otherwise, the sacred texts are warrant: but production cannot be without a material cause; and as long as conception and parturition are the material causes of repeated birth, so long, be sure, is pain inseparable from every period of existence. The simpleton, in his inexperience, fancies that the alleviation of hunger, thirst, cold, and the like is pleasure; but of a truth it is pain; for suffering gives delight to those whose vision is darkened by delusion, as fatigue would be enjoyment to limbs that are incapable of motion\(^3\). This vile body is a compound of phlegm and other humours. Where are its beauty, grace, fragrance, or other estimable qualities? The fool that is fond of a body composed of flesh, blood, matter, ordure, urine, membrane, marrow, and bones, will be enamoured of hell. The agreeableness of fire is caused by cold; of water, by thirst; of food, by hunger: by other circumstances their contraries are equally agreeable\(^4\). The child of the Daitya who

\(^3\) This is the purport of the sentence apparently, and is that which the comment in part confirms. Literally it is, 'A blow is the pleasure of those whose eyes are darkened by ignorance, whose limbs, exceedingly benumbed, desire pleasure by exercise.' The commentator divides the sentence, however, and reads it, 'As fatigue would be like pleasure to paralyzed limbs; and a blow is enjoyment to those who are blinded by delusion; that is, by love; for to them a slap, or even a kick, from a mistress would be a favour.' It is not improbably an allusion to some such venerable pastime as blindman's buff. This interpretation, however, leaves the construction of the first half of the sentence imperfect, unless the nominative and verb apply to both portions: शख्सिकन्दित्वानां लघुवसन तृतीयोऽविद्यानुप्रि गुहारोपि बुधावरे।

\(^4\) They are so far from being sources of pleasure in themselves, that, under different HIS INSTRUCTIONS TO HIS COMPANIONS.

131

takes to himself a wife introduces only so much misery into his bosom; for as many as are the cherished affections of a living creature, so many are the thorns of anxiety implanted in his heart; and he who has large possessions in his house is haunted, wherever he goes, with the apprehension that they may be lost or burnt or stolen. Thus there is great pain in being born: for the dying man there are the tortures of the judge of the deceased, and of passing again into the womb. If you conclude that there is little enjoyment in the embryo state, you must then admit that the world is made up of pain. Verily I say unto you, that in this ocean of the world, this sea of many sorrows, Vishnu is your only hope. If ye say, you know nothing of this; we are children; embodied spirit in bodies is eternal; birth, youth, decay, are the properties of the body, not of the soul. But it is in this way that we deceive ourselves. 'I am yet a child; but it is my purpose to exert myself when I am a youth. I am yet a youth; but when I become old I will do what is needful for the good of my soul. I am now old, and all my duties are to be fulfilled. How shall I, now that my faculties fail me, do what was left undone when my strength was unimpaired?' In this manner do men, whilst their minds are distracted by sensual pleasures, ever propose, and never attain final beatitude: they die thirsting. Devoted in childhood to play, and in youth to pleasure, ignorant and impotent they find that old age is come upon them. Therefore even in childhood let the embodied soul acquire discriminative wisdom, and, independent contrasts, they become sources of pain. Heat is agreeable in cold weather: cold is agreeable in hot weather; heat would then be disagreeable. Drink is pleasant to a thirsty man: thirst is agreeable to one who has drunk too much; and more drink would be painful. So of food, and of other contrasts.

3 'Divine knowledge is the province only of those who can separate soul from body; that is, who live independent of bodily infirmities and passions. We have not overcome corporeal vicissitudes, and have therefore no concern with such abstruse inquiries.' This is the commentator's explanation of the passage.

6 विपक्षितः: Alluding, says the commentator, to the fable of a washerman, who, whilst washing his clothes in the Ganges, proposed daily to drink of its waters, but forgot his purpose in his occupation: or of a boy, who proposed the same as he pursued fish after fish, and never accomplished his intention, being engrossed by his sport; both died without drinking.
of the conditions of infancy, youth, or age, strive incessantly to be freed. This, then, is what I declare unto you; and since you know that it is not untrue, do you, out of regard to me, call to your minds Vishén, the liberator from all bondage. What difficulty is there in thinking upon him, who, when remembered, bestows prosperity; and by recalling whom to memory, day and night, all sin is cleansed away? Let all your thoughts and affections be fixed on him, who is present in all beings, and you shall laugh at every care. The whole world is suffering under a triple affliction. What wise man would feel hatred towards beings who are objects of compassion? If fortune be propitious to them, and I am unable to partake of the like enjoyments, yet wherefore should I cherish malignity towards those who are more prosperous than myself? I should rather sympathise with their happiness; for the suppression of malignant feelings is of itself a reward. If beings are hostile, and indulge in hatred, they are objects of pity to the wise, as encompassed by profound delusion. These are the reasons for repressing hate, which are adapted to the capacities of those who see the deity distinct from his creatures. Hear, briefly, what influences those who have approached the truth. This whole world is but a manifestation of Vishén, who is identical with all things; and it is therefore to be regarded by the wise as not differing from, but as the same with themselves. Let us therefore lay aside the angry passions of our race, and so strive that we obtain that perfect, pure, and eternal happiness, which shall be beyond the power of the elements or their deities, of fire, of the sun, of the moon, of wind, of Indra, of the regent of the sea; which shall be unmolested by spirits of air or earth; by Yakshás, Daityás, or their chiefs; by the serpent-gods or monstrous demigods of Swérga; which shall be uninterrupted by men or beasts, or 7 The three kinds of affliction of the Sánkhya philosophy: internal, as bodily or mental distress; external, as injuries from men, animals, &c.; and superhuman, or inflictions by gods or demons. See S. Káriká, ver. i.

8 The construction of the text is elliptical and brief, but the sense is sufficiently clear. वस्मद्रात्मिक मुनीम श्रीनडल्ल सर्वोऽपि निःशूचिं हात्मिकाहस्य वस्मादिक मुनीम श्रीनडल्ल सर्वोऽपि निःशूचिं हात्मिकाहस्य वस्मादिक मुनीम श्रीनडल्ल सर्वोऽपि निःशूचिं हात्मिकाहस्य वस्मादिक मुनीम श्रीनडल्ल सर्वोऽपि निःशूचिं हात्मिकाहस्य

*Whence (from feeling pleasure) the abandonment of enmity is verily the consequence.*
by the infirmities of human nature; by bodily sickness and disease, or hatred, envy, malice, passion, or desire; which nothing shall molest, and which every one who fixes his whole heart on Keśava shall enjoy. Verily I say unto you, that you shall have no satisfaction in various revolutions through this treacherous world, but that you will obtain placidity for ever by propitiating Vishńu, whose adoration is perfect calm. What here is difficult of attainment, when he is pleased? Wealth, pleasure, virtue, are things of little moment. Precious is the fruit that you shall gather, be assured, from the exhaustless store of the tree of true wisdom."

9 The original rather unpocetically specifies some of these, or fever, ophthalmia, dysentery, spleen, liver, &c. The whole of these defects are the individuals of the three species of pain alluded to before.
CHAP. XVIII.

Hiranyakaśipu's reiterated attempts to destroy his son: their being always frustrated.

The Dánavas, observing the conduct of Prahláda, reported it to the king, lest they should incur his displeasure. He sent for his cooks, and said to them, "My vile and unprincipled son is now teaching others his impious doctrines: be quick, and put an end to him. Let deadly poison be mixed up with all his viands, without his knowledge. Hesitate not, but destroy the wretch without delay." Accordingly they did so, and administered poison to the virtuous Prahláda, as his father had commanded them. Prahláda, repeating the name of the imperishable, ate and digested the food in which the deadly poison had been infused, and suffered no harm from it, either in body or mind, for it had been rendered innocuous by the name of the eternal. Beholding the strong poison digested, those who had prepared the food were filled with dismay, and hastened to the king, and fell down before him, and said, "King of the Dáityas, the fearful poison given by us to your son has been digested by him along with his food, as if it were innocent. Hiranyakaśipu, on hearing this, exclaimed, "Hasten, hasten, minister priests of the Dáitya race! instantly perform the rites that will effect his destruction!" Then the priests went to Prahláda, and, having repeated the hymns of the Sáma-Veda, said to him, as he respectfully hearkened, "Thou hast been born, prince, in the family of Brahmá, celebrated in the three worlds, the son of Hiranyakaśipu, the king of the Dáityas; why shouldest thou acknowledge dependance upon the gods? why upon the eternal? Thy father is the stay of all the worlds, as thou thyself in turn shalt be. Desist, then, from celebrating the praises of an enemy; and remember, that of all venerable preceptors, a father is most venerable." Prahláda replied to them, "Illustrious Brahmans, it is true that the family of Maríchi is renowned in the three worlds; this cannot be denied: and I also admit, what is equally indisputable, that my father is mighty over the universe. There is no error, not the least, in what you have said, 'that a father is the most venerable of all holy teachers:' he is a venerable instructor, no doubt, and is ever to be devoutly reverenced. To all these things I have nothing to object; they find a ready assent in my mind: but when you say, 'Why should I depend upon the eternal?' who can give assent to this as right? the words are void of meaning.' Having said thus much, he was silent a while, being restrained by respect to their sacred functions; but he was unable to repress his smiles, and again said, 'What need is there of the eternal? excellent! What need of the eternal! admirable! most worthy of you who are my venerable preceptors! Hear what need there is of the eternal, if to hearken will not give you pain. The fourfold objects of men are said to be virtue, desire, wealth, final emancipation. Is he who is the source of all these of no avail? Virtue was derived from the eternal by Daksha, Marichi, and other patriarchs; wealth has been obtained from him by others; and by others, the enjoyment of their desires: whilst those who, through true wisdom and holy contemplation, have come to know his essence, have been released from their bondage, and have attained freedom from existence for ever. The glorification of Hari, attainable by unity, is the root of all riches, dignity, renown, wisdom, progeny, righteousness, and liberation. Virtue, wealth, desire, and even final freedom, Brahmans, are fruits bestowed by him. How then can it be said, 'What need is there of the eternal?' But enough of this: what occasion is there to say more? You are my venerable preceptors, and, speak ye good or evil, it is not for my weak judgment to decide.' The priests said to him, 'We preserved you, boy, when you were about to be consumed by fire, confiding that you would no longer eulogize your father's foes: we knew not how unwise you were: but if you will not desist from this infatuation at our advice, we shall even proceed to perform the rites that will inevitably destroy you.' To this menace, Prahláda answered, 'What living creature slays, or is slain? what living creature preserves, or is preserved? Each is his own destroyer or preserver, as he follows evil or good.'

1 This is not the doctrine of the im-passibility of soul, taught in the Vedas: हृदय चेतनायेते हार्दुः हर्षक्षेत्रस्य हार्दुः। आर्थि न स निवर्तको मार्गे हृदि न हुमते॥ "We do not recognise either the doctrine that supposes the slayer to slay, or the slain to be killed; this (spiritual existence) neither kills nor is killed.' The same is inculcated at great length, and with great beauty, in the Bhagavat Gita: नेन विद्वेदित ज्ञानाय नेन दहित पार्श्वः। ने नेन ज्ञानायेते न ज्ञानविदेह माहसः॥ 'Weapons wound it not; fire doth not Thus spoken to by the youth, the priests of the Daitya sovereign were incensed, and instantly had recourse to magic incantations, by which a female form, enwreathed with fiery flame, was engendered: she was of fearful aspect, and the earth was parched beneath her tread, as she approached Prahláda, and smote him with a fiery trident on the breast. In vain! for the weapon fell, broken into a hundred pieces, upon the ground. Against the breast in which the imperishable Hari resides the thunderbolt would be shivered, much more should such a weapon be split in pieces. The magic being, then directed against the virtuous prince by the wicked priests, turned upon them, and, having quickly destroyed them, disappeared. But Prahláda, beholding them perish, hastily appealed to Krishná, the eternal, for succour, and said, "Oh Janárdana! who art every where, the creator and substance of the world, preserve these Brahmans from this magical and insupportable fire. As thou art Vishnú, present in all creatures, and the protector of the world, so let these priests be restored to life. If, whilst devoted to the omnipresent Vishnú, I think no sinful resentment against my foes, let these priests be restored to life. If those who have come to slay me, those by whom poison was given me, the fire that would have burned, the elephants that would have crushed, and snakes that would have stung me, have been regarded by me as friends; if I have been unshaken in soul, and am without fault in thy sight; then, I implore thee, let these, the priests of the Asuras, be now restored to life." Thus having prayed, the Brahmans immediately rose up, uninjured and rejoicing; and bowing respectfully to Prahláda, they blessed him, and said, "Excellent prince, may thy days be many; irresistible be thy prowess; and power and wealth and posterity be thine." Having thus spoken, they withdrew, and went and told the king of the Daityas all that had passed.

consume it; water cannot drown it; nor doth it wither before the winds: or, as rendered by Schlegel, "Non illum penetrant tela; non illum combustit flamma; neque illum perfundunt aquae; nec ventus exiccat." P. 17. new edition. But in the passage of our text, all that the Hindus understand of Fate, is referred to. Death or immunity, prosperity or adversity, are in this life the inevitable consequences of conduct in a prior existence: no man can suffer a penalty which his vices in a preceding state of being have not incurred, nor can he avoid it if they have.
CHAP. XIX.

Dialogue between Prahlāda and his father: he is cast from the top of the palace unhurt: baffles the incantations of Śamvara: he is thrown fettered into the sea: he praises Viṣṇu.

When Hiraṇyakaśipu heard that the powerful incantations of his priests had been defeated, he sent for his son, and demanded of him the secret of his extraordinary might. "Prahlāda," he said, "thou art possessed of marvellous powers; whence are they derived? are they the result of magic rites? or have they accompanied thee from birth?" Prahlāda, thus interrogated, bowed down to his father's feet, and replied, "Whatever power I possess, father, is neither the result of magic rites, nor is it inseparable from my nature; it is no more than that which is possessed by all in whose hearts Achyuta abides. He who meditates not of wrong to others, but considers them as himself, is free from the effects of sin, inasmuch as the cause does not exist; but he who inflicts pain upon others, in act, thought, or speech, sows the seed of future birth, and the fruit that awaits him after birth is pain. I wish no evil to any, and do and speak no offence; for I behold Keśava in all beings, as in my own soul. Whence should corporeal or mental suffering or pain, inflicted by elements or the gods, affect me, whose heart is thoroughly purified by him? Love, then, for all creatures will be assiduously cherished by all those who are wise in the knowledge that Hari is all things."

When he had thus spoken, the Daitya monarch, his face darkened with fury, commanded his attendants to cast his son from the summit of the palace where he was sitting, and which was many Yojanas in height, down upon the tops of the mountains, where his body should be dashed to pieces against the rocks. Accordingly the Daityas hurled the boy down, and he fell cherishing Hari in his heart, and Earth, the nurse of all creatures, received him gently on her lap, thus entirely devoted to Keśava, the protector of the world.

Beholding him uninjured by the fall, and sound in every bone, Hiraṇyakaśipu addressed himself to Śamvara, the mightiest of enchanters, and said to him, "This perverse boy is not to be destroyed by us: do you, who are potent in the arts of delusion, contrive some device for his destruction." Samvara replied, "I will destroy him: you shall behold, king of the Daityas, the power of delusion, the thousand and the myriad artifices that it can employ." Then the ignorant Asura Samvara practised subtle wiles for the extermination of the firm-minded Prahlāda: but he, with a tranquil heart, and void of malice towards Samvara, directed his thoughts uninterruptedly to the destroyer of Madhu; by whom the excellent discus, the flaming Sudarsana, was dispatched to defend the youth; and the thousand devices of the evil-destined Samvara were every one foiled by this defender of the prince. The king of the Daityas then commanded the withering wind to breathe its blighting blast upon his son: and, thus commanded, the wind immediately penetrated into his frame, cold, cutting, drying, and insufferable. Knowing that the wind had entered into his body, the Daitya boy applied his whole heart to the mighty upholder of the earth; and Janárdana, seated in his heart, waxed wroth, and drank up the fearful wind, which had thus hastened to its own annihilation.

When the devices of Samvara were all frustrated, and the blighting wind had perished, the prudent prince repaired to the residence of his preceptor. His teacher instructed him daily in the science of polity, as essential to the administration of government, and invented by Uśanas for the benefit of kings; and when he thought that the modest prince was well grounded in the principles of the science, he told the king that Prahlāda was thoroughly conversant with the rules of government as laid down by the descendant of Bhrigu. Hiraśyakāśipu therefore summoned the prince to his presence, and desired him to repeat what he had learned; how a king should conduct himself towards friends or foes; what measures he should adopt at the three periods (of advance, retrogression, or stagnation); how he should treat his councillors, his ministers, the officers of his government and of his household, his emissaries, his subjects, those of doubtful allegiance, and his foes; with whom he should contract alliance; with whom engage in war; what sort of fortress he should construct; how forest and mountain tribes should be reduced;
how internal grievances should be rooted out: all this, and what else he had studied, the youth was commanded by his father to explain. To this, Prähláda having bowed affectionately and reverentially to the feet of the king, touched his forehead, and thus replied:

"It is true that I have been instructed in all these matters by my venerable preceptor, and I have learnt them, but I cannot in all approve them. It is said that conciliation, gifts, punishment, and sowing disension are the means of securing friends (or overcoming foes); but I, father—be not angry—know neither friends nor foes; and where no object is to be accomplished, the means of effecting it are superfluous. It were idle to talk of friend or foe in Govinda, who is the supreme soul, lord of the world, consisting of the world, and who is identical with all beings. The divine Vishńú is in thee, father, in me, and in all every where else; and hence how can I speak of friend or foe, as distinct from myself? It is therefore waste of time to cultivate such tedious and unprofitable sciences, which are but false knowledge, and all our energies should be dedicated to the acquirement of true wisdom. The notion that ignorance is knowledge arises, father, from ignorance. Does not the child, king of the Asuras, imagine the fire-fly to be a spark of fire. That is active duty, which is not for our bondage; that is knowledge, which is for our liberation: all other duty is good only unto weariness; all other knowledge is only the cleverness of an artist. Knowing this, I look upon all such acquirement as profitless. That which is really profitable hear me, oh mighty monarch, thus prostrate before thee, proclaim. He who cares not for dominion, he who cares not for wealth, shall assuredly obtain both in a life to come. All men, illustrious prince, are toiling to be great; but the destinies of men, and not their own exertions, are the cause of greatness. Kingdoms are the gifts of fate, and are bestowed upon the stupid, the ignorant, the cowardly, and those to whom the science of government is unknown. Let him therefore who covets the goods of fortune be assiduous in the practice of virtue: let him who hopes for final liberation learn to look upon all things as equal and the same. Gods, men, animals, birds, reptiles, all are but forms of one eternal Vishnú, existing as it were detached from himself. By him who knows this, all the existing world, fixed or movable, is to be regarded as identical with himself, as proceeding alike from Vishnú, assuming a universal form. When this is known, the glorious god of all, who is without beginning or end, is pleased; and when he is pleased, there is an end of affliction."

1 These are the four Upáyas, 'means of success,' specified in the Amera-kosha: अन्तरे दसः वास्तविकिषुपावसूतरयः.

On hearing this, Hiranyakaśipu started up from his throne in a fury, and spurned his son on the breast with his foot. Burning with rage, he wrung his hands, and exclaimed, "Ho Viprachitti! ho Ráhu! ho Bali! bind him with strong bands, and cast him into the ocean, or all the regions, the Dáiyas and Dánavaś, will become converts to the doctrines of this silly wretch. Repeatedly prohibited by us, he still persists in the praise of our enemies. Death is the just retribution of the disobedient." The Dáiyas accordingly bound the prince with strong bands, as their lord had commanded, and threw him into the sea. As he floated on the waters, the ocean was convulsed throughout its whole extent, and rose in mighty undulations, threatening to submerge the earth. This when Hiranyakaśipu observed, he commanded the Dáiyas to hurl rocks into the sea, and pile them closely on one another, burying beneath their incumbent mass him whom fire would not burn, nor weapons pierce, nor serpents bite; whom the pestilential gale could not blast, nor poison nor magic spirits nor incantations destroy; who fell from the loftiest heights unhurt; who foiled the elephants of the spheres: a son of depraved heart, whose life was a perpetual curse. "Here," he cried, "since he cannot die, here let him live for thousands of years at the bottom of the ocean, overwhelmed by mountains. Accordingly the Dáiyas and Dánavaś hurled upon Prahláda, whilst in the great ocean, ponderous rocks, 9 Celebrated Dáiyas. Viprachitti is one of the chief Dánavas, or sons of Danu, and appointed king over them by Brahmá. Ráhu was the son of Sinhiké, more known as the dragon's head, or ascending node, being a chief agent in eclipses. Bali was sovereign of the three worlds in the time of the dwarf incarnation, and afterwards monarch of Pátaśa.

9 With Naga péásas, 'snake-nooses;' tortuous and twining round the limbs like serpents.
and piled them over him for many thousand miles: but he, still with mind undisturbed, thus offered daily praise to Vishnú, lying at the bottom of the sea, under the mountain heap. "Glory to thee, god of the lotus eye: glory to thee, most excellent of spiritual things: glory to thee, soul of all worlds: glory to thee, wielder of the sharp discus: glory to the best of Brahmans; to the friend of Brahmans and of kine; to Krishná, the preserver of the world: to Govinda be glory. To him who, as Brahmá, creates the universe; who in its existence is its preserver; be praise. To thee, who at the end of the Kalpa takest the form of Rudra; to thee, who art triform; be adoration. Thou, Achyuta, art the gods, Yakshás, demons, saints, serpents, choristers and dancers of heaven, goblins, evil spirits, men, animals, birds, insects, reptiles, plants, and stones, earth, water, fire, sky, wind, sound, touch, taste, colour, flavour, mind, intellect, soul, time, and the qualities of nature: thou art all these, and the chief object of them all. Thou art knowledge and ignorance, truth and falsehood, poison and ambrosia. Thou art the performance and discontinuance of acts4: thou art the acts which the Vedas enjoín: thou art the enjoyer of the fruit of all acts, and the means by which they are accomplished. Thou, Vishnú, who art the soul of all, art the fruit of all acts of piety. Thy universal diffusion, indicating might and goodness, is in me, in others, in all creatures, in all worlds. Holy ascetics meditate on thee: pious priests sacrifice to thee. Thou alone, identical with the gods and the fathers of mankind, receivest burnt-offerings and oblations5. The universe is thy intellectual form6; whence proceeded thy subtle form, this world: thence art thou all subtle elements and elementary beings, and the subtle principle, that is called soul, within them. Hence the supreme soul of all objects, distinguished as subtle or gross, which is imperceptible, and which cannot be conceived, is even a form of thee. Glory be to thee, Purushottama; and

4 Acts of devotion—sacrifices, oblations, observance of rules of purification, almsgiving, and the like—opposed to ascetic and contemplative worship, which dispenses with the ritual.

5 Havya and Kavya, oblations of ghee or oiled butter; the former presented to the gods, the latter to the Pitris.

6 Mahat, the first product of nature, intellect.
glory to that imperishable form which, soul of all, is another manifestation of thy might, the asylum of all qualities, existing in all creatures. I salute her, the supreme goddess, who is beyond the senses; whom the mind, the tongue, cannot define; who is to be distinguished alone by the wisdom of the truly wise. Om! salutation to Vásudeva: to him who is the eternal lord; he from whom nothing is distinct; he who is distinct from all. Glory be to the great spirit again and again: to him who is without name or shape; who sole is to be known by adoration; whom, in the forms manifested in his descents upon earth, the dwellers in heaven adore; for they behold not his inscrutable nature. I glorify the supreme deity Vishnú, the universal witness, who seated internally, beholds the good and ill of all. Glory to that Vishnu from whom this world is not distinct. May he, ever to be meditated upon as the beginning of the universe, have compassion upon me: may he, the supporter of all, in whom every thing is warped and woven, undecaying, imperishable, have compassion upon me. Glory, again and again, to that being to whom all returns, from whom all proceeds; who is all, and in whom all things are: to him whom I also am; for he is every where; and through whom all things are from me. I am all things: all things are in me, who am everlasting. I am undecayable, ever enduring, the receptacle of the spirit of the supreme. Brahma is my name; the supreme soul, that is before all things, that is after the end of all.

7 The preceding passage was addressed to the Purusha, or spiritual nature, of the supreme being: this is addressed to his material essence, his other energy, चपत्ति that is, to Pradhána.

6 Or rather, 'woven as the warp and woof;' चपत्ति प्रोत् विश्व—अर्थ mean 'woven by the long threads,' and प्रोत् 'by the cross threads.'
CHAP. XX.

Vishňu appears to Prahláda. Hiranyakaśipu relents, and is reconciled to his son: he is put to death by Vishňu as the Nrisinha. Prahláda becomes king of the Daityas; his posterity: fruit of hearing his story.

Thus meditating upon Vishňu, as identical with his own spirit, Prahláda became as one with him, and finally regarded himself as the divinity: he forgot entirely his own individuality, and was conscious of nothing else than his being the inexhaustible, eternal, supreme soul; and in consequence of the efficacy of this conviction of identity, the imperishable Vishňu, whose essence is wisdom, became present in his heart, which was wholly purified from sin. As soon as, through the force of his contemplation, Prahláda had become one with Vishňu, the bonds with which he was bound burst instantly asunder; the ocean was violently uplifted; and the monsters of the deep were alarmed; earth with all her forests and mountains trembled; and the prince, putting aside the rocks which the demons had piled upon him, came forth from out the main. When he beheld the outer world again, and contemplated earth and heaven, he remembered who he was, and recognised himself to be Prahláda; and again he hymned Purushottama, who is without beginning or end; his mind being steadily and undeviatingly addressed to the object of his prayers, and his speech, thoughts, and acts being firmly under control. "Omx glory to the end of all: to thee, lord, who art subtile and substantial; mutable and immutable; perceptible and imperceptible; divisible and indivisible; indefinable and definable; the subject of attributes, and void of attributes; abiding in qualities, though they abide not in thee; morphous and amorphous; minute and vast; visible and invisible; hideousness and beauty; ignorance and wisdom; cause and effect; existence and non-existence; comprehending all that is good and evil; essence of perishable and imperishable elements; asylum of undeveloped rudiments. Oh thou who art both one and many, Vásudeva, first cause of all; glory be unto thee. Oh thou who art large and small, manifest and hidden; who art all beings, and art not all beings; and from whom, although distinct from universal cause, the universe proceeds: to thee, Purushottama, be all glory."

Whilst with mind intent on Vishnu, he thus pronounced his praises, the divinity, clad in yellow robes, suddenly appeared before him. Startled at the sight, with hesitating speech Prahlada pronounced repeated salutations to Vishnu, and said, "Oh thou who removest all worldly grief, Kesava, be propitious unto me; again sanctify me, Achyuta, by thy sight." The deity replied, "I am pleased with the faithful attachment thou hast shewn to me: demand from me, Prahlada, whatever thou desirest." Prahlada replied, "In all the thousand births through which I may be doomed to pass, may my faith in thee, Achyuta, never know decay; may passion, as fixed as that which the worldly-minded feel for sensual pleasures, ever animate my heart, always devoted unto thee." Bhagavan answered, "Thou hast already devotion unto me, and ever shalt have it: now choose some boon, whatever is in thy wish." Prahlada then said, "I have been hated, for that I assiduously proclaimed thy praise: do thou, oh lord, pardon in my father this sin that he hath committed. Weapons have been hurled against me; I have been thrown into the flames; I have been bitten by venomous snakes; and poison has been mixed with my food; I have been bound and cast into the sea; and heavy rocks have been heaped upon me: but all this, and whatever ill beside has been wrought against me; whatever wickedness has been done to me, because I put my faith in thee; all, through thy mercy, has been suffered by me unharmed: and do thou therefore free my father from this iniquity." To this application Vishnu replied, "All this shall be unto thee, through my favour: but I give thee another boon: demand it, son of the Asura." Prahlada answered and said, "All my desires, oh lord, have been fulfilled by the boon that thou hast granted, that my faith in thee shall never know decay. Wealth, virtue, love, are as nothing; for even liberation is in his reach whose faith is firm in thee, root of the universal world." Vishnu said, "Since thy heart is filled immovably with trust in me, thou shalt, through my blessing, attain freedom from existence." Thus saying, Vishnu vanished from his sight; and Prahlada repaired to his father, and bowed down before him. His father kissed him on the forehead, and embraced him, and shed tears, and said, “Dost thou live, my son?” And the great Asura repented of his former cruelty, and treated him with kindness; and Prahláda, fulfilling his duties like any other youth, continued diligent in the service of his preceptor and his father. After his father had been put to death by Vishúú in the form of the man-lion, Prahláda became the sovereign of the Daityas; and possessing the splendours of royalty consequent upon his piety, exercised extensive sway, and was blessed with a numerous progeny. At the expiration of an authority which was the reward of his meritorious acts, he was freed from the consequences of moral merit or demerit, and obtained, through meditation on the deity, final exemption from existence.

Such, Maitreya, was the Daitya Prahláda, the wise and faithful worshipper of Vishúú, of whom you wished to hear; and such was his miraculous power. Whoever listens to the history of Prahláda is immediately cleansed from his sins: the iniquities that he commits, by night or by day, shall be expiated by once hearing, or once reading, the history of Prahláda. The perusal of this history on the day of full moon, of new moon, or on the eighth or twelfth day of the lunation,

1 Literally, 'having smelt his forehead.' I have elsewhere had occasion to observe this practice: Hindu Theatre, II. 45.
2 Here is another instance of that brief reference to popular and prior legends, which is frequent in this Puráña. The man-lion Avatára is referred to in several of the Puráñas, but I have met with the story in detail only in the Bhágavata. It is there said that Hiráńyakásipu asks his son, why, if Vishúú is everywhere, he is not visible in a pillar in the hall, where they are assembled. He then rises, and strikes the column with his fist; on which Vishúú, in a form which is neither wholly a lion nor a man, issues from it, and a conflict ensues, which ends in Hiráńyaka-sipu's being torn to pieces. Even this account, therefore, is not in all particulars the same as the popular version of the story.
3 The days of full and new moon are sacred with all sects of Hindus: the eighth and twelfth days of the lunar half month were considered holy by the Vaishnávas, as appears from the text. The eighth maintains its character in a great degree from the eighth of Bhádra being the birthday of Krishńa; but the eleventh, in more recent Vaishnáva works, as the Brahma Vaivarta P., has taken the place of the twelfth, and is even more sacred than the eighth.
shall yield fruit equal to the donation of a cow. As Vishnu protected Prahlada in all the calamities to which he was exposed, so shall the deity protect him who listens constantly to the tale.

4 Or any solemn gift; that of a cow is held particularly sacred; but it implies accompaniments of a more costly character, ornaments and gold.

5 The legend of Prahlada is inserted in detail in the Bhagavata and Naradiya Puranas, and in the Uttara Khaidesa of the Padma: it is adverted to more briefly in the Vayu, Linga, Kurma, &c., in the Moksha Dharma of the Mahabharata, and in the Hari Vansa.
CHAP. XXI.

Families of the Daityas. Descendants of Kaśyapa by Dańu. Children of Kaśyapa by his other wives. Birth of the Márutas, the sons of Diti.

The sons of Sanhráda, the son of Hiranyakaśipu, were Áyushmán, Śívi, and Váśhkala. Prahláda had a son named Virochana; whose son was Bali, who had a hundred sons, of whom Báñá was the eldest.

Hiranyáksha also had many sons, all of whom were Daityas of great prowess; Jharjhara, Śakuni, Bhútasantápana, Mahánábha, the mighty-armed and the valiant Táraka. These were the sons of Diti.

The children of Kaśyapa by Dańu were Dwimúrddhá, Śankara, Ayomukha, Śankusíras, Kapila, Samvara, Ekachakra, and another mighty Táraka, Swarbhánu, Visharparvan, Puloman, and the powerful Vipracechiti; these were the renowned Dánavas, or sons of Dańu.

Swarbhánu had a daughter named Prabhá; and Śarmishthá was the daughter of Vishparvan, as were Upádánávi and Hayaśírá.

1 The Padma P. makes these the sons of Prahláda. The Bhágavata says there were five sons, but does not give the names. It also inserts the sons of Hláda, making them the celebrated demons Ilwala and Vátápi. The Váyu refers to Hláda, other Daityas, famous in Pauránic legend, making his son, Nisunda; and his sons, Sunda and Upasunda; the former the father of Mraqcha and Táraka; the latter, of Múka.

2 The Padma P. and Váyu name several of these, but they are not of any note: the latter gives the names of two daughters, who are more celebrated, Pútaná and Śakuni.

3 The descendants of Hiranyáksha are said, in the Padma P., to have extended to seventy-seven crores, or seven hundred and seventy millions. Some copies, for Táraka, read Kálanábha.

4 The Padma and Váyu P. furnish a much longer list of names, but those of most note are the same as in the text, with which also the Bhágavata for the most part agrees.

5 The Bhágavata makes Prabhá the wife of Namuchi; according to the Váyu, she is the mother of Nahushha.

6 Married to Yayáti, as will be related.

7 The text might be understood to imply that the latter two were the daughters of Vaiswánara; and the Bhágavata has, “The four lovely daughters of Vaiswánara were Upádánávi, Hayaśíras, Pulómá, and Káliká.” The Padma substitutes Vajrá and Sundarí for the two former names. The Váyu specifies only Pulómá and Káliká as the daughters of Vaiswánara, as does our text. Upádánávi, according to the Bhágavata, is the wife of Hiranyáksha; and Hayaśíras, of Kruṭu.
Vaiswánara had two daughters, Pulomá and Kálíká, who were both married to Kaśyapa, and bore him sixty thousand distinguished Dánavas, called Paulomas and Kálakanjás, who were powerful, ferocious, and cruel.

The sons of Viprachitti by Sinhidrá (the sister of Hirañyakaśipu) were Vyaná, Śalya the strong, Nabha the powerful, Vátápi, Namuchi, Ilvala, Khasrimá, Anjaka, Naraka, and Kálánábha, the valiant Svarbhánu, and the mighty Vakrtrayodhi. These were the most emminent Dánavas, through whom the race of Danu was multiplied by hundreds and thousands through succeeding generations.

In the family of the Daitya Prahláda, the Niváta Kavachas were born, whose spirits were purified by rigid austerity.

Támrá (the wife of Kaśyapa) had six illustrious daughters, named Śúkí, Śyení, Bhasí, Sugriví, Suchí, and Gridhríká. Śúkí gave birth to parrots, owls, and crows; Śyení to hawks; Bhasí to kites; Gridhríká

*Though not specified by the text as one of the Dánavas, he is included in the catalogue of the Váyu, and the commentator on the Bhágavata calls him a son of Danu."

9 The word is also read Kúlakas and Kálakeyas: the Mahábháráta, I. 543, has Kálakanjás.

10 The text omits the two most celebrated of the Sainhikeyas, or sons of Sinhiká, Ráhu (see p. 78. note) and Ketu, who are specified both in the Bhágavata and the Váyu; the former as the eldest son. Of the other sons it is said by the Váyu that they were all killed by Parasuráma.

11 Two names of note, found in the Váyu, are omitted by the Vishánu; that of Puloman, the father of Sáchí, the wife of Indra, and mother of Jayanta; and Maya, the father of Vajrákámá and Mahodarí.

12 The Bhágavata says the Paulomas were killed by Arjuna, who therefore, the commentator observes, were the same as the Niváta Kavachas: but the Mahábháráta describes the destruction of the Niváta Kavachas and of the Paulomas and Kálakeyas as the successive exploits of Arjuna. Vana P. 8. I. 633. The story is narrated in detail only in the Mahábháráta, which is consequently prior to all the Puráñas in which the allusion occurs. According to that work, the Niváta Kavachas were Dánavas, to the number of thirty millions, residing in the depths of the sea; and the Paulomas and Kálakanjás were the children of two Daitya dames, Pulomá and Kálíká, inhabiting Hiranyapura, the golden city, floating in the air.

13 All the copies read चूकी चायनासुधरु, which should be, 'Śúkí bore parrots; and Uláki, the several sorts of owls,' but Uláki is nowhere named as one of the daughters of Támrá; and the reading may be, चउकी चायनासुधरु.
to vultures; Śuchi to water-fowl; Sugriva to horses, camels, and asses. Such were the progeny of Tāmrā.

Vinatā bore to Kaśyapa two celebrated sons, Garuḍa and Aruṇa: the former, also called Suparśu, was the king of the feathered tribes, and the remorseless enemy of the serpent race 14.

The children of Surasā were a thousand mighty many-headed serpents, traversing the sky 15.

The progeny of Kadru were a thousand powerful many-headed serpents, of immeasurable might, subject to Garuḍa; the chief amongst whom were Śesha, Vāsuki, Takshaka, Śankha, Śweta, Mahāpaṇḍa, Kambala, Aswatara, Elāpatra, Nāga, Karkkota, Dhananjaya, and many other fierce and venomous serpents 16.

The family of Krodhavasa were all sharp-toothed monsters 17, whether on the earth, amongst the birds, or in the waters, that were devourers of flesh.

and birds opposed to owls, i. e. crows. The authorities generally concur with our text; but the Vāyu has a somewhat different account; or, Śukī, married to Garuḍa, the mother of parrots; Syenī, married to Aruṇa, mother of Sampati and Jatāyu: Bhāṣī, the mother of jays, owls, crows, peacocks, pigeons, and fowls: Kraunchi, the parent of curlews, herons, cranes: and Dhritarāshtri, the mother of geese, ducks, teal, and other water-fowl. The three last are also called the wives of Garuḍa.

14 Most of the Purāṇas agree in this account; but the Bhāgavata makes Vinatā the wife of Tārksha, and in this place substitutes Saramā, the mother of wild animals. The Vāyu adds the metres of the Vedas as the daughters of Vinatā; and the Padma gives her one daughter Saudāmīni.

15 The dragons of modern fable. Anāyush or Danāyush is substituted for Surasā in the Vāyu, and in one of the accounts of the Padma. The Bhāgavata says Rākhasas were her offspring. The Matsya has both Surasā and Anāyush, making the former the parent of all quadrupeds, except cows; the latter, the mother of diseases.

16 The Vāyu names forty: the most noted amongst whom, in addition to those of the text, are Airāvata, Dhritarāshtra, Mahānila, Balāhaka, Anjana, Pushpadanśtra, Durvukha, Kāliya, Pūniḍarika, Kapila, Nābusha, and Maṇi.

17 By Danshawīna (संशवीन) some understand serpents, some Rākhasas; but by the context carnivorous animals, birds, and fishes seem intended. The Vāyu makes Krodhavasa the mother of twelve daughters, Mrigī and others, from whom all wild animals, deer, elephants, monkeys, tigers, lions, dogs, also fishes, reptiles, and Bhūtas and Piśāchas, or goblins, sprang.
Surabhi was the mother of cows and buffaloes\textsuperscript{19}: Irá, of trees and creeping plants and shrubs, and every kind of grass: Khasá, of the Rákshas and Yakshas\textsuperscript{20}: Muni, of the Apsaras\textsuperscript{21}: and Arishá, of the illustrious Gandharbas.

These were the children of Kaśyapa, whether movable or stationary, whose descendants multiplied infinitely through successive generations\textsuperscript{22}. This creation, oh Brahma, took place in the second or Swárochisha Manwantara. In the present or Vaivaswata Manwantara, Brahmá being engaged at the great sacrifice instituted by Varuṇa, the creation of progeny, as it is called, occurred; for he begot, as his sons, the seven Rishis, who were formerly mind-engendered; and was himself the grandsire of the Gandharbas, serpents, Dánavas, and gods\textsuperscript{23}.

\textsuperscript{18} One copy only inserted a half stanza here: “Krodhá was the mother of the Piśáchas;” which is an interpolation apparently from the Matsya or Hari Vanas. The Padma P., second legend, makes Krodhá the mother of the Bhútas; and Piśáchá, of the Piśáchas.

\textsuperscript{19} The Bhágavata says, of animals with cloven hoofs. The Váyu has, of the seven Rudras, of the bull of Siva, and of two daughters, Rohíni and Gandharbí; from the former of whom descended horned cattle; and from the latter, horses.

\textsuperscript{20} According to the Váyu, Khasá had two sons, Yaksha and Rákshas, severally the progenitors of those beings.

\textsuperscript{21} The Padma, second series, makes Vách the mother of both Apsaras and Gandharbas: the Váyu has long lists of the names of both classes, as well as of Vidyádharas and Kinnaras. The Apsaras are distinguished as of two kinds, Laukika, ‘worldly,’ of whom thirty-four are specified; and Daivika, or ‘divine,’ ten in number: the latter furnish the individuals most frequently engaged in the interruption of the penances of holy sages, such as Menaká, Sahajanyá, Ghrítáchi, Pramlochá, Visváchi, and Púrvachiti. Utvaá is of a different order to both, being the daughter of Náráyaña. Rambhá, Tilotamá, Mírakeá, are included amongst the Laukika nymphs. There are also fourteen Gañas, or troops, of Apsaras, bearing peculiar designations, as Áhútas, Sobhayantás, Vegavatís, &c.

\textsuperscript{22} The Kúrma, Matsya, Bráhma, Linga, Agni, Padma, and Váyu Puránás agree generally with our text in the description of Kaśyapa’s wives and progeny. The Váyu enters most into details, and contains very long catalogues of the names of the different characters descended from the sage. The Padma and Matsya and the Hari Vanas repeat the story, but admit several variations, some of which have been adverted to in the preceding notes.

\textsuperscript{23} We have a considerable variation here in the commentary, and it may be doubted if the allusion in the text is accurately explained by either of the versions. In one it is said that ‘Brahma, the grandsire of Diti, having lost her children, propitiated Kaśyapa; and the best of ascetics, being pleased with her, promised her a boon; on which she prayed for a son of irresistible prowess and valour, who should destroy Indra. The excellent Muni granted his wife the great gift she had solicited, but with one condition: “You shall bear a son,” he said, “who shall slay Indra, if with thoughts wholly pious, and person entirely pure, you carefully carry the babe in your womb for a hundred years.” Having thus said, Kaśyapa departed; and the dame conceived, and during gestation assiduously observed the rules of mental and personal purity.
When the king of the immortals learnt that Diti bore a son destined for his destruction, he came to her, and attended upon her with the utmost humility, watching for an opportunity to disappoint her intention. At last, in the last year of the century, the opportunity occurred. Diti the Gandharbas, &c., appointed the seven Rishis, who were born in a former Man-wantara, to be his sons, or to be the intermediate agents in creation: he created no other beings himself, being engrossed by the sacrificial ceremony. Instead of “putratwa,” ‘in the state of sons,’ the reading is sometimes “pitratwa,” ‘in the character of fathers’; that is, to all the beings. Thus the gods and the rest, who in a former Manwantara originated from Kaśyapa, were created in the present period as the offspring of the seven Rishis. The other explanation agrees with the preceding in ascribing the birth of all creatures to the intermediate agency of the seven Rishis, but calls them the actual sons of Brahmá, begotten at the sacrifice of Varuṇa, in the sacrificial fire: देवसः च महाशास्त्रेण वसो वारुणान
प्रत्ररोहणां देवतानां पञ्चमेवः पुर्वके कलिस्ता दीर्घः।
The authority for the story is not given, beyond its being in other Puráṇas, पुराणाश्च शब्दस्य, it has the air of a modern mystification. The latter member of the passage is separated altogether from the foregoing, and carried on to what follows: thus; “In the war of the Gandharbas, serpents, gods, and demons, Diti having lost her children,” &c.; the word ‘virodha’ being understood, it is said, वि- रेष ह्रति ब्रुते। This is defended by the authority of the Hari Vansa, where the passage occurs word for word, except in the last half stanza, which, instead of मन्थं भो विद्यावात् राज्यवानाः च कर्म, occurs कहौ पिरिेषे रेषवात् राज्यवानाः च भर्तिः। The parallel passages are thus rendered by M. Langlois:
‘Le Mouni Swarotchicha avait cessé de régner quand cette création eut lieu: c’était sous l’empire du Menou Vevasvata le sacrifice de Varoune avait commencé. La première création fut celle de Brahmá, quand il jugea qu’il était temps de procéder à son sacrifice, et que, souverain aïeul du monde, il forma lui-même dans sa pensée et enfant les sept Brahmarchis.'
retired one night to rest without performing the prescribed ablution of her feet, and fell asleep; on which the thunderer divided with his thunderbolt the embryo in her womb into seven portions. The child, thus mutilated, cried bitterly; and Indra repeatedly attempted to console and silence it, but in vain: on which the god, being incensed, again divided each of the seven portions into seven, and thus formed the swift-moving deities called Márutas (winds). They derived this appellation from the words with which Indra had addressed them (Má rodih, 'Weep not'); and they became forty-nine subordinate divinities, the associates of the wielder of the thunderbolt.

24 This legend occurs in all those Puráñas in which the account of Kaúyapa's family is related.
CHAP. XXII.

Dominion over different provinces of creation assigned to different beings. Universality of Vishúu. Four varieties of spiritual contemplation. Two conditions of spirit. The perceptible attributes of Vishúu types of his imperceptible properties. Vishúu every thing. Merit of hearing the first book of the Vishúu Puráña.

When Prithu was installed in the government of the earth, the great father of the spheres established sovereignties in other parts of the creation. Soma was appointed monarch of the stars and planets, of Brahmans and of plants, of sacrifices and of penance. Vaisravana was made king over kings; and Varúña, over the waters. Vishúu was the chief of the Ádityas; Pávaka, of the Vasus; Daksha, of the patriarchs; Vásava, of the winds. To Prahláda was assigned dominion over the Daityas and Dánavas; and Yama, the king of justice, was appointed the monarch of the Manes (Pitris). Airávata was made the king of elephants; Gurúda, of birds; Indra, of the gods. Uchchaisrávas was the chief of horses; Vrishabha, of kine. Śesha became the snake-king; the lion, the monarch of the beasts; and the sovereign of the trees was the holy fig-tree. Having thus fixed the limits of each authority, the great progenitor Bráhma stationed rulers for the protection of the different quarters of the world: he made Sudhánwan, the son of the patriarch Viraja, the regent of the east; Śankhapáda, the son of the patriarch Kaúdama, of the south; the immortal Ketumát, the son of Rajas, regent of the west; and Hiraúyaraman, the son of the patriarch Parjanya, regent of the north. By these the whole earth, with its seven continents and its

1 These are similarly enumerated in the Váyu, Bráhma, Padma, Bhágavata, &c., with some additions; as, Agni, king of the Pitris; Váyu, of the Gandharbas; Súlapáni (Śiva), of the Bhútás; Kuvera, of riches, and of the Yakshas; Vásuki, of the Nágas; Takshaka, of serpents; Chitrarátha, of the Gandharbas; Kámádeva, of the Apsarasas; Víprachitti, of the Dánasas; Ráhu, of meteors; Parjanya, of clouds; Samvatsara, of times and seasons; Samudra, of rivers; Himavat, of mountains, &c.

2 We have already had occasion to notice the descent of these Lokálas, as specified in the Váyu P.; and it is evident, although the Vishúu does not supply a connected series of generations, yet that both accounts are derived from a common source.
cities, is to the present day vigilantly protected, according to their several limits.

All these monarchs, and whatever others may be invested with authority by the mighty Vishńu, as instruments for the preservation of the world; all the kings who have been, and all who shall be; are all, most worthy Brahman, but portions of the universal Vishńu. The rulers of the gods, the rulers of the Daityas, the rulers of the Dánavaas, and the rulers of all malignant spirits; the chief amongst beasts, amongst birds, amongst men, amongst serpents; the best of trees, of mountains, of planets; either those that now are, or that shall hereafter be, the most exalted of their kind; are but portions of the universal Vishńu. The power of protecting created things, the preservation of the world, resides with no other than Hari, the lord of all. He is the creator, who creates the world; he, the eternal, preserves it in its existence; and he, the destroyer, destroys it; invested severally with the attributes of foulness, goodness, and gloom. By a fourfold manifestation does Janárdana operate in creation, preservation, and destruction. In one portion, as Brahmó, the invisible assumes a visible form; in another portion he, as Marichi and the rest, is the progenitor of all creatures; his third portion is time; his fourth is all beings: and thus he becomes quadruple in creation, invested with the quality of passion. In the preservation of the world he is, in one portion, Vishńu; in another portion he is Manu and the other patriarchs; he is time in a third; and all beings in a fourth portion: and thus, endowed with the property of goodness, Purushottama preserves the world. When he assumes the property of darkness, at the end of all things, the unborn deity becomes in one portion Rudra; in another, the destroying fire; in a third, time; and in a fourth, all beings: and thus, in a quadruple form, he is the destroyer of the world. This, Brahman, is the fourfold condition of the deity at all seasons.

Brahmó, Daksha, time, and all creatures are the four energies of Hari, which are the causes of creation. Vishńu, Manu and the rest, time, and all creatures are the four energies of Vishńu, which are the causes of duration. Rudra, the destroying fire, time, and all creatures are the four energies of Janárdana that are exerted for universal dissolution. In the beginning and the duration of the world, until the period of its end, creation is the work of Brahmá, the patriarchs, and living animals. Brahmá creates in the beginning; then the patriarchs beget progeny; and then animals incessantly multiply their kinds: but Brahmá is not the active agent in creation, independent of time; neither are the patriarchs, nor living animals. So, in the periods of creation and of dissolution, the four portions of the god of gods are equally essential. Whatever, oh Brahman, is engendered by any living being, the body of Hari is cooperative in the birth of that being; so whatever destroys any existing thing, movable or stationary, at any time, is the destroying form of Janárdana as Rudra. Thus Janárdana is the creator, the preserver, and the destroyer of the whole world—being threefold—in the several seasons of creation, preservation, and destruction, according to his assumption of the three qualities: but his highest glory is detached from all qualities; for the fourfold essence of the supreme spirit is composed of true wisdom, pervades all things, is only to be appreciated by itself, and admits of no similitude.

Maitreya.—But, Muni, describe to me fully the four varieties of the condition of Brahma, and what is the supreme condition.

Parásara.—That, Maitreya, which is the cause of a thing is called the means of effecting it; and that which it is the desire of the soul to accomplish is the thing to be effected. The operations of the Yogi who is desirous of liberation, as suppression of breath and the like, are his means: the end is the supreme Brahma, whence he returns to the world no more. Essentially connected with, and dependant upon, the means employed for emancipation by the Yogi, is discriminative knowledge; and this is the first variety of the condition of Brahma. The second

3 Vibhúti, superhuman or divine power or dignity.
4 The question, according to the commentator, implies a doubt how the supreme being, who is without qualities, can be subject to specific variety, or to existence in divided and different conditions.
5 Of Brahmabhúta (Brahmabhúta); of him who, or that which, becomes identified with the supreme spirit, which is the same respectively with absolute wisdom, Jñána (Jñána), and discriminative wisdom, Vijnána (Vijnána); leading to felicity, or the condition of Brahma, expressed by the words, sort is the knowledge that is to be acquired by the Yogi whose end is escape from suffering, or eternal felicity. The third kind is the ascertaining of the identity of the end and the means, the rejection of the notion of duality. The last kind is the removal of whatever differences may have been conceived by the three first varieties of knowledge, and the consequent contemplation of the true essence of soul. The supreme condition of Vishnú, who is one with wisdom, is the knowledge of truth; which requires no exercise; which is not to be taught; which is internally diffused; which is unequalled; the object of which is self-illumination; which is simply existent, and is not to be defined; which is tranquil, fearless, pure; which is not the theme of reasoning; which stands in need of no support. Those Yogis who, by the annihilation of ignorance, are resolved into this fourfold Brahma, lose the seminal property, and can no longer germinate in the ploughed field of worldly existence. This is the supreme condition, that is called Vishnú, perfect, perpetual, universal, undecaying, entire, and uniform: and the Yogi who attains this supreme spirit (Brahma) returns not to life again; for there he is freed from the distinction of virtue and vice, from suffering, and from soil.
SUPREME CONDITION OF BRAHMA.

There are two states of this Brahma; one with, and one without shape; one perishable, and one imperishable; which are inherent in all beings. The imperishable is the supreme being; the perishable is all the world. The blaze of fire burning on one spot diffuses light and heat around; so the world is nothing more than the manifested energy of the supreme Brahma: and inasmuch, Maitreya, as the light and heat are stronger or feebler as we are near to the fire, or far off from it, so the energy of the supreme is more or less intense in the beings that are less or more remote from him. Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva are the most powerful energies of god; next to them are the inferior deities, then the attendant spirits, then men, then animals, birds, insects, vegetables; each becoming more and more feeble as they are farther from their primitive source. In this way, illustrious Brahman, this whole world, although in essence imperishable and eternal, appears and disappears, as if it was subject to birth and death.

The supreme condition of Brahma, which is meditated by the Yogis in the commencement of their abstraction, as invested with form, is Vishnu, composed of all the divine energies, and the essence of Brahma, with whom the mystic union that is sought, and which is accompanied by suitable elements, is effected by the devotee whose whole mind is addressed to that object. This Hari, who is the most immediate of all the energies of Brahma, is his embodied shape, composed entirely of his essence; and in him therefore is the whole world interwoven; and from him, and in him, is the universe; and he, the supreme lord of all, comprising all that is perishable and imperishable, bears upon him all material and spiritual existence, identified in nature with his ornaments and weapons.

7 The great Yoga is produced (महायोगम् सापस्ये). This great Yoga, or union, is to have its relation or dependance (भाल्लवन्), which is Vishnu (वैष्णवं); and its seed (स्वरूपम्), or mystical ejaculations; and to be accompanied with Mantras and silent repetitions, or Japa (मन्त्रवाद्विवलितं).
Maitreya.—Tell me in what manner Vishnu bears the whole world, abiding in his nature, characterised by ornaments and weapons.

Parasara.—Having offered salutation to the mighty and indescribable Vishnu, I repeat to you what was formerly related to me by Vaishistha. The glorious Hari wears the pure soul of the world, undefiled, and void of qualities, as the Kaustubha gem. The chief principle of things (Pradhana) is seated on the eternal, as the Srivatsa mark. Intellect abides in Madhava, in the form of his mace. The lord (Iswara) supports egotism (Ahankara) in its twofold division, into elements and organs of sense, in the emblems of his conch-shell and his bow. In his hand Vishnu holds, in the form of his discus, the mind, whose thoughts (like the weapon) fly swifter than the winds. The necklace of the deity Vaijayanti, composed of five precious gems, is the aggregate of the five elemental rudiments. Janardana bears, in his numerous shafts, the faculties both of action and of perception. The bright sword of Achyuta is holy wisdom, concealed at some seasons in the scabbard of ignorance. In this manner soul, nature, intellect, egotism, the elements, the senses, mind, ignorance, and wisdom, are all assembled in the person of Hrishikea. Hari, in a delusive form, embodies the shapeless elements of the world, as his weapons and his ornaments, for the salvation of mankind.

Punderikaksha, the lord of all, assumes nature, with all its products, soul and all the world. All that is wisdom, all that is ignorance, all that is, all that is not, all that is everlasting, is centred in the destroyer of Madhu, the lord of all creatures. The supreme, eternal Hari is time, with its divisions of seconds, minutes, days, months, seasons, and years: he is the seven worlds, the earth, the sky, heaven, the world of patri-

8 Or of pearl, ruby, emerald, sapphire, and diamond.

9 We have in the text a representation of one mode of Dhyana, or contemplation, in which the conception of a thing is attempted to be rendered more definite by thinking upon its types; or in which, at least, the thoughts are more readily concentrated by being addressed to a sensible emblem, instead of an abstract truth. Thus the Yogi here says to himself, "I meditate upon the jewel on Vishnu's brow, as the soul of the world; upon the gem on his breast, as the first principle of things;" and so on: and thus through a perceptible substance proceeds to an imperceptible idea.
archs, of sages, of saints, of truth: whose form is all worlds; first-born before all the first-born; the supporter of all beings, himself self-sustained: who exists in manifold forms, as gods, men, and animals; and is thence the sovereign lord of all, eternal: whose shape is all visible things; who is without shape or form: who is celebrated in the Vedánta as the Rich, Yajush, Sáma, and Atharva Vedas, inspired history, and sacred science. The Vedas, and their divisions; the institutes of Manu and other lawgivers; traditional scriptures, and religious manuals 10; poems, and all that is said or sung; are the body of the mighty Vishńu, assuming the form of sound. All kinds of substances, with or without shape, here or elsewhere, are the body of Vishńu. I am Hari. All that I behold is Janárdana; cause and effect are from none other than him. The man who knows these truths shall never again experience the afflictions of worldly existence.

Thus, Brahman, has the first portion of this Puráña been duly revealed to you: listening to which, expiates all offences. The man who hears this Puráña obtains the fruit of bathing in the Pushkara lake 11 for twelve years, in the month of Kártik. The gods bestow upon him who hears this work the dignity of a divine sage, of a patriarch, or of a spirit of heaven.

10 Akhyánáni (आख्यानानी) is said to denote the Puráñas, and Anuváda (अनुवाद:) containing directions for supplementary rites. 11 The celebrated lake Pokher in Ajmer.
VISHNU PURANA.

BOOK II.

CHAP. I.

Descendants of Priyavrata, the eldest son of Swāyambhuva Manu: his ten sons: three adopt a religious life; the others become kings of the seven Dwīpas, or isles, of the earth. Agnídhra, king of Jambu-dwīpa, divides it into nine portions, which he distributes amongst his sons. Nābhi, king of the south, succeeded by Rishabha; and he by Bharata: India named after him Bhārata: his descendants reign during the Swāyambhuva Manvantara.

MAITREYA.—You have related to me, venerable preceptor, most fully, all that I was curious to hear respecting the creation of the world; but there is a part of the subject which I am desirous again to have described. You stated that Priyavrata and Uttānapāda were the sons of Swāyambhuva Manu, and you repeated the story of Dhruva, the son of Uttānapāda: you made no mention of the descendants of Priyavrata, and it is an account of his family that I beg you will kindly communicate to me.

PARŚARA.—Priyavrata married Kāmyā, the daughter of the patriarch Kardama¹, and had by her two daughters, Samrāt and Kukshi, and ten sons, wise, valiant, modest, and dutiful, named Agnīdhra, Agnibāhu, Vapushmat, Dyutimati, Medha, Medhatithi, Bhavya, Savala, Putra, and the tenth was Jyotishmat, illustrious by nature as by name. These were the sons of Priyavrata, famous for strength and prowess. Of these, three, or Medha, Putra, and Agnibāhu, adopted a religious life: remembering the occurrences of a prior existence, they did not covet dominion, but diligently practised the rites of devotion in due season, wholly disinterested, and looking for no reward.

¹ The text reads Kanyā (कन्यायांबन्धनं कन्या); and the commentator says, 'he married the daughter of Kardama, whose name was Kanyā' (कन्यायनामादपिनर). The copies agree in the reading, and the Vāyu has the same name, Kanyā; but the Māraśulaya, which is the same in other respects as our text, has Kanyā: Kanyā also is the name elsewhere given by the Vāyu to the daughter of Kardama (p. 83, n. 6). Kanyā, as has been noticed, appears in the Brāhma and Hari V. (p. 53, n. 6) as the mother of Priyavrata, but erroneously; and the same authorities specify a Kanyā as the wife of that sovereign. So the commentator on the Hari V. states, 'another Kanyā is mentioned (in the text), the daughter of Kardama, the wife of Priyavrata.'

Priyavrata having divided the earth into seven continents, gave them respectively to his other seven sons. To Agnīdhra he gave Jambudwīpa; to Medhatithi he gave Plaksha-dwīpa: he installed Vapushmat in the sovereignty over the Dwīpa of Sālmali; and made Jyotishmat king of Kuśa-dwīpa: he appointed Dyutimati to rule over Kraunchadwīpa; Bhavya to reign over Sāka-dwīpa; and Savala he nominated the monarch of the Dwīpa of Pushkara.

Agnīdhra, the king of Jambudwīpa, had nine sons, equal in splendour to the patriarchs: they were named Nābhi, Kimpurusha, Harivarsha, Iḷavriti, Rāmya, Hirānvat, Kuru, Bhadrāśva, and Ketumāla, who was a prince ever active in the practice of piety.

Hear next, Maitreyā, in what manner Agnīdhra apportioned Jambudwīpa amongst his nine sons. He gave to Nābhi the country called Hima, south of the Himavat, or snowy mountains. The country of Hemakūta he gave to Kimpurusha; and to Harivarsha, the country of...
Nishadha. The region in the centre of which mount Meru is situated he conferred on Ilavrita; and to Ramya, the countries lying between it and the Nila mountain. To Hirañvat his father gave the country lying to the north of it, called Sweta; and, on the north of the Sweta mountains, the country bounded by the Śringavān range he gave to Kuru. The countries on the east of Meru he assigned to Bhadrāśwa; and Gandhamádana, which lay west of it, he gave to Ketumála. Having installed his sons sovereigns in these several regions, the pious king Agnīdhra retired to a life of penance at the holy place of pilgrimage, Śālagrāma.

The eight Varshas, or countries, Kimpurusha and the rest, are places of perfect enjoyment, where happiness is spontaneous and uninterrupted. In them there is no vicissitude, nor the dread of decrepitude or death: there is no distinction of virtue or vice, nor difference of degree as better or worse, nor any of the effects produced in this region by the revolutions of ages.

Nábhi, who had for his portion the country of Himáhwa, had by his queen Meru the magnanimous Rishabha; and he had a hundred sons, the eldest of whom was Bharata. Rishabha having ruled with equity and wisdom, and celebrated many sacrificial rites, resigned the sovereignty of the earth to the heroic Bharata, and, retiring to the hermitage of Pulastya, adopted the life of an anchoret, practising religious penance, and performing all prescribed ceremonies, until, emaciated by his austerities, so as to be but a collection of skin and fibres, he put a pebble in his mouth, and naked went the way of all flesh. The country was 5 Of these divisions, as well as of those of the earth, and of the minor divisions of the Varshas, we have further particulars in the following chapter.

---

6 This place of pilgrimage has not been found elsewhere. The term is usually applied to a stone, an ammonite, which is supposed to be a type of Vishnú, and of which the worship is enjoined in the Utţara Khānḍa of the Padma P. and in the Brahma Vaivartta, authorities of no great weight or antiquity. As these stones are found chiefly in the Gandak river, the Śālagrāma Tirtha was probably at the source of that stream, or at its confluence with the Ganges. Its sanctity, and that of the stone, are probably of comparatively modern origin.

7 'The great road,' or 'road of heroes' (महासागर or रीरस्थान). The pebble was intended either to compel perpetual silence, or to prevent his eating. The Bhágavata termed Bhárata from the time that it was relinquished to Bharata by his father, on his retiring to the woods.
164  REIGN OF BHARATA: HIS DECEIDANTS:

Bharata, having religiously discharged the duties of his station, consigned the kingdom to his son Sumati, a most virtuous prince; and, engaging in devout practices, abandoned his life at the holy place, Śálgráma: he was afterwards born again as a Brahman, in a distinguished family of ascetics. I shall hereafter relate to you his history.

From the illustrious Sumati was born Indraiyumna: his son was Parameshthin: his son was Pratihára, who had a celebrated son, named adverts to the same circumstance; चालै सुधारितम्। That work enters much more into detail on the subject of Rishabha’s devotion, and particularizes circumstances not found in any other Purána. The most interesting of these are the scene of Rishabha’s wanderings, which is said to be Konka, Venkáta, Kúłaka, and southern Karnáta, or the western part of the Peninsula; and the adoption of the Jain belief by the people of those countries. Thus it is said, “A king of the Konkas, Venkátas, and Kúlakas, named Arhat, having heard the tradition of Rishabha’s practices (or his wandering about naked, and desisting from religious rites), being infatuated by necessity, under the evil influence of the Kali age, will become needlessly alarmed, and abandon his own religious duty, and will foolishly enter upon an unrighteous and heretical path. Misled by him, and bewildered by the iniquitous operation of the Kali age, disturbed also by the delusions of the deity, wicked men will, in great numbers, desert the institutes and purifications of their own ritual; will observe vows injurious and disrespectful to the gods; will desist from ablutions, mouth-washings, and purifications, and will pluck out the hair of the head; and will revile the world, the deity, sacrifices, Brahmanas, and the Vedas.” It is also said, that Sumati, the son of Bharata, will be irreligiously worshipped by some infidels, as a divinity. Besides the import of the term Arhat, or Jain, Rishabha is the name of the first, and Sumati of the fifth Tirthakara, or Jain saint of the present era. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the Bhágavata intends this sect; and as the Jain system was not matured until a comparatively modern date, this composition is determined to be also recent. The allusions to the extension of the Jain faith in the western parts of the Peninsula, may serve to fix the limit of its probable antiquity to the 11th or 12th century, when the Jains seem to have been flourishing in Guzerat and the Konkan. As. Res. XVII. 282.

* This etymology is given in other Puránas; but the Matsya and Váyu have a different one, deriving it from the Manu, called Bharata, or the cherisher, one who rears or cherishes progeny: भरातू मत्स्य स वै मुनिः सुधारित इत्युभये। निर्देशनेत्याच्योऽरेव के ज्योत्स्नानुमाणे। The Váyu has, in another place, the more common explanation also: रिहाि दशसंकेता तथा (अरस्कर) नाशा सिद्धानुपाध्यः। Pratihartta: his son was Bhava, who begot Udghita, who begot Prastara; whose son was Prithu. The son of Prithu was Nakta: his son was Gaya: his son was Nara; whose son was Virat. The valiant son of Virat was Dhimat, who begot Mahanta; whose son was Manasyu; whose son was Twashtri: his son was Viraja: his son was Raja: his son was Satajit, who had a hundred sons, of whom Viswagjyotish was the eldest. Under these princes, Bharata-varsha (India) was divided into nine portions (to be hereafter particularized); and their descendants successively held possession of the country for seventy-one periods of the aggregate of the four ages (or for the reign of a Manu).

This was the creation of Swayambhuva Manu, by which the earth was peopled, when he presided over the first Manwantara, in the Kalpa of Varaha.

9 The Agni, Kurma, Markandeya, Linga, and Vayu Puranas agree with the Vishnu in these genealogical details. The Bhagavata has some additions and variations of nomenclature, but is not essentially different. It ends, however, with Satajit, and cites a stanza which would seem to make Viraja the last of the descendants of Priyavrata: रूपमेव पंचमलां निषादकामांवाण: | चक्रधरं द्रमएव राजस्विनुपरात्मिभवा।

10 The descendants of Priyavrata were the kings of the earth in the first or Swayambhuva Manwantara. Those of Uttanapada, his brother, are placed rather incongruously in the second or Svrotchaya Manwantara; whilst, with still more palpable inconsistency, Daksha, a descendant of Uttanapada, gives his daughter to Kasyapa in the seventh or Vaivaswata Manwantara. It seems probable that the patriarchal genealogies are older than the chronological system of Manwantaras and Kalpas, and have been rather clumsily distributed amongst the different periods.
CHAP. II.

MAITREYA.—You have related to me, Brahman, the creation of Swáyambhuva; I am now desirous to hear from you a description of the earth: how many are its oceans and islands, its kingdoms and its mountains, its forests and rivers and the cities of the gods, its dimensions, its contents, its nature, and its form.

Páráśara.—You shall hear, Maitreya, a brief account of the earth from me: a full detail I could not give you in a century.

The seven great insular continents are Jambu, Plaksha, Sálmali, Kuśa, Krauncha, Śáka, and Pushkara: and they are surrounded severally by seven great seas; the sea of salt water (Lavaña), of sugar-cane juice (Ikshu), of wine (Surá), of clarified butter (Śarpi), of curds (Dadhí), of milk (Dugdha), and of fresh water (Jala).

Jambu-dwipa is in the centre of all these: and in the centre of this continent is the golden mountain Meru. The height of Meru is eighty-four thousand Yojanas; and its depth below the surface of the earth is sixteen thousand. Its diameter at the summit is thirty-two thousand Yojanas; and at its base, sixteen thousand: so that this mountain is like the seed-cup of the lotus of the earth.

1 The geography of the Puránas occurs in most of these works; and in all the main features, the seven Dwipas, seven seas, the divisions of Jambu-dwipa, the situation and extent of Meru, and the subdivisions of Bhárata, is the same. The Agni and Bráhma are word for word the same with our text; and the Kúrma, Línga, Matsya, Márkañche, and Váyu present many passages common to them and the Vishñu, or to one another. The Váyu, as usual, enters most fully into particulars. The Bhágavata differs in its nomenclature of the subordinate details from all, and is followed by the Padma. The others either omit the subject, or advert to it but briefly. The Mahábhárata, Bhishma Parva, has an account essentially the same, and many of the stanzas are common to it and different Puránas. It does not follow the same order, and has some peculiarities; one of which is calling Jambu-dwipa, Sudárśana, such being the name of the Jambu-tree: it is said also to consist of two portions, called Pippala and Sása, which are reflected in the lunar orb, as in a mirror.
MOUNT MERU AND ADJACENT MOUNTAINS.

The boundary mountains (of the earth) are Himaván, Hemakúta, and Nishadha, which lie south of Meru; and Nila, Sweta, and Sringi, which are situated to the north of it. The two central ranges (those next to Meru, or Nishadha and Nila) extend for a hundred thousand (Yojanas, running east and west). Each of the others diminishes ten thousand Yojanas, as it lies more remote from the centre. They are two thousand Yojanas in height, and as many in breadth. The Varshas or countries between these ranges are Bhadrata (India), south of the Himaván moun-

2 The shape of Meru, according to this description, is that of an inverted cone; and by the comparison to the seed-cup its form should be circular: but there seems to be some uncertainty upon this subject amongst the Pauráṇicas. The Padma compares its form to the bell-shaped flower of the Dhatura. The Váyu represents it as having four sides of different colours; or, white on the east, yellow on the south, black on the west, and red on the north; but notices also various opinions of the outline of the mountain, which, according to Atri, had a hundred angles; to Bhrigu, a thousand; Sávarni calls it octagonal; Bháguri, quadrangular; and Varaháyana says it has a thousand angles: Gáláva makes it saucer-shaped; Garga, twisted, like braided hair; and others maintain that it is circular. The Linga makes its eastern face of the colour of the ruby; its southern, that of the lotus; its western, golden; and its northern, coral. The Matsya has the same colours as the Váyu, and both contain this line: चतुर्दशीयां यात्रा चुदायः सम्प्रंश। 3 Four-coloured, golden, four-cornered lofty: but the Váyu compares its summit, in one place, to a saucer; and observes that its circumference must be thrice its diameter: विवाकालं यात्रा चुदायः सम्प्राण। The Matsya also, rather incompatibly, says the measurement is that of a circular form, but it is considered quadrangular: चतुर्दशीयां यात्रा चुदायः सम्प्राण। According to the Buddhists of Ceylon, Meru is said to be of the same diameter throughout. Those of Nepal conceive it to be shaped like a drum. A translation of the description of Meru and its surrounding mountains, contained in the Brahmáinda, which is the same exactly as that in the Váyu, occurs in the As. Researches, VIII. 343. There are some differences in Col. Wilford’s version from that which my MSS. would authorize, but they are not in general of much importance. Some, no doubt, depend upon variations in the readings of the different copies: of others, I must question the accuracy.

3 This diminution is the necessary consequence of the diminished radius of the circle of Jambu-dwipa, as the mountain ranges recede from the centre.
tains; next Kimpurusha, between Himaván and Hemakúta; north of the latter, and south of Nishadha, is Hariversha; north of Meru is Ramyaka, extending from the Nila or blue mountains to the Śweta (or white) mountains; Hiraḿaya lies between the Śweta and Śringí ranges; and Uttarakuru is beyond the latter, following the same direction as Bhárata.

Each of these is nine thousand Yojanas in extent. Ilávrita is of similar dimensions, but in the centre of it is the golden mountain Meru, and the country extends nine thousand Yojanas in each direction from the four sides of the mountain. There are four mountains in this Varsha, formed as buttresses to Meru, each ten thousand Yojanas in elevation: that on the east is called Mandara; that on the south, Gandhamádana; that on the west, Vipula; and that on the north, Supárswa: on each of these stands severally a Kadamba-tree, a Jambu-tree, a Pipal, and a Vata; each spreading over eleven hundred Yojanas, and towering aloft like banners on the mountains. From the Jambu-tree the insular continent Jambu-dwipa derives its appellations. The apples of that tree are as large as elephants: when they are rotten, they fall upon the crest of the mountain, and from their expressed juice is formed the Jambu river, the waters of which are drunk by the inhabitants; and in consequence of drinking of that stream, they pass their days in content and health, being subject neither to perspiration, to foul odours, to decrepitude, nor organic decay. The soil on the banks of the river, absorbing the Jambu juice, and being dried by gentle breezes, becomes the gold termed Jámbunanada, of which the ornaments of the Siddhas are fabricated.

4 These, being the two outer Varshas, are said to take the form of a bow; that is, they are exteriorly convex, being segments of the circle.

5 The whole diameter of Jambu-dwipa has been said to be 100,000 Yojanas. This is thus divided from north to south: Ilávrita, in the centre, extends each way 9000, making 18000: Meru itself, at the base, is 16000: the six Varshas, at 9000 each, are equal to 54000; and the six ranges, at 2000 each, are 12000: and $18 + 16 + 54 + 12 = 100$. From east to west the Varshas are of the extent necessary to occupy the space of the circle.

6 The Bhágavata and Padma call these Mandara, Merumandara, Supárswa, and Kumuda.

7 Nauclea Kadamba, Eugenia Jambu, Ficus religiosa, and F. Indica. The Bhágavata substitutes a mango-tree for the Pipal; placing it on Mandara, the Jambu on Merumandara, the Kadamba on Supárswa, and the Vata on Kumuda.
THE CITIES OF THE GODS ON MERU.

The country of Bhadráswa lies on the east of Meru, and Ketumála on the west; and between these two is the region of Ilávrita. On the east of the same is the forest Chaitraratha; the Gandhamádana wood is on the south; the forest of Vaibhrája is on the west; and the grove of Indra, or Nandana, is on the north. There are also four great lakes, the waters of which are partaken of by the gods, called Aruñoda, Mahábhadra, Śitoda, and Mánasa.

The principal mountain ridges which project from the base of Meru, like filaments from the root of the lotus, are, on the east, Śítánta, Mukunda, Kúrari, Málíyaván, and Vaikanka; on the south, Trikúta, Śíśira, Patanga, Ruchaka, and Nishadha; on the west, Śikhivásas, Vaidúrya, Kapila, Gandhamádana, and Járudhi; and on the north, Śankhakúta, Rishabha, Nága, Hansa, and Kálájára. These and others extend from between the intervals in the body, or from the heart, of Meru.

On the summit of Meru is the vast city of Brahmá, extending fourteen thousand leagues, and renowned in heaven; and around it, in the cardinal points and the intermediate quarters, are situated the stately cities of Indra and the other regents of the spheres. The capital of Brahmá

---

8 The Bhágavata substitutes Sarvatobhadra for the Gandhamádana forest; and calls the lakes, lakes of milk, honey, treacle, and sweet water.

9 The Váyu gives these names, and many more; and describes at great length forests, lakes, and cities of gods and demi-gods upon these fabulous mountains, or in the valleys between them. (As. Res. VIII. 354.)

10 The Lokapálás, or eight deities in that character, Indra, Yama, Varuña, Kuvera, Vivasvat, Soma, Agni, and Váyu. Other cities of the gods are placed upon the spurs, or filament mountains, by the Váyu; or that of Brahmá on Hemaśringa, of Śankara on Kálájára, of Garuda on Vaikanka, and of Kuvera on Kállasa. Himavat is also specified by the same work as the scene of Siva’s penance, and marriage with Umá; of his assuming the form of a Kiráta, or forester: of the birth of Káríkeya, in the Sára forest; and of his dividing the mountain Krauncha with his spear. This latter legend, having been somewhat misunderstood by Col. Wilford, is made the theme of one of his fanciful verifications. “Here, he (the author of the Váyu) says, in the forest of Śankha, was born Shañánasa or Káríkeya, Mars with six faces. Here he wished or formed the resolution of going to the mountains of Krauncha, Germany, part of Poland, &c. to rest and recreate himself after his fatigues in the wars of the gods with the giants. There, in the skirts of the moun-is enclosed by the river Ganges, which, issuing from the foot of Vishnú, and washing the lunar orb, falls here from the skies, and, after encircling the city, divides into four mighty rivers, flowing in opposite directions. These rivers are the Sítá, the Alakanándá, the Chakshu, and the Bhadrá. The first, falling upon the tops of the inferior mountains, on the east side of Meru, flows over their crests, and passes through the country of Bhadráswa to the ocean: the Alakanándá flows south, to the country of Bhárata, and, dividing into seven rivers on the way, falls into the sea: the Chakshu falls into the sea, after traversing all the western mountains, and passing through the country of Ketumálá: and the tains of Crauncha, he flung his sword; the very same which Attila, in the fifth century, asserted he had found under a clod of earth. It was placed in his tomb, where it is probably to be found." As. Res. VIII. 364. The text of which this is in part a representation is, तत् ज्ञातव्यं नाम वर नात: प्रहलद:। सवै च प्रशस्ताः नाम्रः प्रभुः। किन्तु पुष्पिनिगलम्बे श्रीयोग्यं न गिरिरामेऽ।। एकार्थोऽस्मी नामावल्यां तथौ न किंवत् तान्त्रिकृतानां॥ The legend here alluded to is told at length in the Vámana Puráṇa. Mahishásura, flying from the battle, in which Táraka had been slain by Kártikeya, took refuge in a cave in the Krauncha mountain. A dispute arising between Kártikeya and Indra, as to their respective prowess, they determined to decide the question by circumambulating the mountain; the palm to be given to him who should first go round it. Disagreeing about the result, they appealed to the mountain, who untruly decided in favour of Indra. Kártikeya, to punish his injustice, hurled his lance at the mountain Krauncha, and pierced at once it and the demon Mahisha. | रत्न तुष्णे संधि सं (वाक्यिकृत) प्रथमानसुधर्तरसाप विवेद ग्रह। कीर्तिसे नामावल्यां सर्व संसा। Another division of Krauncha is ascribed to Parasuráma. Megha Dúta, v. 59. Krauncha is also sometimes considered to be the name of an Asura, killed by Kártikeya; but this is perhaps some misapprehension of the Pauránic legend by the grammarians, springing out of the synonyms of Kártikeya, Kraunchári, Kraunchadáraṇa, &c., implying the foe or destroyer of Krauncha, occurring in the Amara, and other Koshas.

11 The Bhágavata is more circumstantial. The river flowed over the great toe of Vishnú's left foot, which had previously, as he lifted it up, made a fissure in the shell of the mundane egg, and thus gave entrance to the heavenly stream. The Váyu merely brings it from the lunar orb, and takes no notice of Vishnú's interposition. In a different passage it describes the detention of Gáná amidst the tresses of Síva, in order to correct her arrogance, until the divinity was moved by the penance and prayers of king Bhagiratha to set her free. The Mahábhárata represents Síva's bearing the river for a hundred years on his head, merely to prevent its falling too suddenly on the mountains.
Bhadrá washes the country of the Uttara kurus, and empties itself into the northern ocean.

Meru, then, is confined between the mountains Nīla and Nishadha (on the north and south), and between Mālyavān and Gandhamádana (on the west and east): it lies between them like the pericarp of a lotus. The countries of Bhárata, Ketumála, Bhadráswa, and Uttarakuru lie, like leaves of the lotus of the world, exterior to the boundary mountains. Jathara and Devakúta are two mountain ranges, running north and south, and connecting the two chains of Nishadha and Nīla. Gan-

12 Although the Váyu has this account, it subsequently inserts another, which is that also of the Matsya and Padma. In this the Ganges, after escaping from Śiva, is said to have formed seven streams; the Naliní, Hládini, and Pavaní going to the east; the Chakshu, Sítá, and Sindhu to the west; and the Bhágirathí to the south. The Mahábhárata calls them Vaswauka-sára, Naliní, Pavaní, Gangá, Sítá, Sindhu, and Jambunádi. The more usual legend, however, is the first, and it offers some trace of actual geography. Mr. Faber, indeed, thinks that Meru, with the surrounding Varsha of Ilávrita, and its four rivers, is a representation of the garden of Eden. (Pagan Idolatry, I. 315.) However this may be, it seems not unlikely to have originated in some imperfect account of four great rivers flowing from the Himalaya, and the high lands north of that range, towards the cardinal points: the Bhadrá, to the north, representing the Oby of Siberia; and the Sítá, the river of China, or Hoangho. The Alakanandá is well known as a main branch of the Ganges, near its source; and the Chakshus is very possibly, as Major Wilford supposed, the Oxus. (As. Res. VIII. 309.) The printed copy of the Bhágavata, and the MS. Padma, read Bankshu; but the former is the more usual reading. It is said, in the Váyu, of Ketumála, through which this river runs, that it is peopled by various races of barbarians: केतुमालेम वारीये साता नेपाली है देवाना।

13 The text applies the latter name so variously as to cause confusion: it is given to one of the four buttresses of Meru, that on the south; to one of the filament mountains, on the west; to a range of boundary mountains, on the south; and to the Varsha of Ketumála: here another mountain range is intended, or a chain running north and south, upon the east of Ilávrita, connecting the Níla and Nishadha ranges. Accordingly the Váyu states it to be 34000 Yojanas in extent; that is, the diameter of Meru 16000, and the breadth of Ilávrita on each side of it, or together 18000. A similar range, that of Mālyavān, bounds Ilávrita on the west. It was probably to avoid the confusion arising from similarity of nomenclature, that the author of the Bhágavata substituted different names for Gandhamádana in the other instances, calling the buttress, as we have seen, Merumandara; the southern forest, Sarvatobhadra; and the filament mountain, Hansa; restricting the term Gandhamádana to the eastern range: a correction, it may be remarked, corroborative of a subsequent date.
dhamádana and Kailásas extend, east and west, eighty Yojanas in breadth, from sea to sea. Nishadha and Pariyátra are the limitative mountains on the west, stretching, like those on the east, between the Nila and Nishadha ranges: and the mountains Triśringa and Járudhi are the northern limits of Meru, extending, east and west, between the two seas. Thus I have repeated to you the mountains described by great sages as the boundary mountains, situated in pairs, on each of the four sides of Meru. Those also, which have been mentioned as the filament mountains (or spurs), Śitánta and the rest are exceedingly delightful. The vallies embosomed amongst them are the favourite resorts of the Siddhas and Chárañas: and there are situated upon them agreeable forests, and pleasant cities, embellished with the palaces of Vishúu, Lakshmi, Agni, Súrya, and other deities, and peopled by celestial spirits; whilst the Yakshas, Rákshasas, Dáityas, and Dánavas pursue their pastimes in the vales. These, in short, are the regions of Paradise, or Swarga, the seats of the righteous, and where the wicked do not arrive even after a hundred births.

These eight mountains are similarly enumerated in the Bhágavata and Váyu, but no mention is made in them of any seas (सत्त्वकपानवायुविभक्तिः), and it is clear that the eastern and western oceans cannot be intended, as the mountains Mályavat and Gandhamádana intervene. The commentator would seem to understand ‘Ariáva’ as signifying ‘mountain,’ as he says ‘between the seas means within Mályavat and Gandhamádana.’ गईयाम्यस्यतवानन्नमेव वर्णकधितात्मायां श्वसनान्मवस्तुयां द्वितीयं आदहात्मायां। The Bhágavata describes these eight mountains as circling Meru for 18000 Yojanas in each direction, leaving, according to the commentator, an interval of a thousand Yojanas between them and the base of the central mountain, and being 2000 high, and as many broad: they may be understood to be the exterior barriers of Meru, separating it from Ilávritta. The names of these mountains, according to the Bhágavata, are Jñáha and Devakúśa on the east, Pavana and Párpátra on the west, Triśringa and Makara on the north, and Kailásas and Karavíra on the south. Without believing it possible to verify the position of these different creations of the legendary geography of the Hindus, it can scarcely admit of doubt that the scheme was suggested by imperfect acquaintance with the actual character of the country, by the four great ranges, the Altai, Muztag or Thian-shan, Ku-en-lun, and Himálaya, which traverse central Asia in a direction from east to west, with a greater or less inclination from north to south, which are connected or divided by many lofty transverse ridges, which enclose several large lakes, and which give rise to the great rivers that water Siberia, China, Tartary, and Hindustan. (Humboldt on the mountains of Central Asia, and Ritter. Geogr. Asia.)
In the country of Bhadrása, Vishńu resides as Hayasírá (the horse-headed); in Ketumálá, as Varáha (the boar); in Bhárata, as the tortoise (Kúrmá); in Kuru, as the fish (Matsya); in his universal form, everywhere; for Hari pervades all places: he, Maitreya, is the supporter of all things; he is all things. In the eight realms of Kímpurusha and the rest (or all exclusive of Bhárata) there is no sorrow, nor weariness, nor anxiety, nor hunger, nor apprehension; their inhabitants are exempt from all infirmity and pain, and live in uninterrupted enjoyment for ten or twelve thousand years. Indra never sends rain upon them, for the earth abounds with water. In those places there is no distinction of Kírita, Treta, or any succession of ages. In each of these Varshas there are respectively seven principal ranges of mountains, from which, oh best of Brahmas, hundreds of rivers take their rise.¹⁵

¹⁵ More ample details of the Varshas are given in the Mahábhárata, Bhágavata, Padma, Váyu, Kúrmá, Linga, Matsya, and Márkańdeya Puránás; but they are of an entirely fanciful nature. Thus of the Ketumálá-varsha it is said, in the Váyu, the men are black, the women of the complexion of the lotus; the people subsist upon the fruit of the Pánasa or jack-tree, and live for ten thousand years, exempt from sorrow or sickness: seven Kula or main ranges of mountains in it are named, and a long list of countries and rivers is added, none of which can be identified with any actually existing, except perhaps the great river the Suchakhus, the Amu or Oxus. According to the Bhágavata, Vishńu is worshipped as Kámadeva in Ketumálá. The Váyu says the object of adoration there is Íśwara, the son of Brahmá. Similar circumstances are asserted of the other Varshas. See also As. Res. VIII. 354.
CHAP. III.

Description of Bhárata-varsha: extent: chief mountains: nine divisions: principal rivers and mountains of Bhárata proper: principal nations: superiority over other Varshas, especially as the seat of religious acts. (Topographical lists.)

The country that lies north of the ocean, and south of the snowy mountains, is called Bhárata, for there dwelt the descendants of Bharata. It is nine thousand leagues in extent¹, and is the land of works, in consequence of which men go to heaven, or obtain emancipation.

The seven main chains of mountains in Bhárata are Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Suktimat, Riksha, Vindhya, and Páripátra.

From this region heaven is obtained, or even, in some cases, libera-

¹ As Bhárata-varsha means India, a nearer approach to the truth, with regard to its extent, might have been expected; and the Váyu has another measurement, which is not much above twice the actual extent, or 1000 Yojanas from Kumári (Comorin) to the source of the Ganges.

² These are called the Kula parvatas, family mountains, or mountain ranges or systems. They are similarly enumerated in all the authorities, and their situation may be determined with some confidence by the rivers which flow from them. Mahendra is the chain of hills that extends from Orissa and the northern Circars to Gondwana, part of which, near Ganjam, is still called Mahindra Malei, or hills of Mahindra: Malaya is the southern portion of the western Ghats; Suktimat is doubtful, for none of its streams can be identified with any certainty; Sahya is the northern portion of the western Ghauts, the mountains of the Konkan: Riksha is the mountains of Gondwana: Vindhya is the general name of the chain that stretches across central India, but it is here restricted to the eastern division; according to the Váyu it is the part south of the Narmada, or the Sathpura range: Páripátra, as frequently written Párijátra, is the northern and western portion of the Vindhya: the name, indeed, is still given to a range of mountains in Guzerat (see Col. Tod's map of Rajasthán), but the Chambal and other rivers of Málwa, which are said to flow from the Párijátra mountains, do not rise in that province. All these mountains therefore belong to one system, and are connected together. The classification seems to have been known to Ptolemy, as he specifies seven ranges of mountains, although his names do not correspond, with exception of the Vindus mons: of the others, the Adisarthrus and Uxentus agree nearly in position with the Párijátra and Riksha: the Apocopi, Sardonix, Bettigo, and Orudii must be left for consideration. The Bhágavata, Váyu, Padma, and Márkaúeya add a list of inferior mountains to these seven.
tion from existence; or men pass from hence into the condition of brutes, or fall into hell. Heaven, emancipation, a state in mid-air, or in the subterraneous realms, succeeds to existence here, and the world of acts is not the title of any other portion of the universe.

The Varsha of Bhárata is divided into nine portions, which I will name to you; they are Indra-dwípa, Kaserumat, Támavárná, Gabhastimat, Nága-dwípa, Saumya, Gándharba, and Váruña; the last or ninth Dwípa is surrounded by the ocean, and is a thousand Yojanas from north to south.

On the east of Bháráta dwell the Kirátas (the barbarians); on the west, the Yánavas; in the centre reside Bráhmans, Kshetriyas, Vaiśyas, and Súdras, occupied in their respective duties of sacrifice, arms, trade, and service.

The Śatadru, Chandrabhágá, and other rivers, flow from the foot of 3 This last is similarly left without a name in all the works: it is the most southerly, that on the borders of the sea, and no doubt intends India proper. Wilford places here a division called Kumáriká. No description is anywhere attempted of the other divisions. To these the Váyu adds six minor Dwípas, which are situated beyond sea, and are islands, Anag-dwípa, Yama-d., Mataya-d., Kumuda or Kuśa-d., Varáha-d., and Sánkha-d.; peopleed for the most part by Mlechchhas, but who worship Hindu divinities. The Bhágavata and Padma name eight such islands, Swarná-prastha, Chandraśúkla, Avarttana, Rama-ñaka, Mandabára, Pánychajánya, Sínhalá, and Lanká. Col. Wilford has endeavoured to verify the first series of Upadwípas, making Varáha Europe; Kuśa, Asía Minor, &c.; Sánkha, Africa; Malaya, Malaca: Yama is undetermined; and by Anga, he says, they understand China. How all this may be is more than doubtful, for in the three Puráñas in which mention is made of them, very little more is said upon the subject.

4 By Kirátas, foresters and mountaineers are intended, the inhabitants to the present day of the mountains east of Hindustan. The Yánavas, on the west, may be either the Greeks of Bactria and the Punjab—to whom there can be little doubt the term was applied by the Hindus—or the Mohammedans, who succeeded them in a later period, and to whom it is now applied. The Váyu calls them both Mlechchhas, and also notices the admixture of barbarians with Hindus in India proper: नेतिकर्षा नित्यदा चार्जोलिङ्गाय निर्मला: The same passage, slightly varied, occurs in the Mahábhárata: it is said especially of the mountainous districts, and may allude therefore to the Gonds and Bhils of central India, as well as to the Mohammedans of the north-west. The specification implies that infidels and outcastes had not yet descended on the plains of Hindustan.
Himálaya: the Vedasmriti and others from the Parípátra mountains: the Narmadá and Surasá from the Vindhya hills: the Tápi, Payoshní, and Nirvindhyá from the Riksha mountains; the Godáverí, Bhimarathí, Krishnávení, and others, from the Sahya mountains: the Kritamála, Támraparní, and others, from the Malaya hills: the Trisámá, Rishiculyá, &c. from the Mahendra: and the Rishikulyá, Kumári, and others, from the Śuktimat mountains. Of such as these, and of minor rivers, there is an infinite number; and many nations inhabit the countries on their borders 5.

The principal nations of Bhárata are the Kurus and Páchálas, in the middle districts: the people of Kámarupa, in the east: the Puñdras,

---
5 This is a very meagre list, compared with those given in other Puráṇas. That of the Váyu is translated by Col. Wilford, As. Res. vol. VIII; and much curious illustration of many of the places by the same writer occurs, As. Res. vol. XIV. The lists of the Mahábhárata, Bhágavata, and Padma are given without any arrangement: those of the Váyu, Matsya, Márkaṇḍeya, and Kúrma are classed as in the text. Their lists are too long for insertion in this place. Of the rivers named in the text, most are capable of verification. The Sátadru, 'the hundred channelled'—the Zaradru of Ptolemy, Hesídrus of Pliny—is the Setlje. The Chandrabhágé, Sandábalis, or Acesines, is the Chináb. The Vedasmriti in the Váyu and Kúrma is classed with the Vetravati or Betwa, the Charmanwati or Chambal, and Sípá and Pára, rivers of Malwa, and may be the same with the Beos of the maps. The Narmadá or Narbadda, the Namadus of Ptolemy, is well known; according to the Váyu it rises, not in the Vindhya, but in the Riksha mountains, taking its origin in fact in Gondwana. The Surasá is uncertain. The Tápi is the Tápti, rising also in Gondwana: the other two are not identified. The Godáverí preserves its name: in the other two we have the Beemah and the Krishná. For Kritamála the Kúrma reads Rítumála, but neither is verified. The Támraparní is in Tinivelly, and rises at the southern extremity of the western Ghata. The Rishikulyá, that rises in the Mahendra mountain, is the Rasikulá or Rasikóla, which flows into the sea near Gánjam. The Trisámá is undetermined. The text assigns another Rishikulyá to the Suktimat mountains, but in all the other authorities the word is Rishika. The Kúmári might suggest some connexion with Cape Comorin, but that the Malaya mountains seem to extend to the extreme south. A Rishikulyá river is mentioned (Vana P. v. 3026) as a Tirtha in the Mahábhárata, in connexion apparently with the hermitage of Vasiśthá, which in another passage (v. 4096) is said to be on mount Arbuda or Abu. In that case, and if the reading of the text be admitted for the name of the river, the Suktimat range would be the mountains of Guzerat; but this is doubtful.
Kalingas, Magadhas, and southern nations, are in the south: in the extreme west are the Sauráshtras, Śúras, Bhirás, Arbudas: the Kárushhas and Málvās, dwelling along the Páripátra mountains: the Sauvirás, the Saindhas, the Húnas, the Sálwas, the people of Śákala, the Madras, the Rámás, the Ambasúthas, and the Párasikás, and others. These nations drink of the water of the rivers above enumerated, and inhabit their borders, happy and prosperous.

* The list of nations is as scanty as that of the rivers: it is, however, omitted altogether in the Bhágavata. The Padma has a long catalogue, but without arrangement; so has the Mahábhárata. The lists of the Váyu, Matayá, and Máńanáya classify the nations as central, northern, eastern, southern, and western. The names are much the same in all, and are given in the 8th vol. of the As. Res. from the Brahmanáda, or, for it is the same account, the Váyu. The Máńanáya has a second classification, and, comparing Bháratavarsha to a tortoise, with its head to the east, enumerates the countries in the head, tail, flanks, and feet of the animal. It will be sufficient here to attempt an identification of the names in the text, but some further illustration is offered at the end of the chapter. The Kuruś are the people of Kurukshetra, or the upper part of the Doab, about Delhi. The Páňchálas, it appears from the Mahábhárata, occupied the lower part of the Doab, extending across the Jumna to the Chambal. Kulluká Bháśá, in his commentary on Manu, II. 10, places them at Kanoj. Kámarupa is the north-eastern part of Bengal, and western portion of Assam. Puíüra is Bengal proper, with part of south Behar and the Jungle Mahals. Kalinga is the sea-coast west of the mouths of the Ganges, with the upper part of the Coromandel coast. Magadha is Behar. The Sauráshtras are the people of Surat, the Surastrene of Ptolemy. The Súras and Bhirás, in the same direction, may be the Suri and Phauní or Phryni of Strabo. The Arbudas must be the people about mount Abu, or the natives of Mewar. The Kárushhas and Málvás are of course the people of Malwa. The Sauvirás and Saindhas are usually conjoined as the Sindhu-Sauvirás, and must be the nations of Sindh and western Rajputána. By the Húnas we are to understand the white Huns or Indo-Scythians, who were established in the Punjab and along the Indus at the commencement of our era, as we know from Arrian, Strabo, and Ptolemy, confirmed by recent discoveries of their coins. The Sálwas or, as also read, Sályas are placed by the Váyu and Mataya amongst the central nations, and seem to have occupied part of Rájasthan, a Sálwa Rája being elsewhere described as enganging in hostilities with the people of Dwarká in Guzerat. Sákala, as I have elsewhere noticed, is a city in the Punjab (As. Res. XV. 108), the Sagalá of Ptolemy (ibid. 107); the Mahábhárata makes it the capital of the Madras, the Mardi of the ancients; but they are separately named in the text, and were situated something more to the south-east.
In the Bhárata-varsha it is that the succession of four Yugas, or ages, the Krita, the Treta, the Dwápara, and Kali, takes place; that pious ascetics engage in rigorous penance; that devout men offer sacrifices; and that gifts are distributed; all for the sake of another world. In Jambu-dwípa, Vishúu, consisting of sacrifice, is worshipped, as the male of sacrificial rites, with sacrificial ceremonies: he is adored under other forms elsewhere. Bhárata is therefore the best of the divisions of Jambu-dwípa, because it is the land of works: the others are places of enjoyment alone. It is only after many thousand births, and the aggregation of much merit, that living beings are sometimes born in Bhárata as men. The gods themselves exclaim, "Happy are those who are born, even from the condition of gods, as men in Bhárata-varsha, as that is the way to the pleasures of Paradise, or the greater blessing of final liberation. Happy are they who, consigning all the unheeded rewards of their acts to the supreme and eternal Vishúu, obtain existence in that land of works, as their path to him. We know not, when the acts that have obtained us heaven shall have been fully recompensed, where we shall renew corporeal confinement; but we know that those men are fortunate who are born with perfect faculties in Bhárata-varsha."

I have thus briefly described to you, Maitreya, the nine divisions of Jambu-dwípa, which is a hundred thousand Yojanas in extent, and which is encircled, as if by a bracelet, by the ocean of salt water, of similar dimensions.

The Rámas and Ambasháhas are not named in the other Puráñas, but the latter are amongst the western, or more properly north-western nations subjugated by Nákula, in his Dig-víjaya. Mahábh. Sahá P. Ambas and Ambasháhas are included in the list extracted by Col. Wilford from the Varáha Sanhitá, and the latter are supposed by him to be the Ambastae of Arrian. The Párasikas carry us into Persia, or that part of it adjoining to the Indus. As far as the enumeration of the text extends, it seems applicable to the political and geographical divisions of India about the era of Christianity.

7 Enjoyment in Swarga, like punishment in Naraka, is only for a certain period, according to the merit or demerit of the individual. When the account is balanced, the man is born again amongst mankind.

8 A crippled or mutilated person, or one whose organs are defective, cannot at once obtain liberation; his merits must first secure his being born again perfect and entire.
TOPOGRAPHICAL LISTS,
From the Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, II. 342.

MOUNTAINS AND RIVERS.

Sanjaya speaks to Dhritarāṣṭra.—Hear me, monarch, in reply to your inquiries, detail to you the particulars of the country of Bhārata.

1 In attempting to verify the places or people specified in the text, various difficulties are to be encountered, which must serve to apologize for but partial success. Some are inherent in the subject, such as the changes which have taken place in the topography of India since the lists were compiled, and the imperfectness of the specification itself: states and tribes and cities have disappeared, even from recollection, and some of the natural features of the country, especially the rivers, have undergone a total alteration. Buchanan (Description of Eastern Hindustan), following Rennell over the same ground at an interval of some thirty or forty years, remarks that many of the streams laid down in the Bengal Atlas (the only series of maps of India yet published, that can be regarded as of authority) are no longer to be traced. Then the lists which are given are such mere catalogues, that they afford no clue to verification beyond names; and names have been either changed or so corrupted, as to be no longer recognizable. On the other hand, much of the difficulty arises from our own want of knowledge. Scattered through the Purāṇas and other works, the names given in the topographical lists recur with circumstances which fix their locality; but these means of verification have not yet been sufficiently investigated. There are also geographical treatises in Sanscrit, which there is reason to believe afford much accurate and interesting information: they are not common. Col. Wilford speaks of having received a number from Jaypur, but upon his death they disappeared. After a considerable interval some of his MSS. were purchased for the Calcutta Sanscrit College, but by far the larger portion of his collection had been dispersed. A few leaves only on geographical subjects were found, from which I translated and published a chapter on the geography of some of the districts of Bengal: (Calcutta Quarterly Magazine, Dec. 1824;) the details were accurate and valuable, though the compilation was modern. Notwithstanding these impediments, however, we should be able to identify at least mountains and rivers to a much greater extent than is now practicable, if our maps were not so miserably defective in their nomenclature. None of our surveyors or geographers have been Oriental scholars. It may be doubted if any of them have been conversant with the spoken language of the country: they have consequently put down names at Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Šuktímat₂, Gandhamádana, Vindhya, and Páripátra are the seven mountain ranges: as subordinate portions of them are thousands of mountains; some unheard of, though lofty, extensive, and abrupt; and others better known, though of lesser elevation, and inhabited by people of low stature³: there pure and degraded tribes, mixed together, drink⁴ of the following streams: the stately Gangá, the Sindhu, and the Saraswatí⁵; the Godávari, Narmadá, and the great river random, according to their own inaccurate appreciation of sounds carelessly, vulgarly, and corruptly uttered; and their maps of India are crowded with appellations which bear no similitude whatever either to past or present denominations. We need not wonder that we cannot discover Sanscrit names in English maps, when, in the immediate vicinity of Calcutta, Barnagore represents Varáhanagar, Dakshineswar is metamorphosed into Duckinsore, and Ulubaria is Anglicised into Willoughbury. Going a little farther off, we have Dalkisore for Darikeswarí, Midnapore for Medinipur, and a most unnecessary accumulation of consonants in Caughmahry for Kákamári. There is scarcely a name in our Indian maps that does not afford proof of extreme indifference to accuracy in nomenclature, and of an incorrectness in estimating sounds, which is in some degree, perhaps, a national defect.

² The printed edition reads Šuktímat, which is also found in some MSS., but the more usual reading is that of the text. I may here add that a Sukhtímat mountain occurs in Bhúma's invasion of the eastern region. Mahábh. Sahhá P. Gandhamádana here takes the place of Riksha.

³ For additional mountains in the Váyu, see Asiatic Researches, VIII. 334. The Bhágavata, Padma, and Máraññeya add the following: Maináka, which it appears from the Rámašya is at the source of the Sone, that river being termed Maináka-prabhava. 'Kishkindhyá Káúda; Trikúta, called also in Hemachandra's vocabulary Suvela; Rishabha, Kúáka, Konwa, Devagiri (Deogor or Ellora, the mountain of the gods; the Apopoci are said by Ptolomy to be also called mountains of the gods); Rishyamuka, in the Dekhin, where the Pampá rises; Sírí-sáila or Síri-parvata, near the Krishná (As. Res. V. 303); Venkaña, the hill of Tripatí, Varidhára, Mangala-prastha, Droní, Chitrakúta (Chitrakote in Bundelkhand), Govardhana (near Mathurá), Raivata, the range which branches off from the western portion of the Vindhyá towards the north, extending nearly to the Jumna; according to Hemachandra it is the Giriśara range; it is the Arvali of Tod; Kakuhba, Nila (the blue mountains of Orissa), Gohamukha, Indrákíla, Ramagiri (Ram-tek, near Nag-pur), Valakrama, Sudháma, Tungaprastra, Nágá (the hills east of Ramghur), Bodhana, Pandara, Durjayanta, Arbuda (Abu in Guzerat), Gomanta (in the western Ghats), Kúśáila, Krítasmara, and Chakora. Many single mountains are named in different works.

⁴ See note 4, p. 175.

⁵ The Sarsuti, or Cagggar or Gaggar, N.W. of Tannahar. See below, note 6.
RIVERS.

Báhubádá; the Satadru, Chandrabhágá, and great river Yamuná; the Drishadwati, Vipáśá, and Vipápá, with coarse sands; the Vetravati, the deep Krishnávati, the Irávati, Vitastá, Payoshá, and De-

6 The Báhubádá is elsewhere said to rise in the Himálaya. Wilford considers it to be the Mahánáda, which falls into the Ganges below Malda. The Mahábhárata has amongst the Tirthas, or places of pilgrimage, two rivers of this name, one apparently near the Saraswati, one more to the east. Hemachandra gives as synonymous Arjuni and Saitaváhiní, both implying the 'white river:' a main feeder of the Mahánáda is called Dhavalí or Dauli, which has the same meaning.

7 The Drishadwati is a river of considerable importance in the history of the Hindus, although no traces of its ancient name exist. According to Manu it is one boundary of the district called Brahmávartha, in which the institution of castes, and their several duties, had for ever existed: implying that in other places they were of more recent origin. This holy land, 'made by the gods,' was of very limited extent. Its other boundary was the Saraswati. That the Drishadwati was not far off we learn from Manu, as Kuruksetra, Masya, Panchála, and Súrásena, or the upper part of the Doab, and country to the east, were not included in Brahmávartha; they constituted Brahmanshi-deśa, contiguous to it: क्रृत्यात्तेर्वर्धितानांकाल । कुलकाल महाध्वाळा, something less or inferior; विनित्तुः, it but more probably means 'not divided from,' 'immediately contiguous.' We must look for the Drishadwati, therefore, west of the Jumna. In the Tirtha Yátra of the Mahábhárata we find it forming one of the boundaries of Kuruksetra. It is there said, 'Those who dwell on the south of the Saraswati, and north of the Drishadwati, or in Kuruksetra, dwell in heaven?' द्वन्द्वेत्ता सरसात पर भूस्त्रेत्ता व परमाणुप्ये ते महाभारता विरिखिद्येत। In the same place, the confluence of the Drishadwati with a stream of Kuruksetra, called the Kausiki, is said to be of peculiar sanctity. Kuruksetra is the country about Tahesur or Stháneśwara, where a spot called Kurukhet still exists, and is visited in pilgrimage. The Kuruksetra of Manu may be intended for the country of the Kuras, in the more immediate vicinity of Delhi. According to Wilford, the Drishadwati is the Caggara; in which case our maps have taken the liberty of transposing the names of the rivers, as the Caggara now is the northern stream, and the Sursooty the southern, both rising in the Himalaya, and uniting to form one river, called Gagar or Caggara in the maps, but more correctly Sarsuti or Saraswati; which then runs south-west, and is lost in the desert. There have no doubt been considerable changes here, both in the nomenclature and in the courses of the rivers.

8 The Beyah, Hyphafris, or Bibaázis.

9 The Ráví or Hydrates or Adria.

10 The Jhelum, but still called in Kashmir the Vitastá, the Bidaspa or Hydaspes.

11 This river, according to the Vishnu P., rises from the Riksha mountains, but the Váyu and Kúrma bring it from the Vindhya or Sathpura range. There are several indications of its position in the Mahábhárata, but none very precise. Its váká 12; the Vedasmitá, Vedavatí 13, Tridivá 14, Ikshumálaví 15, Karishii, Chitrabahá, the deep Chitrásená, the Gomati, the Dhútapápá, and the great river Gandakí 16; the Kauśikí, Niśchítá 17, Krityá, Nichítá, Lohatáriní 18, Rahasyá, Śatakumbhá, and also the Śariyá 19; the Charmanvati, Chandrabhágá 20, Hastisomá, Dis, Śaravatí 21, Payoshú, Pará 22, and Bhimarathi 23, Káverí 24, Chulaká 25, Viná 26, Śatabalá, Nivará, Mahítá 27, Su-source appears to be near that of the Krishna: it flows near the beginning of the Dańdaka forest, which should place it rather near to the sources of the Godávari: it passes through Vidarba or Berar, and, Yudhishthira having bathed in it, comes to the Vaidúrya mountain and the Nar- madá river. These circumstances make it likely that the Payín Gangá is the river in question.

12 The Devá or Goggra.
13 Both these are from the Páripátra range. In some MSS. the latter is read Vedasíní and Vetasíní. In the Rámáyana occur Veá and Vedavainásiká, which may be the same, as they seem to be in the direction of the Sone. One of them may be the Beos of eastern Malwa, but it rises in the Rishka mountain.
14 From Páripátra, Kúrma; from Mahendra, Váyu.
15 One copy has Ikshumálíní; two others, Ikshulu and Krimi: one MS. of the Váyu has an Ikshulá from Mahendra: the Mataya has Ikshudá; Wilford’s list has Drákshalá.
16 Of these rivers, the two first are named in the Padma P., but not in the Váyu, &c. The Gomati in Oude, the Gandak, and the Kosi are well known. The Dhatápápa is said to rise in the Himálaya.
17 In different MSS. read Nichítá and Nisritá. In the Váyu and Mataya, Niśchirá or Niuvirá is said to flow from the Himálaya.
18 Also Lohatáraí and Lohachárií.
19 The Śarayá or Sarju is commonly identified with the Deva. Wilford says it is so by the Pauránics, but we have here proof to the contrary. They are also distinguished by the people of the country. Although identical through great part of their course, they rise as different streams, and again divide and enter the Ganges by distinct branches.
20 The recurrence of the same name in this, as in several similar subsequent instances, is possibly an error of the copyist; but it is also sometimes likely that one name is applied to different rivers. In one MS. we have, in place of this word, Chaitravati; and in another Vetravati.
21 Read also Satávari. According to Wilford, the Śaravatí is the Ban-gangá.
22 The Váyu has Párá, which is a river in Malwa, the Páravati. MSS. read Váni and Veá.
23 According to the Váyu, this rises in the Sahya m., and flows towards the south: it is therefore the Beema of Aurungabad.
24 The Káverí is well known, and has always borne the same appellation, being the Chaveris of Ptolemy.
25 Read Chuluká.
26 Read also Tápi; the Taptí river of the Dekhin.
27 Read Ahitá and Sahitá.
prayogá 29, Pavitrá 30, Kuúdala, Sindhu 30, Rajáni 31, Puramáliní, Purvábhirámá, Víra, Bhímá 32, Oghvatí, Palášini 33, Pápahará, Mahendrá, Páth-lavati 34, Karishhini, Asiká, the great river Kuśchirá 35, the Makari 36, Pravara, Mená 37, Hemá, and Dhritavati 38, Purávati 39, Anushná 40, Śaivyá, Kápi 41, Sadásná 42, Adhrishyá, the great river Kuśadhára 43, Sadákántá 44, Śivá, Viravati, Vástu, Suvástu 45, Gauri, Kampaná 46, Hirañvatí, Vará, Virankará, Panchamí, Rathachitrá, Jyotirathá, Visvámitrá 47, Kapinjalá, Upendrá, Bahulá, Kuchirá 48, Madhuváhini 49, Vinadí 50, Pinjalá, Veñá, Tungavéná 51, Vidišá 52, Krishnávená, Támrá, Kapilá, Selu, Suvámá 53, Vedásáfá, Hariśravá, Mahopamá 54, Śighrá, Pichchhalá 55, the deep Bháradvájá, the Kauśiká, the Sona 56, Bahudá, and Chandramá, Durgá, 29 Rises in the Sahya mountain, and flows southwards: Váyu, &c.

30 Read Víchitrá.
31 Several rivers are called by this name, as well as the Indus: there is one of some note, the Káli Sindh in Malwa.
32 Also Vájíná.
33 This agrees best in name with the Beeva: it is also mentioned as a tirtha in the Mahábhárata.
34 From Súktimáta: Kuirma and Váyu.
There is a Balahán from the eastern portion of the Himalaya, a feeder of the Ma-hánáda, which may be the Palásiini, if the mountain be in this direction.
35 Also Pippalalávatí. The Váyu has a Pippalá from the Riksha mountain.
36 Also Kuśavirá.
37 Also Mahiká and Maruádáchí.
38 Also Sená.
39 Read Kritaváti and Ghritaváti.
40 Also Dhusúlyá.
41 Also Atíkrihrá.
42 In place of both Suváratrá.
43 From Páripátra: Váyu and Matsya.
44 Also Kuşánára.
45 Also Saśikántá.
46 One of the tirthas in the Mahábhárata.
47 According to the Mahábhárata, this rises in the Vaidurya mountain, part of the southern Vindhya or Sathpura range.
48 Also Kuvíra.
49 Three MSS. agree in reading this Ambúváhini.
50 Also Vainadí.
51 Also Kuveña: it is possibly meant for the Tungabhádra or Toombudra.
52 A river in Malwa, so called from the city of the same name, which I have elsewhere conjectured to be Bhilsa. Megha Dúta, 31. There is a ‘Bess’ river in the maps, which joins the Betwa at Bhilsa, and is probably the river of the text.
53 The Vama or Suvámá, ‘the beautiful river,’ Wilford identifies with the Ramgangá.
54 Also Mahapagá, ‘the great river.’
55 Also Kuchchilá.
56 The Sona river, rising in Maináka or Amarákantak, and flowing east to the Ganges.
Amtramála 57, Brahmacodyá, Vrhádavatí, Yavakshá 58, Rohí, Jámbunádi, Sunasa 59, Tamasá 60, Dási, Vasá, Varañá, Así 61, Nála, Dhritamati, Purána 62, Tamasá 63, Vrishabha, Brahmamedhyá, Vrhádavatí. These and many other large streams, as the Krisná 64, whose waters are always salubrious, and the slow-flowing Mandaváhini 65, the Brahmáni 66, Mahá-gaurí, Durgá 67, Chitropalá 68, Chitrarathá, Manjulá 69, Mandákiní 70, Vairáta 71, the great river Kosá 72, the Muktimati 73, Maningá 74, Pushpavéni, Utpalavatí, Lohityá 75, Karatoyá 76, Vrishakáhwa 77, Kumári, Rishikulyá 78, Márishá, Sarasvatí, Mandákiní, Punyá 79, Sarvasangá; all these, the 67 Both from the Vindhyá: Váyu and Kúrma. There is a Goaria in Ptolemy in central India.
68 From Riksha: Váyu.
69 Also Munja and Makaraváhini.
70 From Riksha: Váyu. According to the Mahábharata, it rises in the mountain Chitrakote.
71 The Baitaraáni in Cuttack. It is named in the Mahábhárata as a river of Kalinga.
72 Also read Nipa and Koka.
73 From Riksha, but read also Suktimati, which is the reading of the Mataya. Wilford considers it to be the Swarnarekha of Cuttack.
74 Also Añágá and Surángá; perhaps the preferable reading should be Sumangá, a river flowing from Maináka, according to the Mahábhárata.
75 Part of the Brahmaputtra.
76 A considerable river in the east, flowing between Dinajpur and Rangpur.
77 Also Vrishasáhwa.
78 This and the preceding flow from Suktimati, according to the Váyu, Mataya, and Kúrma. The last occurs also Risháka.
79 Also Suparná. The Punyá is considered to be the Pun-pun of Behan, but there is also a Parná river in the same province.
universal mothers, productive of abundance, besides hundreds of inferior note, are the rivers of Bháruna, according to remembrance.

People and countries.

Next hear from me, descendant of Bharata, the names of the inhabitants of the different countries. They are the Kurus, Pánchálas, Śálwas, Mádreyas, and dwellers in thickets (Jángalas), Śúrasenas, Kálingas, Bodhas, Málas, Matsyas, Sukútyas, Sauvalyas, Kuntalas,

It is possible that further research will identify more than those attempted to be verified in the foregoing notes, as well as meet with others readily recognizable. In the authorities consulted several occur not comprehended in the text, as the Kuhu and Ikshu, from the Himálaya; Vritragní, Chandaná (Chandan of Bhagulpur), Mahí (the Mahí of western Malwa), Siprá, and Avanti (rivers near Újaiyin), from Pàripátra; Mahánanda in Oriasa, Drumá, Dasárá (Dhosaun in Bundelkhand), Chitrakútha, Sroní or Syéna, Písácháká, Banjulá, Bálúváhiní, and Matkuá, all from Riksha; Nirvindhyá, Madrá, Nishadhá, Sinibáhu, Kumudvati, and Toyá, from Vindhya; Banjula, from Sahya; Kritamála, Támraparí, Puşhpapajáti, and Utpalavatí, from Malaya; Lángulini and Vansadhárá, from Mahendra; and Mandá and Kripá or Rúpá, from Suñkimán. In the Rámiyana we have, besides some already specified, the Ruchirá, Pampá, eastern Sarasvatí, Vágavatí or Vyki of Madurá, and Varadá or Wurda of Berar; and we have many others in the Mahábhárata and different works, from which the Sanscrit appellations of most of the Indian rivers might be, with some little time and trouble, collected.

1 The people of the upper part of the Doab. The two words might also be understood as denoting the Pánchálas of the Kuru country, there being two divisions of the tribe: see below, note 20.
2 The Śúrasenas were the inhabitants of Mathura, the Śuraseni of Arrián.
3 The people of the upper part of the Coromandel coast, well known in the traditions of the eastern Archipelago as Kling. Ptolemy has a city in that part called Caliga; and Pliny, Calinga proximimari.
4 One of the tribes of central India, according to the Váyu: it is also read Báhyas.
5 The Málas and Málavartis are placed, in the Váyu and Matsya, amongst the central nations. The Márkaúdyas reads Ga-vavartis. Wilford considers Málá to be the Mal-bhúm of Medinipur. As noticed in the Megha Dúta, I have supposed it to be situated in Chattisgarh. p. 21, note.
7 Read Kuśáníyás, Kušálayas, Kuśádhuyas, Kiśádhajas, and placed in central India.
8 Also Sausályas and Sausályas.
9 Kuntal is in one place one of the central countries; in another, one of the southern: the name is applied in inscrip-Káśikosalas, Chedyas, Matsyas, Kárushas, Bhojas, Sindhipulindas, Uttamas, Daárás, Mekalas, Utkalas, Pánchálas, Kau-tions to the province in which Curgode is situated, part of the Adoni district: (As. Res. IX. 427.) and consistently with this position it is placed amongst the dependant or allied states of Vidarbha in the Daá Kumára. Calcutta Quarterly Mag. Sept. 1827.

10 A central nation: Váyu. The Rámáyaña places them in the east. The combination indicates the country between Benares and Oude.

11 Chedi is usually considered as Chandail, on the west of the Jungle Mehas, towards Nagpur. It is known, in times subsequent to the Puráñas, as Rájastambha.

12 Some copies read Vatsas, and the other Puráñas have such a name amongst the central countries; the people perhaps of Vatsa, Raja of Kausambhi, near the junction of the Jamna and the Ganges. There are, however, two Matsyas, one of which, according to the Yantra Samráé, is identifiably with Jaypur. In the Dig-vijaya of Nakula he subdues the Matsyas farther to the west, or in Guzerat.

13 Situated on the back of the Vindhya range: Váyu and Matsya. They are generally named with the people of Málava, which confirms this locality. They are said to be the posterity of Karusha, one of the sons of Vaivásavata Manu.

14 These are also placed along the Vindhya chain, but at different times appear to have occupied different positions. They were a kindred tribe with the Andhakas and Vrishni, and a branch of the Yádavas. A Bhoja Rájá is amongst the warriors of the Mahábhárata. At a later period, Bhoja, the Rájá of Dhrár, preserves an indication of this people; and from him the Bhojpuris, a tribe still living in western Behar, profess to be descended: they are not improbably relics of the older tribe. Bhoja is also used sometimes as a synonyme of Bhojakafa, a city near the Narmada, founded by Rukmi, brother-in-law of Krishná, and before that, prince of Kundiná or Condavir.

15 Pulinda is applied to any wild or barbarous tribe; those here named are some of the people of the deserts along the Indo; but Pulindas are met with in many other positions, especially in the mountains and forests across central India, the haunts of the Bhils and Gonds. So Polyemy places the Pulindai along the banks of the Narmada to the frontiers of Larice; the Láfa or Lar of the Hindus; Kandesh and part of Guzerat.

16 In the other three Puráás we have Uttámáráñas, we have Vindhyá range.

17 The people of the ' ten forts,' subsequently multiplied to ' thirty-six,' such being the import of Chattager, which seems to be in the site of Daárás. Megha Dúta, p. 30, note.

18 A Vindhyá tribe, according to the other Puráás. The locality is confirmed by mythological personations; for Mekala is said to be a Rishi, the father of the river Narmadá; thence called Mekalá and Mekalakanyá: the mountain where it rises is also called Mekaládri. The Rámáyaña places the Mekalás amongst the southern tribes.

19 Utkala is still the native name of Orissá.

20 These may be the southern Pánchálas.
PEOPLE AND COUNTRIES.

When Drońa overcame Drupada, king of Panchála, as related in the Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, he retained half the country, that north of the Ganges, and restored to its former chief the other half, south of that river as far as to the Chambal. The capital of the latter became Mâkandi on the Ganges; and the country included also Kâmpilya, the Kampil of the Mohammedans, but placed by them in the Doab. The capital of the northern portion was Ahikshetra, a name traceable in the Adisathrus of Poloemy, though the position differs: but Ahikshetra or Aichchhatra, as it is also written, seems to have been applied to more than one city.

Perhaps the people of Tirhut, along the Kosi.

Having more than one back; probable some nickname or term of derision. Thus we have, in the Râmâyana and other works, enumerated amongst tribes, the Kârâ-prâvaraas, those who wrap themselves up in their ears; Ashâ-karîkâs, the eight-eared; or Oshâ-karîkâs, having lips extending to their ears; Kâkamukhas, crow-faced; Ekapâdukas, one-footed; or rather one-slippered: exaggerations of national ugliness, or allusions to peculiar customs, which were not literally intended, although they may have furnished the Mandevilles of ancient and modern times with some of their monsters. The spirit of the nomenclature is shown by these tribes being associated with Kîrâtas, barbarians, and Yavanas, either Greeks or Mohammedans.

A preferable reading seems to be Yugandhara: a city in the Punjab so called is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Kârâ P. 24 Read Bodhas, Godhas, and Saudhas. There is a Rajput tribe called Sodha.

This may consist of two names, and is so read in MSS., or the latter term occurs Kalingas; both terms are repeated. Besides the Madra of the north, a similar word, Madra, is applied to Madura in the south. As. Res. IX. 428. The Râmâyana has Madras in the east, as well as in the north.

The people of the Benares district, and that opposite.

The inhabitants of Ujayin.

These should be opposite to the Kuntis, but where either is situated does not appear.

The best reading is Gomanta, part of the Konkan about Goa.

The more usual reading is Khaūdhas; one MS. has Parías.

A country of considerable extent and power at various periods. The name remains in Beder, which may have been the ancient capital; but the kingdom seems to have corresponded with the great part of Berar and Kandesh. It is mentioned in the Râmâyana and the Purâñas amongst the countries of the south.

Also Rûpavâsikas. There is a Rûpá river from the Suktimat mountain, the vicinity of which may be alluded to. We have Rûpâs or Rûpapas amongst the southern tribes of the Purâñas.
Aśwakas, Pāṃsurāśhtras, Goparāśhtras, Karītis, the people of Adhivāya, Kulādyā, Mallarāśhtra, and Kerala; the Varāpāsīs, Apavāhas, Chakras, Vakrātapas and Sākas, Videhas, Māgadhās, Swakshas, Malayas, and Vijayas; the Angas, Vangas, Kaligas, and Yakṣrimomas Mallas, Sudellas, Prahlādas, Māhikas and Sāces of classical writers, the Indo-Scythians of Ptolemy, extended, about the commencement of our era, along the west of India, from the Hindu Koh to the mouths of the Indus.

Gova or Kuva is an ancient name of the southern Konkan, and may be intended in this place by the Gopa country; or it may imply 'the district of cow-herds;' that is, of Nomadic tribes.

Also read Kūlatas and Pāṅtakas.

Also read Adhirāja and Adhirāṭhā, which mean the same, 'the over or superior kingdom.'

Also Kuṇḍhaya, Kuṇānda, and Mukuntha.

Also Vallirāṭhā. There are Mallas in the east, along the foot of the Himālayas, in Bhima's Dig-vijaya; but we should rather look for them in the north-west, in the site of the Malli of Arrian. We have in the Purānās, Mahārāṭhā, the Mahāratta country, which may be here intended.

Two copies read Kevala; one, Kambala. The text is probably wrong, as we have Kerala below.

Also Varāpāsīs and Varavāsīs: one copy has, what is likely to be most correct, Vānarāyas, 'the monkey-faced people.'

Read Upavāha and Pravāha.

The MSS. agree in reading this Vakra.

The Sākas occur again, more than once, which may be possibly unnecessary repetition: but these people, the Sakai and inhabitants of Tirhut.

The people of South Bahar.

Also read Maleyas and Suhmas: the latter is probably correct. The Suhmas and Prahuhas were found in the east by Bhima; and Suhma is elsewhere said to be situated east of Bengal, towards the sea, the king and the people being Miechchhas, that is not Hindus: it would correspond therefore with Tipera and Aracan.

Also read Malajas, but less correctly perhaps. The Malayas are the people of the southern Ghats.

We have Pravijayas in the east, according to the Purānās.

Anga is the country about Bhagalpur, of which Champā was the capital.

Eastern Bengal.

We have had these before, but they are repeated perhaps in conformity to the usual classification, which connects them with the two preceding, being derived in the genealogical lists from a common ancestor.

In Bhima's Dig-vijaya we have two people of this name, both in the east; one along the foot of the Himālayas, and the other more to the south.

Uniformly read in the MSS. Sudeshānya.

Three copies read Māhishas. We have Mahishakas amongst the southern people in the Purúñas; and a Máhishikí in the Rámáyána, also in the south: the latter may be connected with Máhishmatí, which Sahadeva visits in his southern invasion, and which has been elsewhere conjectured to be in Mysur. (Calcutta Annual Register, 1823.) There is also a Máhishmatí on the road to the south (Mahábh. Udyoga P.), which is commonly identified with Chuli Maheswar, on the Narmadá.

55 Also Rishikas; people placed by the Rámáyána both in the north and in the south. Arjuna visits the former, and exacts from them eight horses. Dig-vijaya.

56 Also read Bähikas, which we may here prefer, as the Bähikas are subsequently named: the former are described in the Mahábhárata, Karúja Parva, with some detail, and comprehend the different nations of the Punjab, from the Setlej to the Indus.

57 These are included amongst the northern nations; Váyu, &c.; but in Nakula's Dig-vijaya they are in the west.

58 The Abhiras, according to the Purúñas, are also in the north: in the Rámáyána and Mahábh.abháh P. they are in the west. The fact seems to be, that the people along the Indus, from Surat to the Himálaya, are often regarded as either western or northern nations, according to the topographical position of the writer: in either case the same tribes are intended.

59 The MSS. read Kálatoyukas, a people placed by the Purúñas in the north.

60 The Váyu reads Aparita, a northern nation. There are Aparas in Herodotus, classed with a people bordering on India, the Gandari. The term in the text signifies also 'borderers,' and is probably correct, as opposed to the following word Párántas; the latter signifying those beyond, and the former those not beyond the borders. The latter has for Párántas, Paritaras; and the Matsya, Parásas.

61 Also Pahlavas, a northern or north-western nation, often mentioned in Hindu writings, in Manu, the Rámáyána, the Purúñas, &c. They were not a Hindu people, and may have been some of the tribes between India and Persia.

61 Also Charmaháñikas, but the sense is the same; those living in the district Maidala or Kháníta of Charma: they are a northern people: Váyu, &c. Pliny mentions a king of a people so called, "Chamarum rex."

63 Read Marubhaumas; more satisfactorily, as it means the inhabitants of Marubhúmi, 'the desert,' the sands of Sindh.

64 Also Súrásfras, which is no doubt more correct; the inhabitants of Surat.

65 The Kekayas or Kaukeyas appear amongst the chief nations in the war of the Mahábhárata, their king being a kinsman of Krishná. The Rámáyána, II. 53, specifies their position beyond, or west of, the Vipásá.
Kuṭṭapaṇṭas, Māheyaśas, Kakshaśas, dwellers on the sea-shore, and the Andhas and many tribes residing within and without the hills; the Malajās, Māgadhas, Mānavaṛjakas; those north of the Mahī (Mahāyuttaras), the Prāvriṣheyas, Bhārgavas, Puṇḍras, Bhārgas, Kirātas, Sudeshtas; and the people on the Yamunā (Yāmunas), Śakas, Nishādas, Nishadhas, Ánarttas; and those in the south-west (Nairritas), the Durgalas, Pratimāsyaśas, Kuntalas, Kuśalas, Tiragrahas, Śūra-66 We have in the Purāṇas Kuṭṭapra-charanās and Kuṭṭapārvaranās amongst the mountain tribes.

67 These may be people upon the Mahī river: they are named amongst the southern nations by the Vāyu, &c., but the west is evidently intended.

68 Read also Kachchhas: the Purāṇas have Kachchhiyas. The form is equally applicable to people dwelling in districts contiguous to water and in marshy spots, and denotes the province still called Cutch.

69 Also read Adhya, Antya, and Andhra: the latter is the name of Telingana, the Andhri of Pliny.

70 Three MSS. have Malada, a people of the east in Bhīma’s Dig-vijaya.

71 Also Mānavaṅkas.

72 A people of the east.

73 The western provinces of Bengal, or, as sometimes used in a more comprehensive sense, it includes the following districts: Rajshahi, Dinajpur, and Rangepur; Nadīya, Birbhum, Burdwan, part of Midnapur, and the Jungle Mahals; Ramgarh, Pachet, Palamow, and part of Chunar. See an account of Puṇḍra, translated from what is said to be part of the Brahmaṇḍa section of the Bhavishyat Purāṇa. Calcutta Quart. Mag. Dec. 1824.

74 There is considerable variety in this term, Lārga, Mārja, Samuttara, and Sa-mantara; probably neither is correct. Bhargas are amongst the people subdued in the east by Bhīma.

75 These are foresters and barbarians in general.

76 Notwithstanding the celebrity of this country, as the kingdom of Nala, it does not appear exactly where it was situated: we may conclude it was not far from Vīsaiharā (Berar) as that was the country of Damayantī. From the directions given by Nala to Damayantī, it is near the Vindhya mountain and Payoshī river, and roads lead from it across the Rīksha mountain to Avanti and the south, as well as to Vīsaiharā and to Kośalā. Nalopākhyāna, sec. 9.

77 These are always placed in the west: they are fabled to be the descendants of Ánartta, the son of Saryāti, who founded the capital Kuśasthali, afterwards Dwārakā, on the sea-shore in Guzerat.

78 Also Pratimatyas; those opposite or adjacent to the Mātayas.

79 Also Kuśajas and Kośalas; the latter is probably correct, as the name does not occur in any other form than that of Kasi-kośalā above. Kośalā is a name variously applied. Its earliest and most celebrated application is to the country on the banks of the Sarayū, the kingdom of Rāma, of which Ayodhyā was the capital. Rāmāyaṇa, I. s. 5. In the Mahābhārata we have one Kośāla in the east, and another in the south, besides the Prak-kośālas and Uttara-kośālas in the east and north. The Purāṇas place the Kośālas amongst the people 'on the back of Vindhyā,' and it would appear from the Vāyu that Kuśa, the son of Rāma, transferred his kingdom to a more central position; he ruled over Kośāla at his capital of Kuśasthali or Kuṣṭahā, built upon the Vindhyan precipices: निर्माणते नासानि । the same is alluded to in the Pāṭāla Khaṇḍa of the Padma Purāṇa, and in the Raghu Vamsa, for the purpose of explaining the return of Kuśa to Ayodhya. Certainly in later times the country of Kośāla lay south of Oude, for in the Ratnāvali the general of Vatsa surrounds the king of Kośāla in the Vindhyā mountains: (Hindu Theatre, II. 305;) and, as noticed in the same work, (p. 267,) we have in the Purāṇas, Saptakośālas, or seven Kośālas. An inscription found at Ratnapur in Chittigarh, of which I have an unpublished translation, states that Śri-deva, the governor of Mahāhari Mandala, having obtained the favour of Prithvi-deva, king of Kośāla, was enabled to build temples, and dig tanks, &c., indicating the extension of the power of Kośāla across the Ganges in that direction. The inscription is dated Samvat 915, or A.D. 858. The Kośāla of the Purāṇas and of the dramatic and poetic writers was however more to the west, along a part of the Vindhyā range. Ptolemy has a Kontakossula in the south, probably one of the Kośālas of the Hindus.
PEOPLE AND COUNTRIES.

The people of Kashmir.

One of the chief tribes engaged in the war of the Mahābhārata. The Rāmāyaṇa places them in the west; the Purāṇas in the north. The term Sindhu shews their position to have been upon the Indus, apparently in the Punjab.

These are also a people of the north-west, found both on the west of the Indus and in the Punjab, and well known to classical authors as the Gandarīi and Gandaridae. As. Res. XV. 103; also Journal of the R. As. Soc.; Account of the Foe-küe-ki.

From the context this should probably be Darvakas, the people of a district usually specified in connexion with the succeeding.

These are the inhabitants of the country bordering on Cashmir, to the south and west; known to the Greeks as the kingdom of Abisara. It often occurs in composition with Darv, as Darvābhisāra. As. Res. XV. 24.

Also read Ulúfas and Kulúfas: the Rāmāyaṇa has Kolúkas or Kaulúfas amongst the western tribes.

Also with the short vowel, Śaivalas.

The Vāhlikas or Bāhlikas are always associated with the people of the north, west, and ultra-Indian provinces, and are usually considered to represent the Bactrians, or people of Bakh. It is specified in the Mahābh. Udyoga P. as famous for its horses, a reputation the country bordering upon it, at least Bokhara and Mai- mena, still preserves: and in Arjuņa's Digvijaya it is said to be difficult of approach.

These are probably intended for the Vánavas, Darvas, Vátajamathorajás, Báhubádhás 90, Kauravyas, Sudámas 91, Sumallis, Badhnás, Karishakas, Kulindápatyakas, Vátáyanas 92, Daśáñás 93, Romáñas 94, Kušavindus, Kakshás 95, Gopálakaśkshás 96, Jángalás 97, Kuruvarínakás 98, Kirátas, Barbarás 99, Siddhas, Vaidehas 100, Támraliptás 101, Audras 102, Paúdras 103, dwellers in sandy tracts (Śaśikatas), and in mountains (Pávatíyás). Moreover, chief of the sons of Bharata, there are the nations of the south, the Drávirás 104, Keralas 105, Práchyas 106, Múshikas 107, and Vánavásakas 108; the Karnátakas 109, Múshikas 110, Víkalyás 111 and Múshakas 112, Jillikas 113, Kuntalas 114, Sauhridas, Nalakáneighbours of the Abhisáras: they are found in the north by Arjuna, Dig-vijaya, and are there termed also Kahatriyas.

90 Also read Báhubádhya and Bahurada.
91 The name occurs in the Rámâyana as that of a mountain in the Punjab or in the Bálkika country. II. 53.
92 The MSS. agree in reading this Vá náyava or Vanayus, a people in the north-wést, also famous for horses.

93 A better reading is Dásapárśva, as we have had Dásárnás before.
94 Also Ropáñas; quere, Romans?
95 Also Gachchas and Kachchhas: the last is the best reading, although it has occurred before.
96 Also Gopálaka-kachchhas: they are amongst the eastern tribes in Bhíma’s Dig-vijaya.
97 Or Langalas.
98 Kuruñgánalas, or the people of the forests in the upper part of the Doab: it is also read Para-vallabhas.
99 The analogy to ‘barbarians’ is not in sound only, but in all the authorities these are classed with borderers and foreigners and nations not Hindu.
100 Also Dáhas, in which we should have a resemblance to the Sctthyán Dáha.
101 Or Támraliptás or Dámaliptás; the people at the western mouth of the Ganges in Medinipur and Tamluk. Támraliptí was a celebrated sea-port in the fourth century, (Account of the Foe-kiue-ki,) and retained its character in the ninth and twelfth. Daśá Kumára Charitra and Vrihat Katha; also Journ. Royal As. Soc.

102 The people of Odra or Orissa.
103 The inhabitants of Púndra: see note 73.
104 The people of the Coromandel coast, from Madras southwards; those by whom the Tamil language is spoken.
105 The people of Malabar proper.
106 Also Práyas. Práchyas properly means the people of the east, the Prási of the Greeks, east of the Ganges.
107 Múshika is the southernmost part of the Malabar coast, Cochin and Travancore.
108 Also Vánavásinas and Vánavásikas; the inhabitants of Banawasi, the Banavasi of Ptolemy, a town the remains of which are still extant in the district of Sunda.
109 The people of the centre of the Pe-ninsula, the proper Karnáta or Carnatic.
110 The people of Mysore: see note 54.
111 Also Vikalpas.
112 Also Pushkulas.
113 Also Karrúkas.
114 Read Kuntikas.
nanas\textsuperscript{115}, Kaukuttakas\textsuperscript{116}, Cholas\textsuperscript{117}, Kaunkanas\textsuperscript{118}, Málavanas\textsuperscript{119}, Samangas, Karakas, Kukkurás, Angáras\textsuperscript{120}, Dhwajinyutsavasanketas\textsuperscript{121}, Trigartás\textsuperscript{122}, Śálwesinis, Šakas\textsuperscript{123}, Kokarakas\textsuperscript{124}, Proshás, Samavegavasas\textsuperscript{125}. There are also the Vindhyachulukas\textsuperscript{126}, Pulindas and Kalkalas\textsuperscript{127}, Málavas\textsuperscript{128}, Mallavas\textsuperscript{129}, Aparavallabhas, Kulindas\textsuperscript{130}, Kálavas\textsuperscript{131}, Kunthakas\textsuperscript{132}, Karatás\textsuperscript{133}, Móshakas, Tanabálas\textsuperscript{134}, Saníyas\textsuperscript{135}, Ghatasrinjayas\textsuperscript{136}, Alindayas\textsuperscript{137}, Paśvátas\textsuperscript{138}, Tanayas\textsuperscript{139}, Sunayas\textsuperscript{140}, Daśvidardhas\textsuperscript{141}, Kántikas\textsuperscript{142}, Tangañas\textsuperscript{143}, Paratangañas, northern and

\[\text{113} \text{ Variously read Nalakálaka, Nabhasánaka, and Tilakanija.}\]

\[\text{116} \text{ Kaukundaka and Kaukuntaaka.}\]

\[\text{117} \text{ The inhabitants of the lower part of the Coromandel coast; so called after them Chola-mañílara.}\]

\[\text{118} \text{ People of the Konkan: according to some statements there are seven districts so named.}\]

\[\text{119} \text{ Málavanara and Sálavánaka.}\]

\[\text{120} \text{ These two words are sometimes compounded as Kukkuriñgára: it is also read Kanurjáda.}\]

\[\text{121} \text{ This is a questionable name, though the MSS. agree. We have in Arjuna's Dig-vijaya, Utsavavanketa; and in Nákula's, to the west, Utsavasanketa.}\]

\[\text{122} \text{ These are amongst the warriors of the Mahábhárata; they are included in all the lists amongst the northern tribes, and are mentioned in the Rájátarangini as not far from Kashmir: they are considered to be the people of Lahome.}\]

\[\text{123} \text{ Also Vyúkas and Vrikšas: the latter are specified amongst the central nations: Váyu, &c.}\]

\[\text{124} \text{ Kokavakas and Kokanakhas.}\]

\[\text{125} \text{ Sáras and Vegasaras; also Parasan-chákrais.}\]

\[\text{126} \text{ Vindhyapálakas and Vindhyamúlikas: the latter, those at the foot of Vindhya, are named in the Pauránik lists amongst the southern tribes.}\]

\[\text{177} \text{ Balwala and Valkaja.}\]

\[\text{178} \text{ Also Málaka and Májava.}\]

\[\text{179} \text{ Also Vallabhas, which from the succeeding word may be conjectured to be correct. A city named Vallabhi makes a great figure in the traditions of Rajputana. See Tod's Rajasthan.}\]

\[\text{180} \text{ One of the tribes in the west or north-west subdued by Arjuna.}\]

\[\text{181} \text{ Kálada and Dohada.}\]

\[\text{182} \text{ Kundala, Karantha, and Manálaka: the latter occurs in the Rámáyaña amongst the eastern nations.}\]

\[\text{183} \text{ Kuráf, Kunaka.}\]

\[\text{184} \text{ Stanabála.}\]

\[\text{185} \text{ Sátirtha, Sátiya, Nárya.}\]

\[\text{186} \text{ The Srinjayas are a people from the north-west amongst the warriors of the Mahábhárata: the reading may be incorrect. It occurs also Putásarinjaya.}\]

\[\text{187} \text{ Also Aninda.}\]

\[\text{188} \text{ Also Sivata, Sirála, Syuvaka.}\]

\[\text{189} \text{ Tanapa, Stanapa, Sutapa.}\]

\[\text{190} \text{ Pallipanjaka and Vidarba.}\]

\[\text{191} \text{ Daśvidardha, but three copies have Rishika. Great variety, and no doubt great inaccuracy, prevails in the MSS. in several of the names here given: they are not found elsewhere.}\]

\[\text{192} \text{ The reading of three copies is Kákas: there is a tribe so called on the banks of the Indus, as it leaves the mountains.}\]

\[\text{193} \text{ These and the following are moun-}\] other fierce barbarians (Mlechchhas), Yavanas, Chinás, Kámbojas; ferocious and uncivilized races, Śakrīdgrahas, Kulatthas, Húnas, and Párásikas; also Ramañas, Chinás, Daśamālikas, those living near the Kshatriyas, and Vaiśyas and Śūdras; also Śūtaineers in the north-west. The former are placed by the Puránás in the north, and the Váyu includes them also amongst the mountain tribes. The Rámauya has Tánkana in the north.

144 The term Yavanas, although in later times applied to the Mohammedans, designated formerly the Greeks, as observed in the valuable notes on the translation of the Birth of Umi, from the Kumára Sambhava. (Journal As. Soc. of Bengal, July 1833.) The Greeks were known throughout western Asia by the term γ, Yayan; or Ion, 'Iaov; the Yavana, यवन, of the Hindus; or as it occurs in its Prakrit form, in the very curious inscription deciphered by Mr. Prinsep, (J. As. Soc. Beng. Feb. 1838,) Yona: the term Yona Rájá being there associated with the name Antiochus, in all likelihood Antiochus the Great, the ally of the Indian prince Sophagasesnas, about B.C. 210. That the Macedonian or Bactrian Greeks were most usually intended is not only probable from their position and relations with India, but from their being usually named in concurrence with the north-western tribes, Kambojas, Daradas, Páradas, Bāhlikas, Šakas, &c. in the Rámauya, Mahābhárata, Puráñas, Manu, and in various poems and plays.

145 Chinás, or Chinese, or rather the people of Chinese Tartary, are named in the Rámauya and Manu, as well as in the Puráñas. If the designation China was derived from the Tsin dynasty, which commenced B.C. 260, this forms a limit of antiquity for the works in question. The same word however, or Tsin, was the ancient appellation of the northern province of Shen-sy, and it may have reached the Hindus from thence at an earlier period.

146 These Wilford regards as the people of Arachosia. They are always mentioned together with the north-western tribes, Yavanas, Šakas, and the like: they are also famous for their horses; and in the Rámauya they are said to be covered with golden lotuses: अन्तर्यान अन्तर्यान अन्तर्यान अन्तर्यान. What is meant is doubtful, probably some ornament or embellishment of their dress. We have part of the name, or Kambi, in the Cambistholi of Arrian: the last two syllables, no doubt, represent the Sanscrit Sthala, 'place,' 'district;' and the word denotes the dwellers in the Kamba or Kambis country: so Kámojba may be explained those born in Kamba or Kambas.

147 Also Śakridvaha or Śakridguha.

148 Also Kulachchas and Kuntalas: the Puránas have Kupathas amongst the mountain tribes.

149 Also Páataka: the first is not a common form in the Puráñas, although it is in poetical writings, denoting, no doubt, the Persians, or people of Pars or Fars: the latter, also read Párad, may imply the same, as beyond (Pára) the Indus.

150 We have Ramathas in Nakula's Digviyaja, and in the Váyu and Matsya.

151 Daśamánas and Deśamánikas, in the north: Váyu and Matsya.

152 The passage occurs in the Váyu and Márikanideya Puráñas, as well as in the Mahābhárata; but the purport is not very distinct, and the proper reading is doubt-dras\textsuperscript{153}, Ābhūras\textsuperscript{154}, Daradas\textsuperscript{155}, Kāsmīras, with Pattis\textsuperscript{156}, Khásīras\textsuperscript{157}, Antachāras or borderers, Pahnervas\textsuperscript{158}, and dwellers in mountain caves (Giriful. In three MSS. of the latter it occurs \textit{वचिन्यो नातिन भेजित्र देस्यस्मृतानम्च ज्ञातिः} \textsuperscript{1} the latter pāda is the same in all: the former, in a fourth copy, is \textit{वचिन्यो नातिन भेजित्र देस्यस्मृतानम्च ज्ञातिः} \textsuperscript{1} in two copies of the Vāyu it is \textit{वचिन्यो नातिन भेजित्र देस्यस्मृतानम्च ज्ञातिः} None of these are intelligible, and the Mārkaṇḍeya furnishes the reading followed, \textit{वचिन्यो नातिन भेजित्र देस्यस्मृतानम्च ज्ञातिः} Modern geographers have supposed the Cathaei, Cathari, and Chatrīes of the ancients, in the lower parts of the Punjab, to mean a people of Khastrīyas; but no such people occur directly named in our lists. Considering that the text is speaking of barbarous and foreign tribes, perhaps no particular nation is here meant, and it may be intended as an epithet of those which follow, or of Vaiṣāya (agricultural) and Śūdra (servile or low) tribes, living either near to, or under the manner of Khastrīyas: in that case a better reading would be, \textit{वचिन्यो नातिन भेजित्र देस्यस्मृतानम्च ज्ञातिः} According to Manu, various northern tribes, the Śākas, Kāmbojas, Pāradas, Pahlavas, Kirātas, Daradas, and Khasas, and even the Chīnas and Yavanas, are degraded Khastrīyas, in consequence of neglecting religious rites. X. 43, 44. According to the Paurāṇik legend they were overcome in war by Sagyara, and degraded from their original caste. See book IV.

\textsuperscript{153} Here we have a people called Śūdras by all the authorities, and placed in the west or north-west, towards the Indus. They have been ingeniously, and with probability, conjectured by Mr. Lassen to be the Oxydracea; for Śūdraka is equally correct with Śūdra; and in place of \textit{οξυ-}

\textit{δράκας} various MSS. of Strabo, as quoted by Siebenkees, read \textit{Σιδράκας} and \textit{Σιδράκας}; the latter is precisely the Sanscrit appellation. Pliny also has Sudraca for the people who formed the limit of Alexander's eastern conquests, or those hitherto inaccurately called Oxydracea.

\textsuperscript{154} These are always conjoined with the Śūdras, as if conterminous. Their situation is no doubt correctly indicated by Ptolemy by the position of Abira above Patalene on the Indus.

\textsuperscript{155} The Durds are still where they were at the date of our text, and in the days of Strabo and Ptolemy; not exactly, indeed, at the sources of the Indus, but along its course, above the Himālaya, just before it descends to India; a position which might well be taken for its head.

\textsuperscript{156} Also read Pasus, 'brutes.' If the term might be altered to Palli, it would imply 'village or pastoral tribes.'

\textsuperscript{157} Also Khasikas and Khasākas. The first of these is probably most correct, being equivalent to Khasas, barbarians named along with the Śākas and Daradas by Manu, &c.; traces of whom may be sought amongst the barbarous tribes on the north-east of Bengal, the Kāsiyas; or it has been thought that they may be referred to the situation of Kashgar. Two copies have, in place of this, Tukhāras, and the same occurs in the Rāmāyana; the Vāyu has Tuśhāras, but the Mārkaṇḍeya, Tukhāra: these are probably the Tochari, Tachari, or Thogari, a tribe of the Śākas, by whom Bactria was taken from the Greeks, and from whom Tocharistan derives the name it still bears.

\textsuperscript{158} Also Pahlavas and P hallavas. The form in the text is the more usual.
The Rāmāyana has Gahvaras. The mountains from Kabul to Bamiyan furnish infinitely numerous instances of cavern habitations.

These two, according to the Vāyu, are amongst the northern nations; but they might be thought to be religious fraternities, from the sages Atri and Bharadvaja.

The latter member of the compound occurs pashikas, páyikas, and yodhikas, ‘cherishers,’ ‘drinkers,’ or ‘fighters’; the first term denotes the female breast.

Also Droñikas, ‘people of vallies.’

Also Kajingas. Kalingas would be here out of place.

These and the preceding are included by the Vāyu amongst the mountain tribes of the north.

Many names indeed might be added to the catalogue from the lists referred to in the Vāyu, Matsya, and Márkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, as well as several capable of verification from the Rāmāyana, and other passages of the Mahābhārata. This is not the place however to exhaust the subject, and it has been prosecuted too far perhaps already. It is evident that a very considerable proportion of the names recorded can be verified, and that many of them may be traced in the geographical notices of India left by the historians of Alexander’s expedition. That more cannot be identified is owing in a great measure to incomplete research; and a more extensive examination of the authorities would no doubt discover passages where circumstances, as well as names, are given by which the places would be recognised. It is evident, however, that much embarrassment also arises from the inaccuracy of manuscripts, which vary widely and irreconcilably. I have given instances from four different copies of the text; one in my own possession, three in the library of the East India Company; all very excellent copies, but manifestly erroneous in many respects in their nomenclature of places, and particularly of those which are least known. No assistance is to be had from any commentary, as the subject is one of little interest in native estimation.
CHAP. IV.

In the same manner as Jambu-dwípa is girt round about by the ocean of salt water, so that ocean is surrounded by the insular continent of Plaksha; the extent of which is twice that of Jambu-dwípa.

Medhatithi, who was made sovereign of Plaksha, had seven sons, Śántabhaya, Śīśāra, Sukhodaya, Ánanda, Śíva, Khemaka, and Dhruva; and the Dwípa was divided amongst them, and each division was named after the prince to whom it was subject. The several kingdoms were bounded by as many ranges of mountains, named severally Gomeda, Chandra, Nárada, Dundubhi, Somaka, Sumanas, and Vaibhrája. In these mountains the sinless inhabitants ever dwell along with celestial spirits and gods: in them are many holy places; and the people there live for a long period, exempt from care and pain, and enjoying uninterrupted felicity. There are also, in the seven divisions of Plaksha, seven rivers, flowing to the sea, whose names alone are sufficient to take away sin: they are the Anutaptá, Śíkhi, Vipásá, Tridivá, Kramu, Amritá, and Sukritá. These are the chief rivers and mountains of Plaksha-dwípa, which I have enumerated to you; but there are thousands of others of inferior magnitude. The people who drink of the waters of those rivers are always contented and happy, and there is neither decrease nor increase amongst them, neither are the revolutions of the four ages known in these Varshas: the character of the time is there uniformly that of extreme felicity to extreme distress; and in the latter, to ascend from misery to happiness. The author of the text had possibly the Jaina use of these terms in view; and if so, wrote after their system was promulgated.

\[3\]
the Treta (or silver) age. In the five Dwīpas, worthy Brahman, from Plaksha to Śāka, the length of life is five thousand years, and religious merit is divided amongst the several castes and orders of the people. The castes are called Āryaka, Kuru, Vivasā, and Bhāvi, corresponding severally with Brahman, Kshetriya, Vaiśya, and Sūdra. In this Dwīpa is a large fig-tree (F. religiosa), of similar size as the Jambu-tree of Jambu-dwīpa; and this Dwīpa is called Plaksha, after the name of the tree. Hari, who is all, and the creator of all, is worshipped in this continent in the form of Soma (the moon). Plaksha-dwīpa is surrounded, as by a disc, by the sea of molasses, of the same extent as the land. Such, Maitreya, is a brief description of Plaksha-dwīpa.

The hero Vapushmat was king of the next or Śálmala-dwīpa, whose seven sons also gave designations to seven Varshas, or divisions. Their names were Śweta, Hárīta, Jímūta, Rohita, Vaidyuta, Mánasa, and Su-prabha. The Ikshu sea is encompassed by the continent of Śálmala, which is twice its extent. There are seven principal mountain ranges, abounding in precious gems, and dividing the Varshas from each other; and there are also seven chief rivers. The mountains are called Kumuda, Unnata, Valāhaka, Drona, fertile in medicinal herbs, Kanka, Mabisha, and Kakkudwat. The rivers are Yaunī, Toyā, Vitrishnā, Chandrá, Śuklá, Vimochaní, and Nivritti; all whose waters cleanse away sins. The Brahmans, Kshetriyas, Vaiśyas, and Sūdras of this Dwīpa, called severally Kapilas, Arunas, Pītas, and Rohitas (or tawny, purple, yellow, and red), worship the imperishable soul of all things, Vishnú, in the form of Vāyu (wind), with pious rites, and enjoy frequent association with the gods. A large Śálmalí (silk-cotton) tree grows in this Dwīpa, and gives it its name. The Dwīpa is surrounded by the Surā sea (sea of wine), of the same extent as itself.

The Surā sea is entirely encircled by Kuśa-dwīpa, which is every way twice the size of the preceding continent. The king, Jyotishmat, had seven sons, Udbhida, Venumán, Swairatha, Lavana, Dhriti, Prabhákara, and Kapila, after whom the seven portions or Varshas of the island were called Udbhida, &c. There reside mankind along with Dāityas and Dānavas, as well as with spirits of heaven and gods. The four castes, assiduously devoted to their respective duties, are termed Dámis, Śushmis, Snehas, and Mandehas, who, in order to be relieved of the obligations imposed upon them in the discharge of their several functions, worship Janárddana, in the form of Brahmá, and thus get rid of the unpleasant duties which lead to temporal rewards. The seven principal mountains in this Dwípa are named Vidruma, Hemaśaila, Dyutimán, Pushpaván, Kuśesaya, Hari, and Mandara; and the seven rivers are Dhútapápá, Śivá, Pavitrá, Sammati, Vidyudambhá, Mahávanyá, Sarvapápahará; besides these, there are numerous rivers and mountains of less importance. Kuśa-dwípa is so named from a clump of Kuśa grass (Poá) growing there. It is surrounded by the Ghrita sea (the sea of butter), of the same size as the continent.

The sea of Ghrita is encompassed by Krauncha-dwípa, which is twice as large as Kuśa-dwípa. The king of this Dwípa was Dyutimán, whose sons, and the seven Varshas named after them, were Kuśala, Mallaga, Ushána, Pívra, Andhakáraka, Muni, and Dundubhi. The seven boundary mountains, pleasing to gods and celestial spirits, are Krauncha, Vámana, Andhakáraka, Devavrit, Puúdarikaván, Dundubhi, and Mahásaila; each of which is in succession twice as lofty as the series that precedes it, in the same manner as each Dwípa is twice as extensive as the one before it. The inhabitants reside there without apprehension, associating with the bands of divinities. The Brahmans are called Pushkaras; the Kshe-triya, Pushkalas: the Vaiśyas are termed Dhanyas; and the Śúdras, Tishyas. They drink of countless streams, of which the principal are denominated Gaurí, Kumudwatí, Sandhyá, Rátri, Manojavá, Kshánti, and Puúdariká. The divine Vishnu, the protector of mankind, is worshipped there by the people, with holy rites, in the form of Rudra. Krauncha is surrounded by the sea of curds, of a similar extent; and that again is encompassed by Śáka-dwípa.

The sons of Bhavya, the king of Śáka-dwípa, after whom its Varshas were denominated, were Jalada, Kumára, Sukumára, Maníchaka, Kusumod, Maudákí, and Maháruma. The seven mountains separating the countries were Udayagiri, Jaládhrá, Raivataka, Śyáma, Ámikeya, Ramya, and Kešári. There grows a large Śáka (Teak) tree, frequented by the Siddhas and Gandharbas, the wind from which, as produced by its fluttering leaves, diffuses delight. The sacred lands of this continent are peopled by the four castes. Its seven holy rivers, that wash away all sin, are the Sukumári, Kumári, Nalini, Dhenuká, Ikshu, Venuká, and Gabhasti. There are also hundreds and thousands of minor streams and mountains in this Dwipa: and the inhabitants of Jalada and the other divisions drink of those waters with pleasure, after they have returned to earth from Indra's heaven. In those seven districts there is no dereliction of virtue; there is no contention; there is no deviation from rectitude. The caste of Mriga is that of the Brahman; the Mágadha, of the Kshetriya; the Mánasa, of the Vaiśya; and the Mandaga of the Śúdra: and by these Visháu is devoutly worshipped as the sun, with appropriate ceremonies. Sáka-dwipa is encircled by the sea of milk, as by an armlet, and the sea is of the same breadth as the continent which it embraces.

The Kshiroda ocean (or sea of milk) is encompassed by the seventh Dwipa, or Pushkara, which is twice the size of Sáka-dwipa. Savana, who was made its sovereign, had but two sons, Mahávira and Dhataki, after whom the two Varshas of Pushkara were so named. These are divided by one mighty range of mountains, called Mánasottara, which runs in a circular direction (forming an outer and an inner circle). This mountain is fifty thousand Yojanas in height, and as many in its breadth; dividing the Dwipa in the middle, as if with a bracelet, into two divisions, which are also of a circular form, like the mountain that separates them. Of these two, the Mahávira-varsha is exterior to the circumference of Mánasottara, and Dhataki lies within the circle; and both are frequented by heavenly spirits and gods. There are no other mountains in Pushkara, neither are there any rivers. Men in this Dwipa live a thousand years, free from sickness and sorrow, and unruffled by anger or affection.

2 The Kúrma is the only Puráṇa in which the white island, Sweta-dwipa, the abode of Visháu, is included in the geography of the world: an incidental description of it is quoted by Col. Wilford from the Uttara Khaṣāda of the Padma Puráṇa (As. Res. XI. 99): and it is in this and in the Brahma Vaivartta that allusions to it are most frequent and copious.

3 A slight alteration has been here made in the order of the description.
There is neither virtue nor vice, killer nor slain: there is no jealousy, envy, fear, hatred, covetousness, nor any moral defect: neither is there truth or falsehood. Food is spontaneously produced there, and all the inhabitants feed upon viands of every flavour. Men there are indeed of the same nature with gods, and of the same form and habits. There is no distinction of caste or order; there are no fixed institutes; nor are rites performed for the sake of advantage. The three Vedas, the Puráñas, ethics, and polity, and the laws of service, are unknown. Pushkara is in fact, in both its divisions, a terrestrial paradise, where time yields happiness to all its inhabitants, who are exempt from sickness and decay. A Nyagrodha-tree (Ficus indica) grows on this Dwípa, which is the especial abode of Brahmá, and he resides in it, adored by the gods and demons. Pushkara is surrounded by the sea of fresh water, which is of equal extent with the continent it invests.

In this manner the seven island continents are encompassed successively by the seven oceans, and each ocean and continent is respectively of twice the extent of that which precedes it. In all the oceans the water remains at all times the same in quantity, and never increases or diminishes; but like the water in a caldron, which, in consequence of 4 The description of the Dwípas in the Agni, Bráhma, Kúrma, and Váyu Puráñas agrees with that of our text. The Márkaṇḍeya, Linga, and Matsya contain no details. The Bhágavata and Padma follow the same order as the Vishúu, &c. but alter all the names, and many of the measurements. The account of the Mahábhárata is very irregular and confused. The variations throw no additional light upon the geographical system of the Puráñas. Some traces of this appear discoverable in the west; and the seven Dwípas, with their surrounding seas, may have some connexion with the notion of the seven climates, as Col. Wilford has supposed. That learned, but fanciful writer bestowed great pains upon the verification of these fictions, and imagined the different Dwípas to represent actual divisions of the globe: Jambu being India; Kuśa, the Kush of Scripture, or the countries between Meso-potamia and India; Plaksha being Asia Minor; Sáimali, eastern Europe; Krauncha, Germany; Sáka, the British isles; and Pushkara, Iceland. The white or silver island, or island of the moon, was also, according to him, the island of Great Britain. Whatever may be thought of his conclusions, his essays on these subjects, particularly in the eighth, tenth, and eleventh volumes of the Asiatic Researches, contain much curious and interesting matter.

its combination with heat, expands, so the waters of the ocean swell with the increase of the moon. The waters, although really neither more nor less, dilate or contract as the moon increases or wanes in the light and dark fortnights. The rise and fall of the waters of the different seas is five hundred and ten inches.

Beyond the sea of fresh water is a region of twice its extent, where the land is of gold, and where no living beings reside. Thence extends the Lokáloka mountain, which is ten thousand Yojanas in breadth, and as many in height; and beyond it perpetual darkness invests the mountain all around; which darkness is again encompassed by the shell of the egg.

Such, Maitreyea, is the earth, which with its continents, mountains, oceans, and exterior shell, is fifty crores (five hundred millions) of 5 Although the Hindus seem to have had a notion of the cause of the tides, they were not very accurate observers of the effect. The extreme rise of the tide in the Hugli river has never exceeded twenty feet, and its average is about fifteen. (As. Res. vol. XVIII. Kyd on the Tides of the Hugli.)

6 The Anúda kañáha (बक्षवता:) The Kañáha is properly a shallow hemispherical vessel, a saucer; but compounded in this form, implies the shell of the mundane egg. The Bhágavata thus describes these portions of the world: "Beyond the sea of fresh water is the mountain belt, called Lokáloka, the circular boundary between the world and void space. The interval between Meru and Mánasottara is the land of living beings. Beyond the fresh water sea is the region of gold, which shines like the bright surface of a mirror, but from which no sensible object presented to it is ever reflected, and consequently it is avoided by living creatures. The mountain range by which it is encircled is termed Lokáloka, because the world is separated by it from that which is not world (लोकालोक द्वीप समाज्यता यथेनात्मचे लोकोऽक्ष्लोक वहांनेहिता चर्चक्यात्मे); for which purpose it was placed by ज्ञ्यारा on the limit of the three worlds; and its height and breadth are such that the rays of the heavenly luminaries, from the sun to the polar-star, which spread over the regions within the mountain, cannot penetrate beyond it." According to Col. Wilford, however, there is a chasm in the belt, and a sea beyond it, where Vishńu abides; but he has not given his authorities for this. (As. Res. XI. 14.) The Mohammedan legends of Koh Kaf, 'the stony girdle that surrounds the world,' are evidently connected with the Lokáloka of the Hindus. According to the Siva Tantra, the El Dorado, at the foot of the Lokáloka mountains, is the play-ground of the gods (हेमकथे भूमि रेख्तां बेहानायेय).
Yojanas in extent. It is the mother and nurse of all creatures, the foundation of all worlds, and the chief of the elements.

This comprises the planetary spheres; for the diameter of the seven zones and oceans—each ocean being of the same diameter as the continent it encloses, and each successive continent being twice the diameter of that which precedes it—amounts to but two crores and fifty-four lacs. The golden land is twice the diameter of Pushkara, or two crores and fifty-six lacs; and the Lokáloka is but ten thousand Yojanas. So that the whole is five crores ten lacs and ten thousand (5,10,10,000). According to the Siva Tantra, the golden land is ten crores of Yojanas, making, with the seven continents, one fourth of the whole measurement. Other calculations occur, the incompatibility of which is said by the commentators on our text, and on that of the Bhágavata, to arise from reference being made to different Kalpas, and they quote the same stanza to this effect: क्रिष्ण द्राक्षरसोदृशय नि रोधे यदि लक्ष्मणस्त्रां रक्षसादिक्षण वचनम् तदि रि प्रि। Whenever any contradictions in different Puráñas are observed, they are ascribed by the pious to differences of Kalpas and the like.
CHAP. V.

Of the seven regions of Pátála, below the earth. Nárada's praises of Pátála. Account of the serpent Śesha. First teacher of astronomy and astrology.

Parásara.—The extent of the surface of the earth has been thus described to you, Maitreya. Its depth below the surface is said to be seventy thousand Yojanas, each of the seven regions of Pátála extending downwards ten thousand. These seven, worthy Muni, are called Atala, Vitala, Nitala, Gabhastimata, Mahátala, Sutala, and Pátála. Their soil is severally white, black, purple, yellow, sandy, stony, and of gold. They are embellished with magnificent palaces, in which dwell numerous Dánavaś, Daityas, Yakshas, and great snake-gods. The Muni Nárada, after his return from those regions to the skies, declared amongst the celestials that Pátála was much more delightful than Indra's heaven. "What," exclaimed the sage, "can be compared to Pátála, where the Nágas are decorated with brilliant and beautiful and pleasure-shedding jewels? who will not delight in Pátála, where the lovely daughters of the Daityas and Dánavaś wander about, fascinating even the most austere; where the rays of the sun diffuse light, and not heat, by day; and where the moon shines by night for illumination, not for cold; where the sons of Danu, happy in the enjoyment of delicious viands and strong wines, know not how time passes? There are beautiful groves and streams and lakes where the lotus blows; and the skies are resonant with the Koil's song. Splendid ornaments, fragrant perfumes, rich unguents, the blended music of the lute and pipe and tabor; these and many other enjoyments are the common portion of the Dánavaś, Daityas, and snake-gods, who inhabit the regions of Pátála."

1 In the Bhágavata and Padma P. they are named Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Talátala, Mahátala, Rasátala, and Pátála. The Váyu has Rasátala, Sutala, Vitala, Gabhastala, Mahátala, Srítala, and Pátála. There are other varieties.

2 Allusion is here made, perhaps, to the description given in the Mahábhárata, Udyoga Parva, p. 218, of Nárada's and Mátali's visit to Pátála. Several of the particulars there given are not noticed in the Puránas.

3 There is no very copious description of Pátála in any of the Puránas. The most circumstantial are those of the Váyu and Bhágavata: the latter has been re-
Below the seven Pātālas is the form of Vishnu, proceeding from the quality of darkness, which is called Śesha⁴, the excellencies of which neither Daityas nor Dānavas can fully enumerate. This being is called Ananta by the spirits of heaven, and is worshipped by sages and by gods. He has a thousand heads, which are embellished with the pure and visible mystic sign⁵: and the thousand jewels in his crests give light to all the regions. For the benefit of the world he deprives the Asuras of their strength. He rolls his eyes fiercely, as if intoxicated. He wears a single ear-ring, a diadem, and wreath upon each brow; and shines like the white mountains topped with flame. He is clothed in purple raiment, and ornamented with a white necklace, and looks like another Kailāsa, with the heavenly Ganga flowing down its precipices. In one hand he holds a plough, and in the other a pestle; and he is attended by Vāruṇī (the goddess of wine), who is his own embodied radiance. From his mouths, at the end of the Kalpa, proceeds the venomous fire that, impersonated as Rudra, who is one with Balarāma, devours the three worlds.

Peated, with some additions, in the first chapters of the Pātāla Khanda of the Padma Purāṇa. The Mahābhārata and these two Purāṇas assign different divisions to the Dānavas, Daityas, and Nāgas; placing Vāsuki and the other Nāga chiefs in the lowest: but the Vēyu has the cities of the principal Daityas and Nāgas in each; as in the first, those of the Daitya Namuchi, and serpent Kāliya; in the second, of Hayagrīva and Takshaka; in the third, of Prahūlāda and Hemaka; in the fourth, of Kālānemi and Vainateya; in the fifth, of Hiranyakṣāha and Kirmira; and in the sixth, of Pulomān and Vāsuki: besides others. Bali the Daitya is the sovereign of Pātāla, according to this authority. The Mahābhārata places Vāsuki in Rasātala, and calls his capital Bhogavatī. The regions of Pātāla, and their inhabitants, are often the subjects of profane, than of sacred fiction, in consequence of the frequent intercourse between mortal heroes and the Nāga-kanyās, or serpent-nymphs. A considerable section of the Vṛhat Kathā, the Sūryaprabhā lambaka, consists of adventures and events in this subterraneous world.

⁴ Śesha is commonly described as being in this situation: he is the great serpent on which Vishnu sleeps during the intervals of creation, and upon whose numerous heads the world is supported. The Purāñas, making him one with Balarāma or Sankarshana, who is an impersonation or incarnation of Śesha, blend the attributes of the serpent and the demigod in their description.

⁵ With the Swastika, a particular diagram used in mystical ceremonies.
Śesha bears the entire world, like a diadem, upon his head, and he is the foundation on which the seven Pátalas rest. His power, his glory, his form, his nature, cannot be described, cannot be comprehended by the gods themselves. Who shall recount his might, who wears this whole earth, like a garland of flowers, tinged of a purple dye by the radiance of the jewels of his crests. When Ananta, his eyes rolling with intoxication, yawns, then earth, with all her woods, and mountains, and seas, and rivers, trembles. Gandharbas, Apsarasas, Siddhas, Kinnaras, Uragas, and Chárañas are unequal to hymn his praises, and therefore he is called the infinite (Ananta), the imperishable. The sandal paste, that is ground by the wives of the snake-gods, is scattered abroad by his breath, and sheds perfume around the skies.

The ancient sage Garga, having propitiated Śesha, acquired from him a knowledge of the principles of astronomical science, of the planets, and of the good and evil denoted by the aspects of the heavens.

The earth, sustained upon the head of this sovereign serpent, supports in its turn the garland of the spheres, along with their inhabitants, men, demons, and gods.

6 One of the oldest writers on astronomy amongst the Hindus. According to Mr. Bentley, his Sanhitá dates 548 B.C. (Ancient Astron. of the Hindus, p. 59.)
CHAP. VI.

Of the different hells or divisions of Naraka, below Pátála: the crimes punished in them respectively: efficacy of expiation: meditation on Vishúu the most effective expiation.

Páráśara.—I will now, great Muni, give you an account of the hells which are situated beneath the earth and beneath the waters\(^1\), and into which sinners are finally sent.

The names of the different Narakas are as follows: Raurava, Śúkara, Rodha, Tála, Viśasana, Mahájwála, Taptakumbha, Lavaña, Vimohana, Rudhiránda, Vaitarani, Krímiśa, Krimibhojana, Asipatravana, Krishña, Lálabháksha, Dárúña, Púyaváha, Pápa, Vahnijwála, Adhóśiras, Sandansa, Kálasútra, Tamás, Avíchi, Śwabhojana, Apratisitha, and another Avíchi\(^2\). These and many other fearful hells are the awful provinces of the kingdom of Yama, terrible with instruments of torture and with fire; into which are hurled all those who are addicted when alive to sinful practices\(^3\).

The man who bears false witness through partiality, or who utters any falsehood, is condemned to the Raurava (dreadful) hell. He who causes abortion, plunders a town, kills a cow, or strangles a man, goes to the

\(^1\) The Bhágavata places the Narakas above the waters. The commentator on our text endeavours to reconcile the difference, by explaining the text to imply a dark cavity in which the waters are received, not the original abysses where they were collected at first, and above which Tartarus lies: तवाक्तं गमद्वदात् इति.

\(^2\) Some of these names are the same that are given by Manu, b. IV. v. 88–90. Kullúka Bháňa refers to the Márkaideya P. for a description of the twenty-one divisions of hell; but the account there given is not more ample than that of our text. The Bhágavata enumerates twenty-eight, but many of the names differ from the above. In the last instance the term Avíchi is either inaccurately repeated, or the adjective Apara (अपरार्थन्याय) is intended to distinguish it from the previous Avíchi. In Manu, Mahávíchi occurs.

\(^3\) The Padma P. (Kriya Yoga Sára) and the Siva Dharma, which appears to be a section of the Skánda P., contain a number of interesting circumstances previous to the infliction of punishment. It appears also from them that Yama fulfils the office of judge of the dead, as well as sovereign of the damned; all that die appearing before him, and being confronted with Chitra-gupta, the recorder, by whom their actions have been registered. The virtuous are thence conveyed to Swarga, or Elysium, whilst the wicked are driven to the different regions of Naraka, or Tartarus.
Rodha hell (or that of obstruction). The murderer of a Brahman, stealer of gold, or drinker of wine, goes to the Śūkara (swine) hell; as does any one who associates with them. The murderer of a man of the second or third castes, and one who is guilty of adultery with the wife of his spiritual teacher, is sentenced to the Tāla (padlock) hell: and one who holds incestuous intercourse with a sister, or murders an ambassador, to Taptakumbha (or the hell of heated caldrons). The seller of his wife, a gaoler, a horsetrader, and one who deserts his adherents, falls into the Taptaloha (red-hot iron) hell. He who commits incest with a daughter-in-law or a daughter is cast into the Mahājwāla hell (or that of great flame): and he who is disrespectful to his spiritual guide, who is abusive to his betters, who reviles the Vedas, or who sells them, who associates with women in a prohibited degree, into the Lavaña (salt) hell. A thief and a contemnor of prescribed observances falls into Vimohana (the place of bewildering). He who hates his father, the Brahmans, and the gods, or who spoils precious gems, is punished in the Krimibhaksha hell (where worms are his food): and he who practises magic rites for the harm of others, in the hell called Krimīśa (that of insects). The vile wretch who eats his meal before offering food to the gods, to the manes, or to guests, falls into the hell called Lālābhaksha (where saliva is given for food). The maker of arrows is sentenced to the Vedhaka (piercing) hell: and the maker of lances, swords, and other weapons, to the dreadful hell called Viśasana (murderous). He who takes unlawful gifts goes to the Adhomukha (or head-inverted) hell; as does one who offers sacrifices to improper objects, and an observer of the stars (for the prediction of events). He who eats by himself sweetmeats mixed with his rice, and a Brahman who vends Lac, flesh, liquors, sesameum, or salt, or one who commits violence, fall into the hell (where matter flows, or) Pūyavāha; as do they who rear cats, cocks, goats, dogs, hogs, or birds. Public performers, fishermen, the follower of one born in adultery, a poisoner,

4 'Who teaches the Vedas for hire.' This notion still prevails, and renders the few Pandits who are acquainted with the Vedas very unwilling to teach them for a gratuity.

5 'Thereby,' observes the commentator, 'defrauding or disappointing children.'

6 Rangopajivina (रङ्गोपाजिविन): the commentator explains it wrestlers and boxers, but Ranga applies to any stage or arena.
PUNISHMENTS ACCORDING TO CRIMES.

an informer, one who lives by his wife's prostitution, one who attends to secular affairs on the days of the Parvas (or full and new moon, &c.), an incendiary, a treacherous friend, a soothsayer, one who performs religious ceremonies for rustics, and those who sell the acid Asclepias, used in sacrifices, go to the Rudhirändha hell (whose wells are of blood). He who destroys a bee-hive, or pillages a hamlet, is condemned to the Vaitarañí hell. He who causes impotence, trespasses on others' lands, is impure, or who lives by fraud, is punished in the hell called (black, or) Krishna. He who wantonly cuts down trees goes to the Asapatravana hell (the leaves of whose trees are swords): and a tender on sheep, and hunter of deer, to the hell termed Vahnijwálá (or fiery flame); as do those who apply fire to unbaked vessels (potters). The violator of a vow, and one who breaks the rules of his order, falls into the Sandansa (or hell of pincers): and the religious student who sleeps in the day, and is, though unconsciously, defiled; and they who, though mature, are instructed in sacred literature by their children, receive punishment in the hell called Śwabhojana (where they feed upon dogs). These hells, and hundreds and thousands of others, are the places in which sinners pay the penalty of their crimes. As numerous as are the offences that men commit, so many are the hells in which they are punished: and all who deviate from the duties imposed upon them by their caste and condition, whether in thought, word, or deed, are sentenced to punishment in the regions of the damned.

The gods in heaven are beheld by the inhabitants of hell, as they move with their heads inverted; whilst the gods, as they cast their eyes

---

7 The term in the text is Māhishika, which might mean a feeder of buffaloes; but the commentator quotes a text from the Smriti, authorizing the sense above followed.

8 This is the interpretation of Parvakári; it is also read Parvagámí, 'he who cohabits with his wife on prohibited days.'

9 An account of Nurna is found in only a few of the Puráṇas, and in less detail than in the text. The Bhágavata and Váyu have similar descriptions of them. The Márkañḍeya enters into detail in some of the instances only. A short account is found in the Śiva, Gaura, and Brahma Vaivarta P. and in the Káśi Khañḍa of the Skánda P. The fullest descriptions, however, are those mentioned in a previous note as being in the Śiva Dharma of the Skánda, and Kriya Yoga Sára of the Padma; works of a somewhat equivocal character, and belonging rather to Tántra than Pauránik literature.
downwards, behold the sufferings of those in hell. The various stages of existence, Maitreya, are inanimate things, fish, birds, animals, men, holy men, gods, and liberated spirits; each in succession a thousand degrees superior to that which precedes it: and through these stages the beings that are either in heaven or in hell are destined to proceed, until final emancipation be obtained. That sinner goes to Naraka who neglects the due expiation of his guilt.

For, Maitreya, suitable acts of expiation have been enjoined by the great sages for every kind of crime. Arduous penances for great sins, trifling ones for minor offences, have been propounded by Sáyambhuva and others: but reliance upon Krišna is far better than any such expiatory acts, as religious austerities, or the like. Let any one who repents of the sin of which he may have been culpable have recourse to this best of all expiations, remembrance of Hari: by addressing his thoughts to Náráyaṇa at dawn, at night, at sunset, and midday, a man shall be quickly cleansed from all guilt: the whole heap of worldly sorrows is dispersed by meditating on Hari; and his worshipper, looking upon heavenly fruition as an impediment to felicity, obtains final emancipation. He

10 The commentator observes that the sight of heavenly bliss is given to the dammed in order to exacerbate their torments; whilst the inflictions of hell are exhibited to the gods to teach them disregard of even heavenly enjoyments, as they are but of temporary duration.

11 That is, when punishment or reward in hell or heaven, proportioned to the sin or virtue of the individual, has been received, he must be born again as a stone or plant, and gradually migrate through the several inferior conditions, until he is once more born a man; his future state is then in his own power.

12 Manu is here especially intended, as the commentator observes.

13 This remembrance (संरक्षण) of Vishnu is the frequent reiteration of any or all of his names: hence the lower orders of Hindus procure a starling or parrot, that, in the act of teaching it to cry Ráma or Krišna or Rádá, they may themselves repeat these appellations; the simple recitation of which, even if accidentally, irreverently, or reluctantly performed, is meritorious. Thus according to the Vishnu Dharma Tantra:

Let a man ever and everywhere repeat the names of the discus-armed (Vishnu); for its repetition, even by one who is impure, is a means of purification. Hari removes all sins, even when invoked by evil-minded persons, as fire burns one by whom it is unwillingly approached.'
whose mind is devoted to Hari in silent prayer, burnt-offering, or adoration, is impatient even of the glory of the king of the gods. Of what avail is ascent to the summit of heaven, if it is necessary to return from thence to earth? How different is the meditation on Vásudeva, which is the seed of eternal freedom. Hence, Muni, the man who thinks of Vishńu, day and night, goes not to Naraka after death, for all his sins are atoned for.

Heaven (or Swarga) is that which delights the mind; hell (or Naraka) is that which gives it pain: hence vice is called hell; virtue is called heaven\textsuperscript{14}. The selfsame thing is applicable to the production of pleasure or pain, of malice or of anger. Whence then can it be considered as essentially the same with either? That which at one time is a source of enjoyment, becomes at another the cause of suffering; and the same thing may at different seasons excite wrath, or conciliate favour. It follows, then, that nothing is in itself either pleasurable or painful; and pleasure and pain, and the like, are merely definitions of various states of mind. That which alone is truth is wisdom; but wisdom may be the cause of confinement to existence; for all this universe is wisdom, there is nothing different from it; and consequently, Maitreyá, you are to conclude that both knowledge and ignorance are comprised in wisdom\textsuperscript{15}.

I have thus described to you the orb of the earth; the regions below its surface, or Pátálas; and the Narakas, or hells; and have briefly enumerated its oceans, mountains, continents, regions, and rivers: what else do you wish to hear?

\textsuperscript{14} The object of the text, according to the commentator, is to shew that the common notions of heaven and hell are erroneous; that they are only temporal pleasure and temporal pain; and virtue and vice, being the origin of transient, and therefore unreal effects, are themselves unrealities: there is nothing real but faith in Vishńu.

\textsuperscript{15} Text and comment are here somewhat obscure; but the purport of the former seems to be the explanation of the existence of Jñán wisdom, both as a genus and a species: in the former case it is all that is; and in the latter, it may be either true or false wisdom: the latter being influenced by notions of self or individuality, and therefore the cause of confinement to existence; the former dissipating the belief of self, and being therefore the cause of liberation from bodily being:
CHAP. VII.

Extent and situation of the seven spheres, viz. earth, sky, planets, Mahar-loka, Jana-loka, Tapo-loka, and Satya-loka. Of the egg of Brahmá, and its elementary envelopes. Of the influence of the energy of Vishúu.

Maitreya.—The sphere of the whole earth has been described to me by you, excellent Brahman, and I am now desirous to hear an account of the other spheres above the world, the Bhuvan-loka and the rest, and the situation and the dimensions of the celestial luminaries.

Parásara.—The sphere of the earth (or Bhúr-loka), comprehending its oceans, mountains, and rivers, extends as far as it is illuminated by the rays of the sun and moon; and to the same extent, both in diameter and circumference, the sphere of the sky (Bhuvan-loka) spreads above it (as far upwards as to the planetary sphere, or Swar-loka)\(^1\). The solar orb is situated a hundred thousand leagues from the earth; and that of the moon an equal distance from the sun. At the same interval above the moon occurs the orbit of all the lunar constellations. The planet Budha (Mercury) is two hundred thousand leagues above the lunar mansions. Šukra (Venus) is at the same distance from Mercury. Angárika (Mars) is as far above Venus; and the priest of the gods (Vrihaspati, or Jupiter) as far from Mars: whilst Saturn (Śani) is two hundred and fifty thousand leagues beyond Jupiter. The sphere of the seven Rishis (Ursa Major) is a hundred thousand leagues above Saturn; and at a similar height above the seven Rishis is Dhruva (the pole-star), the pivot or axis of the whole planetary circle. Such, Maitreya, is the elevation of the three spheres (Bhúr, Bhuvan, Swar) which form the region of the consequences of works. The region of works is here (or in the land of Bhárata)\(^2\).

---

\(^1\) Bhúr-loka, the terrestrial sphere, is earth and the lower regions; from thence to the sun is the Bhuvan-loka, or atmospheric sphere; and from the sun to Dhruva is the Swar-loka, or heaven; as subsequently explained in the text, and in other Puráñas.

\(^2\) A similar account of the situations and distances of the planets occurs in the Padma, Kúrma, and Váyu Puráñas. The Bhágavata has one or two varieties, but they are of no great importance.
Above Dhrūva, at the distance of ten million leagues, lies the sphere of saints, or Mahār-loka, the inhabitants of which dwell in it throughout a Kalpa, or day of Brahmā. At twice that distance is situated Jana-loka, where Sanandana and other pure-minded sons of Brahmā reside. At four times the distance, between the two last, lies the Tapo-loka (the sphere of penance), inhabited by the deities called Vaibhāras, who are unconsumable by fire. At six times the distance (or twelve Crores, a hundred and twenty millions of leagues) is situated Satya-loka, the sphere of truth, the inhabitants of which never again know death.

3 An account of these Lokas is met with only in a few of the Purāṇas, and is not much more detailed in them than in our text. The Vāyu is most circumstantial. According to that authority, Mahar, which is so called from a mystical term Mahā, is the abode of the Gaṅadevas, the Yānas and others, who are the regents or rulers of the Kalpa, the Kalpaḥikāris: they are so designated also in the Kūrma. The Kāśī Khaṇḍa refers the name to Mahās, ‘light,’ the sphere being invested with radiance (महास्वपुर). Its inhabitants are also called lords of the Kalpa; but the commentator explains this to denote Hṛṣīku and the other patriarchs, whose lives endure for a day of Brahmā. The different accounts agree in stating, that when the three lower spheres are consumed by fire, Mahar-loka is deserted by its tenants, who repair to the next sphere, or Jana-loka. Jana-loka, according to the Vāyu, is the residence of the Rāhūs and demigods during the night of Brahmā, and is termed Jana because the patriarchs are the progenitors of mankind. The Kāśī Khaṇḍa agrees with the Viṣṇu in peopling it with Sanandana and the other ascetic sons of Brahmā, and with Yogis like themselves. These are placed by the Vāyu in the Tapo-loka, and they and the other sages, and the demigods, after repeated appearances in the world, become at last Vairājas in the Brahmā or Satya-loka. After many divine ages of residence there with Brahmā, they are, along with him, absorbed, at the end of his existence, into the indiscernible: चचार हं च तत्त्वस्तिः शीतलस्वरूपम् नवतंत्रसु युक्तं द्वाराय।

The commentator on the Kāśī Khaṇḍa explains Vairāja to mean relating to, or derived from, Brahmā or Vīrāya: विरहस्तिभवति विरहस्तिभवति द्वाराय। The Vairājas are there, as in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, placed in the Tapo-loka, and are explained to be ascetics, mendicants, anchorites, and penitents, who have completed a course of rigorous austerities: रावनहेतु: विवशस्याद: त्रिगुणः प्राप्तीयोऽपि: स्वयम:। ब्राह्मणाः प्राप्तीयोऽपि: स्वयम:। It may be doubted, however, if the Paurāṇiks have very precise notions regarding these spheres and their inhabitants. The Purāṇas of a decidedly sectarian character add other and higher worlds to the series. Thus the Kūrma identifies Brahmā-loka with Viṣṇu-loka, and has a Rudra-loka above it. The Śiva places Viṣṇu-loka above Brahmā-loka, and Rudra-loka above that. In Wherever earthy substance exists, which may be traversed by the feet, that constitutes the sphere of the earth, the dimensions of which I have already recounted to you. The region that extends from the earth to the sun, in which the Siddhas and other celestial beings move, is the atmospheric sphere, which also I have described. The interval between the sun and Dhrūva, extending fourteen hundred thousand leagues, is called by those who are acquainted with the system of the universe the heavenly sphere. These three spheres are termed transitory: the three highest, Jana, Tapa, and Satya, are styled durable: Maharloka, as situated between the two, has also a mixed character; for although it is deserted at the end of the Kalpa, it is not destroyed. These seven spheres, together with the Pātālas, forming the extent of the whole world, I have thus, Maitreyā, explained to you.

The world is encompassed on every side and above and below by the shell of the egg of Brahmā, in the same manner as the seed of the wood-apple is invested by its rind. Around the outer surface of the shell flows water, for a space equal to ten times the diameter of the world. The waters, again, are encompassed exteriorly by fire; fire by air; and air by Mind; Mind by the origin of the elements (Ahankāra); and that by Intellect: each of these extends ten times the breadth of that which the Kāśi Khaṇḍa we have, instead of those two, Vaiṅkuntha and Kailāśa, as the lofty worlds of Vishnū and Śiva; whilst the Brahma Vaivartta has above all a Go-loka, a world or heaven of cows and Krishnā. These are all evidently additions to the original system of seven worlds, in which we have probably some relation to the seven climates of the ancients, the seven stages or degrees of the earth of the Arabs, and the seven heavens of the Mohammedans, if not to the seven Amahapāda of the Parsis. Seven, suggested originally perhaps by the seven planets, seems to have been a favourite number with various nations of antiquity. Amongst the Hindus it was applied to a variety of sacred or mythological objects, which are enumerated in a verse in the Hanumān Nātaka. Rāma is described there as piercing seven palm-trees with an arrow, on which other groups of seven take fright, as the seven steeds of the sun, the seven spheres, Munīs, seas, continents, and mothers of the gods: बप्राय:, शन नमस्ति सत मुनय सहाजय सतगया समगया: । यमेव सत शातायो अध्याहसमेतः महालयाय ॥

4 Kritika and Akritika; literally 'made and unmade:' the former being renewed every Kalpa, the latter perishing only at the end of Brahmā's life.

5 Of the Kapittha (Peronia Elephantum).
it encloses; and the last is encircled by the chief Principle, Pradhána, which is infinite, and its extent cannot be enumerated: it is therefore called the boundless and illimitable cause of all existing things, supreme nature, or Prakriti; the cause of all mundane eggs, of which there are thousands and tens of thousands, and millions and thousands of millions, such as has been described. Within Pradhána resides Soul, diffusive, conscious, and self-irradiating, as fire is inherent in flint, or sesame oil in its seed. Nature (Pradhána) and soul (Pumán) are both of the character of dependants, and are encompassed by the energy of Vishńu, which is one with the soul of the world, and which is the cause of the separation of those two (soul and nature) at the period of dissolution; of their aggregation in the continuance of things; and of their combination at the season of creation. In the same manner as the wind ruffles the surface of the water in a hundred bubbles, which of themselves are inert, so the energy of Vishńu influences the world, consisting of inert nature and soul. Again, as a tree, consisting of root, stem, and branches, springs from a primitive seed, and produces other seeds, whence grow other trees analogous to the first in species, product, and origin, so from the first unexpanded germ (of nature, or Pradhána) spring Mahat (Intel-

6 See before the order in which the elements are evolved (p. 14).
7 The followers of Anaximander and Democritus taught "an ἀπειρά κόσμον, 'an infinity of worlds;' and that not only successive in that space which this world of ours is conceived now to occupy, in respect of the infinity of past and future time, but also a contemporary infinity of coexistent worlds, at all times, throughout endless and unbounded space." Intellect. system, i. 303.
8 Literally "in wood," the attrition of two pieces of which does not create, but develops, their latent heat and flame.
9 Thus in Scipio's dream the divinity is made the external limit of the universe:

"Novem tibi orbibus vel potius globis connexa sunt omnia, quorum unus est celestis externus qui reliquis omnes complectitur, summus ipsa deus arcens et continens ceteros:" which Macrobius explains as to be understood of the Supreme First Cause of all things, only in respect of his supremacy over all, and from his comprehending as well as creating all things, and being regarded as the soul of the world: "Quod et virtutes omnes, quae illum prime omnipotentiam summitates sequuntur, aut ipsa faciat aut ipsa contineat: ipsum denique Jovem veteres vocaverunt, et apud theologos Jupiter est mundi anima." In Somn. Scip. c. XVII.
lect) and the other rudiments of things; from them proceed the grosser elements; and from them men and gods, who are succeeded by sons and the sons of sons. In the growth of a tree from the seed, no detriment occurs to the parent plant, neither is there any waste of beings by the generation of others. In like manner as space and time and the rest are the cause of the tree (through the materiality of the seed), so the divine Hari is the cause of all things by successive developments (through the materiality of nature). As all the parts of the future plant, existing in the seed of rice, or the root, the culm, the leaf, the shoot, the stem, the bud, the fruit, the milk, the grain, the chaff, the ear, spontaneously evolve when they are in approximation with the subsidiary means of growth (or earth and water), so gods, men, and other beings, involved in many actions (or necessarily existing in those states which are the consequences of good or evil acts), become manifested only in their full growth, through the influence of the energy of Vishnu.

This Vishnu is the supreme spirit (Brahma), from whence all this world proceeds, who is the world, by whom the world subsists, and in whom it will be resolved. That spirit (or Brahma) is the supreme state of Vishnu, which is the essence of all that is visible or invisible; with which all that is, is identical; and whence all animate and inanimate existence is derived. He is primary nature: he, in a perceptible form, is the world: and in him all finally melts; through him all things endure. He is the performer of the rites of devotion: he is the rite: he is the fruit which it bestows: he is the implements by which it is performed. There is nothing besides the illimitable Hari.

10 The two passages in parentheses are the additions of the commentator, intended to explain how the deity is the material cause of the world. He is not so of his own essence, not so immediately, but through the interposition of Pradhana: वषद्यं अवभि हे प्रधानाकर्तरं न सहस्रयोगिः भागः. 'As however he is the source of Prakriti, he must be considered the material as well as immaterial cause of being.'
CHAP. VIII.

Description of the sun: his chariot; its two axles: his horses. The cities of the regents of the cardinal points. The sun’s course: nature of his rays: his path along the ecliptic. Length of day and night. Divisions of time: equinoxes and solstices, months, years, the cyclical Yuga, or age of five years. Northern and southern declinations. Saints on the Lokáloka mountain. Celestial paths of the Pitrás, gods, Vishńu. Origin of Gangé, and separation, on the top of Meru, into four great rivers.

Parásara.—Having thus described to you the system of the world in general, I will now explain to you the dimensions and situations of the sun and other luminaries.

The chariot of the sun is nine thousand leagues in length, and the pole is of twice that longitude; the axle is fifteen millions and seven hundred thousand leagues long; on which is fixed a wheel with three naves, five spokes, and six peripheries, consisting of the ever-during year; the whole constituting the circle or wheel of time. The chariot has another axle, which is forty-five thousand five hundred leagues long.

1 The sun’s car is 10,000 Yojanas broad, and as many deep, according to the Váyu and Mataya. The Bhágavata makes it thirty-six hundred thousand long, and one fourth that broad. The Linga agrees with the text.

2 There is no great difference in this number in other accounts. The length of this axle, which extends from Meru to Máňasa, is nearly equal to the semidiameter of the earth, which, according to the Matatā P., is 18,950,000 Yojanas.

3 The three naves are the three divisions of the day, morning, noon, and night; the five spokes are the five cyclic years; and the six peripheries are the six seasons. The Bhágavata explains the three naves to be three periods of the year, of four months each, and gives twelve spokes as types of the twelve months. The Váyu, Mataya, and Bhavishya Puráṇás enter into much more detail. According to them, the parts of the wheel are the same as above described: the body of the car is the year; its upper and lower half are the two solstices; Dharma is its flag; Artha and Káma the pins of the yoke and axle; night is its fender; Nimeshas form its floor; a moment is the axle-tree; an instant the pole; minutes are its attendants; and hours its harness.

4 This shorter axle is, according to the Bhágavata, one fourth of the longer.
The two halves of the yoke are of the same length respectively as the two axles (the longer and the shorter). The short axle, with the short yoke, is supported by the pole-star: the end of the longer axle, to which the wheel of the car is attached, moves on the Mānasā mountain. The seven horses of the sun’s car are the metres of the Vedas, Gāyatrī, Vṛihatī, Ushñih, Jayatī, Trishtubh, Anushtubh, and Pankti.

The city of Indra is situated on the eastern side of the Mānasottara mountain; that of Yama on the southern face; that of Varuṇa on the west; and that of Soma on the north: named severally Vaswokasārā, Samyamanī, Mukhyā, and Vibhāvarī.

The glorious sun, Maitreya, darts like an arrow on his southern course, attended by the constellations of the Zodiac. He causes the difference between day and night, and is the divine vehicle and path of the sages who have overcome the afflictions of the world. Whilst the sun, who is the discriminator of all hours, shines in one continent in midday, in the opposite Dwīpas, Maitreya, it will be midnight: rising and setting are at all seasons, and are always (relatively) opposed in the different cardinal and intermediate points of the horizon. When the sun becomes visible to any people, to them he is said to rise; when he disappears from their

---

5 We are to understand here, both in the axle and yoke, two levers, one horizontal, the other perpendicular. The horizontal arm of the axle has a wheel at one end; the other extremity is connected with the perpendicular arm. To the horizontal arm of the yoke are harnessed the horses; and its inner or right extremity is secured to the perpendicular. The upper ends of both perpendiculars are supposed to be attached to Dhrux, the pole-star, by two aerial cords, which are lengthened in the sun’s southern course, and shortened in his northern; and retained by which to Dhrux, as to a pivot, the wheel of the car traverses the summit of the Mānasottara mountain on Pushkara-dwīpa, which runs like a ring round the several continents and oceans. The contrivance is commonly compared to an oil mill, and was probably suggested by that machine as constructed in India. As the Mānasottara mountain is but 50,000 leagues high, and Meru 84,000, whilst Dhruxa is 1500,000, both levers are inclined at obtuse angles to the nave of the wheel and each other. In images of the sun, two equal and semicircular axles connect a central wheel with the sides of the car.

6 In the Linga the city of Indra is called Amarāvati; and in it and the Vāyu that of Varuṇa is termed Sukhā.
view, that is called his setting. There is in truth neither rising nor setting of the sun, for he is always; and these terms merely imply his presence and his disappearance.

When the sun (at midday) passes over either of the cities of the gods, on the Mānasottara mountain (at the cardinal points), his light extends to three cities and two intermediate points: when situated in an intermediate point, he illuminates two of the cities and three intermediate points (in either case one hemisphere). From the period of his rise the sun moves with increasing rays until noon, when he proceeds towards his setting with rays diminishing (that is, his heat increases or diminishes in proportion as he advances to, or recedes from, the meridian of any place). The east and west quarters are so called from the sun’s rising and setting there. As far as the sun shines in front, so far he shines behind and on either hand, illuminating all places except the summit of Meru, the mountain of the immortals; for when his rays reach the court of Brahmā, which is there situated, they are repelled and driven back by the overpowering radiance which there prevails: consequently there is always the alternation of day and night, according as the divisions of the continent lie in the northern (or southern) quarter, or inasmuch as they are situated north (or south) of Meru.

7 The terms Pūrva and Apara mean properly ‘before and behind;’ but ‘before’ naturally denotes the east, either because men, according to a text of the Vedas, spontaneously face, as if to welcome the rising sun, or because they are enjoined by the laws so to do. When they face the rising sun, the west is of course behind them. The same circumstance determines the application of the term Dakshina, properly ‘right,’ दक्षिण, or ‘dexterum,’ to the south. Uttara, ‘other’ or ‘last,’ necessarily implies the north.

8 This is rather obscure, but it is made out clearly enough in the commentary, and in the parallel passages in the Vāyu, Mataysa, Linga, Kūrma, and Bhāgavata. The sun travels round the world, keeping Meru always on his right: to the spectator who fronts him therefore, as he rises, Meru must be always on the north; and as the sun’s rays do not penetrate beyond the centre of the mountain, the regions beyond, or to the north of it, must be in darkness; whilst those on the south of it must be in light: north and south being relative, not absolute terms, depending upon the position of the spectator with regard to the sun and to Meru. So the commentator: नाहं भृतित्वादिश्च न सूर्यं रूपं नव प्रथमं तत्र स तेनां त्वत्त्वं तेषां च सामवर्गं नेह्यं: श्रेष्ठं सहितं नेह्यं: तत: तत: नेह्यं: ज्ञातवर्गं शिष्ठ सदा.
The radiance of the solar orb, when the sun has set, is accumulated in fire, and hence fire is visible at a greater distance by night than by day: during the latter a fourth of the rays of fire blend with those of the sun, and from their union the sun shines with greater intensity by day. Elemental light, and heat derived from the sun or from fire, blending with each other, mutually prevail in various proportions, both by day and night. When the sun is present either in the southern or the northern hemisphere, day or night retires into the waters, according as they are invaded by darkness or light: it is from this cause that the waters look dark by day, because night is within them; and they look white by night, because at the setting of the sun the light of day takes refuge in their bosom.9

When the sun has travelled in the centre of Pushkara a thirtieth part of the circumference of the globe, his course is equal in time to one Muhúrta;10 and whirling round like the circumference of the wheel of a potter, he distributes day and night upon the earth. In the commencement of his northern course, the sun passes to Capricornus, thence to Aquarius, thence to Pisces, going successively from one sign of the Zodiac to another. After he has passed through these, the sun attains his equinoctial movement (the vernal equinox), when he makes the day and night of equal duration. Thenceforward the length of the night decreases, and the day becomes longer, until the sun reaches the end of Gemini, when he pursues a different direction, and, entering Cancer, begins his declension to the south. As the circumference of a potter's 9 Similar notions are contained in the Váyu.

10 The sun travels at the rate of one-thirtieth of the earth’s circumference in a Muhúrta, or 31.50,000 Yojanas; making the total 9 crores and 45 lakhs, or 9,45,00,000; according to the Váyu, Linga, and Mataya Puráñás.
RELATIVE DURATION OF DAY AND NIGHT.

wheel revolves most rapidly, so the sun travels rapidly on his southern journey: he flies along his path with the velocity of wind, and traverses a great distance in a short time. In twelve Muhúrttas he passes through thirteen lunar asterisms and a half during the day; and during the night he passes through the same distance, only in eighteen Muhúrttas. As the centre of the potter's wheel revolves more slowly than the circumference, so the sun in his northern path again revolves with less rapidity, and moves over a less space of the earth in a longer time, until, at the end of his northern route, the day is again eighteen Muhúrttas, and the night twelve; the sun passing through half the lunar mansions by day and by night in those periods respectively. As the lump of clay on the centre of the potter's wheel moves most slowly, so the polar-star, which is in the centre of the zodiacal wheel, revolves very tardily, and ever remains in the centre, as the clay continues in the centre of the wheel of the potter.

The relative length of the day or night depends upon the greater or less velocity with which the sun revolves through the degrees between the two points of the horizon. In the solstitial period, in which his diurnal path is quickest, his nocturnal is slowest; and in that in which he moves quick by night, he travels slowly by day. The extent of his journey is in either case the same; for in the course of the day and night he passes through all the signs of the Zodiac, or six by night, and the same number by day: the length and shortness of the day are measured by the extent of the signs; and the duration of day and night by the period which the sun takes to pass through them. The passage, which is somewhat at variance with the general doctrine, that the length of the day depends upon the velocity of the sun's course, and which has not been noticed in any other Paurāṇik text, is defended by the commentator, upon the authority of the Jyotish-śāstra, or astronomical writings. According to them, he asserts, the signs of the Zodiac are of different extent. Aquarius, Pisces, and Aries are the shortest; Taurus, Capricornus, and Gemini are something longer; Leo and Scorpio longer still; and the remaining four the longest of all. According to the six which the sun traverses, the day or night will be the longer or shorter. The text is, रात्रिसालासानि देवायाचक्षुषा खिनि । हथा निजां रात्रिर्न द्रयाधिक्षुसैन्ति ॥ declination the sun moves quickest by night, and slowest by day; in his southern declination the reverse is the case.

The apparent contradiction may however be reconciled by understanding the sun's slow motion, and the length of a sign, to be equivalent terms.

The night is called Ushá, and the day is denominated Vyushtá, and the interval between them is called Sandhyá. On the occurrence of the awful Sandhyá, the terrific fiends termed Mandehas attempt to devour the sun; for Brahmá denounced this curse upon them, that, without the power to perish, they should die every day (and revive by night), and therefore a fierce contest occurs daily between them and the sun 12. At this season pious Brahmans scatter water, purified by the mystical Omkára, and consecrated by the Gáyatri 13; and by this water, as by a thunderbolt, the foul fiends are consumed. When the first oblation is offered with solemn invocations in the morning rite 14, the thousand-rayed deity shines forth with unclouded splendour. Omkára is Vishnú the mighty, the substance of the three Vedas, the lord of speech; and by its enunciation those Rákshasas are destroyed. The sun is a principal part of Vishnú, and light is his immutable essence, the active manifestation of which is excited by the mystic syllable Om. Light diffused by the utterance of Omkára becomes radiant, and burns up entirely the Rákshasas called Mandehas. The performance of the Sandhyá (the morning) sacrifice must never therefore be delayed, for he who neglects it is guilty of the murder of the sun. Protected thus by the Brahmans and the pigmy sages called Bálakhilyas, the sun goes on his course to give light to the world.

12 The same story occurs in the Váyu, with the addition that the Mandehas are three crores in number. It seems to be an ancient legend, imperfectly preserved in some of the Puránás.

13 The sacred syllable Om has been already described (p. 1. n. 1). The Gáyatri, or holiest verse of the Vedas, not to be uttered to ears profane, is a short prayer to the sun, identified as the supreme, and occurs in the tenth hymn of the fourth section of the third Asháfaka of the Sanhitá of the Ríg-veda: तद्भवं च तद्युतं तदेत्य देहस्य, ॐ नः प्रणोदयात्. ‘We meditate on that excellent light of the divine sun: may he illuminate our minds.’ Such is the fear entertained of profaning this text, that copyists of the Vedas not infrequently refrain from transcribing it, both in the Sanhitá and Bháhya.

14 Or, in the text, with the prayer that commences with the words Súrya jyotir, ‘That which is in the sun (or light) is adorable,’ &c. The whole prayer is given in Colebrooke’s account of the religious ceremonies of the Hindus. As. Res. V. 351.
DIVISIONS OF TIME.

Fifteen twinklings of the eye (Nimeshas) make a Káśthá; thirty Káśthás, a Kalá; thirty Kalás, a Muhúrta (forty-eight minutes); and thirty Muhúrattas, a day and night: the portions of the day are longer or shorter, as has been explained; but the Sandhyá is always the same in increase or decrease, being only one Muhúrta. From the period that a line may be drawn across the sun (or that half his orb is visible) to the expiration of three Muhúrattas (two hours and twenty-four minutes), that interval is called Prátar (morning), forming a fifth portion of the day. The next portion, or three Muhúrattas from morning, is termed Sangava (noon): the three next Muhúrattas constitute mid-day: the afternoon comprises the next three Muhúrattas: the three Muhúrattas following are considered as the evening: and the fifteen Muhúrattas of the day are thus classed in five portions of three each. But the day consists of fifteen Muhúrattas only at the equinoxes, increasing or diminishing in number in the northern and southern declinations of the sun, when the day encroaches on the night, or the night upon the day. The equinoxes occur in the seasons of spring and autumn, when the sun enters the signs of Aries and Libra. When the sun enters Capricorn (the winter solstice), his northern progress commences; and his southern when he enters Cancer (the summer solstice).

Fifteen days of thirty Muhúrattas each are called a Paksha (a lunar fortnight); two of these make a month; and two months, a solar season; three seasons a northern or southern declination (Ayana); and those two compose a year. Years, made up of four kinds of months, are distin-

13 But this comprehends the two Sandhyás, 'morning and evening twilight.' Two Náris, or half a Muhúrta before sunrise, constitute the morning Sandhyá; and the same interval after sunset the evening. Sandhyá, meaning 'junction,' is so termed as it is the juncture or interval between darkness and light; as in the Váyu and Mataya: लोभावेंसि समस्ये समान नूयोंः परिवर्तनः त्र्यमालक्येन्ति त्र्याहुर्त्रपुष्पोऽथ जातारः.

16 The four months are named in the Váyu, and are, 1. the Saura, or solar-syndereal, consisting of the sun's passage through a sign of the Zodiac: 2. the Saumya or Chándra or lunar month, comprehending thirty lunations or Tithis, and reckoned most usually from new moon to new moon, though sometimes from full moon to full moon: 3. the Sávana or solar month, containing thirty days of sunrise and sunset: and 4. the Nákshatra or lunar guished into five kinds; and an aggregate of all the varieties of time is termed a Yuga, or cycle. The years are severally called Samvatsara, Parivatsara, Idvatsara, Anuvatsara, and Vatsara. This is the time called a Yuga 17.

The mountain range that lies most to the north (in Bhárratavarśa) is called Śringaván (the horned), from its having three principal elevations (horns or peaks), one to the north, one to the south, and one in the centre; the last is called the equinoctial, for the sun arrives there in the middle of the two seasons of spring and autumn, entering the equinoctial points in the first degree of Aries and of Libra, and making day and night of equal duration, or fifteen Muhárttas each. When the sun, most excellent sage, is in the first degree of the lunar mansion, Krittiká and the moon is in the fourth of Viśákhá; or when the sun is in the third asterismal month, which is the moon's revolution through the twenty-eight lunar mansions.

17 The five years forming this Yuga, or cycle, differ only in denomination, being composed of the months above described, with such Malamássas, or intercalary months, as may be necessary to complete the period, according to Vridha Garga. The cycle comprehends, therefore, sixty solar-sydereal months of 1800 days; sixty-one solar months, or 1830 days; sixty-two lunar months, or 1860 lunations; and sixty-seven lunar-asterismal months, or 1809 such days. Col. Warren, in his Kála Sankalitá, considers these years to be severally cycles. "In the cycle of sixty," he observes, "are contained five cycles of twelve years, each supposed equal to one year of the planet (Jupiter). I only mention this cycle because I found it mentioned in some books; but I know of no nation nor tribe that reckons time after that account. The names of the five cycles, or Yugs, are, 1. Samvatsara, 2. Parivatsara, 3. Idvatsara, 4. Anuvatsara, 5. Udravatsara. The name of each year is determined from the Nákashra, in which Vr̄haśpati sets and rises heliacally, and they follow in the order of the lunar months." K. S. 212. It may be reasonably doubted, however, if this view be correct; and the only connexion between the cycle of five years and that of Vr̄haśpati may be the multiplication of the former by the latter (5 × 12), so as to form the cycle of sixty years: a cycle based, the commentator remarks, upon the conjunction (Yuga) of the sun and moon in every sixtieth year. The original and properly Indian cycle, however, is that of five years, as Bentley remarks. "The astronomers of this period (1181 B.C.) framed a cycle of five years for civil and religious ceremonies." Ancient and modern Hindu Astronomy. It is in fact, as Mr. Colebrooke states, the cycle of the Vedas, described in the Jyotish, or astronomical sections, and specified in the institutes of Parásara as the basis of calculation for larger cycles. As. Res. VIII. 470.
degree of Viśākhā, and the moon is in the head of Krittikā (these positions being cotemporary with the equinoxes), that equinoctial season is holy (and is styled the Mahávishubha, or the great equinox)\textsuperscript{18}. At this time offerings are to be presented to the gods and to the manes, and gifts are to be made to the Brahmans by serious persons; for such donations are productive of happiness. Liberality at the equinoxes is always advantageous to the donor: and day and night; seconds, minutes, and hours; intercalary months; the day of full moon (Paurnamásī); the day of conjunction (Amávásya), when the moon rises invisible; the day when it is first seen (Śiniváli); the day when it first disappears (Kuhó); the day when the moon is quite round (Ráká); and the day when one digit is deficient (Anumati), are all seasons when gifts are meritorious.

The sun is in his northern declination in the months Tapas, Tapasya, Madhu, Mádhava, Śukra, and Śuchi; and in his southern in those of Nabhas, Nabhasya, Isha, Úrja, Sahas, Sahasya\textsuperscript{19}.

On the Lokáloka mountain, which I have formerly described to you, \textsuperscript{18} Reference is here made apparently, though indistinctly, to those positions of the planets which indicate, according to Bentley, the formation of the lunar mansions by Hindu astronomers, about 1424 B.C. Hindu Astronomy, p. 3 and 4. The Váyu and Linga Puránas specify the positions of the other planets at the same time, or the end, according to the former, of the Chákshusha Manwantara. At that time the sun was in Viśākhā, the moon in Krittikā, Venus in Pushyá, Jupiter in Púrvapalguni, Mars in Asháthá, Budha in Dhanishchá, Sani in Revati, Ketu in Asleshá, and Ráhu in Bharani. There are differences between some of these and the positions cited by Bentley, but most of them are the same. He considers them to have been observations of the occultations of the moon by the planets, in the respective lunar mansions, 1424–5 B.C.

According to the Váyu, these positions or origins of the planets are from the Vedas: अत्यासपतिकृतिः प्रथमा अवस्था इति सुचिः. The Linga, less accurately perhaps, reads श्रीमते: referring it to the works of law.

\textsuperscript{19} These are the names of the months which occur in the Vedas, and belong to a system now obsolete, as was noticed by Sir Wm. Jones. As. Res. III. 258. According to the classification of the text, they correspond severally with the lunar months Mágha, Pháguna, Chaitra, Vaiśākhā, Jyeshtá, Ashátha, or from December to June; and with Sráváná, Bhádra, Aswina, Kántika, Agraháyana, and Pausha, from July to December. From this order of the two series of the months, as occurring in the Vedas, Mr. Colebrooke infers, upon astronomical computations, their date to be about fourteen centuries prior to the Christian era. As. Res. VII. 283.
Path of the Pitrás.

Reside the four holy protectors of the world, or Sudháman and Sankhápad, the two sons of Kardama, and Hiranyaroman, and Ketumáta. Unaffected by the contrasts of existence, void of selfishness, active, and unencumbered by dependants, they take charge of the spheres, themselves abiding on the four cardinal points of the Lokáloka mountain.

On the north of Agastya, and south of the line of the Goat, exterior to the Vaiswánara path, lies the road of the Pitrás. There dwell the great 20 The Váyu has the same names, but ascribes a different descent to the first, making Sudháman the son of Virája. Sankhápad is the son of Kardama: the other two are the sons of Parjanya and Rajas, consistently with the origin ascribed to these Loka pálas in the patriarchal genealogies of that Puránya (see p. 83).

21 Allusion is here made to some divisions of the celestial sphere which are not described in any other part of the text. The fullest, but still in some respects a confused and partly inaccurate account is given in the Mátaya Puránya; but a more satisfactory description occurs in the comment on the Bhágavata, there cited from the Váyu, but not found in the copies consulted on the present occasion. According to those details, the path (Márga) of the sun and other planets amongst the lunar asterisms is divided into three portions or Avasháhásas, northern, southern, and central, called severally Airávata, Járagává (Ajává, Mátaya P.), and Vaisvána. Each of these, again, is divided into three parts or Víthás: those of the northern portion are termed Nágavíthi, Gajavíthi, and Airaváti; those of the centre are Árahabhí, Govíthi, and Járagává; and those of the south are named Ajavíthi, Mrigavíthi, and Vaisvánári. Each of these Víthás comprises three asterisms.

See also As. Res. IX. table of Nakshatras, 345. Agastya is Canopus; and the line of the goat, or Ajavíthi, comprises asterisms which contain stars in Scorpio and Sagittarius.
PATH OF THE GODS.

Rishis, the offerers of oblations with fire, reverencing the Vedas, after whose injunctions creation commenced, and who were discharging the duties of ministrant priests: for as the worlds are destroyed and renewed, they institute new rules of conduct, and reestablish the interrupted ritual of the Vedas. Mutually descending from each other, progenitor springing from descendant, and descendant from progenitor, in the alternating succession of births, they repeatedly appear in different houses and races along with their posterity, devout practices and instituted observances, residing to the south of the solar orb, as long as the moon and stars endure.

The path of the gods lies to the north of the solar sphere, north of the Nāgavīthī, and south of the seven Rishis. There dwell the Siddhas, of subdued senses, continent and pure, undesirous of progeny, and therefore victorious over death: eighty-eight thousand of these chaste beings tenant the regions of the sky, north of the sun, until the destruction of the universe: they enjoy immortality, for that they are holy; exempt from covetousness and concupiscence, love and hatred; taking no part in the procreation of living beings, and detecting the unreality of the properties of elementary matter. By immortality is meant existence to the end of the Kalpa: life as long as the three regions (earth, sky, and heaven) last is called exemption from (reiterated) death. The consequences of acts of iniquity or piety, such as Brahmanicide or an Āśwamedha, endure for a similar period, or until the end of a Kalpa, when all within the interval between Dhruba and the earth is destroyed.

22 A marginal note in one MS. explains the phrase of the text, चरणन्तरस्य, to signify as far as to the moon and stars; पृथ्वियान्तरस्य, or path of the Pitris, lies amongst the asterisms; and, according to the Paurānic system of the heavens, it is not clear what could be meant by its being bounded by the moon and stars. The path south of the solar orb is, according to the Vedas, that of smoke or darkness.

23 The stars of the Nāgavīthī are those of Aries and Taurus; and by the seven Rishis we are here to understand Ursa Major.

24 This, according to the Vedas, is all that is to be understood of the immortality of the gods: they perish at the period of universal dissolution.

25 That is, generally as affecting created beings, not individuals, whose acts influence their several successive births.
The space between the seven Rishis and Dhrúva, the third region of the sky, is the splendid celestial path of Vishúu (Vishúupada), and the abode of those sanctified ascetics who are cleansed from every soil, and in whom virtue and vice are annihilated. This is that excellent place of Vishúu to which those repair in whom all sources of pain are extinct, in consequence of the cessation of the consequences of piety or iniquity, and where they never sorrow more. There abide Dharma, Dhrúva, and other spectators of the world, radiant with the superhuman faculties of Vishúu, acquired through religious meditation; and there are fastened and inwoven to all that is, and all that shall ever be, animate or inanimate. The seat of Vishúu is contemplated by the wisdom of the Yogis, identified with supreme light, as the radiant eye of heaven. In this portion of the heavens the splendid Dhrúva is stationed, and serves for the pivot of the atmosphere. On Dhrúva rest the seven great planets, and on them depend the clouds. The rains are suspended in the clouds, and from the rains come the water which is the nutriment and delight of all, the gods and the rest; and they, the gods, who are the receivers of oblations, being nourished by burnt-offerings, cause the rain to fall for the support of created beings. This sacred station of Vishúu, therefore, is the support of the three worlds, as it is the source of rain.

From that third region of the atmosphere, or seat of Vishúu, proceeds the stream that washes away all sin, the river Gangá, embrowned with the unguents of the nymphs of heaven, who have sported in her waters. Having her source in the nail of the great toe of Vishúu's left foot, Dhrúva receives her, and sustains her day and night devoutly on his head; and thence the seven Rishis practise the exercises of austerity in her waters, wreathing their braided locks with her waves. The orb of the moon, encompassed by her accumulated current, derives augmented lustre from her contact. Falling from on high, as she issues from the moon, she alights on the summit of Meru, and thence flows to the four 26 From Ursa Major to the polar star.

27 The popular notion is, that Síva or Mahádeva receives the Ganges on his head; but this, as subsequently explained, is referred, by the Vaishnávas at least, to the descent of the Alaksanánda, or Ganges of India, not to the celestial Ganges.
quarters of the earth, for its purification. The Śíṭá, Alakanandá, Chakshu, and Bhadrá are four branches of but one river, divided according to the regions towards which it proceeds. The branch that is known as the Alakanándá was borne affectionately by Mahádeva, upon his head, for more than a hundred years, and was the river which raised to heaven the sinful sons of Sagra, by washing their ashes. The offences of any man who bathes in this river are immediately expiated, and unprecedented virtue is engendered. Its waters, offered by sons to their ancestors in faith for three years, yield to the latter rarely attainable gratification. Men of the twice-born orders, who offer sacrifice in this river to the lord of sacrifice, Purushottama, obtain whatever they desire, either here or in heaven. Saints who are purified from all soil by bathing in its waters, and whose minds are intent on Kéśava, acquire thereby final liberation. This sacred stream, heard of, desired, seen, touched, bathed in, or hymned, day by day, sanctifies all beings; and those who, even at a distance of a hundred leagues, exclaim “Gáŋgá, Gáŋgá,” atone for the sins committed during three previous lives. The place whence this river proceeds, for the purification of the three worlds, is the third division of the celestial regions, the seat of Vishnú.

29 Or, in other words, ‘flows into the sea.’ The legend here alluded to is more fully detailed in a subsequent book. 30 The situation of the source of the Ganges of heaven identifies it with the milky way.
CHAP. IX.

Planetary system, under the type of a Śīṣumāra or porpoise. The earth nourished by the sun. Of rain whilst the sun shines. Of rain from clouds. Rain the support of vegetation, and thence of animal life. Nārāyaṇa the support of all beings.

The form of the mighty Hari which is present in heaven, consisting of the constellations, is that of a porpoise, with Dhruva situated in the tail. As Dhruva revolves, it causes the moon, sun, and stars to turn round also; and the lunar asterisms follow in its circular path; for all the celestial luminaries are in fact bound to the polar-star by aerial cords. The porpoise-like figure of the celestial sphere is upheld by Nārāyaṇa, who himself, in planetary radiance, is seated in its heart; whilst the son of Uttanápáda, Dhruva, in consequence of his adoration of the lord of the world, shines in the tail of the stellar porpoise. The upholder of the porpoise-shaped sphere is the sovereign of all, Janârddana. This sphere is the supporter of Dhruva; and by Dhruva the sun is upstayed. Upon the sun depends this world, with its gods, demons, and men. In what manner the world depends upon the sun, be attentive, and you shall hear.

During eight months of the year the sun attracts the waters, which are the essence of all fluids, and then pours them upon earth (during the other four months) as rain: from rain grows corn; and by corn the whole world subsists. The sun with his scorching rays absorbs the moisture of the earth, and with them nourishes the moon. The moon communicates, through tubes of air, its dews to the clouds, which, being composed of smoke, fire, and wind (or vapour), can retain the waters with which they are charged: they are therefore called Abhras, because their contents are not dispersed. When however they are broken to 1 A more particular description of this porpoise occurs farther on.

2 Consequently, the Linga P. observes, there is no waste of water in the universe, as it is in constant circulation: तथा नाश न्याया नास्तिक दृश्यकालःि।
3 The theory of the clouds is more fully detailed in the Vāyu, Linga, and Mataya.
pieces by the wind, then watery stores descend, bland, and freed from every impurity by the sweetening process of time. The sun, Maitreya, exhales watery fluids from four sources, seas, rivers, the earth, and living creatures. The water that the sun has drawn up from the Gangâ of the skies he quickly pours down with his rays, and without a cloud; and men who are touched by this pure rain are cleansed from the soil of sin, and never see hell: this is termed celestial ablution. That rain which falls whilst the sun is shining, and without a cloud in the sky, is the water of the heavenly Ganges, shed by the solar rays. If, however, rain falls from a bright and cloudless sky whilst the sun is in the mansion of Kritti, and the other asterisms counted by odd numbers, as the third, fifth, &c., the water, although that of the Gangâ of the sky, is scattered by the elephants of the quarters, not by the rays of the sun: it is only when such rain falls, and the sun is in the even asterisms, that it is distributed by his beams.

The water which the clouds shed upon earth is in truth the ambrosia of living beings, for it gives fertility to the plants which are the support of their existence. By this all vegetables grow and are matured, and become the means of maintaining life. With them, again, those men Purâñas: it is the same in its general tenor, but comprises additional circumstances. Clouds, according to those authorities, are of three classes: 1. Agnaya, originating from fire or heat, or in other words evaporation: they are charged with wind and rain, and are of various orders, amongst which are those called Jimûta, from their supporting life; 2. Brahma, born from the breath of Brahma: these are the clouds whence thunder and lightning proceed: and 3. Pakshaya, or clouds which were originally the wings of the mountains, and which were cut off by Indra: these are also termed Pushkârvartakas, from their including water in their vortices: they are the largest and most formidable of all, and are those which, at the end of the Yugas and Kalpas, pour down the waters of the deluge. The shell of the egg of Brahma, or of the universe, is formed of the primitive clouds.

According to the Vayu, the water scattered by the elephants of the quarters is in summer dew, and in winter snow; or the latter is brought by the winds from a city called Purâdra, which lies between the Himavat and Hemakuta mountains, and falls down upon the former. In like manner, also, as heat radiates from the sun, so cold radiates from the moon.
who take the law for their light perform daily sacrifices, and through them give nourishment to the gods. And thus sacrifices, the Vedas, the four castes, with the Brahmans at their head, all the residences of the gods, all the tribes of animals, the whole world, all are supported by the rains by which food is produced. But the rain is evolved by the sun; the sun is sustained by Dhruva; and Dhruva is supported by the celestial porpoise-shaped sphere, which is one with Náraýána. Náraýána, the primeval existent, and eternally enduring, seated in the heart of the stellar sphere, is the supporter of all beings.
CHAP. X.

Names of the twelve Adityas. Names of the Rishis, Gandharbas, Apsarasas, Yakhas, Uragas, and Rākshasas, who attend the chariot of the sun in each month of the year. Their respective functions.

Parāśara.—Between the extreme northern and southern points the sun has to traverse in a year one hundred and eighty degrees, ascending and descending. His car is presided over by divine Adityas, Rishis, heavenly singers and nymphs, Yakhas, serpents, and Rākshasas (one of each being placed in it in every month). The Aditya Dhátri, the sage Pulastya, the Gandharba Tumburu, the nymph Kratuśthalá, the Yaksha Rathakrit, the serpent Vásuki, and the Rākshas Heti, always reside in the sun’s car, in the month of Madhu or Chaitra, as its seven guardians. In Vaiśākh or Mādhava the seven are Áryamat, Pulaha, Náreda, Punjikásthali, Rathaujas, Kachaníra, and Praheiti. In Śuchi or Jyeshtha they are Mitra, Atri, Háhá, Mená, Rathaswana, Takshaka, and Paurusheya. In the month Sukra or Áśádhá they are Varuá, Vaśishtha, Hubu, Sahajanyá, Rathachitra, Nága, and Budha. In the month Nabhas (or Srávaña) they are Indra, Angiras, Visvávasu, Pramlochá, Śrotas, and Elapatra (the name of both serpent and Rākshas). In the month Bhádarapada they are Vivaswat, Bhrigu, Ugrasena, Anumlocha, Ápáraña, Śankhapála, and Vyághra. In the month of Áswin they are Pushan, Gautama, Suruchi, Ghrítáchá, Sushena, Dhananjaya, and Váta. In the month of Kartik they are Parjanya, Bharadvája, (another) Visvávasu, Visváchá, Senajit, Airávata, and Chápa. In Agraśáyana or Márgaśírsha they are Ánsu, Kaśyapa, Chitrásena, Urvasi, Tárkshya, Mahápadma, and Vidyut. In the month of Pausha, Bhaga, Kratu, Urñáyu, Purva-

1 It might be doubted whether the text meant 180 in each hemisphere or in both, but the sense is sufficiently clear in the Váyu, &c., and the number of Maṇḍalas travelled in the year is 360: the Maṇḍalas, ‘circles’ or ‘degrees,’ being in fact the sun’s diurnal revolutions, and their numbers corresponding with the days of the solar year; as in the Bhavishya P.: ये ग्रह तन्त्रप्रतिनिधिस्वरूपं है मन्दालाः।

The horses of the sun travel twice 180 degrees in a year, internal and external (to the equator), in the order of the days.'
chittí, Arishtanemi, Karkotaka, and Sphúrja are the seven who abide in the orb of the sun, the glorious spirits who scatter light throughout the universe. In the month of Mágha the seven who are in the sun are Twashtri, Jamadagni, Dhritarashtra, Tilottamá, Ritajit, Kambala, and Brahmápeta. Those who abide in the sun in the month Phálguna are Vishúu, Visvamitra, Súryaverchchhas, Rambahá, Satyajit, Aswatara, and Yajnápeta.

In this manner, Maitreya, a troop of seven celestial beings, supported by the energy of Vishúu, occupies during the several months the orb of the sun. The sage celebrates his praise, and the Gandharba sings, and the nymph dances before him: the Rákshas attends upon his steps, the serpent harnesses his steeds, and the Yaksha trims the reins: the numerous pigmy sages, the Bálakhilyas, ever surround his chariot. The whole troop of seven, attached to the sun’s car, are the agents in the distribution of cold, heat, and rain, at their respective seasons².

² A similar enumeration of the attendants upon the sun’s car occurs in the Váyu, &c. For Yakshas, the generic term there employed is Grámáśis, but the individuals are the same. The Kúrma and Bhavishya refer the twelve Ādityas to different months:—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vaisn.</th>
<th>Kúrma</th>
<th>Bhavishya</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Dhrátri</td>
<td>Cháitra</td>
<td>Vaśákha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Áryamát</td>
<td>Vaisákha</td>
<td>Cháitra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mitra</td>
<td>Jyeshthá</td>
<td>Márgaśírsha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Varuúśa</td>
<td>Áshálda</td>
<td>Mágha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Indra</td>
<td>Śraváña</td>
<td>Jyeshthá</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vivasvat</td>
<td>Bhádra</td>
<td>Śraváña</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Puśhán</td>
<td>Áswina</td>
<td>Phálguna</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parjanya</td>
<td>Kártyka</td>
<td>Áswina</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ánsu</td>
<td>Márgaśírsha</td>
<td>Áshálda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhaga</td>
<td>Puasha</td>
<td>Bhádra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twashtri</td>
<td>Mágha</td>
<td>Kártyka</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vishúu</td>
<td>Phálguna</td>
<td>Puasha</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CHAP. XI.

The sun distinct from, and supreme over, the attendants on his car: identical with the three Vedas and with Vishnu: his functions.

MAITREYA.—You have related to me, holy preceptor, the seven classes of beings who are ever present in the solar orb, and are the causes of heat and cold: you have also described to me their individual functions, sustained by the energy of Vishnu: but you have not told me the duty of the sun himself; for if, as you say, the seven beings in his sphere are the causes of heat, cold, and rain, how can it be also true, as you have before mentioned, that rain proceeds from the sun? or how can it be asserted that the sun rises, reaches the meridian, or sets, if these situations be the act of the collective seven.

Praśara.—I will explain to you, Maitreya, the subject of your inquiry. The sun, though identified with the seven beings in his orb, is distinct from them as their chief. The entire and mighty energy of Vishnu, which is called the three Vedas, or Rich, Yajush, and Sāman, is that which enlightens the world, and destroys its iniquity. It is that also which, during the continuance of things, is present as Vishnu, actively engaged in the preservation of the universe, and abiding as the three Vedas within the sun. The solar luminary, that appears in every month, is nothing else than that very supreme energy of Vishnu which is composed of the three Vedas, influencing the motions of the planet; for the Richas (the hymns of the Rig-veda) shine in the morning, the prayers of the Yajush at noon, and the Vrihadrahatentara and other portions of the Sāman in the afternoon. This triple impersonation of Vishnu, distinguished by the titles of the three Vedas, is the energy of Vishnu, which influences the positions of the sun.

1 This mysticism originates in part apparently from a misapprehension of metaphors of the Vedas, such as वैश्वास चम्के निशा तपरिशि: 'that triple knowledge (the Vedas) shines,' and परम्परा 'the hymns of the Rich shine,' and in part from the symbolization of the light of religious truth by the light of the
The triple energy of Vishńu, in the sun.

But this triple energy of Vishńu is not limited to the sun alone, for Brahmá, Purusha (Vishńu), and Rudra are also made up of the same triform essence. In creation it is Brahmá, consisting of the Rig-veda; in preservation it is Vishńu, composed of the Yajur-veda; and in destruction Rudra, formed of the Sáma-veda, the utterance of which is consequently inauspicious 2.

Thus the energy of Vishńu, made up of the three Vedas, and derived from the property of goodness, presides in the sun, along with the seven beings belonging to it; and through the presence of this power the planet shines with intense radiance, dispersing with his beams the darkness that spreads over the whole world; and hence the Munis praise him, the quiristers and nymphs of heaven sing and dance before him, and fierce spirits and holy sages attend upon his path. Vishńu, in the form of his active energy, never either rises or sets, and is at once the sevenfold sun and distinct from it. In the same manner as a man approaching a mirror, placed upon a stand, beholds in it his own image, so the energy (or reflection) of Vishńu is never disjoined (from the sun's car, which is the stand of the mirror), but remains month by month in the sun (as in the mirror), which is there stationed.

The sovereign sun, oh Brahman, the cause of day and night, perpetually revolves, affording delight to the gods, to the progenitors, and to mankind. Cherished by the Sushumna ray of the sun 3, the moon is fed to the full in the fortnight of its growth; and in the fortnight of its wane the ambrosia of its substance is perpetually drunk by the immortals, until the last day of the half month, when the two remaining digits are drunk by the progenitors: hence these two orders of beings are nourished sun, as in the Gáyatrí, p. 222, n. 13. To these are to be added the sectarian notions of the Vaishńavas.

2 The formulae of the Sáma-veda are not to be used along with those of the Rich and Yajush, at sacrifices in general.

3 The Váyu, Linga, and Matsya P. specify several of the rays of the sun from amongst the many thousands which they say proceed from him. Of these, seven are principal, termed Sushumna, Hariqueśa, Viśwakarman, Viśwakárya, Sampadvasu, Arvavasu, and Swaráj, supplying heat severally to the moon, the stars, and to Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn.
The sun, Maitreya, satisfies the wants of the gods for a fortnight (at a time); those of the progenitors once a month; and those of men and other animals daily.
CHAP. XII.

Description of the moon: his chariot, horses, and course: fed by the sun: drained periodically of ambrosia, by the progenitors and gods. The chariots and horses of the planets: kept in their orbits by aerial chains attached to Dhruva. Typical members of the planetary porpoise. Vasudeva alone real.

Parāśara.—The chariot of the moon has three wheels, and is drawn by ten horses, of the whiteness of the Jasmine, five on the right half (of the yoke), five on the left. It moves along the asterisms, divided into ranges, as before described; and, in like manner as the sun, is upheld by Dhruva; the cords that fasten it being tightened or relaxed in the same way, as it proceeds on its course. The horses of the moon, sprung from the bosom of the waters\(^1\), drag the car for a whole Kalpa, as do the coursers of the sun. The radiant sun supplies the moon, when reduced by the draughts of the gods to a single Kalā, with a single ray; and in the same proportion as the ruler of the night was exhausted by the celestials, it is replenished by the sun, the plunderer of the waters: for the gods, Maitreya, drink the nectar and ambrosia accumulated in the moon during half the month, and from this being their food they are immortal. Thirty-six thousand three hundred and thirty-three divinities drink the lunar ambrosia. When two digits remain, the moon enters the orbit of the sun, and abides in the ray called Amā; whence the period is termed Amāvāsyā. In that orbit the moon is immersed for a day and night in the water; thence it enters the branches and shoots of the trees; and thence goes to the sun. Consequently any one who cuts off a branch, or casts down a leaf, when the moon is in the trees (the day of its rising invisible), is guilty of Brahmanicide. When the remaining portion of the moon consists of but a fifteenth part, the progenitors approach it in the afternoon, and drink the last portion, that sacred Kalā which is composed of ambrosia, and contained in the two digits of चरां गतिस्युपलो रथः. The orb of the moon, according to the Linga, is only congealed water; चन्द्रेऽहार्ग्य तत्र मध्यं अक्षिण: शुद्धः. as that of the sun is concentrated heat; चन्द्रेऽहार्ग्य तत्र मध्यं भास्कर्ष्यः.

\(^1\) So is the car, according to the Vāyu:

the form of the moon. Having drank the nectar effused by the lunar rays on the day of conjunction, the progenitors are satisfied, and remain tranquil for the ensuing month. These progenitors (or Pitris) are of three classes, termed Saumyas, Varishhadas, and Agnishwattas. In this manner the moon, with its cooling rays, nourishes the gods in the light fortnight, the Pitris in the dark fortnight; vegetables, with the cool nectary aqueous atoms it sheds upon them; and through their development it sustains men, animals, and insects; at the same time gratifying them by its radiance.

The chariot of the son of Chandra, Budha or Mercury, is composed of the elementary substances air and fire, and is drawn by eight bay horses of the speed of the wind. The vast car of Śukra (Venus) is drawn by earth-born horses, is equipped with a protecting fender and a floor, armed with arrows, and decorated by a banner. The splendid car of 9 There is some indistinctness in this account, from a confusion between the division of the moon's surface into sixteen Kalás or phases, and its apportionment, as a receptacle of nectar, into fifteen Kalás or digits, corresponding to the fifteen lunations, on the fourteenth of which, during the wane, the gods drink the amrita, and on the fifteenth of which the Pitris exhaust the remaining portion. The correspondence of the two distinctions appears to be intended by the text, which terms the remaining digit or Kalás, composed of Amrita, the form or superficies of the two Kalás: विस्तारकार्यार्था कला या मुच्छुकृतक्षीति हात्री रिपिन्द्। This, the commentator observes, is the fifteenth, not the sixteenth: पंचदशी कला या तां चिरा निर्बंध न हु ग्रही। The commentator on our text observes, also, that the passage is sometimes read विस्तार रात्रे। Lava meaning 'a moment,' 'a short period.' The Matsya and Váyu express the parallel passage so as to avoid all perplexity, by specifying the two Kalás as referring to time, and leaving the number of nectarous Kalás undefined: पिन्छे विस्तार कला व विस्तारित्य चल्लं। 'They, the Pitris, drink the remaining Kalás in two Kalás of time.' Col. Warren explains Kalá, or, as he writes it, Calá, in one of its acceptations, 'the phases of the moon, of which the Hindus count sixteen.' Kála Sankalita, 359. So the Bhávavata terms the moon, क दशा चोद्वंकले पुष्चिः भवायाः । and the Váyu, after noticing the exhaustion of the fifteenth portion on the day of conjunction, states the recurrence of increase or wane to take place in the sixteenth phase at the beginning of each fortnight: सूक्ष्मच यी रे पर्वाहि चोद्वंकले ग्रही।

8 The Váyu and Matsya add a fourth class, the Kavyas; identifying them with the cyclic years; the Saumyas and Agnishwattas with the seasons; and the Varishhadas with the months.

4 The Váyu makes the horses ten in number, each of a different colour.
Bhauma (Mars) is of gold, of an octagonal shape, drawn by eight horses, of a ruby red, sprung from fire. Vrihaspati (Jupiter), in a golden car drawn by eight pale-coloured horses, travels from sign to sign in the period of a year: and the tardy-paced Śani (Saturn) moves slowly along in a car drawn by piebald steeds. Eight black horses draw the dusky chariot of Rāhu, and once harnessed are attached to it for ever. On the Parvas (the nodes, or lunar and solar eclipses), Rāhu directs his course from the sun to the moon, and back again from the moon to the sun. The eight horses of the chariot of Ketu are of the dusky red colour of Lac, or of the smoke of burning straw.

I have thus described to you, Maitreya, the chariots of the nine planets, all which are fastened to Dhruva by aerial cords. The orbs of all the planets, asterisms, and stars are attached to Dhruva, and travel accordingly in their proper orbits, being kept in their places by their respective bands of air. As many as are the stars, so many are the chains of air that secure them to Dhruva; and as they turn round, they cause the pole-star also to revolve. In the same manner as the oil-man himself, going round, causes the spindle to revolve, so the planets travel round, suspended by cords of air, which are circling round a (whirling) centre. The air, which is called Pravaha, is so termed because it bears along the planets, which turn round, like a disc of fire, driven by the aerial wheel.

The celestial porpoise, in which Dhruva is fixed, has been mentioned, but you shall hear its constituent parts in more detail, as it is of great efficacy; for the view of it at night expiates whatever sin has been committed during the day; and those who behold it live as many years as there are stars in it, in the sky, or even more. Uttānapāda is to be considered as its upper jaw; Sacrifice as its lower. Dharma is situated on its brow; Nārāyaṇa in its heart. The Āswins are its two fore feet;

5 The Matsya, Līnga, and Vāyu add the circumstance of Rāhu's taking up, on these occasions, the circular shadow of the earth: वरिष्ठा वरिष्ठा च वरिष्ठा-हिंसिंहत् महस्मातृत्।
6 The different bands of air attached to Dhruva are, according to the commentator, varieties of the Pravaha wind; but the Kārma and Līnga enumerate seven principal winds which perform this function, of which the Pravaha is one.
THE NATURE OF CREATED THINGS.

and Varuṇa and Áryamat its two hinder legs. Samvatsara is its sexual organ; Mitra its organ of excretion. Agni, Mahendra, Kaśyapa, and Dhruva, in succession, are placed in its tail; which four stars in this constellation never set.

I have now described to you the disposition of the earth and of the stars; of the insular zones, with their oceans and mountains, their Varshas or regions, and their inhabitants: their nature has also been explained, but it may be briefly recapitulated.

From the waters, which are the body of Vishúu, was produced the lotus-shaped earth, with its seas and mountains. The stars are Vishúu; the worlds are Vishúu; forests, mountains, regions, rivers, oceans are Vishúu: he is all that is, all that is not. He, the lord, is identical with knowledge, through which he is all forms, but is not a substance. You must conceive therefore mountains, oceans, and all the diversities of earth and the rest, are the illusions of the apprehension. When knowledge is pure, real, universal, independent of works, and exempt from defect, then the varieties of substance, which are the fruit of the tree of desire, cease to exist in matter. For what is substance? Where is the thing that is devoid of beginning, middle, and end, of one uniform

7 The four last are therefore stars in the circle of perpetual apparition. One of these is the pole-star; and in Kaśyapa we have a verbal affinity to Cassiopeia. The Sīṣumāra, or porpoise, is rather a singular symbol for the celestial sphere; but it is not more preposterous than many of the constellations of classical fiction. The component parts of it are much more fully detailed in the Bhágavata, whence it has been translated by Sir Wm. Jones. As. Res. II. 402. The Bhágavata, however, mystifies the description, and says it is nothing more than the Dharānā, or symbol, by which Vishúu, identified with the starry firmament, is to be impressed upon the mind in meditation. The account of the planetary system is, as usual, fullest in the Váyu, with which the Línga and Matsya nearly agree. The Bhaviśhya is nearly, also, the same. They all contain many passages common to them and to our text. In the Agni, Padma, Kúrma, Brāhma, Garuda, and Vámana deceptions occur which enter into less detail than the Vishúu, and often use its words, or passages found in other Puráñas. Many intimations of a similar system occur in the Vedas, but whether the whole is to be found in those works is yet to be ascertained. It must not be considered as a correct representation of the philosophical astronomy of the Hindus, being mixed up with, and deformed by, mythological and symbolical fiction.
nature? How can reality be predicated of that which is subject to change, and reassumes no more its original character? Earth is fabricated into a jar; the jar is divided into two halves; the halves are broken to pieces; the pieces become dust; the dust becomes atoms. Say, is this reality? though it be so understood by man, whose self-knowledge is impeded by his own acts. Hence, Brahman, except discriminative knowledge, there is nothing any where, or at any time, that is real. Such knowledge is but one, although it appear manifold, as diversified by the various consequences of our own acts. Knowledge perfect, pure, free from pain, and detaching the affections from all that causes affliction; knowledge single and eternal—is the supreme Vásudeva, besides whom there is nothing. The truth has been thus communicated to you by me; that knowledge which is truth; from which all that differs is false. That information, however, which is of a temporal and worldly nature has also been imparted to you; the sacrifice, the victim, the fire, the priests, the acid juice, the gods, the desire for heaven, the path pursued by acts of devotion and the rest, and the worlds that are their consequences, have been displayed to you. In that universe which I have described, he for ever migrates who is subject to the influence of works; but he who knows Vásudeva to be eternal, immutable, and of one unchanging, universal form, may continue to perform them, as thereby he enters into the deity.

8 Only, however, as far as they are intended to propitiate Vishńu, and not for any other purpose.
CHAP. XIII.

Legend of Bharata. Bharata abdicates his throne, and becomes an ascetic: cherishes a fawn, and becomes so much attached to it as to neglect his devotions: he dies: his successive births: works in the fields, and is pressed as a palankin-bearer for the Rájá of Sauvíra: rebuked for his awkwardness: his reply: dialogue between him and the king.

Maitreya.—Reverend sir¹, all that I asked of you has been thoroughly explained: namely, the situation of the earth, oceans, mountains, rivers, and planetary bodies; the system of the three worlds, of which Vishúu is the stay. The great end of life has also been expounded by you, and the preeminence of holy knowledge. It now remains that you fulfil the promise you made some time since², of relating to me the story of king Bharata, and how it happened that a monarch like him, residing constantly at the sacred place Śálagráma, and engaged in devotion, with his mind ever applied to Vásudeva, should have failed, through the sanctity of the shrine, and the efficacy of his abstractions, to obtain final emancipation; how it was that he was born again as a Brahman; and what was done by the magnanimous Bharata in that capacity: all this it is fit that you inform me.

Parásara.—The illustrious monarch of the earth resided, Maitreya, for a considerable period at Śálagráma, his thoughts being wholly dedicated to god, and his conduct distinguished by kindness and every virtue, until he had effected, in the highest degree, the entire control over his mind. The Rájá was ever repeating the names, Yajneśa, Achyuta, Govinda, Mádhava, Ananta, Keśava, Krishña, Vishúu, Hrishikeśa; nothing else did he utter, even in his dreams; nor upon anything but those names, and their import, did he ever meditate. He accepted fuel, flowers, and holy grass, for the worship of the deity, but

¹ One copy addresses Parásara, Bhagavan sarvabhutesa, 'Sacred sovereign, lord of all creatures;' rather an unusual title for a sage, even though an inspired one.
² The other two copies begin, Samyagákhya-tam, 'All has been thoroughly explained.'
² See page 164.
performed no other religious rites, being engrossed by disinterested, abstract devotion.

On one occasion he went to the Mahánadí, for the purpose of ablution: he bathed there, and performed the ceremonies usual after bathing. Whilst thus occupied, there came to the same place a doe big with young, who had come out of the forest to drink of the stream. Whilst quenching her thirst, there was heard on a sudden the loud and fearful roaring of a lion; on which the doe, being excessively alarmed, jumped out of the water upon the bank. In consequence of this great leap, her fawn was suddenly brought forth, and fell into the river; and the king, seeing it carried away by the current, caught hold of the young animal, and saved it from being drowned. The injury received by the deer, by her violent exertion, proved fatal, and she lay down, and died; which being observed by the royal ascetic, he took the fawn in his arms, and returned with it to his hermitage: there he fed it and tended it every day, and it throve and grew up under his care. It frolicked about the cell, and grazed upon the grass in its vicinity; and whenever it strayed to a distance, and was alarmed at a wild beast, it ran back thither for safety. Every morning it sallied forth from home, and every evening returned to the thatched shelter of the leafy bower of Bharata.

Whilst the deer was thus the inmate of his hermitage, the mind of the king was ever anxious about the animal, now wandering away, and now returning to his side, and he was unable to think of anything else. He had relinquished his kingdom, his children, all his friends, and now indulged in selfish affection for a fawn. When absent for a longer time than ordinary, he would fancy that it had been carried off by wolves, devoured by a tiger, or slain by a lion. "The earth," he would exclaim, "is embrowned by the impressions of its hoofs. What has become of the young deer, that was born for my delight? How happy I should be

---

3 The Mahánadí is properly a river in Orissa, but the name is applicable to any great stream, and its connexion with Sálagrama Tirtha makes it probable that it is intended for the Gandaki or Gandaka, in which the Sálagram or Ammonite is most abundantly found. It may be here noticed that Sálagrama is named amongst the Tirthas in the Mahábhárata: see p. 163, n. 6.
if he had returned from the thicket, and I felt his budding antlers rubbing against my arm. These tufts of sacred grass, of which the heads have been nibbled by his new teeth, look like pious lads chanting the Sáma-veda. Thus the Muni meditated whenever the deer was long absent from him; and contemplated him with a countenance animated with pleasure as he stood by his side. His abstraction was interrupted, the spirit of the king being engrossed by the fawn, even though he had abandoned family, wealth, and dominion. The firmness of the prince’s mind became unsteady, and wandered with the wanderings of the young deer. In the course of time the king became subject to its influence. He died, watched by the deer, with tears in its eyes, like a son mourning for his father; and he himself, as he expired, cast his eyes upon the animal, and thought of nothing else, being wholly occupied with one idea.

In consequence of this predominant feeling at such a season, he was born again, in the Jambumárga forest, as a deer, with the faculty of recollecting his former life; which recollection inspiring a distaste for the world, he left his mother, and again repaired to the holy place Sálagráma. Subsisting there upon dry grass and leaves, he atoned for the acts which had led to his being born in such a condition; and upon his death he was next born as a Brahman, still retaining the memory of his prior existence. He was born in a pious and eminent family of ascetics, who were rigid observers of devotional rites. Possessed of all true wisdom, and acquainted with the essence of all sacred writings, he beheld soul as contradistinguishing from matter (Prakriti). Embued with knowledge of self, he beheld the gods and all other beings as in reality the same. It did not happen to him to undergo investiture with the Brahmanical thread, nor to read the Vedas with a spiritual preceptor, nor to perform ceremonies, nor to study the scriptures. Whenever spoken to, he replied incoherently and in ungrammatical and unpolished

---

4 The applicability of this simile is not explained by the commentator: it refers possibly to the cropped or shaven heads of the religious students.

5 According to the Bhágavata, Jambumárga is the Kálanjara mountain or Kálanjár in Bundelkhand.
speech. His person was unclean, and he was clad in dirty garments. Saliva dribbled from his mouth, and he was treated with contempt by all the people. Regard for the consideration of the world is fatal to the success of devotion. The ascetic who is despised of men attains the end of his abstractions. Let therefore a holy man pursue the path of the righteous, without murmuring; and though men condemn him, avoid association with mankind. This, the counsel of Hiraṇyagarbha, did the Brahman call to mind, and hence assumed the appearance of a crazy idiot in the eyes of the world. His food was raw pulse, potherbs, wild fruit, and grains of corn. Whatever came in his way he ate, as part of a necessary, but temporary infliction. Upon his father’s death he was set to work in the fields by his brothers and his nephews, and fed by them with vile food; and as he was firm and stout of make, and a simpleton in outward act, he was the slave of every one that chose to employ him, receiving sustenance alone for his hire.

The head servant of the king of Sauvīra, looking upon him as an indolent, untaught Brahman, thought him a fit person to work without pay (and took him into his master’s service to assist in carrying the palankin.)

The king having ascended his litter, on one occasion, was proceeding to the hermitage of Kapila, on the banks of the Ikshumati river, to consult the sage, to whom the virtues leading to liberation were known, what was most desirable in a world abounding with care and sorrow. Amongst those who by order of his head servant had been compelled gratuitously to carry the litter was the Brahman, who had been equally pressed into this duty, and who, endowed with the only universal knowledge, and remembering his former existence, bore the burden as the means of expiating the faults for which he was desirous to atone. Fixing his eyes upon the pole, he went tardily along, whilst the other

---

6 Hiraṇyagarbha or Brahmac is named here instead of the Yoga doctrine, which is sometimes ascribed to him as its author.
7 As a Kāla sanyama (कालसंयम), a state of suffering or mortification lasting only for a season; or, in other words, bodily existence; the body being contemplated as a sore, for which food is the unguent; drink, the lotion; and dress, the bandage.
8 A river in the north of India.
bearers moved with alacrity; and the king, feeling the litter carried unevenly, called out, "Ho bearers! what is this? Keep equal pace together." Still it proceeded unsteadily, and the Rájá again exclaimed, "What is this? how irregularly are you going!" When this had repeatedly occurred, the palankin-bearers at last replied to the king, "It is this man, who lags in his pace." "How is this?" said the prince to the Brahman, "are you weary? You have carried your burden but a little way; are you unable to bear fatigue? and yet you look robust." The Brahman answered and said, "It is not I who am robust, nor is it by me that your palankin is carried. I am not wearied, prince, nor am I incapable of fatigue." The king replied, "I clearly see that you are stout, and that the palankin is borne by you; and the carriage of a burden is wearisome to all persons." "First tell me," said the Brahman, "what it is of me that you have clearly seen? and then you may distinguish my properties as strong or weak. The assertion that you behold the palankin borne by me, or placed on me, is untrue. Listen, prince, to what I have to remark. The place of both the feet is the ground; the legs are supported by the feet; the thighs rest upon the legs; and the belly reposes on the thighs; the chest is supported by the belly; and the arms and shoulders are propped up by the chest: the palankin is borne upon the shoulders, and how can it be considered as my burden? This body which is seated in the palankin is defined as Thou; thence what is elsewhere called This, is here distinguished as I and Thou. I and thou and others are constructed of the elements; and the elements, following the stream of qualities, assume a bodily shape; but qualities, such as goodness and the rest, are dependant upon acts; and acts, accumulated in ignorance, influence the condition of all beings. The pure, imperishable soul, tranquil, void of qualities, preeminent over nature (Prakriti), is one, without increase or diminution, in all bodies. But if it be equally exempt from increase or diminution, then with what propriety

---

9 That is, What have you discerned of me, my body, life, or soul?

10 The condition—that is, the personal individuality—of any one is the consequence of his acts; but the same living principle animates him which is common to all living things.
can you say to me, 'I see that thou art robust?' If the palankin rests on the shoulders, and they on the body; the body on the feet, and the feet on the earth; then is the burden borne as much by you as by me. When the nature of men is different, either in its essence or its cause, then may it be said that fatigue is to be undergone by me. That which is the substance of the palankin is the substance of you and me and all others, being an aggregate of elements, aggregated by individuality."

Having thus spoken, the Brahman was silent, and went on bearing the palankin; but the king leaped out of it, and hastened to prostrate himself at his feet; saying, "Have compassion on me, Brahman, and cast aside the palankin; and tell me who thou art, thus disguised under the appearance of a fool." The Brahman answered and said, "Hear me, Rájá. Who I am it is not possible to say: arrival at any place is for the sake of fruition; and enjoyment of pleasure, or endurance of pain, is the cause of the production of the body. A living being assumes a corporeal form to reap the results of virtue or vice. The universal cause of all living creatures is virtue or vice: why therefore inquire the cause (of my being the person I appear)." The king said, "Undoubtedly virtue and vice are the causes of all existent effects, and migration into several bodies is for the purpose of receiving their consequences; but with respect to what you have asserted, that it is not possible for you to tell me who you are, that is a matter which I am desirous to hear explained. How can it be impossible, Brahman, for any one to declare himself to be that which he is? There can be no detriment to one's-self from applying to it the word I." The Brahman said, "It is true that there is no wrong done to that which is one's-self by the application to it of the word I; but the term is characteristic of error, of conceiving that to be the self (or soul) which is not self or soul. The tongue articulates the word I, aided by the lips, the teeth, and the palate; and these are the origin of the expression, as they are the causes of the production of speech. If by these instruments speech is able to utter the word I, it is nevertheless \[11\] The body is not the individual; therefore it is not the individual, but the body, or eventually the earth, which bears the burden.

improper to assert that speech itself is \( I \). The body of a man, characterized by hands, feet, and the like, is made up of various parts; to which of these can I properly apply the denomination \( I \)? If another being is different specifically from me, most excellent monarch, then it may be said that this is \( I \); that is the other: but when one only soul is dispersed in all bodies, it is then idle to say, Who are you? who am I? Thou art a king; this is a palankin; these are the bearers; these the running footmen; this is thy retinue: yet it is untrue that all these are said to be thine. The palankin on which thou sittest is made of timber derived from a tree. What then? is it denominated either timber or a tree? People do not say that the king is perched upon a tree, nor that he is seated upon a piece of wood, when you have mounted your palankin. The vehicle is an assemblage of pieces of timber, artificially joined together: judge, prince, for yourself in what the palankin differs really from the wood. Again; contemplate the sticks of the umbrella, in their separate state. Where then is the umbrella? Apply this reasoning to thee and to me. A man, a woman, a cow, a goat, a horse, an elephant, a bird, a tree, are names assigned to various bodies, which are the consequences of acts. Man is neither a god, nor a man, nor a brute, nor a tree; these are mere varieties of shape, the effects of acts. The thing which in the world is called a king, the servant of a king, or by any other appellation, is not a reality; it is the creature of our imaginations: for what is there in the world, that is subject to vices, that does not in the course of time go by different names. Thou art called the monarch of the world; the son of thy father; the enemy

\[ \text{12 That is, speech, or any or all of the faculties or senses, is not soul.} \]

\[ \text{13 The aggregate limbs and senses no more constitute the individual, than each individual stick constitutes the umbrella. Whether separate or conjoined, therefore, the parts of the body are mere matter; and as matter does not make up man, they do not constitute an individual.} \]

\[ \text{14 The term in this and the preceding clause is Pumán; here used generically, there specifically.} \] of thy foes; the husband of thy wife; the father of thy children. What shall I denominate thee? How art thou situated? Art thou the head or the belly? or are they thine? Art thou the feet? or do they belong to thee? Thou art, oh king, distinct in thy nature from all thy members! Now then, rightly understanding the question, think who I am; and how it is possible for me, after the truth is ascertained (of the identity of all), to recognise any distinction, or to speak of my own individuality by the expression I."
CHAP. XIV.

Dialogue continued. Bharata expounds the nature of existence, the end of life, and the identification of individual with universal spirit.

PARÁŚARA.—Having heard these remarks, full of profound truth, the king was highly pleased with the Brahman, and respectfully thus addressed him: “What you have said is no doubt the truth; but in listening to it my mind is much disturbed. You have shewn that to be discriminative wisdom which exists in all creatures, and which is the great principle that is distinct from plastic nature; but the assertions—‘I do not bear the palankin—the palankin does not rest upon me—the body, by which the vehicle is conveyed, is different from me—the conditions of elementary beings are influenced by acts, through the influence of the qualities, and the qualities are the principles of action;’—what sort of positions are these. Upon these doctrines entering into my ears, my mind, which is anxious to investigate the truth, is lost in perplexity. It was my purpose, illustrious sage, to have gone to Kapila Rishi, to inquiere of him what in this life was the most desirable object: but now that I have heard from you such words, my mind turns to you, to become acquainted with the great end of life. The Rishi Kapila is a portion of the mighty and universal Vishúu, who has come down upon earth to dissipate delusion; and surely it is he who, in kindness to me, has thus manifested himself to me in all that you have said. To me, thus suppliant, then, explain what is the best of all things; for thou art an ocean overflowing with the waters of divine wisdom.” The Brahman replied to the king, “You, again, ask me what is the best of all things, not what is the great end of life; but there are many things which are considered best, as well as those which are the great ends (or truths) of life. To him who, by the worship of the gods, seeks for wealth, prosperity, children, or dominion, each of these is respectively best. Best is the rite or sacrifice, that is rewarded with heavenly pleasures. Best is that which yields the best recompense, although it be not solicited. Self-contemplation, ever practised by devout ascetics, is to them the best. But best of all is the identification of soul with the supreme spirit. Hundreds and thousands of conditions may be called the best; but these are not the great and true ends of life. Hear what those are. Wealth cannot be the true end of life, for it may be relinquished through virtue, and its characteristic property is expenditure for the gratification of desire. If a son were final truth, that would be equally applicable to a different source; for the son that is to one the great end of life, becomes the father of another. Final or supreme truth, therefore, would not exist in this world, as in all these cases those objects which are so denominated are the effects of causes, and consequently are not finite. If the acquisition of sovereignty were designated by the character of being the great end of all, then finite ends would sometimes be, and sometimes cease to be. If you suppose that the objects to be effected by sacrificial rites, performed according to the rules of the Rik, Yajur, and Sáma Vedas, be the great end of life, attend to what I have to say. Any effect which is produced through the causality of earth partakes of the character of its origin, and consists itself of clay; so any act performed by perishable agents, such as fuel, clarified butter, and Kuṣa grass, must itself be of but temporary efficacy. The great end of life (or truth) is considered by the wise to be eternal; but it would be transient, if it were accomplished through transitory things. If you imagine that this great truth is the performance of religious acts, from which no recompense is sought, it is not so; for such acts are the means of obtaining liberation, and truth is (the end), not the means. Meditation on self, again, is said to be for the sake of supreme truth; but the object of this is to establish distinctions (between soul and body), and the great truth of all is without distinctions. Union of self with supreme spirit is said to be the great end of all; but this is false; for one substance cannot become substantially another. Objects, then, which are considered most desirable are infinite. What the great end of all is, you shall, monarch, briefly learn from me. It is soul: one (in all bodies), pervading, uniform, perfect, preeminent over nature (Prakriti), exempt from birth, growth, and decay, omnipresent, undecaying, made up of true knowledge, independent, and unconnected with unrealities, with name, species, and the rest, in time present, past, or to come. The knowledge that this spirit, which is essentially one, is in one's own and in all other bodies, is the great end, or true wisdom, of one who knows the unity and the true principles of things. As one diffusive air, passing through the perforations of a flute, is distinguished as the notes of the scale (Sherga and the rest), so the nature of the great spirit is single, though its forms be manifold, arising from the consequences of acts. When the difference of the investing form, as that of god or the rest, is destroyed, then there is no distinction."

1 You ask what is Sreyas (स्रेयस्), not what is Paramártha (प्रभार्थ); the first means literally ’best,’ ’most excellent,’ and is here used to denote temporary and special objects, or sources of happiness, as wealth, posterity, power, &c.; the latter is the one great object or end of life, true wisdom or truth, knowledge of the real and universal nature of soul.

But this is to be understood as applying to the doctrines which distinguish between the vital spirit (Jivátmá) and the supreme spirit (Paramátmá), the doctrine of the Yoga. It is here argued, that it is absurd to talk of effecting a union between the soul of man and supreme soul; for if they are distinct essentially, they cannot combine; if they are already one and the same, it is nonsense to talk of accomplishing their union. The great end of life or truth is not to effect the union of two things, or two parts of one thing, but to know that all is unity.
CHAP. XV.

Bharata relates the story of Ribhu and Nidágha. The latter, the pupil of the former, becomes a prince, and is visited by his preceptor, who explains to him the principles of unity, and departs.

Parásara continued.—Having terminated these remarks, the Brahman repeated to the silent and meditating prince a tale illustrative of the doctrines of unity. "Listen, prince," he proceeded, "to what was formerly uttered by Ribhu, imparting holy knowledge to the Brahman Nidágha. Ribhu was a son of the supreme Brahmá, who, from his innate disposition, was of a holy character, and acquainted with true wisdom. Nidágha, the son of Pulastya, was his disciple; and to him Ribhu communicated willingly perfect knowledge, not doubting of his being fully confirmed in the doctrines of unity, when he had been thus instructed.

"The residence of Pulastya was at Víranagara, a large handsome city on the banks of the Devíká river. In a beautiful grove adjoining to the stream the pupil of Ribhu, Nidágha, conversant with devotional practices, abode. When a thousand divine years had elapsed, Ribhu went to the city of Pulastya, to visit his disciple. Standing at the doorway, at the end of a sacrifice to the Viśwadevas, he was seen by his scholar, who hastened to present him the usual offering, or Arghya, and conducted him into the house; and when his hands and feet were washed, and he was seated, Nidágha invited him respectfully to eat (when the following dialogue ensued):

"Ribhu. 'Tell me, illustrious Brahman, what food there is in your house; for I am not fond of indifferent viands.'

"Nidágha. 'There are cakes of meal, rice, barley, and pulse in the house; partake, venerable sir, of whichever best pleses you.'

"Ribhu. 'None of these do I like; give me rice boiled with sugar, wheaten cakes, and milk with curds and molasses.'

"Nidágha. 'Ho dame, be quick, and prepare whatever is most delicate and sweet in the house, to feed our guest.'
"Having thus spoken, the wife of Nidāgha, in obedience to her husband's commands, prepared sweet and savoury food, and set it before the Brahman; and Nidāgha, having stood before him until he had eaten of the meal which he had desired, thus reverentially addressed him:

"Nidāgha. 'Have you eaten sufficiently, and with pleasure, great Brahman? and has your mind received contentment from your food? Where is your present residence? whither do you purpose going? and whence, holy sir, have you now come?'

"Ribhu. 'A hungry man, Brahman, must needs be satisfied when he has finished his meal. Why should you inquire if my hunger has been appeased? When the earthy element is parched by fire, then hunger is engendered; and thirst is produced when the moisture of the body has been absorbed (by internal or digestive heat). Hunger and thirst are the functions of the body, and satisfaction must always be afforded me by that by which they are removed; for when hunger is no longer sensible, pleasure and contentment of mind are faculties of the intellect: ask their condition of the mind then, for man is not affected by them. For your three other questions, Where I dwell? Whither I go? and Whence I come? hear this reply. Man (the soul of man) goes everywhere, and penetrates every where, like the ether; and is it rational to inquire where it is? or whence or whither thou goest. I neither am going nor coming, nor is my dwelling in any one place; nor art thou, thou; nor are others, others; nor am I, I. If you wonder what reply I should make to your inquiry why I made any distinction between sweetened and unsweetened food, you shall hear my explanation. What is there that is really sweet or not sweet to one eating a meal? That which is sweet, is no longer so when it occasions the sense of repletion; and that which is not sweet, becomes sweet when a man (being very hungry) fancies that it is so. What food is there that first, middle, and last is equally grateful. As a house built of clay is strengthened by fresh plaster, so is this earthly body supported by earthly particles; and barley, wheat, pulse, butter, oil, milk, curds, treacle, fruits, and the like, are composed of atoms of earth. This therefore is to be understood by you, that the mind which properly judges of what is or is not sweet is impressed with the notion of identity, and that this effect of identity tends to liberation.

"Having heard these words, conveying the substance of ultimate truth, Nidágha fell at the feet of his visitor, and said, 'Shew favour unto me, illustrious Brahman, and tell me who it is that for my good has come hither, and by whose words the infatuation of my mind is dissipated.' To this, Ribhu answered, 'I am Ribhu, your preceptor, come hither to communicate to you true wisdom; and having declared to you what that is, I shall depart. Know this whole universe to be the one undivided nature of the supreme spirit, entitled Vásudeva.' Thus having spoken, and receiving the prostrate homage of Nidágha, rendered with fervent faith, Ribhu went his way."
CHAP. XVI.

Ribhu returns to his disciple, and perfects him in divine knowledge. The same recommended to the Rájá by Bharata, who thereupon obtains final liberation. Consequences of hearing this legend.

"AFTER the expiration of another thousand years, Ribhu again repaired to the city where Nídágha dwelt, to instruct him farther in true wisdom. When he arrived near the town, he beheld a prince entering into it, with a splendid retinue; and his pupil Nídágha standing afar off, avoiding the crowd; his throat shrivelled with starvation, and bearing from the thicket fuel and holy grass. Ribhu approached him, and saluting him reverentially (as if he was a stranger) demanded why he was standing in such a retired spot. Nídágha replied, 'There is a great crowd of people attending the entrance of the king into the town, and I am staying here to avoid it.' 'Tell me, excellent Brahman,' said Ribhu, 'for I believe that thou art wise, which is here the king, and which is any other man.' 'The king,' answered Nídágha, 'is he who is seated on the fierce and stately elephant, vast as a mountain peak; the others are his attendants.' 'You have shewn me,' observed Ribhu, 'at one moment the elephant and the king, without noticing any peculiar characteristic by which they may be distinguished. Tell me, venerable sir, is there any difference between them? for I am desirous to know which is here the elephant, which is the king.' 'The elephant,' answered Nídágha, 'is underneath; the king is above him. Who is not aware, Brahman, of the relation between that which bears and that which is borne?' To this Ribhu rejoined, 'Still explain to me, according to what I know of it, this matter: what is it that is meant by the word underneath, and what is it that is termed above?' As soon as he had uttered this, Nídágha jumped upon Ribhu, and said, 'Here is my answer to the question you have asked: I am above, like the Rájá; you are underneath, like the elephant. This example, Brahman, is intended for your information.' 'Very well,' said Ribhu, 'you, it seems, are as it were the Rájá, and I am like the elephant; but come now do you tell me which of us two is you; which is I.'

3 u
"When Nidāgha heard these words, he immediately fell at the feet of the stranger, and said, 'Of a surety thou art my saintly preceptor Ribhu; the mind of no other person is so fully imbued with the doctrines of unity as that of my teacher, and hence I know that thou art he.' To this Ribhu replied, 'I am your preceptor, by name Ribhu, who, pleased with the dutiful attention he has received, has come to Nidāgha to give him instruction: for this purpose have I briefly intimated to you divine truth, the essence of which is the non-duality of all.' Having thus spoken to Nidāgha, the Brahman Ribhu went away, leaving his disciple profoundly impressed, by his instructions, with belief in unity. He beheld all beings thenceforth as the same with himself, and, perfect in holy knowledge, obtained final liberation.

"In like manner do thou, oh king, who knowest what duty is, regarding equally friend or foe, consider yourself as one with all that exists in the world. Even as the same sky is apparently diversified as white or blue, so Soul, which is in truth but one, appears to erroneous vision distinct in different persons. That One, which here is all things, is Achyuta (Vishńu); than whom there is none other. He is I; he is thou; he is all: this universe is his form. Abandon the error of distinction."

Parāśara resumed.—The king, being thus instructed, opened his eyes to truth, and abandoned the notion of distinct existence: whilst the Brahman, who, through the recollection of his former lives, had acquired perfect knowledge, obtained now exemption from future birth. Whoever narrates or listens to the lessons inculcated in the dialogue between Bharata and the king, has his mind enlightened, mistakes not the nature of individuality, and in the course of his migrations becomes fitted for ultimate emancipation.¹

¹ This legend is a good specimen of a sectarian graft upon a Pauráńik stem. It is in a great measure peculiar to the Vishńu P., as although it occurs also in the Bhágavata, it is narrated there in a much more concise manner, and in a strain that looks like an abridgment of our text.
VISHṆU PURĀṆA.

BOOK III.

CHAP. I.

Account of the several Manus and Manwantaras. Swárochisha the second Manu: the divinities, the Indra, the seven Rishis of his period, and his sons. Similar details of Auttami, Tāmasya, Raivata, Chákshusha, and Vaivasvata. The forms of Vishnú, as the preserver, in each Manwantara. The meaning of Vishnú.

MAITREYA.—The disposition of the earth and of the ocean, and the system of the sun and the planets, the creation of the gods and the rest, the origin of the Rishis, the generation of the four castes, the production of brute creatures, and the narratives of Dhruva and Prahláda, have been fully related by thee, my venerable preceptor. I am now desirous to hear from you the series of all the Manwantaras, as well as an account of those who preside over the respective periods, with Śakra, the king of the gods, at their head.

PARÁŚARA.—I will repeat to you, Maitreya, in their order, the different Manwantaras; those which are past, and those which are to come.

The first Manu was Swáyambhuva, then came Swárochisha, then Auttami, then Tāmasya, then Raivata, then Chákshusha: these six Manus have passed away. The Manu who presides over the seventh Manwantara, which is the present period, is Vaivasvata, the son of the sun.

The period of Swáyambhuva Manu, in the beginning of the Kalpa, has already been described by me, together with the gods, Rishis, and other personages, who then flourished 1. I will now, therefore, enumerate

1 The gods were said to be the Yámas (p. 54); the Rishis were Maríchi, Angiras, &c. (p. 49. n. 2); and the sons were Priyavrata and Utánaspáda (p. 53). The Váyu adds to the Yamas, the Ajitas, who share with the former, it observes, sacrificial the presiding gods, Rishis, and sons of the Manu, in the Manwantara of Swárochishá.² The deities of this period (or the second Manwantara) were the classes called Párávatas and Tushitas³; and the king of the gods was the mighty Vípaścít. The seven Rishis⁴ were Úrja, Stambha, offerings. The Mataya, Padma, Bráhma P. and Hari Vansa substitute for the sons, the grandsons of Swáyambhuva, Agnídra and the rest (p. 164).

² This Manu, according to the legend of his birth in the Máraññeya P., was the son of Swárochishá, so named from the splendour of his appearance when born, and who was the son of the nymph Varuthini by the Gandharba Kali. The text, in another place, makes him a son of Priyavrata.

³ The Váyu gives the names of the individuals of these two classes, consisting each of twelve. It furnishes also the nomenclature of all the classes of divinities, and of the sons of the Manus in each Manwantara. According to the same authority, the Tushitas were the sons of Kratu: the Bhágavata calls them the sons of Tushítá by Vedaśiras. The divinities of each period are, according to the Váyu, those to whom offerings of the Soma juice and the like are presented collectively.

⁴ The Váyu describes the Rishis of each Manwantara as the sons, or in some cases the descendants in a direct line, of the seven sages, Atri, Angiras, Bhrigu, Kaśyapa, Pulaha, Pulastya, and Vaśishtha; with some inconsistency, for Kaśyapa, at least, did not appear himself until the seventh Manwantara. In the present series Úrja is the son of Vaśishtha, Stambha springs from Kaśyapa, Práña from Bhrigu, Dattoli is the son of Pulastya, Rishabha descends from Angiras, Niśvara from Atri, and Arvarívat is the son of Pulaha. The Bráhma P. and Hari Vansa have a rather different list, or Aurva, Stambha, Kaśyapa, Práña, Vrihaspati, Chyavana, and Dattoli; but the origin of part of this difference is nothing more than an imperfect quotation from the Váyu Puráña; the two first, Aurva and Stambha, being specified as the son of Vaśishtha and the descendant of Kaśyapa, and then the parentage of the rest being omitted: to complete the seven, therefore, Kaśyapa becomes one of them. Some other errors of this nature occur in these two works, and from the same cause, a blundering citation of the Váyu, which is named as their authority (संहिता सन्तं वायु पुराण नामस्य भागमतं). A curious peculiarity also occurs in these mistakes. They are confined to the first eight Manwantaras. The Bráhma P. omits all details of the last six, and the Hari Vansa inserts them fully and correctly, agreeably to the authority of the Váyu. It looks, therefore, as if the compiler of the Hari Vansa had followed the Bráhma, as far as it went, right or wrong; but had had recourse to the original Váyu P. when the Bráhma failed him. Dattoli is sometimes written Dattioni and Dattoti; and the latter appears to have been the case with the copy of the Hari Vansa employed by M. Langlois, who makes one of the Rishis of this Manwantara, “le penitent Atri.” He is not without countenance in some such reading, for the Padma P. changes the name to Dattátreya, no doubt suggested by Datta-atrī.
Práña, Dattoli, Rishabha, Niśchara, and Arvarívat; and Chaitra, Kimpurusha, and others, were the Manu’s sons.

In the third period, or Manwantara of Auttami, Suseánti was the Indra, the king of the gods; the orders of whom were the Sudhámas, Sáyas, Sívas, Pradeśanas, and Vasavertis; each of the five orders consisting of twelve divinities. The seven sons of Vasishtha were the seven Rishis; and Aja, Parasu, Divya, and others, were the sons of the Manu.

Dattáreya, however, is the son of Atri; whilst the Váyu calls the person of the text the son of Pulastya. There can be no doubt therefore of the correct reading, for the son of Pulastya is Dattoli. (p. 83.)

5 The Váyu agrees with the text in these names, adding seven others. The Bhágavata has a different series. The Padma has four other names, Nabha, Nabhasya, Prarití, Bhavana. The Bráhma has ten names, including two of these, and several of the names of the Rishis of the tenth Manwantara. The Mataya has the four names of the Padma for the sons of the Manu, and gives seven others, Havindhra, Sukritá, Múrtti, Apas, Jyoti, Aya, Smrita (the names of the Bráhma), as the seven Prajápatis of this period, and sons of Vasishtha. The sons of Vasishtha, however, belong to the third Manwantara, and bear different appellations. There is, no doubt, some blundering here in all the books except the Váyu, and those which agree with it.

6 The name occurs Auttami, Auttama, and Uttama. The Bhágavata and Váyu agree with our text (p. 263) in making him a descendant from Priyavrata. The Márkaúdéya calls him the son of Uttama, the son of Uttamapáda; and this appears to be the correct genealogy, both from our text and the Bhágavata.

7 The Bráhma and Hari Vansa have, in place of these, the Bhánu; but the Váyu and Márkaúdéya concur with the text.

8 All the authorities agree in this; but the Bráhma and Hari Vansa appear to furnish a different series also; or even a third, according to the French translation: ‘Dans le troisième Manwantara parurent comme Saptarchis les fils de Vasishtha, de son nom appelés Vasichthas, les fils de Hiranya-garbha et les illustres enfans d’Ourdja.’ The text is, विश्ववस्मुः समाजन् प्रातिर्भुवन इति रिक्षुताः रिहरायगर्भाः सीजीकरणसम् रेतस: &c. The meaning of which is, ‘There were (in the first Manwantara) seven celebrated sons of Vasishtha, who (in the third Manwantara) were sons of Bráhmá (i.e. Rishi), the illustrious posterity of Urjá. We have already seen that Urjá was the wife of Vasishtha, by whom she had seven sons, Rajas, &c. (see p. 83), in the Sváyanbhuva Manwantara; and these were born again as the Rishis of the third period. The names of these persons, according to the Mataya and Padma, are however very different from those of the sons of Vasishtha, given p. 83, or Kau-kundibi, Kurundi, Dalaya, Sunkha, Praváhita, Mita, and Sammita.

9 The Váyu adds ten other names to those of the text. The Bráhma gives ten
The Surúpas, Haris, Satyas, and Śudhíś were the classes of gods, each comprising twenty-seven, in the period of Támasa, the fourth Manu. Śivi was the Indra, also designated by his performance of a hundred sacrifices (or named Śatákrátu). The seven Rishis were Jyotir-dháma, Prithu, Kávyá, Chaitra, Agni, Vanaka, and Pívra. The sons of Támasa were the mighty kings Nara, Khyáti, Sántahaya, Jánujanga, and others.

In the fifth interval the Manu was Raivata: the Indra was Víbhu: the classes of gods, consisting of fourteen each, were the Amitábhas, Abhútarajasas, Vaikunthas, and Sumedhas: the seven Rishis were altogether different. The Bhágavata and Padma have each a separate nomenclature.

Of these, the Bráhma and Hari V. notice only the Satyas: the Mataya and Padma have only Sádiyás. The Váyu, Bhágavata, Kúrma, and Máhríṣeṣa agree with the text.

He is the son of Priyavrata, according to the text, the Váyu, &c. The Máhríṣeṣa has a legend of his birth by a doe; and from his being begotten in dark, tempestuous weather (माहुत्त), he derives his name.

Severally, according to the Váyu, the progeny of Bhrigu, Káśyapa, Angiras, Pulastya, Atri, Vásishtha, and Pulaha. There is considerable variety in some of the names. Thus the Mataya has Kávi, Prithu, Agni, Salpa, Dhímát, Kápi, Akápi. The Hari Vamsa has Kávyá, Prithu, Agni, Jahnu, Dáátry, Kapívat, Akápivat. For the two last the Váyu reads Gátra and Vanapíthá. The son of Pulaha is in his place (p. 83. n. 6), Arvarívat or Vanaka-pívat. Gátra is amongst the sons of Vásishtha (p. 83). The Váyu is therefore probably most correct, although our text, in regard to these two denominations, admits of no doubt; तात्त्वकत्वानां दैवतिकाः प्रकृतिः शून्यः i.e. they were exempt from the quality of passion.

The Bráhma inserts of these only the Abhútarajasas, with the remark, that they were of like nature (with their name): देवविश्वासनिःश्रवणे प्रकृत्वं शून्यं i.e. they were exempt from the quality of passion. M. Langlois, in rendering the parallel passage of the Hari Vamsa, has confounded the epithet and the subject: 'dont les dieux furent les Pracritas, dépouvrud de Hirañyaramā, Vedaśri, Urdhābāhū, Vedābhū, Sudhāman, Parjanya, and Mahāmuni: the sons of Raivata were Balabandhu, Susambhaśya, Satyaka, and other valiant kings.

These four Manus, Swárochisha, Auttami, Tāmasa, and Raivata, were all descended from Priyavrata, who, in consequence of propitiating Viṣṇu by his devotions, obtained these rules of the Manvantaras for his posterity.

Chakṣuṣuddha was the Manu of the sixth period: in which the Indra was Manojaya: the five classes of gods were the Adyaś, Prastūtas, Bhavyas, Prithugas, and the magnanimous Lekhas, eight of each: Sumedhas, Virajas, Hāvishmat, Uttama, Madhu, Abhināman, and Sahishnū were the seven sages: the kings of the earth, the sons of Chakṣuṣuddha, were the powerful Uru, Puru, Śatadyumna, and others.

colere et de passion." He is also at a loss what to do with the terms Pāripāla and Rābhya, in the following passage: पारिपालनम् asking, 'qu’est ce que Pāripāla? qu’est ce que Rābhya?' If he had had the commentary at hand, these questions would have been unnecessary: there are said to be two classes of divinities: पारिपालनक्यो देवतायामविषये.

16 There is less variety in these names than usual. Vedābhū is read Devābhū; Sudhāman, Satyanetra; and Mahāmuni, Muni, Yajur, Vāishnava, and Yaduvrāja. According to the Vāyu, those of the text are respectively of the lineage of Angiras, Bhrigu, Vāishvānara, Pulastya, Atri, Pulaha, and Kaśyapa. There is considerable variety in the names of the Manu’s sons.

17 Chakṣuṣuddha, according to the best authorities, descended from Dhruva (see p. 98); but the Mārkaṇḍeya has a legend of his birth as the son of a Kāhatriya, named Anamitra; of his being exchanged at his birth for the son of Viśranta Rāj, and being brought up by the prince as his own; of his revealing the business when a man, and propitiating Brahmā by his devotions; in consequence of which he became a Manu. In his former birth he was born from the eye of Brahmā; whence his name, from Chakṣuṣuddha, ‘the eye.’

18 The authorities agree as to the number, but differ as to the names; reading for Adyaś, Aṛyaś and Aṛyas; for Prastūtas; Prabhūtas and Prasūtas; for Prithugas, Prithukas and Prithusas; and, which is a more wide deviation, Ribhus for Bhavyas. M. Langlois omits the Prasūtas, and asserts Divaukasas; but the latter, meaning ‘divinities,’ is only an epithet. The Hari Vansa has, यान: प्रसुत्स: प्रसुतिमित्री वनस: = यान: यान: ——. The comment adds, हिन्दी वनसि हि गोयनित्विन्हो रागद्वारा.
The Manu of the present period is the wise lord of obsequies, the illustrious offspring of the sun: the deities are the Ádityas, Vasus, and Rudras; their sovereign is Purandara: Vaśishtha, Kaśyapa, Atri, Jamadagni, Gautama, Viśvāmitra, and Bharadwāja are the seven Rishis: and the nine pious sons of Vaivaswata Manu are the kings Ikshwáku, Nabhaga, Dhristha, Sanyáti, Narishyanta, Nábhánidisha, Karusha, Prishadhra, and the celebrated Vasumat.

The unequalled energy of Vishúu combining with the quality of goodness, and effecting the preservation of created things, presides over all the Manwantaras in the form of a divinity. Of a portion of that divinity Yajna was born in the Swáyambhuva Manwantara, the will-begotten progeny of Ákúṭṭi. When the Swárochisha Manwantara had arrived, that divine Yajna was born as Ajita, along with the Tushita gods, the sons of Tushitá. In the third Manwantara, Tushita was again born of Satyá, as Satya, along with the class of deities so denounced. In the next period, Satya became Hari, along with the Haris, the Vivasvat for Uttama, Madhu, and Harishmat. The sons of Chákshusha are enumerated, p. 98.

There is no great variety of nomenclature in this Manwantara. The Váyu adds to the deities the Sádhyas, Viśvas, Maruts, and gods sprung from Bhrigu and Angiras. The Bhágavata adds the Ribhus: and most include the two Kámins as a class. Of the Maruts, however, the Hari Vansa remarks that they are born in every Manvantara, seven times seven (or forty-nine); that in each Manvantara four times seven, or twenty-eight, obtain emancipation, but their places are filled up by persons reborn in that character. So the commentator explains the passages of the Rigveda:

Comment. It may be suspected, however, that these passages have been derived from the simple statement of the Mataya, that in all the Manwantaras classes of Rishis appear by seven and seven, and having established a code of law and morality, depart to felicity: Gádhi and of the Kusika race; Jamadagni, son of Kuru, of the race of Bhrigu; Bharadwája, son of Bráhma; and Brahmaka or Atri, descended from Bráhma. All the other authorities agree with our text.

The nominal father being the patriarch Ruchi. (See p. 54.)
children of Hari. The excellent Hari was again born in the Raivata Manwantara, of Sambhúti, as Mánasa, along with the gods called Abhú-tarajasas. In the next period, Vishnú was born of Vikunthi, as Vai-kuntha, along with the deities called Vaikunthas. In the present Manwantara, Vishnú was again born as Vámana, the son of Kaśyapa by Aditi. With three paces he subdued the worlds, and gave them, freed from all embarrassment, to Purandara. These are the seven persons by whom, in the several Manwantaras, created beings have been protected. Because this whole world has been pervaded by the energy of the deity, he is entitled Vishnú, from the root Viś, 'to enter' or 'pervade;' for all the gods, the Manus, the seven Rishis, the sons of the Manus, the Indras the sovereigns of the gods, all are but the impersonated might of Vishnú.

22 There is no further account of this incarnation in the Vishnú Puránás. Fuller details occur in the Bhágavata, Kúrma, Matsya, and Vámana Puránás. The first of these (b. VIII. c. 15–23) relates the penance and sacrifices of Bali, son of Virochana, by which he had overcome Indra and the gods, and obtained supreme dominion over the three spheres. Vishnú, at the request of the deities, was born as a dwarf, Vámana, the son of Aditi by Kaśyapa; who, applying to Bali for alms, was promised by the prince whatever he might demand, notwithstanding Súkra, the preceptor of the Daityas, apprised him whom he had to deal with. The dwarf demanded as much space as he could step over at three steps; and upon the assent of Bali, enlarged himself to such dimensions as to stride over the three worlds. Being worshipped however by Bali and his ancestor Prahláda, he conceded to them the sovereignty of Pátalá.

23 See the same etymology, p. 3. n. 7.
CHAP. II.

Of the seven future Manus and Manwantaras. Story of Sanjná and Chháyá, wives of the sun. Sávarú, son of Chháyá, the eighth Manu. His successors, with the divinities, &c. of their respective periods. Appearance of Vishnú in each of the four Yugas.

MAITREYA.—You have recapitulated to me, most excellent Brahmán, the particulars of the past Manwantaras; now give me some account of those which are to come.

Paráśara.—Sanjná, the daughter of Viśwakarman, was the wife of the sun, and bore him three children, the Manu (Vaivasvata), Yama, and the goddess Yamí (or the Yamuná river). Unable to endure the fervours of her lord, Sanjná gave him Chháyá1 as his handmaid, and repaired to the forests to practise devout exercises. The sun, supposing Chháyá to be his wife Sanjná, begot by her three other children, Śanaischara (Saturn), another Manu (Sávarú), and a daughter Tapatí (the Tapti river). Chháyá, upon one occasion, being offended with Yama2, the son of Sanjná, denounced an imprecation upon him, and thereby revealed to Yama and to the sun that she was not in truth Sanjná, the mother of the former. Being further informed by Chháyá that his wife had gone to the wilderness, the sun beheld her by the eye of meditation engaged in austerities, in the figure of a mare (in the region of Uttara Kuru). Metamorphosing himself into a horse, he rejoined his wife, and begot three other children, the two Áwins and Revanta, and

1 That is, her shadow or image. It also means ‘shade.’ The Bhágavata, however, makes both Sanjná and Chháyá daughters of Viśwakarman. According to the Mataya, Vivasvát, the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi, had three wives, Rájú, the daughter of Raiva, by whom he had Revanta; Prabhá, by whom he had Prabhá; and by Sanjná, the daughter of Twashóni, the Manu and Yama and Yamuná. The

2 Yama, provoked at her partiality for her own children, abused Chháyá, and lifted up his foot to kick her. She cursed him to have his leg affected with sores and worms; but his father bestowed upon him a cock, to eat the worms, and remove the discharge; and Yama, afterwards propitiating Mahádeva, obtained the rank of Lokapāla, and sovereign of Tartarus.
then brought Śanjná back to his own dwelling. To diminish his intensity, Viśwakarman placed the luminary on his lathe, to grind off some of his effulgence; and in this manner reduced it an eighth, for more than that was inseparable. The parts of the divine Vaishñava splendour, residing in the sun, that were filed off by Viśwakarman, fell blazing down upon the earth, and the artist constructed of them the discus of Viśnu, the trident of Śiva, the weapon of the god of wealth, the lance of Kārtikeya, and the weapons of the other gods: all these Viśwakarman fabricated from the superfluous rays of the sun.

The son of Chháyá, who was called also a Manu, was denominated Sávarní, from being of the same caste (Sávarña) as his elder brother, the Manu Vaivaswata. He presides over the ensuing or eighth Manwantara; the particulars of which, and the following, I will now relate. In the period in which Sávarní shall be the Manu, the classes of the gods will be Sutapas, Amitábhas, and Mukhyas; twenty-one of each. The seven Rishis will be Díptimat, Gálava, Ráma, Kripa, Drauñi; my son Vyása will be the sixth, and the seventh will be Rishyasringa. The Indra will be Bali, the sinless son of Virochana, who through the favour of Viśnu is actually sovereign of part of Pátála. The royal progeny of Sávarní will be Virajas, Arvarívas, Nirmoha, and others.

3 The Matsya says he trimmed the sun every where except in the feet, the extent of which he could not discern. Consequently in pictures or images the feet of the sun must never be delineated, under pain of leprosy, &c.

4 The term is Śivíká, which properly means 'a litter.' The commentator calls it Astra, 'a weapon.'

5 This legend is told, with some variations of no great importance, in the Matsya, Márkaṇḍeya, and Padma P. (Swarga Khañḍa), in the Bhágavata, and Hari Vansa, &c.

6 The Márkaṇḍeya, whilst it admits Sávarñi to be the son of the sun, has a legend of his former birth, in the Śwárochihsa Manwantara, as Suratha Rája, who became a Manu by having then propitiated Deví. It was to him that the Durgá Máhámya or Chauḍí, the popular narrative of Durgá's triumphs over various demons, was narrated.

7 The Váyu has Jámadagnya or Parasuráma, of the Kuśika race; Gálava, of that of Bhrigu; Dwapáyana (or Vyása), of the family of Vaishítá; Kripa, the son of Saradwat; Díptimat, descended from Atri; Rishyasringa, from Kaśyapa; and Aśvattháman, the son of Drona, of the Bhárudwája family. The Matsya and Padma have Satánanda in place of Díptimat.
The ninth Manu will be Daksha-sávárni. The Páras, Maríchigarghas, and Sudharmas will be the three classes of divinities, each consisting of twelve; their powerful chief will be the Indra Adbhuta. Savana, Dvutimat, Bhavya, Vasu, Medhatithi, Jyotishmán, and Satya will be the seven Rishis. Dhritaketu, Driptiketu, Panchabasta, Nirámayya, Prithušrava, and others, will be the sons of the Manu.

In the tenth Manvantara the Manu will be Brahmá-sávárni: the gods will be the Sudhámás, Viruddhas, and Šatásankhyas: the Indra will be the mighty Šánti: the Rishis will be Havishmán, Sukrítí, Satya, Apámúrtri, Nábáha, Apráitamújas, and Satyaketu: and the ten sons of the Manu will be Suksheta, Uttarajñas, Harisheña, and others.

In the eleventh Manvantara the Manu will be Dharma-sávárni: the principal classes of gods will be the Vihangamas, Kámagamas, and Nirmánaratis, each thirty in number; of whom Vrisha will be the Indra: the Rishis will be Níáchara, Agnitéjas, Vapushmán, Vishú, Áruni, Havishmán, and Anagha: the kings of the earth, and sons of the Manu, will be Sávarga, Sarvadharma, Deváníka, and others.

In the twelfth Manvantara the son of Rudra, Sávárni, will be the Manu: Ritadhámá will be the Indra: and the Haritas, Lohitas, Sumanasas, and Sukarmas will be the classes of gods, each comprising fifteen.

* The four following Sáváriás are described in the Váyu as the mind-engendered sons of a daughter of Daksha, named either Suvará (Váyu) or Priyá (Brahma) by himself and the three gods, Brahmá, Dharma, and Rudra, to whom he presented her on mount Meru; whence they are called also Meru-sáváriás. They are termed Sáváriás from their being of one family or caste: जनाविवृतिः सौण्डर्यम् कुमाृताः स्मरियः सर्वीस्य भेदे त्रिसः।
According to the same authority, followed by the Hari Vánsa, it appears that this Manu is also called Rohita. Most of the details of this and the following Manvantaras are omitted in the Matsya, Brahmá, Padma, and Márašádaya Puránas. The Bhágavata and Kúrmá give the same as our text; and the Váyu, which agrees very nearly with it, is followed in most respects by the Hari Vánsa. The Matsya and Padma are peculiar in their series and nomenclature of the Manus themselves, calling the 9th Rauchya, 10th Bhautya, 11th Merusavári, son of Brahmá, 12th Ritu, 13th Ritadhámá, and 14th Viswaksená. The Bhágavata calls the two last Manus, Devasávári and Indra-sávári.

9 Hence the Váyu identifies the first with days, the second with nights, and the third with hours.
Tapaswí, Sutapas, Tapomúrtti, Taporati, Tapodhriti, Tapodyuti, and Tapodhana will be the Rishis: and Devaván, Upadeva, Devásreshta, and others, will be the Manu’s sons, and mighty monarchs on the earth.

In the thirteenth Manwantara the Manu will be Rauchya: the classes of gods, thirty-three in each, will be the Sudhámans, Sudhamans, and Sukarmans; their Indra will be Divaspati: the Rishis will be Nirmoha, Tatwadersín, Nishprakampa, Nirutsuka, Dhritimat, Aavyaya, and Sutapas: and Chitrasena, Vichitra, and others, will be the kings.

In the fourteenth Manwantara, Bhautya will be the Manu; Śuchi, the Indra: the five classes of gods will be the Chákshushas, the Pavitras, Kanishthás, Bhrájiras, and Vávridhas: the seven Rishis will be Agni-báhu, Śuchi, Śukra, Mágadha, Gridhra, Yukta, and Ajita: and the sons of the Manu will be Uru, Gabhíra, Bradhna, and others, who will be kings, and will rule over the earth.

At the end of every four ages there is a disappearance of the Vedas, and it is the province of the seven Rishis to come down upon earth from heaven to give them currency again. In every Krita age the Manu (of the period) is the legislator or author of the body of law, the Smriti: the 10 The son of the Prajápati Ruchi (Váyu, &c.), by the nymph Máníí, the daughter of the Apsaras Pramloché (Márkaññéya).

11 Son of Kavi, by the goddess Bhúti, according to the Váyu; but the Márkaññéya makes Bhúti the son of Angíras, whose pupil Sánti, having suffered the holy fire to go out in his master’s absence, prayed to Agni, and so propitiates him, that he not only relighted the flame, but desired Sánti to demand a further boon. Sánti accordingly solicited a son for his Guru; which son was Bhúti, the father of the Manu Bhautya.
12 Although the Puránas which give an account of the Manwantaras agree in some of the principal details, yet in the minor ones they offer many varieties, some of which have been noticed. These chiefly regard the first six and the eighth. Except in a few individual peculiarities, the authorities seem to arrange themselves in two classes; one comprehending the Visháu, Váyu, Kúrma, Bhágavata, and Márkaññéya; and the other the Matáya, Padma, Bráhma, and Hari Vansas. The Márkaññéya, although it agrees precisely with the Visháu in its nomenclature, differs from it, and from all, in devoting a considerable number of its pages to legends of the origin of the Manus, all of which are evidently of comparatively recent invention, and several of which have been no doubt suggested by the etymology of the names of the Manus.
deities of the different classes receive the sacrifices during the Manwantaras to which they severally belong; and the sons of the Manu themselves, and their descendants, are the sovereigns of the earth for the whole of the same term. The Manu, the seven Rishis, the gods, the sons of the Manu, who are the kings, and Indra, are the beings who preside over the world during each Manwantara.

An entire Kalpa, oh Brahman, is said to comprise a thousand ages, or fourteen Manwantaras; and it is succeeded by a night of similar duration; during which, he who wears the form of Brahmá, Janárdana, the substance of all things, the lord of all, and creator of all, involved in his own illusions, and having swallowed up the three spheres, sleeps upon the serpent Śesha, amidst the ocean. Being after that awake, he, who is the universal soul, again creates all things as they were before, in combination with the property of fowlness (or activity): and in a portion of his essence, associated with the property of goodness, he, as the Manus, the kings, the gods, and their Indras, as well as the seven Rishis, is the preserver of the world. In what manner Vishúu, who is characterised by the attribute of providence during the four ages, effected their preservation, I will next, Maitreya, explain.

In the Krita age, Vishúu, in the form of Kapila and other inspired teachers, assiduous for the benefit of all creatures, imparts to them true wisdom. In the Treta age he restrains the wicked, in the form of a universal monarch, and protects the three worlds. In the Dwápara age, in the person of Veda-vyása, he divides the one Veda into four, and 13 A thousand ages of the gods and fourteen Manwantaras are not precisely the same thing, as has been already explained. (See p. 24, n. 6.)

14 The order of the text would imply, that as Brahmá he sleeps upon Śesha; but if this be intended, it is at variance with the usual legend, that it is as Vishúu or Nárâyana that the deity sleeps in the intervals of dissolution. The commentator accordingly qualifies the phrase Brahma-rúpadhara (प्रभुरपदयर) by the term Divá (दिवा): 'Vishúu wears the form of Brahmá by day; by night he sleeps on Śesha, in the person of Nárâyana.' (raśi की मारपथ \[अपि आपेस श्वासोऽपि अपि\]) This however may be suspected to be an innovation upon an older system; for in speaking of the alternations of creation and dissolution, they are always considered as consentaneous with the day and night of Brahmá alone.

15 As a Chakravarttin.
distributes it into innumerable branches; and at the end of the Kali or fourth age he appears as Kalki, and reestablishes the iniquitous in the paths of rectitude. In this manner the universal spirit preserves, creates, and at last destroys, all the world.

Thus, Brahman, I have described to you the true nature of that great being who is all things, and besides whom there is no other existent thing, nor has there been, nor will there be, either here or elsewhere. I have also enumerated to you the Manwantaras, and those who preside over them. What else do you wish to hear?
CHAP. III.

Division of the Veda into four portions, by a Vyása, in every Dwápara age. List of the twenty-eight Vyásas of the present Manwantara. Meaning of the word Brahma.

Máitréya.—I have learnt from you, in due order, how this world is Vishúu; how it is in Vishúu; how it is from Vishúu: nothing further is to be known: but I should desire to hear how the Vedas were divided, in different ages, by that great being, in the form of Veda-vyása? who were the Vyásas of their respective eras? and what were the branches into which the Vedas were distributed?

Páráśára.—The branches of the great tree of the Vedas are so numerous, Máitréya, that it is impossible to describe them at length. I will give you a summary account of them.

In every Dwápara (or third) age, Vishúu, in the person of Vyása, in order to promote the good of mankind, divides the Veda, which is properly but one, into many portions: observing the limited perseverance, energy, and application of mortals, he makes the Veda fourfold, to adapt it to their capacities; and the bodily form which he assumes, in order to effect that classification, is known by the name of Veda-vyása. Of the different Vyásas in the present Manwantara, and the branches which they have taught, you shall have an account.

Twenty-eight times have the Vedas been arranged by the great Rishis in the Vaivasvata Manwantara in the Dwápara age, and consequently eight and twenty Vyásas have passed away; by whom, in their respective periods, the Veda has been divided into four. In the first Dwápara age the distribution was made by Swayambhu (Brahmá) himself; in the second, the arranger of the Veda (Veda-vyása) was Prajápati (or Manu); in the third, Ušanas; in the fourth, Vrihaspati; in the fifth, Savitri; in the sixth, Mrityu (Death, or Yama); in the seventh, Indra; in the eighth, Vaśishtha; in the ninth, Sáraswata; in the tenth, Tridháman; in the eleventh, Trivríshan; in the twelfth, Bharadvája; in the thirteenth, Antaríksha; in the fourteenth, Vapra; in the fifteenth, Trayyáruṇā; in the sixteenth, Dhananjaya; in the seventeenth, Kritanjaya; in the eighteenth, Rī́ṣa; in the nineteenth, Bharadvája; in the twentieth, Gotama; in the twenty-first, Uttama, also called Haryátmá; in the twenty-second, Veśa, who is likewise named Rágasravas; in the twenty-third, Somaśushmápaṇa, also Tríṅavindu; in the twenty-fourth, Riksha, the descendant of Bhrigu, who is known also by the name Válmiki; in the twenty-fifth, my father Śakti was the Vyása; I was the Vyása of the twenty-sixth Dwápara, and was succeeded by Jaratkáru; the Vyása of the twenty-eighth, who followed him, was Krishña Dwaipáyana. These are the twenty-eight elder Vyásas, by whom, in the preceding Dwápara ages, the Veda has been divided into four. In the next Dwápara, Draupáni (the son of Droṇá) will be the Vyása, when my son, the Muni Krishña Dwaipáyana, who is the actual Vyása, shall cease to be (in that character) 3.

1 The text has, ‘Hear from me an account of the Vyásas of the different Manwantaras’ (पंचक मन्वारेचे वे वेचावा); but this is inconsistent with what follows, in which the enumeration is confined to the Vaivasvata Manwantara.

The syllable Om is defined to be the eternal monosyllabic Brahma 4. The word Brahma is derived from the root Vŕ̥ṣi (to increase), because it is infinite (spirit); and because it is the cause by which the Vedas (and

2 This name occurs as that of one of the kings of the solar dynasty, and is included by Mr. Colebrooke amongst the persons of royal descent, who are mentioned as authors of hymns in the Rigveda. As. Res. VIII. 383.

3 A similar list of Vyásas is given in the Kúrma and Váyu Puráṇas. Many of the individuals appear as authors of different hymns and prayers in the Vedas; and it is very possible that the greater portion, if not all of them, had a real existence, being the framers or teachers of the religion of the Hindus before a complete ritual was compiled.

4 We have already had occasion to explain the sanctity of this monosyllable (see p. 1. n. 1), which ordinarily commences different portions of the Vedas, and which, as the text describes it, is identified with the supreme, undefinable deity, or Brahma. So in the Bhagavad-gíta: चालितायां भगवान् वातुस्वरुपम्। 'Repeating Om, the monosyllable, which is Brahma, and calling me to mind!' which is not exactly the same idea that is conveyed by Schlegel's version; 'Monosyllabum mysticum Om pronuntiando, numen adorans, me memor;' where 'numen adorans,' although it may be defended as necessary to the sense, is not expressed by the words of the text, nor compatible with Hindu notions. In one of the MSS. employed, the transcriber has evidently been afraid of desecrating this sacred monosyllable, and has therefore altered the text, writing it चन्द्रवेशांस्रवं य प्रथात्त्वं चैव सिंधुनाशिनी।
all things) are developed. Glory to Brahma, who is addressed by that mystic word, associated eternally with the triple universe, and who is one with the four Vedas. Glory to Brahma, who, alike in the destruction and renovation of the world, is called the great and mysterious cause of the intellectual principle (Mahat); who is without limit in time or space, and exempt from diminution or decay; in whom (as connected with the property of darkness) originates worldly illusion; and in whom resides the end of soul (fruition or liberation), through the properties of light and of activity (or goodness and foulness). He is the refuge of those who are versed in the Sāṅkhya philosophy; of those who have acquired control over their thoughts and passions. He is the invisible, imperishable Brahma; varying in form, invariable in substance; the chief principle, self-engendered; who is said to illuminate the caverns of the heart; who is indivisible, radiant, undecaying, multiform. To that supreme Brahma be for ever adoration.

That form of Vāsudeva, who is the same with supreme spirit, which is Brahma, and which, although diversified as threefold, is identical, is the lord, who is conceived by those that contemplate variety in creation to be distinct in all creatures. He, composed of the Rik, Sáma, and Yajur-Vedas, is at the same time their essence, as he is the soul of all embodied spirits. He, distinguished as consisting of the Vedas, creates the Vedas, and divides them by many subdivisions into branches: he is the author of those branches: he is those aggregated branches; for he, the eternal lord, is the essence of true knowledge.

5 The daily prayers of the Brahma commence with the formula, Om bhúh, bhuvah, swar: Om earth, sky, heaven: these are the three mystical terms called Vyáhritis, and are scarcely less sanctity than the Praáváva itself. Their efficacy, and the order of their repetition preceding the Gáyatrí, are fully detailed in Manu, II. 76–81. In the Mitákshara they are directed to be twice repeated mentally, with Om prefixed to each; Om bhúh, Om bhuvah, Om swar; the breath being suppressed by closing the lips and nostrils: ओम मुः ोऽमक्ष्तुः सरितं गुरूः गुरुः महतां चार्यसारः प्रांतीञ्च मन्तरुपां भवति सदा.

6 The form or sensible type of Vāsudeva is here considered to be the monosyllable Om, and which is one with the three mystical words, Bhúh, Bhuvah, Swar, and with the Vedas: consequently the Vyáhritis and the Vedas are also forms of Vāsudeva, diversified as to their typical character, but essentially one and the same.
CHAP. IV.

Division of the Veda, in the last Dwāpara age, by the Vyāsa Krishńa Dwai páyana. Paila made reader of the Rich; Vaisämpáyana of the Yajush; Jaimini of the Sáman; and Sumantu of the Atharvan. Súta appointed to teach the historical poems. Origin of the four parts of the Veda. Sanhitás of the Rig-veda.

PARÁSARA.—The original Veda, in four parts, consisted of one hundred thousand stanzas; and from it sacrifice of ten kinds, the accomplisher of all desires, proceeded. In the twenty-eighth Dwāpara age my son Vyása separated the four portions of the Veda into four Vedas. In the same manner as the Vedas were arranged by him, as Vedavyása, so were they divided in former periods by all the preceding Vyásas, and by myself: and the branches into which they were subdivided by him were the same into which they had been distributed in every aggregate of the four ages. Know, Maitreya, the Vyása called Krishńa Dwai páyana to be the deity Náráyaña; for who else on this earth could have composed the Mahábhárata? Into what portions the Vedas were arranged by my magnificent son, in the Dwāpara age, you shall hear.

When Vyásá was enjoined by Brahmá to arrange the Vedas in different books, he took four persons, well read in those works, as his disciples. He appointed Paila reader of the Rich3; Vaisämpáyana of 1 According to the Grihya portion of the Sáma-veda, there are five great sacrificial ceremonies; 1. Agnihotra, burnt-offerings, or libations of clarified butter on sacred fire; 2. Dérşápsurúmása, sacrifices at new and full moon; 3. Cháturmsáya, sacrifices every four months; 4. Paúyajna or Aśwamedha, sacrifice of a horse or animal; and 5. Soma-yajna, offerings and libations of the juice of the acid asclepias. These, again, are either Prákrita, 'simple,' or Vaikrita, 'modified;' and being thus doubled, constitute ten.

2 The composition of the Mahábhárata is always ascribed to the Vyásá named Krishńa Dwai páyana, the cotemporary of the events there described. The allusion in the text establishes the priority of the poem to the Vishnu Puráña.

3 Or rather, 'he took Paila as teacher.' The expression is, Rigveda śrávakam Pailam jagráha (रिगवेदश्रवकां पाइलां जग्रहा). Śrávakaka means properly 'he who causes to hear,' 'a lecturer,' 'a preacher;' although, as in the case of its applicability to the laity of the Buddhists and Jaina, it the Yajush; and Jaimini of the Sáma-veda: and Sumantu, who was conversant with the Atharva-veda, was also the disciple of the learned Vyása. He also took Súta, who was named Lomaharshaña, as his pupil in historical and legendary traditions.

There was but one Yajur-veda; but dividing this into four parts, Vyása instituted the sacrificial rite that is administered by four kinds of priests: in which it was the duty of the Adhvaryu to recite the prayers (Yajush) (or direct the ceremony); of the Hotri, to repeat the hymns (Richas); of the Udgátri, to chant other hymns (Sáma); and of the Bráhman, to pronounce the formulae called Atharva. Then the Muni, having collected together the hymns called Richas, compiled the Rig-veda; with the prayers and directions termed Yajushas he formed the Yajur-veda; with those called Sáma, Sáma-veda; and with the Atharvas he composed the rules of all the ceremonies suited to kings, and the function of the Bráhman agreeably to practice.

denotes a disciple. The commentator however observes, that the text is sometimes read चापेद्यार्ये ‘one who had gone through the Rig-veda.’ So in the preceding verse it is said, ‘he took four persons, well read in the Vedas, as his disciples’; च राजवाचे स स्मार च तुस्के वेदाध्याये and again it is said, ‘Sumantu, conversant with the Atharva-veda, was his disciple’; अधवार्यना वेदाध्याये. It is clear, therefore, that the Vedas were known, as distinct works, before Krishiá Dwapiyáya; and it is difficult to understand how he earned his title of arranger, or Vyása: at any rate, in undertaking to give order to the prayers and hymns of which the Vedas consist, Paíla and the others were rather his coadjutors than disciples; and it seems probable that the tradition records the first establishment of a school, of which the Vyása was the head, and the other persons named were the teachers.

4 The Itihása and Puráñas; understanding by the former, legendary and traditional narratives. It is usually supposed that by the Itihása the Mahábhárata is especially meant; but although this poem is ascribed to Krishiá Dwapiyáya, the recitation of it is not attributed to his pupil, Roma or Loma-harshaña: it was first narrated by Vaiámpáyáya, and after him by Sauti, the son of Lomaharshaña.

5 From this account, which is repeated in the Váyu P., it appears that the original Veda was the Yajush, or in other words was a miscellaneous body of precepts, formulae, prayers, and hymns, for sacrificial ceremonies; Yajush being derived by the grammarians from Yaj (यज्ञ), ‘to worship.’ The derivation of the Váyu Puráña, however, is from Yuj, ‘to join,’ ‘to employ,’ the formulae being those especially applied to sacrificial rites, or set apart for that purpose from the general collection.
DIVISIONS OF THE VEDAS.

This vast original tree of the Vedas, having been divided by him into four principal stems, soon branched out into an extensive forest. In the first place, Paila divided the Rig-veda, and gave the two Sanhitás (or collections of hymns) to Indrapramati and to Bâshkali. Bâshkali subdivided his Sanhitá into four, which he gave to his disciples Baudhaya, Agnimâthara, Yajnavalka, and Parâsara; and they taught these secondary shoots from the primitive branch. Indrapramati imparted his Sanhitá to his son Maúdukeya, and it thence descended through successive generations, as well as disciples.

Vedamitra, called also Sâkalya, studied the same Sanhitá, but he divided it into five Sanhitás, which he distributed amongst as many disciples, named severally Mudgala, Goswala, Vâtsya, Sâlîya, and Sîśira. Sâkapûrûni made a different division of the original Sanhitá into three portions, and added a glossary (Nirukta), constituting a fourth. The three Sanhitás were given to his three pupils, Krauncha, deya, taught the Sanhitá to his son Satya- áravas; he to his son Satyahita; and he to his son Satyasrî. The latter had three pupils, Sâkalya, also called Devamitra (sic in MS.), Rathántara, and another Bâshkali, called also Bharadvája. The Váyu has a legend of Sâkalya's death, in consequence of his being defeated by Yajnavalkya in a disputation at a sacrifice celebrated by Janaka.

These names in the Váyu are Mudgala, Golaka, Khâlîya, Mâtâya, Sâsîreya.

The commentator, who is here followed by Mr. Colebrooke, states that he was a pupil of Indrapramati; but from the Váyu it appears that Sâkapûrûni was another name of Rathántara, the pupil of Satyasrî, the author of three Sanhitás and a Nirukta, or glossary; whence Mr. Colebrooke supposes him the same with Yáska. As. Res. VII. 375. It is highly probable that the text of the Váyu may be made to correct that of the Vâishû in this place, which is inaccurate, notwithstanding the copies agree: they read, सूर्यविजयते.
Vaitálaki, and Valáka; and a fourth, (thence named) Niruktakrit, had the glossary
10. In this way branch sprang from branch. Another Bāshkali
11. composed three other Sanhitás, which he taught to his disci-
pleś Kályáni, Gárya, and Kathájava
12. These are they by whom the principal divisions of the Rich have been promulgated 13.

10. In the Váyu the four pupils of Sákapúrúi are called Kenava, Dálaki, Satavaláka, and Naigama.

11. This Bāshkali may either be, according to the commentator, the pupil of Pála, who, in addition to the four Sanhitás previously noticed, compiled three others; or he may be another Bāshkali, a fellow-pupil of Sákapúrúi. The Váyu makes him a disciple of Satyasári, the fellow-pupil of Sákalya and Rathántara, and adds the name or title Bhárdwája.

12. In the Váyu they are called Nándáyanáya, Pannagári, and Arájava.

13. Both the Vishúu and Váyu Puráñas omit two other principal divisions of the Rich, those of Áswaláyana and Sánkhyáyana or the Kausátká. As. Res. VIII. 375.
There is no specification of the aggregate number of Sanhitás of the Rich in our text, or in the Váyu; but they describe eighteen, including the Nirukta; or as Mr. Colebrooke states, sixteen (As. Res. VIII. 374); that is, omitting the two portions of the original, as divided by Pála. The Kúrma Puráá states the number at twenty-one; but treatises on the study of the Vedas reduce the Sákhas of the Rich to five.
CHAP. V.

Divisions of the Yajur-veda. Story of Yáñawalkya: forced to give up what he has learned: picked up by others, forming the Taittiriya-yajush. Yáñawalkya worships the sun, who communicates to him the Véjasneyí-yajush.

Parásara.—Of the tree of the Yajur-veda there are twenty-seven branches, which Vaisāmpáyana, the pupil of Vyása, compiled, and taught to as many disciples. Amongst these, Yáñawalkya, the son of Bhramaráta, was distinguished for piety and obedience to his preceptor.

It had been formerly agreed by the Munis, that any one of them who, at a certain time, did not join an assembly held on mount Meru should incur the guilt of killing a Brahman, within a period of seven nights. Vaisāmpáyana alone failed to keep the appointment, and consequently killed, by an accidental kick with his foot, the child of his sister. He then addressed his scholars, and desired them to perform the penance expiatory of Brahmanicide on his behalf. Without any hesitation Yáñawalkya refused, and said, “How shall I engage in penance with these miserable and inefficient Brahmans?” On which his Guru, being incensed, commanded him to relinquish all that he had learnt from him. “You speak contemptuously,” he observed, “of these young Brahmans, but of what use is a disciple who disobeys my commands?” “I spoke,” replied Yáñawalkya, “in perfect faith; but as to what I have read from you, I have had enough: it is no more than this—” (acting as if he would eject it from his stomach); when he brought up the texts of the Yajush in substance stained with blood. He then departed. The other scholars of Vaisāmpáyana, transforming themselves to partridges (Tittiri), picked

1 The Váyu divides these into three classes, containing each nine, and discriminated as northern, middle, and eastern: तौरणसु मध्येकालां ग्राम्माच्याच पृष्ठविद्या. Of these, the chiefs were severally Śyámáyani, Aruni, and Analaví, or Alambí. With some inconsistency, however, the same authority states that Vaisāmpáyana composed and gave to his disciples eighty-six Sanhitás.

2 The parallel passage in the Váyu rather implies that the agreement was to meet within seven nights: ततः सम्बन्ध सार्वेण प्रेमिकविद्याः: प्रयुः समसमाये व भ्रमिः दृशी सभात्र। up the texts which he had disgorged, and which from that circumstance were called Taittiriya; and the disciples were called the Charaka professors of the Yajush, from Charāṇa, 'going through' or 'performing' the expiatory rites enjoined by their master.

Yajñawalkya, who was perfect in ascetic practices, addressed himself strenuously to the sun, being anxious to recover possession of the texts of the Yajush. "Glory to the sun," he exclaimed, "the gate of liberation, the fountain of bright radiance, the triple source of splendour, as the Rig, the Yajur, and the Sāma Vedas. Glory to him, who, as fire and the moon, is one with the cause of the universe: to the sun, that is charged with radiant heat, and with the Sushumna ray (by which the moon is fed with light): to him who is one with the notion of time, and all its divisions of hours, minutes, and seconds: to him who is to be

3 Also called the black Yajuah. No notice of this legend, as Mr. Colebrooke observes (As. Res. VIII. 376), occurs in the Veda itself; and the term Taittiriya is more rationally accounted for in the Anukramaṇī or index of the black Yajush. It is there said that Vaiśampayana taught it to Yaska, who taught it to Tittiri, who also became a teacher; whence the term Taittiriya, for a grammatical rule explains it to mean, 'The Taittiriyas are those who read what was said or repeated by Tittiri.' तित्तिरियों ग्रंथाशयोंते तित्तिरियों।। पाणिनि, ४. ३. १०२. The legend, then, appears to be nothing more than a Paurāṇik invention, suggested by the equivocal sense of Tittiri, a proper name or a partridge. Much of the mythos of the Hindus, and obviously that of the Greeks and Romans, originates in this source. It was not confused, at least amongst the former, to the case that Creuzer specifies; 'Telle ou telle expression cessa d'être comprise, et l'on inventa des mythes pour eclaircir ces malentendus;' but was wilfully perpetrated, even where the word was understood, when it afforded a favourable opportunity for a fable. It may be suspected in the present instance that the legend is posterior, not only to the Veda, but to the grammatical rule, or it would have furnished Pāṇini with a different etymology.

4 This is another specimen of the sort of Paronomasia explained in the preceding note. The Charakas are the students of a Śākhā, so denominated from its teacher Charaka. (As. Res. VIII. 377.) So, again, Pāṇini, ४. ३. १०७: 'The readers of that which is said by Charaka are Charakas.' चारकेन शोहे चर्कायः Charaka has no necessary connexion with Chara, 'to go.' The Vāyu states they were also called Chaṭakas, from Chat (चत), 'to divide,' because they shared amongst them their master's guilt. 'Those pupils of Vaiśampayana were called Chaṭakas by whom the crime of Brahmanicide was shared; and Charakas from its departure:’ वैष्णवप्रदेशायामायं चर्कास अनुक्रमात: चारकाः प्रति चर्काः सुभाषः। meditated upon as the visible form of Vishńu, as the impersonation of the mystic Om: to him who nourishes the troops of the gods, having filled the moon with his rays; who feeds the Pitris with nectar and ambrosia, and who nourishes mankind with rain; who pours down or absorbs the waters in the time of the rains, of cold, and of heat. Glory be to Brahmá, the sun, in the form of the three seasons: he who alone is the dispeller of the darkness of this earth, of which he is the sovereign lord: to the god who is clad in the raiment of purity be adoration.
Glory to the sun, until whose rising man is incapable of devout acts, and water does not purify, and touched by whose rays the world is fitted for religious rites: to him who is the centre and source of purification.
Glory to Savitri, to Śúrya, to Bhaόskara, to Vivaswat, to Āditya, to the first-born of gods or demons. I adore the eye of the universe, borne in a golden car, whose banners scatter ambrosia."

Thus eulogized by Yájnawalkya, the sun, in the form of a horse, appeared to him, and said, "Demand what you desire." To which the sage, having prostrated himself before the lord of day, replied, "Give me a knowledge of those texts of the Yajush with which even my preceptor is unacquainted." Accordingly the sun imparted to him the texts of the Yajush called Ayátyáma (unstudied), which were unknown to Vaiśampáyana: and because these were revealed by the sun in the form of a horse, the Brahmans who study this portion of the Yajush are called Vájis (horses). Fifteen branches of this school sprang from Kańwa and other pupils of Yájnawalkya.

The Váyu names the fifteen teachers of these schools, Kańwa, Vaidheya, Sálīn, Madhyandina, Sapeyin, Vidagdha, Uddálin, Támráyani, Vátaya, Gála, Saiśírī, Aśvaya, Parúa, Víra, and Sampárayana, who were the founders of no fewer than 101 branches of the Vájasaneyi, or white: Yajush. Mr. Colebrooke specifies several of these, as the Jábálas, Baudháyanas, Tá-paníyas, &c. As. Res. VIII. 376.
CHAP. VI.

YOU shall now hear, Maitreya, how Jaimini, the pupil of Vyása, divided the branches of the Sáma-veda. The son of Jaimini was Sumantu, and his son was Sukarman, who both studied the same Sanhilá under Jaimini. The latter composed the Sáhasra Sanhitá (or compilation of a thousand hymns, &c.), which he taught to two disciples, Hirañyanábhá, also named Kauśalya (or of Kosala), and Paushyinjji. Fifteen disciples of the latter were the authors of as many Sanhitás: they were called the northern chanters of the Sáman. As many more, also the disciples of Hirañyanábhá, were termed the eastern chanters of the Sáman, founding an equal number of schools. Lokákshi, Kuthumi, Kushídá, and Lángali were the pupils of Paushyinjji; and by them and their disciples many other branches were formed. Whilst another scholar of Hirañyanábhá, named Kriti, taught twenty-four Sanhitás to as many pupils; and by them, again, was the Sáma-veda divided into numerous branches.

1 The Váyu makes Sukarman the grandson of Sumantu, his son being called Sunwat.
2 Some copies read Paushpinjji. The Váyu agrees with our text, but alludes to a legend of Sukarman having first taught a thousand disciples, but they were all killed by Indra, for reading on an unlawful day, or one when sacred study is prohibited.
3 The Váyu specifies many more names than the Vishnu, but the list is rather confused. Amongst the descendants of those named in the text, Ráyánaniya (or Ráyánāiya), the son of Lokákshi, is the author of a Sanhitá still extant: Saumitri his son was the author of three Sanhitás: Parásara, the son of Kuthumi, compiled and taught six Sanhitás: and Sálgotra, a son of Lángali, established also six schools. Kriti was of royal descent: Hiraknánábhá krutí: hiraknánábhá krutí: he and Paushyinjji were the two most eminent teachers of the Sáma-veda.
DIVISIONS OF THE ATHARVA-VEDA.

Śaulkáyani, and Pippaláda. Pathya had three pupils, Jájali, Kumudádi, and Šaunaka; and by all these were separate branches instituted. Saunaka having divided his Sanhitá into two, gave one to Babhrú, and the other to Saindhaváya; and from them sprang two schools, the Saindhavas and Munjakeśas. The principal subjects of difference in the Sanhitá of the Atharva-veda are the five Kalpas or ceremonials: the Nakṣatra Kalpa, or rules for worshipping the planets; the Vaitánā Kalpa, or rules for oblations, according to the Vedas generally; the Sanhitá Kalpa, or rules for sacrifices, according to different schools; the Ángirasa Kalpa, incantations and prayers for the destruction of foes and the like; and the Sánti Kalpa, or prayers for averting evil.

Accomplished in the purport of the Puráñas, Vyása compiled a Pauránik Sanhitá, consisting of historical and legendary traditions, prayers and hymns, and sacred chronology. He had a distinguished disciple, Súta, also termed Romaharshaṇa, and to him the great Muni communicated the Puráñas. Súta had six scholars, Sumati, Agnivarchas, Mitrayu, Śáśayana, Akritavraṇa, who is also called Káyapa, and Savérú. The three last composed three fundamental Sanhitás; and Romaharshaṇa himself compiled a fourth, called Romaharshaṇika. The substance of which four Sanhitás is collected into this (Vishú) Puráña.

The first of all the Puráñas is entitled the Bráhma. Those who are

---

4 According to the commentator, Munjakeśa is another name for Babhrú; but the Váyu seems to consider him as the pupil of Saindhava, but the text is corrupt: नृणो मुन्ते प्राण (विखरत गातान विऒच मुन).

5 The Váyu has an enumeration of the verses contained in the different Vedas, but it is very indistinctly given in many respects, especially as regards the Yajush. The Rik is said to comprise 8600 Richas. The Yajush, as originally compiled by Vyása, 12000: of which the Vájasanyí contains 1900 Richas, and 7600 Brahma-nas; the Chárika portion contains 6026 stanzas: and consequently the whole exceeds 12000 verses. The stanzas of the Sáman are said to be 8014; and those of the Atharvan 5980. Mr. Colebrooke states the verses of the whole Yajush to be 1887; of the Salapalka Brahmana of the same Veda 7624; and of the Atharvan 6015.

6 Or of stories (Ākhyaṇas) and minor stories or tales (Upákhyaṇas); of portions dedicated to some particular divinity, as the Siva-gítá, Bhágavad-gítá, &c.; and accounts of the periods called Kalpas, as the Bráhma Kalpa, Váráha Kalpa, &c. acquainted with the Purāṇas enumerate eighteen, or the Brāhma, Pādma, Vaishāva, Śaiva, Bhāgavata, Nāradīya, Mārkaṇḍeya, Ágneya, Bhavishyat, Brahma Vaivartta, Lainga, Varáha, Skánda, Váman, Kauruma, Mātśya, Gārura, Brahmánda. The creation of the world, and its successive reproductions, the genealogies of the patriarchs and kings, the periods of the Manus, and the transactions of the royal dynasties, are narrated in all these Purāṇas. This Purāṇa which I have repeated to you, Maitreya, is called the Vaishāvā, and is next in the series to the Pādma; and in every part of it, in its narratives of primary and subsidiary creation, of families, and of periods, the mighty Vishṇu is declared in this Purāṇa.

The four Vedas, the six Angas (or subsidiary portions of the Vedas, viz. Śīkṣā, rules of reciting the prayers, the accents and tones to be observed; Kalpa, ritual; Vyākaraṇa, grammar; Nirukta, glossarial comment; Chhandas, metre; and Jyotish, astronomy), with Mimāṃsā (theology), Nyāya (logic), Dharma (the institutes of law), and the Purāṇas, constitute the fourteen principal branches of knowledge; or they are considered as eighteen, with the addition of these four; the Áyur-veda, medical science (as taught by Dhanwantari); Dhanur-veda, the science of archery or arms, taught by Bhrigu; Gāndharba-veda, or the drama, and the arts of music, dancing, &c., of which the Muni Bharata was the author; and the Artha śāstram, or science of government, as laid down first by Vrihaspati.

There are three kinds of Rishis, or inspired sages; royal Rishis, or princes who have adopted a life of devotion, as Viswamitra; divine Rishis, or sages who are demigods also, as Nárada; and Brahman Rishis, or sages who are the sons of Brahmá, or Brahmans, as Vaśishtha and others.

For remarks upon this enumeration, see Introduction.

A similar enumeration is given in the Vāyu, with some additions. Rishi is derived from Rish, 'to go to' or 'approach.' The Brahmariśis, it is said, are descendants of the five patriarchs, who were the founders of races or Gotras of Brahmans, or Kaśyapa, Vaśishtha, Angirās, Atri, and Bhrigu. The Devarshis are Nara and Nárāyaṇa, the sons of Dharma; the Bālākhilyas, who sprung from Kratu; Kārmanda, the son of Pulaha; Kuvera, the son of Pulastya; and Achala, the son of Prat-
I have thus described to you the branches of the Vedas, and their subdivisions; the persons by whom they were made; and the reason why they were made (or the limited capacities of mankind). The same branches are instituted in the different Manwantaras. The primitive Veda, that of the progenitor of all things, is eternal: these branches are but its modifications (or Vikalpas).

I have thus related to you, Maitreya, the circumstances relating to the Vedas, which you desired to hear. Of what else do you wish to be informed? yūsha; Nára and Parvata, the sons of Kaśyapa. Rájarshis are Ikshúku and other princes. The Bráhmarshis dwell in the sphere of Brahmá; the Devarshis in the region of the gods; and the Rájarshis in the heaven of Indra.

No notice is taken here of a curious legend which is given in the Mahábhárata, in the Gadá Parvan. It is there said, that during a great drought the Brahmans, engrossed by the care of subsistence, neglected the study of the sacred books, and the Vedas were lost. The Rishi Sáraswata alone, being fed with fish by his mother Saraswatí, the personified river so named, kept up his studies, and preserved the Hindu scriptures. At the end of the famine the Brahmans repaired to him to be taught, and sixty thousand disciples again acquired a knowledge of the Vedas from Sáraswata. This legend appears to indicate the revival, or more probably the introduction, of the Hindu ritual by the race of Brahmans, or the people called Sáraswata; for, according to the Hindu geographers, it was the name of a nation, as it still is the appellation of a class of Brahmans who chiefly inhabit the Panjab. (As. Res. VII. 219, 338, 341.) The Sáraswata Brahmans are met with in many parts of India, and are usually fair-complexioned, tall, and handsome men. They are classed in the Játí málás, or popular lists of castes, amongst the five Gaura Brahmans, and are divided into ten tribes: they are said also to be especially the Purohits or family priests of the Kshatriya or military castes: (see the Játí málá, printed in Price's Hindi Selections, II. 280;) circumstances in harmony with the purport of the legend, and confirmatory of the Sáraswatas of the Panjab having been prominent agents in the establishment of the Hindu religion in India. The holy land of the Hindus, or the primary seat, perhaps, of Brahmanism, has for one of its boundaries the Saraswati river: see p. 181. n. 7.
CHAP. VII.

By what means men are exempted from the authority of Yama, as narrated by Bhishma to Nakula. Dialogue between Yama and one of his attendants. Worshippers of Vishnu not subject to Yama. How they are to be known.

MAITREYA.—You have indeed related to me, most excellent Brahman, all that I asked of you; but I am desirous to hear one thing which you have not touched on. This universe, composed of seven zones, with its seven subterrestrial regions, and seven spheres—this whole egg of Brahman—is everywhere swarming with living creatures, large or small, with smaller and smallest, and larger and largest; so that there is not the eighth part of an inch in which they do not abound. Now all these are captives in the chains of acts, and at the end of their existence become slaves to the power of Yama, by whom they are sentenced to painful punishments. Released from these inflictions, they are again born in the condition of gods, men, or the like: and thus living beings, as the Sãstras apprise us, perpetually revolve. Now the question I have to ask, and which you are so well able to answer, is, by what acts men may free themselves from subjection to Yama?

PARŚĀRA.—This question, excellent Muni, was once asked by Nakula1 of his grandfather Bhishma; and I will repeat to you the reply made by the latter.

Bhishma said to the prince, "There formerly came on a visit to me a friend of mine, a Brahman, from the Kalinga country, who told me that he had once proposed this question to a holy Muni, who retained the recollection of his former births, and by whom what was, and what will be, was accurately told. Being importuned by me, who placed implicit faith in his words, to repeat what that pious personage had imparted to him, he at last communicated it to me; and what he related I have never met with elsewhere.

1 Nakula is one of the Dévāva princes, and consequently grand-nephew, not grandson, of Bhishma: he is great grandson of Parśāra; and it is rather an anomaly for the latter to cite a conversation in which Nakula formerly bore a part.
“Having, then, on one occasion, put to him the same question which you have asked, the Kalinga Brahman recalled the story that had been told him by the Muni—the great mystery that had been revealed to him by the pious sage, who remembered his former existence—a dialogue that occurred between Yama and one of his ministers.

“Yama beholding one of his servants with his noose in his hand, whispered to him, and said, ‘Keep clear of the worshippers of Madhusúdana.
I am the lord of all men, the Vaishávas excepted. I was appointed by Brahmá, who is reverenced by all the immortals, to restrain mankind, and regulate the consequences of good and evil in the universe. But he who obeys Hari, as his spiritual guide, is here independent of me; for Vishńu is of power to govern and control me. As gold is one substance still, however diversified as bracelets, tiaras, or earrings, so Hari is one and the same, although modified in the forms of gods, animals, and man.
As the drops of water, raised by wind from the earth, sink into the earth again when the wind subsides, so the varieties of gods, men, and animals, which have been detached by the agitation of the qualities, are reunited, when that disturbance ceases, with the eternal. He who through holy knowledge diligently adores the lotus foot of that Hari, who is reverenced by the gods, is released from all the bonds of sin; and you must avoid him as you would avoid fire fed with oil.’

“Having heard these injunctions of Yama, the messenger addressed the lord of righteousness, and said, ‘Tell me, master, how am I to distinguish the worshipper of Hari, who is the protector of all beings?’ Yama replied, ‘You are to consider the worshipper of Vishńu, him who never deviates from the duties prescribed to his caste; who looks with equal indifference upon friend or enemy; who takes nothing (that is not his own), nor injures any being. Know that person of unblemished mind to be a worshipper of Vishńu. Know him to be a devout worshipper of Hari, who has placed Janárddana in his pure mind, which has been freed from fascination, and whose soul is undefiled by the soil of the Kali age. Know that excellent man to be a worshipper of Vishńu, who, looking upon gold in secret, holds that which is another’s wealth but as grass, and devotes all his thoughts to the lord. Pure is he as a mountain of clear crystal; for how can Vishńu abide in the hearts of men with malice and envy, and other evil passions? the glowing heat of fire abides not in a cluster of the cooling rays of the moon. He who lives pure in thought, free from malice, contented, leading a holy life, feeling tenderness for all creatures, speaking wisely and kindly, humble and sincere, has Vásudeva ever present in his heart. As the young Śál-tree by its beauty declares the excellence of the juices which it has imbibed from the earth, so when the eternal has taken up his abode in the bosom of any one, that man is lovely amidst the beings of this world. Depart, my servant, quickly from those men whose sins have been dispersed by moral and religious merit, whose minds are daily dedicated to the imperceptible deity, and who are exempt from pride, uncharitableness, and malice. In the heart in which the divine Hari, who is without beginning or end, abides, armed with a sword, a shell, and a mace, sin cannot remain; for it cannot coexist with that which destroys it, as darkness cannot continue in the world when the sun is shining. The eternal makes not his abode in the heart of that man who covets another’s wealth, who injures living creatures, who speaks harshness and untruth, who is proud of his iniquity, and whose mind is evil. Jñárrdāna occupies not his thoughts who envies another’s prosperity, who calumniates the virtuous, who never sacrifices nor bestows gifts upon the pious, who is blinded by the property of darkness. That vile wretch is no worshipper of Vishńu, who through avarice is unkind to his nearest friends and relations, to his wife, children, parents, and dependants. The brute-like man whose thoughts are evil, who is addicted to unrighteous acts, who ever seeks the society of the wicked, and suffers no day to pass without the perpetration of crime, is no worshipper of Vásudeva. Do you proceed afar off from those in whose hearts Ananta is enshrined;

² Or Yama and Niyama. The duties intended by these terms are variously enumerated. The commentator on the text specifies under the first head, absence of violence or cruelty to other beings (Ahinsá), honesty (Asteya), truth (Satya), chastity (Brahmáchéryya), and disinterestedness or non-acceptance of gifts (Aparigraha). Under Niyama are comprehended purity (Śauucha), contentment (Santosha), devotion (Tapas), study of the Vedas (Swádhénya), and adoration of the supreme (Īśvara-praúḍhána).
from him whose sanctified understanding conceives the supreme male and ruler, Vásudeva, as one with his votary, and with all this world. Avoid those holy persons who are constantly invoking the lotus-eyed Vásudeva, Vishúu, the supporter of the earth, the immortal wielder of the discus and the shell, the asylum of the world. Come not into the sight of him in whose heart the imperishable soul resides, for he is defended from my power by the discus of his deity: he is designed for another world (for the heaven of Vishúu).

"'Such,' said the Kalinga Brahman, 'were the instructions communicated by the deity of justice, the son of the sun, to his servants, as they were repeated to me by that holy personage, and as I have related them to you, chief of the house of Kuru' (Bhúshma). So also, Nakula, I have faithfully communicated to you all I heard from my pious friend, when he came from his country of Kalinga to visit me. I have thus explained to you, as was fitting, that there is no protection in the ocean of the world except Vishúu; and that the servants and ministers of Yama, the king of the dead himself, and his tortures, are all unavailing against one who places his reliance on that divinity."

I have thus, resumed Parásara, related to you what you wished to hear, and what was said by the son of Vivaswat\(^3\). What else do you wish to hear?

\(^3\) Or Vaivaswata. This section is called the Yama gíta.
CHAP. VIII.

How Vishnú is to be worshipped, as related by Aurva to Sagara. Duties of the four castes, severally and in common: also in time of distress.

MAITREYA.—Inform me, venerable teacher, how the supreme deity, the lord of the universe, Vishnú, is worshipped by those who are desirous of overcoming the world; and what advantages are reaped by men, assiduous in his adoration, from the propitiated Govinda.

PARÁśARA.—The question you have asked was formerly put by Sagara to Aurva. I will repeat to you his reply.

Sagara having bowed down before Aurva, the descendant of Bhrigu, asked him what were the best means of pleasing Vishnú, and what would be the consequence of obtaining his favour. Aurva replied, “He who pleases Vishnú obtains all terrestrial enjoyments; heaven and a place in heaven; and what is best of all, final liberation: whatever he wishes, and to whatever extent, whether much or little, he receives it, when Achyuta is content with him. In what manner his favour is to be secured, that also I will, oh king, impart to you, agreeably to your desire. The supreme Vishnú is propitiated by a man who observes the institutions of caste, order, and purificatory practices: no other path is the way to please him. He who offers sacrifices, sacrifices to him; he who murmurs prayer, prays to him; he who injures living creatures, injures him; for Hari is all beings. Janárddana therefore is propitiated by him

1 Sagara, as we shall see, was a king of the solar race. Aurva was a sage, the grandson of Bhrigu. When the sons of king Kritavirya persecuted and slew the children of Bhrigu, to recover the wealth which their father had lavished upon them, they destroyed even the children in the womb. One of the women of the race of Bhrigu, in order to preserve her embryo, secreted it in her thigh (Uru), whence the child on his birth was named Aurva: from his wrath proceeded a flame, that threatened to destroy the world; but at the persuasion of his ancestors he cast it into the ocean, where it abode with the face of a horse. Aurva was afterwards religious preceptor to Sagara, and bestowed upon him the Agneyástram, or fiery weapon, with which he conquered the tribes of barbarians, who had invaded his patrimonial possessions. Mahábh. Adi Purvan, Dána Dharma P., Hari Vansa.
who is attentive to established observances, and follows the duties prescribed for his caste. The Brahman, the Kshatriya, the Vaiśya, and the Śúdra, who attends to the rules enjoined his caste, best worships Vishúu. Keśava is most pleased with him who does good to others; who never utters abuse, calumny, or untruth; who never covets another’s wife or another’s wealth, and who bears ill-will towards none; who neither beats nor slays any animate or inanimate thing; who is ever diligent in the service of the gods, of the Brahmans, and of his spiritual preceptor; who is always desirous of the welfare of all creatures, of his children, and of his own soul; in whose pure heart no pleasure is derived from the imperfections of love and hatred. The man, oh monarch, who conforms to the duties enjoined by scriptural authority for every caste and condition of life, is he who best worships Vishúu: there is no other mode."

Aurva having thus spoken, Sagara said to him, "Tell me then, venerable Brahman, what are the duties of caste and condition: I am desirous of knowing them." To which Aurva answered and said, "Attentively listen to the duties which I shall describe as those severally of the Brahman, the Kshatriya, the Vaiśya, and the Śúdra. The Brahman should make gifts, should worship the gods with sacrifices, should be assiduous in studying the Vedas, should perform ablutions and libations with water, and should preserve the sacred flame. For the sake of subsistence he may offer sacrifices on behalf of others, and may instruct them in the Śástras; and he may accept presents of a liberal description in a becoming manner (or from respectable persons, and at an appropriate season). He must ever seek to promote the good of others, and do evil unto none; for the best riches of a Brahman are universal benevolence. He should look upon the jewels of another person as if they rúda, contain chapters or sections more or less in detail upon the moral and ceremonial duties of the Hindus; and a considerable portion of the Mahábhárata, especially in the Moksha Dharma Parvan, is devoted to the same subject. No other Pauráñik work, however, contains a series of chapters exactly analogous to those which follow, and which contain a compendious and systematic description of the Acháras, or personal and social obligations of the Hindus. The tenor of the whole is conformable to the institutes of Manu, and many passages are the same.

2 Most of the Puráñías, especially the Kúrma, Padma, Vámana, Agni, and Ga-
were pebbles; and should, at proper periods, procreate offspring by his wife. These are the duties of a Brahman.

"The man of the warrior tribe should cheerfully give presents to Brahmins, perform various sacrifices, and study the scriptures. His especial sources of maintenance are arms and the protection of the earth. The guardianship of the earth is indeed his especial province: by the discharge of this duty a king attains his objects, and realizes a share of the merit of all sacrificial rites. By intimidating the bad, and cherishing the good, the monarch who maintains the discipline of the different castes secures whatever region he desires.

"Brahmá, the great parent of creation, gave to the Vaiśya the occupations of commerce and agriculture, and the feeding of flocks and herds, for his means of livelihood; and sacred study, sacrifice, and donation are also his duties, as is the observance of fixed and occasional rites.

"Attendance upon the three regenerate castes is the province of the Śúdra, and by that he is to subsist, or by the profits of trade, or the earnings of mechanical labour. He is also to make gifts; and he may offer the sacrifices in which food is presented, as well as obsequial offerings.\(^3\)

\(^3\) The Pákayajna, or sacrifice in which food is offered, implies either the worship of the Viśwadevas, the rites of hospitality, or occasional oblations, on building a house, the birth of a child, or any occasion of rejoicing. It is to be understood, however, that this injunction intends his performing these ceremonies through the agency of a Brahman, as a Śúdra cannot repeat the Mantras or prayers that accompany them; and it might be a question how far he might be present, for he ought not even to hear such prayers repeated. The performance of funeral rites involves some personal share, and the Śúdra must present the cakes, but it must be done without Mantras; as the Mitákahara; 'This rite (the presentation of cakes) must be performed by the Śúdras, without formule, on the twelfth day.' नूतनम् प्रक्षेत्रम् करति प्रद्देश्ति। The Váyu P. directs the performance of the five great sacrifices by Śúdras, only omitting the Mantras: नूतनम् प्रक्षेत्रम् पतिरे मन्त्रस्वाधिभूतः। It may be suspected that the Puráṇas relaxed in some degree from the original rigour; for it may be inferred that the great ceremonies were altogether withheld from Śúdras in the time of Manu, who declares that none have any right or part (Adhikára) in his code except those who perform rites with Mantras, or the three regenerate castes (II. 16); and denounces as heinous sins teaching the “Besides these their respective obligations, there are duties equally incumbent upon all the four castes. These are, the acquisition of property, for the support of their families; cohabitation with their wives, for the sake of progeny; tenderness towards all creatures, patience, humility, truth, purity, contentment, decency of decoration, gentleness of speech, friendliness; and freedom from envy and repining, from avarice, and from detraction. These also are the duties of every condition of life.

“In times of distress the peculiar functions of the castes may be modified, as you shall hear. A Brahman may follow the occupations of a Kshatriya or a Vaiśya; the Kshatriya may adopt those of the Vaiśya; and the Vaiśya those of the Kshatriya: but these two last should never descend to the functions of the Śūdra, if it be possible to avoid them; and if that be not possible, they must at least shun the functions of the mined castes. I will now, Rājā, relate to you the duties of the several Áśramas or conditions of life.”

Vedas to Śūdras, performing sacrifices for them, or taking gifts from them. X. 109, 110, 111. Yájuṣvalkya, however, allows them to perform five great rites with the Namaskāra, or the simple salutation: नमः स्वामिनि नमो थे श्री-वराहायणस्। which Gotama confirms. Some restrict the sense of Mantra, also, to the prayers of the Vedas, and allow the Śūdras to use those of the Purāṇas; as Śūlapáni: न चेर्द्वा वचनानां श्रुतम् नि

and the Titthi Tatwa is cited in the Śūdra Kamalékára as allowing them any Mantras except those of the Vedas: नैश्वर्येनात्मकान्ति शुद्धमाधविकारः।

* This last clause reconciles what would else appear to be an incompatibility with Manu, who permits the Vaiśya in time of distress to descend to the servile acts of a Śūdra. X. 98.
CHAP. IX.

Duties of the religious student, householder, hermit, and mendicant.

AURVA continued.—"When the youth has been invested with the thread of his caste, let him diligently prosecute the study of the Vedas, in the house of his preceptor, with an attentive spirit, and leading a life of continence. He is to wait upon his Guru, assiduously observant of purificatory practices, and the Veda is to be acquired by him, whilst he is regular in the performance of religious rites. In the morning Sandhyā he is first to salute the sun; in the evening, fire; and then to address his preceptor with respect. He must stand when his master is standing; move when he is walking; and sit beneath him when he is seated: he must never sit, nor walk, nor stand when his teacher does the reverse. When desired by him, let him read the Veda attentively, placed before his preceptor; and let him eat the food he has collected as alms, when permitted by his teacher\(^1\). Let him bathe in water which has first been used for his preceptor's ablutions; and every morning bring fuel and water, and whatsoever else may be required.

"When the scriptural studies appropriate to the student have been completed, and he has received dismissal from his Guru, let the regenerate man enter into the order of the householder; and taking unto himself, with lawful ceremonies, house, wife, and wealth, discharge to the best of his ability the duties of his station\(^2\); satisfying the manes with funeral cakes; the gods with oblations; guests with hospitality; the sages with holy study; the progenitors of mankind with progeny; the spirits with the residue of oblations; and all the world with words of truth\(^3\). A \(^1\) These directions are the same as those prescribed by Manu, though not precisely in the same words. II. 175, et seq.

\(^2\) So Manu, III. 4, &c.

\(^3\) The great obligations, or, as Sir Wm. Jones terms them, sacraments, the Mahāyajnas, or great sacrifices, are, according to Manu, but five; Brahmayajna, sacred study; Pritiyajna, libations to the manes; Devayajna, burnt-offerings to the gods; Bāliyajna, offerings to all creatures; and Nriyajna, hospitality. III. 70, 71. The Prajāpatiyajna, or propagation of offspring, and Satyayajna, observance of truth, are apparently later additions.
DUTIES OF THE HOUSEHOLDER AND HERMIT. 295

householder secures heaven by the faithful discharge of these obligations. There are those who subsist upon alms, and lead an erratic life of self-denial, at the end of the term during which they have kept house. They wander over the world to see the earth, and perform their ablutions, with rites enjoined by the Vedas, at sacred shrines: houseless, and without food, and resting for the night at the dwelling at which they arrive in the evening. The householder is to them a constant refuge and parent: it is his duty to give them a welcome, and to address them with kindness; and to provide them, whenever they come to his house, with a bed, a seat, and food. A guest disappointed by a householder, who turns away from his door, transfers to the latter all his own misdeeds, and bears away his religious merit. In the house of a good man, contumely, arrogance, hypocrisy, repining, contradiction, and violence are annihilated: and the householder who fully performs this his chief duty of hospitality is released from every kind of bondage, and obtains the highest of stations after death.

"When the householder, after performing the acts incumbent on his condition, arrives at the decline of life, let him consign his wife to the care of his sons, and go himself to the forests. Let him there subsist upon leaves, roots, and fruit; and suffer his hair and beard to grow, and braid the former upon his brow; and sleep upon the ground: his dress must be made of skin or of Kàṣa or Kuśa grasses; and he must bathe thrice a day; and he must offer oblations to the gods and to fire, and treat all that come to him with hospitality: he must beg alms, and present food to all creatures: he must anoint himself with such unguents as the woods afford; and in his devotional exercises he must be endurant of heat and cold. The sage who diligently follows these rules, and leads the life of the hermit (or Vánaprastha), consumes, like fire, all imperfections, and conquers for himself the mansions of eternity.

"The fourth order of men is called that of the mendicant; the circumstances of which it is fit, oh king, that you should hear from me. Let the unimpassioned man, relinquishing all affection for wife, children, 4 This is also the doctrine of Manu, III. 100. 5 Manu, VI. 3, &c.

and possessions, enter the fourth order. Let him forego the three objects of human existence (pleasure, wealth, and virtue), whether secular or religious, and, indifferent to friends, be the friend of all living beings. Let him, occupied with devotion, abstain from wrong, in act, word, or thought, to all creatures, human or brute; and equally avoid attachment to any. Let him reside but for one night in a village, and not more than five nights at a time in a city; and let him so abide, that good-will, and not animosity, may be engendered. Let him, for the support of existence, apply for alms at the houses of the three first castes, at the time when the fires have been extinguished, and people have eaten. Let the wandering mendicant call nothing his own, and suppress desire, anger, covetousness, pride, and folly. The sage who gives no cause for alarm to living beings need never apprehend any danger from them. Having deposited the sacrificial fire in his own person, the Brahman feeds the vital flame, with the butter that is collected as alms, through the altar of his mouth; and by means of his spiritual fire he proceeds to his own proper abode. But the twice-born man, who seeks for liberation, and is pure of heart, and whose mind is perfected by self-investigation, secures the sphere of Brahmā, which is tranquil, and is as a bright flame that emits not smoke."

6 Manu, VI. 33, &c.
7 The text uses the term Dwijāti, which designates a man of the three first castes. The commentator cites various authorities to prove that its sense should be Brahman only, who alone is permitted to enter the fourth order.—गृहवस्थानं नाभिनुक्तम् गृहस्थ: गृहवस्थानं नाभिनुक्तम् गृहस्थ: गृहवस्थानं नाभिनुक्तम्।

Entrance into the fourth order is never for the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya. Entrance into the fourth order is for Brahmans, according to Śwayambhu. So says Duttāreya: "Let the Brahman proceed from his dwelling is also the expression of Yama, Samvartta, and Baudhāyaṇa." But this is not the general understanding of the law, nor was it originally so restricted apparently. Manu does not so limit it.
CHAP. X.

Ceremonies to be observed at the birth and naming of a child. Of marrying, or leading a religious life. Choice of a wife. Different modes of marrying.

SAGARA then addressed Aurva, and said, "You have described to me, venerable Brahman, the duties of the four orders and of the four castes. I am now desirous to hear from you the religious institutes which men should individually observe, whether they be invariable, occasional, or voluntary. Describe these to me; for all things are known, chief of Bhrigu's race, unto you." To this Aurva replied, "I will communicate to you, oh king, that which you have asked, the invariable and occasional rites which men should perform: do you attend.

"When a son is born, let his father perform for him the ceremonies proper on the birth of a child, and all other initiatory rites, as well as a Śrāddha, which is a source of prosperity. Let him feed a couple of Brahmans, seated with their faces to the east; and according to his means offer sacrifices to the gods and progenitors. Let him present to the manes 1 balls of meat mixed with curds, barley, and jujubes, with the part of his hand sacred to the gods, or with that sacred to Prajāpati 2. Let a Brahman perform such a Śrāddha, with all its offerings and circumambulations, on every occasion of good fortune 3.

"Next, upon the tenth day after birth, let the father give a name to his child; the first term of which shall be the appellation of a god, the second of a man, as Śārman or Varman; the former being the appropriate designation of a Brahman, the latter of a warrior; whilst Gupta

1 To the Nándimukhas. The Pitrīs, or progenitors, are so termed here from words occurring in the prayer used on the occasion of a festive Śrāddha. As. Res. VII. 270.
2 With the Daiva tīrtha, the tips of the fingers; or with the Prajāpatya tīrtha, the part of the hand at the root of the little finger. Manu, II. 58, 59. The second is called by Manu the Kāya tīrtha, from Ka, a synonyme of Prajāpati.
3 The Śrāddha is commonly an obsequial or funeral sacrifice, but it implies offerings to the progenitors of an individual and of mankind, and always forms part of a religious ceremony on an occasion of rejoicing or an accession of prosperity, this being termed the Abhyudaya or Vṛiddhi Śrāddha. As. Res. VII. 270.
and Dása are best fitted for the names of Vaiśyas and Śúdras. A name should not be void of meaning; it should not be indecent, nor absurd, nor ill-omened, nor fearful; it should consist of an even number of syllables; it should not be too long nor too short, nor too full of long vowels; but contain a due proportion of short vowels, and be easily articulated. After this and the succeeding initiatory rites, the purified youth is to acquire religious knowledge, in the mode that has been described, in the dwelling of his spiritual guide.

"When he has finished his studies, and given the parting donation to his preceptor, the man who wishes to lead the life of a householder must take a wife. If he does not propose to enter into the married state, he may remain as a student with his teacher, first making a vow to that effect, and employ himself in the service of his preceptor and of that preceptor's descendants; or he may at once become a hermit, or adopt the order of the religious mendicant, according to his original determination."

"If he marry, he must select a maiden who is of a third of his age; one who has not too much hair, but is not without any; one who is not

---

4 So Manu, II. 30, 31, 32. The examples given in the comment are, Somaśarman, Indravarman, Chandragupta, and Śivadása, respectively appropriate appellations of men of the four castes.

5 Or Sanskáras; initiatory ceremonies, purificatory of the individual at various stages.

6 Or the vow or pledge he has taken, that he will follow for life the observances of the student or ascetic; both of which are enumerated in the Nirváṇa Sindhū, as acts prohibited in the Kali age; a man is not to continue a student or Brahmáchari, i.e. a cenobite, for life; nor is he to become a mendicant without previously passing through the order of householder. In practice, however, the prohibition is not unfrequently disregarded.

7 By this is to be understood, according to the commentator, merely a young girl, but at the same time one not immature; for otherwise, he observes, a man of thirty, by which age he completes his sacred studies, would espouse a girl of but ten years of age. According to Manu, however, the period of religious study does not terminate until thirty-six; and in the East a girl of twelve would be marriageable. The text of Yásñawalkya has merely the word Yávyāsī, 'a very young woman.' It is worthy of remark here, that neither that text, nor the text of Manu, nor the interpretation of our text, authorizes the present practice of the nuptials of children. The obligation imposed upon a man of a life of perfect continence until he is more than thirty is singularly Malthusian.
very black nor yellow complexioned, and who is not from birth a cripple or deformed. He must not marry a girl who is vicious or unhealthy, of low origin, or laboured under disease; one who has been ill brought up; one who talks improperly; one who inherits some malady from father or mother; one who has a beard, or who is of a masculine appearance; one who speaks thick or thin, or croaks like a raven; one who keeps her eyes shut, or has the eyes very prominent; one who has hairy legs, or thick ankles; or one who has dimples in her cheeks when she laughs\(^8\). Let not a wise and prudent man marry a girl of such a description: nor let a considerate man wed a girl of a harsh skin; or one with white nails; or one with red eyes, or with very fat hands and feet; or one who is a dwarf, or who is very tall; or one whose eyebrows meet, or whose teeth are far apart, and resemble tusks. Let a householder marry a maiden who is in kin at least five degrees remote from his mother, and seven from his father, with the ceremonies enjoined by law\(^9\).

"The forms of marriage are eight, the Brāhma, Daiva, the Ársha, Prájápatya, Asúra, Gándharba, Rákshasa, and Páisácha; which last is the worst\(^10\): but the caste to which either form has been enjoined as lawful by inspired sages should avoid any other mode of taking a wife. The householder who espouses a female connected with him by similarity of religious and civil obligations, and along with her discharges the duties of his condition, derives from such a wife great benefits."

\(^8\) For the credit of Hindu taste it is to be noticed that the commentator observes the hemistich in which this last clause occurs is not found in all copies of the text.
\(^9\) See Manu, III. 5, &c.
\(^10\) These different modes of marriage are described by Manu, III. 27, &c.
CHAP. XI.

Of the Sadácháras, or perpetual obligations of a householder. Daily purifications, ablutions, libations, and oblations: hospitality: obsequial rites: ceremonies to be observed at meals, at morning and evening worship, and on going to rest.

SAGARA again said to Aurva, “Relate to me, Muni, the fixed observances of the householder, by attending to which he will never be rejected from this world or the next.”

Aurva replied to him thus: “Listen, prince, to an account of those perpetual observances, by adhering to which both worlds are subdued. Those who are called Sádhus (saints) are they who are free from all defects; and the term Sat means the same, or Sádhu: those practices or observances (Áchéras) which they follow are therefore called Sadácháras, ‘the institutions or observances of the pious’. The seven Rishis, the Manus, the patriarchs, are they who have enjoined and who have practised these observances. Let the wise man awake in the Muhúrta of Brahmá (or in the third Muhúrta, about two hours before sunrise), and with a composed mind meditate on two of the objects of life (virtue and wealth), and on topics not incompatible with them. Let him also think upon desire, as not conflicting with the other two; and thus contemplate with equal indifference the three ends of life, for the purpose of countering the unseen consequences of good or evil acts. Let him avoid wealth and desire, if they give uneasiness to virtue; and abstain from virtuous or religious acts, if they involve misery, or are censured by the world. Having risen, he must offer adoration to the sun; and then, in

1 Sir Wm. Jones renders Áchéra (दोषारा), ‘the immemorial customs of good men’ (Manu, II. 6); following the explanation of Kullúka Bhaṭṭa, which is much the same as that of our text: क्लूकेकिर्जारां नृट्यस: सीताण्ड आनन्दकानां। ‘Áchéra means the use of blankets or bark, &c. for dress. Sádhus are pious or just men.’ Áchéras are, in fact, all ceremonial and purificatory observances or practices, not expiatory, which are enjoined either by the Vedas or the codes of law.

2 That is, he may omit prescribed rites, if they are attended with difficulty or danger: he may forego ablutions, if they disagree with his health; and he may omit pilgrimage to holy shrines, if the way to them is infested by robbers. Again, it is enjoined in certain ceremonies to eat meat, or drink wine; but these practices the south-east quarter, at the distance of a bowshot or more, or any where remote from the village, void the impurities of nature. The water that remains after washing his feet he must throw away into the courtyard of the house. A wise man will never void urine on his own shadow, nor on the shadow of a tree, nor on a cow, nor against the sun, nor on fire, nor against the wind, nor on his Guru, nor men of the three first castes; nor will he pass either excrement in a ploughed field, or pasturage, or in the company of men, or on a high road, or in rivers and the like, which are holy, or on the bank of a stream, or in a place where bodies are burnt; or any where quickly. By day let him void them with his face to the north, and by night with his face to the south, when he is not in trouble. Let him perform these actions in silence, and without delay; covering his head with a cloth, and the ground with grass. Let him not take, for the purposes of cleanliness, earth from an ant-hill, nor a rat-hole, nor from water, nor from the residue of what has been so used, nor soil that has been employed to plaster a cottage, nor such as has been thrown up by insects, or turned over by the plough. All such kinds of earth let him avoid, as means of purification. One handful is sufficient after voiding urine; three after passing ordure: then ten handfuls are to be rubbed over the left hand, and seven over both hands. Let him then rinse his mouth with water that is pure, neither fetid, nor frothy, nor full of bubbles; and again use earth to cleanse his feet, washing them well with water. He is to drink water then three times, and twice wash his face with it; and next touch with it his head, the cavities of the eyes, ears, and nostrils, the forehead, the navel, and the heart. Having finally washed his mouth, a man is to clean and dress his hair, and to decorate his person, before a glass, with unguents, garlands, and perfumes. He is then, according to the custom of his caste, to acquire wealth, for the sake of subsistence; and with a lively faith worship the gods. Sacrifices with the acid juice, those with clarified butter, and those with offerings of food, are comprehended in

---

* Many of these directions are given by Manu, IV. 45, &c.

* The injunction. wealth: wherfore let men exert themselves to acquire wealth for these purposes.\(^4\)

"As preparatory to all established rites of devotion the householder should bathe in the water of a river, a pond, a natural channel, or a mountain torrent; or he may bathe upon dry ground, with water drawn from a well, or taken from a river, or other source, where there is any objection to bathing on the spot.\(^5\) When bathed, and clad in clean clothes, let him devoutly offer libations to the gods, sages, and progenitors, with the parts of the hand severally sacred to each. He must scatter water thrice, to gratify the gods; as many times, to please the Rishis; and once, to propitiate Prajápati: he must also make three libations, to satisfy the progenitors. He must then present, with the part of the hand sacred to the manes, water to his paternal grandfather and great-grandfather, to his maternal grandfather, great-grandfather, and his father; and at pleasure to his own mother and his mother's mother and grandmother, to the wife of his preceptor, to his preceptor, his maternal uncle, and other relations,\(^6\) to a dear friend, and to the \(^4\) That is, wealth is essential to the performance of religious rites, and it is also the consequence of performing them.

A householder should therefore diligently celebrate them, that he may acquire proerty, and thus be enabled to continue to sacrifice. According to Gautama there are seven kinds of each of the three sorts of sacrificial rites particularized in the text, or those in which the Soma juice, oiled butter, or food are presented. Of the latter, according to Manu, there are four varieties, the offering of food to the Viśwadevas, to spirits, to deceased ancestors, and to guests. II. 86. The seven of Gautama are, offerings to progenitors on certain eighth days of the fortnight, at the full and change, at Śrāddhas generally, and to the manes on the full moon of four different months, or Śrāvan, Agrahāyaṇa, Chaṭra, and Aśvin.

\(^5\) A person may perform his ablutions in his own house, if the weather or occupation prevent his going to the water. If he be sick, he may use warm water; and if bathing be altogether injurious, he may perform the Mantra śaṁśa, or repeat the prayers used at ablution, without the actual bath.

\(^6\) The whole series is thus given by Mr. Colebrooke; As. Res. V. 367. Triple libations of tila (sesamum seeds) and water are to be given to the father, paternal grandfather, and great grandfather; to the mother, maternal grandfather, great grandfather, and great great grandfather; and single libations are to be offered to the paternal and maternal grandmother and great grandmother, to the paternal uncle, brother, son, grandson, daughter's son,
son-in-law, maternal uncle, sister's son, father's sister's son, mother's sister, and king. Let him also, after libations have been made to the gods and the rest, present others at pleasure for the benefit of all beings, reciting inaudibly this prayer; ‘May the gods, demons, Yakshas, serpents, Rákshasas, Gandharbas, Piśáchas, Guhyakas, Siddhas, Kushmánás, trees, birds, fish, all that people the waters, or the earth, or the air, be propitiated by the water I have presented to them. This water is given by me for the alleviation of the pains of all those who are suffering in the realms of hell. May all those who are my kindred, and not my kindred, and who were my relations in a former life, all who desire libations from me, receive satisfaction from this water! May this water and sesamum, presented by me, relieve the hunger and thirst of all who are suffering from those inflictions, wheresoever they may be!’ Presentations of water, given in the manner, oh king, which I have described, yield gratification to all the world: and the sinless man, who in the sincerity of faith pours out these voluntary libations, obtains the merit that results from affording nutriment to all creatures.

‘Having then rinsed his mouth, he is to offer water to the sun, touching his forehead with his hands joined, and with this prayer; ‘Salutation to Vivasvat, the radiant, the glory of Viṣṇu; to the pure illuminator of the world; to Savitri, the granter of the fruit of acts.’ He is then to perform the worship of the house, presenting to his tutelary deity water, flowers, and incense. He is next to offer oblations with fire, not preceded by any other rite, to Brahmá. Having invoked Prajápati, let him pour oblations reverently to his household gods, to Káyapa and to Anumati, in succession. The residue of the oblation let him offer to other relatives. With exception of those, however, offered to his own immediate ancestors, which are obligatory, these libations are optional, and are rarely made.

7 The first part of this prayer is from the Sáma-veda, and is given by Mr. Colebrooke. As. Res. V. 367.

8 The rite is not addressed to Brahmá specially, but he is to be invoked to preside over the oblations offered to the gods and sages subsequently particularized.

9 Káyapa, the son of Kaśyapa, is Aditya, or the sun. Anumati is the personified moon, wanting a digit of full. The objects and order of the ceremony here succinctly described differ from those of which Mr. Colebrooke gives an account (As. Res. VII. 236), and from the form of oblations given by Ward (Account of the Hindus, II. 447); but, as observed by Mr. Colebrooke, ‘oblations are made with such ceremonies, and in such form, as are the earth, to water, and to rain, in a pitcher at hand; and to Dhátri and Vidhátri at the doors of his house, and in the middle of it to Brahmó. Let the wise man also offer the Bali, consisting of the residue of the oblations, to Indra, Yama, Varuña, and Soma, at the four cardinal points of his dwelling, the east and the rest; and in the north-east quarter he will present it to Dhanwantari. After having thus worshipped the domestic deities, he will next offer part of the residue to all the gods (the Viśwadevas); then, in the north-west quarter, to Váyu (wind); then, in all directions, to the points of the horizon, to Brahmá, to the atmosphere, and to the sun; to all the gods, to all beings, to the lords of beings, to the Pitrás, to twilight. Then taking other rice, let the householder at pleasure cast it upon a clean spot of ground, as an offering to all beings, repeating with collected mind this prayer: ‘May gods, men, animals, birds, saints, Yakshas, serpents, demons, ghosts, goblins, trees, all that desire food given by me; may ants, worms, moths, and other insects, hungered and bound in the bonds of acts; may all obtain satisfaction from the food left them by me, and enjoy happiness. May they who have neither mother, nor father, nor relations, nor food, nor the means of preparing it, be satisfied and pleased with the food presented for their contentment. Inasmuch as all beings, and this food, and I, and Vishnú are not different, I therefore give for their sustenance the food that is one with the body of all creatures. May all beings, that are comprehended in the fourteen orders of existent things, be satisfied with the food bestowed by me for their gratification, and be delighted.’

adapted to the religious rite which is intended to be subsequently performed.”

As. Res. VII. 237.

10 See also Manu, III. 84, &c. and the As. Res. VII. 275.

11 Or this ceremony may be practised instead of the preceding.

12 This prayer is said by Mr. Colebrooke to be taken from the Puráñas (As. Res. VII. 275): he translates the last clause, ‘May they who have neither food, nor means of obtaining it.’ In our text the phrase is वेंयम् — नेवारदन्तिन्तरपाशामित्वरसस्य which the commentator explains by वेंयम् नामितः वेंयम् पतात्र यथा पतितः यथा पतित्वं यथासमास्तुः: understanding Anna siddhi to mean ‘means of dressing food,’ Páka sádhana. The following passages of the prayer are evidently peculiar to the Vishnú Puráña.

13 Either fourteen classes of Bhútas or spirits, or the same number of living beings, or eight species of divine, one of human, and five of animal creatures.
DUTY OF HOSPITALITY.

Having uttered this prayer, let the devout believer cast the food upon the ground, for the nourishment of all kinds of beings; for the householder is thence the supporter of them all. Let him scatter food upon the ground for dogs, outcasts, birds, and all fallen and degraded persons.

"The householder is then to remain at eventide in his courtyard as long as it takes to milk a cow\(^{14}\), or longer if he pleases, to await the arrival of a guest. Should such a one arrive, he is to be received with a hospitable welcome; a seat is to be offered to him, and his feet are to be washed, and food is to be given him with liberality, and he is to be civilly and kindly spoken to; and when he departs, to be sent away by his host with friendly wishes. A householder should ever pay attention to a guest who is not an inhabitant of the same village, but who comes from another place, and whose name and lineage are unknown. He who feeds himself, and neglects the poor and friendless stranger in want of hospitality, goes to hell. Let a householder who has a knowledge of Brahmá reverence a guest, without inquiring his studies, his school, his practices, or his race\(^{15}\).

"A householder should also at the perpetual Śrāddha entertain another Brahman, who is of his own country, whose family and observances are known, and who performs the five sacramental rites. He is likewise to present to a Brahman learned in the Vedas four handfuls of food, set apart with the exclamation Hanta; and he is to give to a mendicant religious student three handfuls of rice, or according to his pleasure when he has ample means. These, with the addition of the mendicant before described, are to be considered as guests; and he who treats these four descriptions of persons with hospitality acquires himself of the debt due to his fellow men. The guest who departs disappointed from any house, and proceeds elsewhere, transfers his sins to the owner of that mansion, and takes away with him such a householder's merits. Brahmá, Prajápáti, Indra, fire, the Vasus, the sun, are present in the person of a \(^{14}\) This, according to the commentator, is equal to the fourth part of a Ghašiká, which, considering the latter synonymous with Muhúrta, or one-thirtieth of the day and night, would be twelve minutes.

\(^{15}\) These precepts, and those which follow, are of the same tenor as those given by Manu on the subject of hospitality (III. 99, &c.), but more detailed.
guest, and partake of the food that is given to him. Let a man therefore be assiduous in discharging the duties of hospitality; for he who eats his food without bestowing any upon a guest feeds only upon iniquity.

"In the next place the householder must provide food for a married damsel, remaining in her father's dwelling; for any one who is ill; for a pregnant woman; for the aged and the infants of his house; and then he may eat himself. He who eats whilst these are yet unfed is guilty of sin in this life, and when he dies is condemned in hell to feed upon phlegm. So he who eats without performing ablutions is fed in hell with filth; and he who repeats not his prayers, with matter and blood: he who eats unconsecrated food, with urine; and he who eats before the children and the rest are fed is stuffed in Tartarus with ordure. Hear therefore, oh king of kings, how a householder should feed, so that in eating no sin may be incurred, that invariable health and increased vigour may be secured, and all evils and hostile machinations may be averted. Let the householder, having bathed, and offered libations to the gods and manes, and decorated his hand with jewels, proceed to take his meal, after having repeated the introductory prayers, and offered oblations with fire, and having given food to guests, to Brahmans, to his elders, and to his family. He must not eat with a single garment on, nor with wet hands and feet, but dressed in clean clothes, perfumed, and wearing garlands of flowers: he must not eat with his face to any intermediate point of the horizon, but fronting the east or the north: and thus, with a smiling countenance, happy and attentive, let him partake of food, of good quality, wholesome, boiled with clean water, procured from no vile person nor by improper means, nor improperly cooked. Having given a portion to his hungry companions, let him take his food without reproach out of a clean handsome vessel, which must not be placed upon a low stool or bed. He must not eat in an unfit place or out of season, nor in an incommodious attitude; nor must he first cast any of his meal into the fire. Let his food be made holy with suitable texts; let it be good of its kind; and it must not be stale, except in the case of fruit or meat; nor must it be of 16 By stale, as applied to meat, is intended in this place probably meat which has been previously dressed as part of an offering to the gods or manes; meat which dry vegetable substances, other than jujubes or preparations of molasses; but never must a man eat of that of which the juices have been extracted. Nor must a man eat so as to leave no residue of his meal, except in the case of flour, cakes, honey, water, curds, and butter. Let him, with an attentive mind, first taste that which has a sweet flavour: he may take salt and sour things in the middle course, and finish with those which are pungent and bitter. The man who commences his meal with fluids, then partakes of solid food, and finishes with fluids again, will ever be strong and healthy. In this manner let him feed without fault, silent, and contented with his food; taking, without uttering a word, to the extent of five handfuls, for the nutriment of the vital principle. Having eaten sufficiently, the householder is then to rinse his mouth, with his face turned towards the east or the north; and having again sipped water, he is to wash his hands from the wrist downwards. With a pleased and tranquil spirit he is then to take a seat, and call to memory his tutelary deity; and then he is thus to pray: ‘May fire, excited by air, convert this food into the earthly elements of this frame, and in the space afforded by the ethereal atmosphere cause it to digest, and yield me satisfaction! May this food, in its assimilation, contribute to the vigour of the earth, water, fire, and air of my body, and afford unmixed gratification! May Agasti, Agni, and submarine fire effect the digestion of the food of which I have eaten; may they grant me the happiness which its conversion into nutriment engenders; and may health ever animate my form! May Vishnú, who is the chief principle of all invested with bodily structure and the organs of sense, be propitiated by my faith in him, and influence the assimilation of the invigorating food which I is dressed in the first instance for an individual being prohibited; as by Yajnavalkya: पुष्पांच्छ चप्पुरेण। 'Let him avoid flesh killed in vain;' or that which is not the residue of an offering to the gods, &c. तेनाशृवृतातिष्ठ सक्षवरी। So also Manu, V. 7.

17 By dried vegetables, &c. (मृष्यकाल्य ढीं) is to be understood unboiled vegetables, or potherbs dressed without being sprinkled with water: मलोपवेष चिन्ता च। Instead of पलोपवेष्या ‘jujubes,’ the reading is sometimes पलोपवेष्या ‘myrobalans;’ the other term, मद्यप्रेषा, is explained ‘sweetmeats.’ The construction here, however, is somewhat obscure.

18 As cake, or the sediment of any thing after expression.
have eaten! For verily Vishúu is the eater and the food and the nutriment: and through this belief may that which I have eaten be digested.'

"Having repeated this prayer, the householder should rub his stomach with his hand, and without indolence perform such rites as confer repose, passing the day in such amusements as are authorized by holy writings, and are not incompatible with the practices of the righteous; until the Sandhyá, when he must engage in pious meditation. At the Sandhyá at the close of the day he must perform the usual rites before the sun has quite set; and in the morning he must perform them before the stars have disappeared. The morning and evening rites must never be neglected, except at seasons of impurity, anxiety, sickness, or alarm. He who is preceded by the sun in rising, or sleeps when the sun is setting, unless it proceed from illness and the like, incurs guilt which requires atonement; and therefore let a man rise before the sun in the morning, and sleep not until after he has set. They who sinfully omit both the morning and the evening service go after death to the hell of darkness. In the evening, then, having again dressed food, let the wife of the householder, in order to obtain the fruit of the Vaiśwadeva rite, give food, without prayers, to outcasts and unclean spirits. Let the householder himself, according to his means, again shew hospitality to any guest who may arrive, welcoming him with the salutation of evening, water for his feet, a seat, a supper, and a bed. The sin of want of hospitality to a guest who comes after sunset is eight times greater than that of turning away one who arrives by day. A man should therefore most especially shew respect to one who comes to him in the evening for shelter, as the attentions that gratify him will give pleasure to all the gods. Let the householder, then, according to his ability, afford a guest food, potherbs, water, a bed, a mat, or, if he can do no more, ground on which to lie.

"After eating his evening meal, and having washed his feet, the householder is to go to rest. His bed is to be entire, and made of wood: it is not to be scanty, nor cracked, nor uneven, nor dirty, nor infested by insects, 19 So Manu, II. 101. and IV. 93.

nor without a bedding: and he is to sleep with his head either to the east or to the south; any other position is unhealthy. In due season a man should approach his wife, when a fortunate asterism prevails, in an auspicious moment, and on even nights, if she is not unbathed, sick, unwell, averse, angry, pregnant, hungry, or over-fed. He should be also free from similar imperfections, should be neatly attired and adorned, and animated by tenderness and affection. There are certain days on which unguents, flesh, and women are unlawful, as the eighth and fourteenth lunar days, new moon and full moon, and the entrance of the sun into a new sign. On these occasions the wise will restrain their appetites, and occupy themselves in the worship of the gods, as enjoined by holy writ, in meditation, and in prayer; and he who behaves differently will fall into a hell where ordure will be his food. Let not a man stimulate his desires by medicines, nor gratify them with unnatural objects, or in public or holy places. Let him not think incontinently of another's wife, much less address her to that end; for such a man will be born in future life as a creeping insect. He who commits adultery is punished both here and hereafter; for his days in this world are cut short, and when dead he falls into hell. Thus considering, let a man approach his own wife in the proper season, or even at other times."

30 So Manu, IV. 128.
CHAP. XII.

Miscellaneous obligations—purificatory, ceremonial, and moral.

AURVA continued.—"Let a respectable householder ever venerate the gods, kine, Brahmans, saints, aged persons, and holy teachers. Let him observe the two daily Sandhyás, and offer oblations to fire. Let him dress in unorned garments, use delicate herbs and flowers, wear emeralds and other precious stones, keep his hair smooth and neat, scent his person with agreeable perfumes, and always go handsomely attired, decorated with garlands of white flowers. Let him never appropriate another's property, nor address him with the least unkindness. Let him always speak amiably and with truth, and never make public another's faults. Let him not desire another's prosperity, nor seek his enmity. Let him not mount upon a crazy vehicle, nor take shelter under the bank of a river (which may fall upon him). A wise man will not form a friendship nor walk in the same path with one who is disesteemed, who is a sinner or a drunkard, who has many enemies, or who is lousy, with a harlot or her gallant, with a pauper or a liar, with a prodigal, a slanderer, or a knave. Let not a man bathe against the strength of a rapid stream, nor enter a house on fire, nor climb to the top of a tree; nor (in company) clean his teeth or blow his nose, nor gape without covering his mouth, nor clear his throat, nor cough, nor laugh loudly, nor emit wind with noise, nor bite his nails, nor cut grass, nor scratch the ground, nor put his beard into his mouth, nor crumble a clod of clay; nor look upon the chief planetary bodies when he is unclean. Let him not express disgust at a corpse, for the odour of a dead body is the produce of the moon. Let a decent man ever avoid by night the place where four roads meet, the village tree, the grove adjacent to the place where bodies are burnt, and a loose woman. Let him not pass across the shadow of a venerable person, of an image, of a deity, of a flag, of a heavenly luminary. Let him not travel alone through a forest, nor sleep by himself in an empty house. Let him keep remote from hair, bones, thorns, filth, remnants of offerings, ashes, chaff, and earth wet with water in which another has bathed. Let him not receive the protection of the unworthy, nor attach himself to the dishonest. Let him not approach a beast of prey; and let him not tarry long when he has risen from sleep. Let him not lie in bed when he is awake, nor encounter fatigue when it is time to rest. A prudent man will avoid, even at a distance, animals with tusks and horns; and he will shun exposure to frost, to wind, and to sunshine. A man must neither bathe, nor sleep, nor rinse his mouth whilst he is naked: he must not wash his mouth, or perform any sacred rite, with his waistband unfastened: and he must not offer oblations to fire, nor sacrifice to the gods, nor wash his mouth, nor salute a Brahman, nor utter a prayer, with only one garment on. Let him never associate with immoral persons: half an instant is the limit for the intercourse of the righteous with them. A wise man will never engage in a dispute with either his superiors or inferiors: controversy and marriage are to be permitted only between equals. Let not a prudent man enter into contentions: let him avoid unprofitable enmity. A small loss may be endured; but he should shun the wealth that is acquired by hostility.

1 Manu, IV. 71. "He who breaks clay, or cuts grass, or bites his nails, will speedily fall to ruin."
2 Manu, IV. 130.

"When a man has bathed, he must not wipe his limbs with a towel nor with his hands, nor shake his hair, nor rinse his mouth before he has risen. Let him not (when sitting) put one foot over another, nor stretch forth his foot, in the presence of a superior, but sit with modesty in the posture called Virásana (or on his knees). He must never pass round a temple upon his left hand, nor perform the ceremony of circumambulating any venerable object in the reverse direction. A decent man will not spit, nor eject any impurity, in front of the moon, fire, the sun, water, wind, or any respectable person; nor will he void urine standing, nor upon the highway: he will never step over phlegm, ordure, urine, or blood; nor is the expectoration of the mucus of the throat allowable at the time of eating, offering sacrifices or oblations, or repeating prayers, or in the presence of a respectable person.

---

3 Manu, IV. 57. 4 Ib. id. 78. 5 Ib. id. 45. 6 Ib. id. 52.
CONSEQUENCES OF VIRTUOUS AND DECOROUS CONDUCT.

"Let not a man treat women with disrespect, nor let him put entire faith in them. Let him not deal impatiently with them, nor set them over matters of importance. A man who is attentive to the duties of his station will not go forth from his house without saluting the chaplets, flowers, gems, clarified butter, and venerable persons in it. At proper seasons he will salute respectfully the places where four roads meet, when engaged in offering oblations with fire. Let him liberally relieve the virtuous who are poor, and reverence those who are learned in the Vedas. He who is a worshipper of the gods and sages, who gives cakes and water to the manes, and who exercises hospitality, obtains the highest regions after death. He who speaks wisely, moderately, and kindly, goes to those worlds which are the inexhaustible sources of happiness. He who is intelligent, modest, devout, and who reverences wisdom, his superiors, and the aged, goes to heaven.

"On the days called Parvas, on periods of impurity, upon unseasonable thunder, and the occurrence of eclipses or atmospheric portents, a wise man must desist from the study of the Vedas. The pious man who suppresses anger and envy, who is benevolent to all, and allays the fears of others, secures, as the least of his rewards, enjoyment in Swarga. A man should carry an umbrella, as a defence against sun and rain; he should bear a staff when he goes by night, or through a wood; and he should walk in shoes, if he desires to keep his body from harm. As he goes along he should not look up, nor about him, nor afar off, but keep his eyes upon the ground to the extent of a couple of yards.

"The householder who expels all sources of imperfection is in a great degree acquitted of the three ordinary objects of existence, desire, wealth, and virtue; sinless amongst the sinful; speaking amicably to all men; his whole soul melting with benevolence; final felicity is in his grasp. The earth is upheld by the veracity of those who have subdued their passions, and, following righteous practices, are never contaminated by desire, covetousness, and wrath. Let therefore a wise man ever speak the truth when it is agreeable, and when the truth would inflict pain let him hold his peace. Let him not utter that which, though acceptable, would be detrimental; for it were better to speak that which would be salutary, although it should give exceeding offence. A considerate man will always cultivate, in act, thought, and speech, that which is good for living beings, both in this world and in the next."

7 Manu, IV. 101, &c. The legislator is much more copious on this subject than the author of the Purāṇa.

8 So Manu, IV. 138. "Let him say what is true, but let him say what is pleasing. Let him speak no disagreeable truth, nor let him speak agreeable falsehood. This is a primeval rule."

9 That the preceding chapter agrees in many respects very closely with the contents of the fourth book of the Institutes of Manu, on economics and private morals, will be evident from the instances cited of some of the parallel passages. Several others might have been adduced.
CHAP. XIII.

Of Srāddhas, or rites in honour of ancestors, to be performed on occasions of rejoicing.

Obsequial ceremonies. Of the Ekoddhāta or monthly Srāddha, and the Sapiṇḍana or annual one. By whom to be performed.

Aurva continued.—“The bathing of a father without disrobing is enjoined when a son is born; and he is to celebrate the ceremony proper for the event, which is the Srāddha offered upon joyous occasions. With composed mind, and thinking on nothing else, the Brahman should offer worship to both the gods and progenitors, and should respectfully circumambulate, keeping Brahman on his left hand, and give them food. Standing with his face to the east, he should present, with the

1 The offerings of the Hindus to the Pitrīs partake of the character of those of the Romans to the lares and manes, but bear a more conspicuous part in their ritual. They are said indeed by Manu (III. 203), in words repeated in the Vāyu and Matya Purāṇas and Hari Vanśa, to be of more moment than the worship of the gods: िनाःपुराण शत्रुः शासुरार हिसंदे. These ceremonies are not to be regarded as merely obsequial; for independently of the rites addressed to a recently deceased relative, and in connexion with him to remote ancestors and to the progenitors of all beings, which are of a strictly obsequial or funereal description, offerings to deceased ancestors, and the Pitrīs in general, form an essential ceremony on a great variety of festive and domestic occasions. The Niśāya Sūndhu, in a passage referred to by Mr. Colebrooke (As. Res. VII.), specifies the following Srāddhas:

1. The Nitya, or perpetual; daily offerings to ancestors in general: 2. The Naṁmītika, or occasional; as the Ekoddhāta, or obsequial offerings on account of a kinsman recently deceased: 3. The Kāmya, voluntary; performed for the accomplishment of a special design (प्रविद्धारित): 4. The Vṛiddhi; performed on occasions of rejoicing or prosperity: 5. The Sapiṇḍana; offerings to all individual and to general ancestors: 6. The Pārvaṇa Srāddha; offerings to the manes on certain lunar days called Parvas, or day of full moon and new moon, and the eighth and fourteenth days of the lunar fortnight: 7. The Goshhi; for the advantage of a number of learned persons, or of an assembly of Brahman, invited for the purpose: 8. The Sūddhi; one performed to purify a person from some defilement; an expiatory Srāddha: 9. The Karmāṇa; one forming part of the initiatory ceremonies, or Sanakāras, observed at conception, birth, tonsure, &c.: 10. The Daiva; to which the gods are invited: 11. The Yātra Srāddha; held by a person going a journey: and 12. The Puṣṭi Srāddha; one performed to promote health and parts of the hand sacred to the gods and to Prajāpati, balls of food, with curds, unbruised grain, and jujubes; and should perform, on every accession of good fortune, the rite by which the class of progenitors termed Nándimukha is propitiated. A householder should diligently worship the Pitris so named, at the marriage of a son or daughter, on entering a new dwelling, on giving a name to a child, on performing his tonsure and other purificatory ceremonies, at the binding of the mother's hair during gestation, or on first seeing the face of a son, or the like.

wealth. Of these, the four which are considered the most solemn are the rite performed for a parent, or near relative, lately deceased; that which is performed for kindred collectively; that observed on certain lunar days; and that celebrated on occasions of rejoicing: चन्द्र पाडा बिषयोग्य सुखितमिनीदेवतायां चन्द्रविशेष सुखाय निर्माय सिंधु, p. 271.

Manu directs the balls to be made from the remainder of the clarified butter constituting the previous oblation to the gods. III. 215. Kulūka Bhāṣṭa explains, however, the oblation to consist partly of Anna (अन्न) food, or boiled rice. The latter is the article of which the balls chiefly consist. Yājñavalkya directs them to be made of rice and sesame-seeds. The Vāyu P. adds to these two ingredients, honey and butter: but various kinds of fruit, of pulse, and of grain, and water, frankincense, sugar, and milk, are also mixed up in the Pińdas. Their size also differs; and according to Angrās, as quoted by Hemādi in the Śrāddha Mayūkha, they may be of the dimension of the fruit of the jujube, or of the hog-plum, of the fruit of the Bel, or of the wood-apple, or of a fowl's egg. Some authorities direct Pińdas of a different size for different Śrāddhas; prescribing them no larger than the wood-apple at the first or pure funereal ceremony, and as big as a cocoa-nut at the monthly and annual Śrāddha. In practice the Pińda is usually of such a magnitude that it may be conveniently held by the hand.

We have here the authority of the text for classing the Nándimukhas amongst the Pitris (see p. 297); the verse is, नानिदेव मुंग निर्मायन पारे। प्रीतवते बाजु बने। वर्ग पुंजे। चन्द्रविशेष मुंगाय। and the same Gaṇa or class is presently again named: नानिदेव मुंग निर्मायन पुंजे। चन्द्रविशेष मुंगाय। The Mantra of the Vriddhi or festival Śrāddha is also said, in the Nirnīya Sindhū, to be नानिदेव मुंगाय। चन्द्रविशेष मुंगाय। According to the authorities, however, which are cited in that work, there seems to be some uncertainty about the character of the Nándimukhas; and they are addressed both as Pitris and gods: being in the former case either the ancestors prior to the great grandfather, ancestors collectively, or a certain class of them; and in the latter, being identified with the Viśwadevas, or a class of them called also Ürdhavaktra. The term Nándimukha is also applied to the rite itself, or to the Vriddhi Śrāddha, and to one addressed to maternal ancestors. Nirnīya Sindhū, p. 268, &c.
The Śrāddha on such occasions, however, has been briefly alluded to. Hear now, oh king, the rules for the performance of obsequial rites.

"Having washed the corpse with holy water, decorated it with garlands, and burnt it without the village, the kinsmen, having bathed with their clothes on, are to stand with their faces to the south, and offer libations to the deceased, addressing him by name, and adding, 'wherever thou mayest be.' They then return, along with the cattle coming from pasture, to the village; and upon the appearance of the stars retire to rest, sleeping on mats spread upon the earth. Every day (whilst the mourning lasts) a cake or ball of food is to be placed on the ground, as an offering to the deceased; and rice, without flesh, is to be daily eaten. Brahmins are to be fed for as many days as the mourner pleases, for the soul of the defunct derives satisfaction accordingly as his relatives are content with their entertainment. On the first day, or the third, or seventh, or ninth (after the death of a person), his kinsmen should change their raiment, and bathe out of doors, and offer a libation of water, with (tila) sesame seeds. On the fourth day the ashes and bones should be collected: after which the body of one connected with the deceased by offerings of funeral cakes may be touched (by an indifferent person), without thereby incurring impurity; and those who are related only by presentation of water are qualified for any occupation."

4 "An oblation of water must be next presented from the joined palms of the hand, naming the deceased and the family from which he sprang, and saying, 'May this oblation reach thee.'" As. Res. VII. 244. The text has, यथै तत्र विसंविपत्त्युका वेदी शादिन ।

5 The proper period of mourning is ten days, on each of which offerings of cakes, and libations of water, are to be made to the deceased, augmenting the number of cakes each day, so that on the last day ten cakes are presented. When the period is shorter, the same number of ten cakes must be distributed amongst the several days, or they may be all presented on one day. Niríṣaya Sindhu, p. 429.

6 It should be, more correctly, on that day on which the mourning ceases, or, as previously mentioned, the first, third, seventh, or ninth; but the authorities vary, and, besides these, the second and fourth days, and certain days of the fortnight or month, are specified. Niríṣaya Sindhu, p. 432.

7 They are no longer unclean. The Sapiúdas, or those connected by offerings of cakes to common ancestors, extend to seven degrees, ascending or descending. The Samánodakas, or those similarly connected by presentations of water, to fourteen degrees.
PERIODS OF IMPURITY.

The former class of relatives may use beds, but they must still refrain from unguents and flowers, and must observe continence, after the ashes and bones have been collected (until the mourning is over). When the deceased is a child, or one who is abroad, or who has been degraded, or a spiritual preceptor, the period of uncleanness is but brief, and the ceremonies with fire and water are discretionals. The food of a family in which a kinsman is deceased is not to be partaken of for ten days; and during that period, gifts, acceptance, sacrifice, and sacred study are suspended. The term of impurity for a Brahman is ten days; for a Kshatriya, twelve; for a Vaisya, half a month; and a whole month for a Sudra. On the first day after uncleanness ceases, the nearest relation of the deceased should feed Brahmins at his pleasure, but in uneven numbers, and offer to the deceased a ball of rice upon holy grass placed near the residue of the food that has been eaten. After the guests have been fed, the mourner, according to his caste, is to touch water, a weapon, a goad, or a staff, as he is purified by such contact. He may then resume the duties prescribed for his caste, and follow the avocation ordinarily pursued by its members.

"The Sraddha enjoined for an individual is to be repeated on the day of his death (in each month for a year), but without the prayers and rites performed on the first occasion, and without offerings to the Viswadevas. A single ball of food is to be offered to the deceased, as the purification of one person, and Brahmins are to be fed. The Brahmins are to be asked by the sacrificer if they are satisfied; and upon their assent, the prayer, 'May this ever satisfy such a one' (the deceased) is to be recited.

8 That is, a mere guest or stranger is not to partake of it. The food directed to be given to Brahmins is given in general only to the relatives of the deceased, who are already unclean. In this respect our text and the modern practice seem to differ from the primitive system, as described by Manu, III. 187. The eleventh or twelfth day is the term on which the Sraddha which crowns the whole of the funeral rites is to be performed, and when Brahmins are to be invited. Niraya Sindhu, p. 437.

9 The number of Puudas, however, is for each case the same, or ten. Niraya Sindhu, p. 429.

10 So Manu, III. 251. It may be doubted if the monthly Sraddha was part
This is the Śrāddha called Ekoddiśhta, which is to be performed monthly to the end of a twelvemonth from the death of a person; at the expiration of which the ceremony called Sapiṇḍana is to be observed. The practices of this rite are the same as those of the monthly obsequies, but a lustration is to be made with four vessels of water, perfumes, and sesamum; one of these vessels is considered as dedicated to the deceased, the other three to the progenitors in general; and the contents of the former are to be transferred to the other three, by which the deceased becomes included in the class of ancestors, to whom worship is to be addressed with all the ceremonies of the Śrāddha. The persons who are competent to perform the obsequies of relations connected by the offering of the cake are the son, grandson, great grandson, a kinsman of the deceased, the descendants of a brother, or the posterity of one allied by funeral offerings. In absence of all these, the ceremony may be instituted by those related by presentations of water only, or those connected by offerings of cakes or water to maternal ancestors. Should both families in the male line be extinct, the last obsequies may be performed by women, or by the associates of the deceased in religious or social institutions, or by any one who becomes possessed of the property of a deceased kinsman.

Obsequial rites are of three descriptions, initiative, intermediate, and subsequent. The first are those which are observed after the burning of the corpse until the touching of water, weapons, &c. (or until the cessation of uncleanness). The intermediate ceremonies are the Śrāddhas called Ekoddiśhta, which are offered every month; and the subsequent rites are those which follow the Sapiṇḍikaraṇa, when the deceased is admitted amongst the ancestors of his race; and the ceremonies are thenceforth general or ancestral. The first set of rites (as essential) are to be performed by the kindred of the father or mother, whether connected by the offering of the cake or of water, by the associates of the deceased, or by the prince who inherits his property.

of the ancient system, although Kullūka Bhaṭṭa supposes it to be referred to (v. 248), and supplies the fancied omission of the text.

11 Pūrva, 'first'; Madhyama, 'middle'; Uttara, 'last.'
The first and the last rites are both to be performed by sons and other relations, and by daughter's sons, and their sons; and so are the sacrifices on the day of the person's death. The last class, or ancestral rites, are to be performed annually, with the same ceremonies as are enjoined for the monthly obsequies; and they may be also performed by females.
As the ancestral rights are therefore most universal, I will describe to you, oh king, at what seasons, and in what manner, they should be celebrated."
CHAP. XIV.

Of occasional śrāddhas, or obsequial ceremonies: when most efficacious, and at what places.

AURVA proceeded.—"Let the devout perform of an ancestral oblation propitiate Brahmā, Indra, Rudra, the Āswins, the sun, fire, the

1 We may here take the opportunity of inquiring who are meant by the Pitrīs; and, generally speaking, they may be called a race of divine beings, inhabiting celestial regions of their own, and receiving into their society the spirits of those mortals for whom the rite of fellowship in obsequial cakes with them, the Sapinīkārana, has been duly performed. The Pitrīs collectively, therefore, include a man's ancestors; but the principal members of this order of beings are of a different origin. The Vāyu, Mataya, and Padma Purāṇas, and Hari Vānsa, profess to give an account of the original Pitrīs. The account is much the same, and for the most part in the same words, in all. They agree in distinguishing the Pitrīs into seven classes; three of which are without form (chaturāṣṭra), or composed of intellectual, not elementary substance, and assuming what forms they please; and four are corporeal (mahāpurūṣa). When they come to the enumeration of the particular classes they somewhat differ, and the accounts in all the works are singularly imperfect. According to a legend given by the Vāyu and the Hari Vānsa, the first Pitrīs were the sons of the gods. The gods having offended Brahmā, by neglecting to worship him, were cursed by him to become fools; but upon their repentance he directed them to apply to their sons for instruction. Being taught accordingly the rites of expiation and penance by their sons, they addressed them as fathers; whence the sons of the gods were the first Pitrīs. ते आतरस्वामि तेन जननी: दिनीयाः।। मूर्त्ति देवरीतोखलाई देवयोगाः।। So the Mataya has सन्नवयो मातृकायो मातृकायो देवरीतोखला।। 'The Pitrīs are born in the Manvantaras as the sons of the gods.' The Hari Vānsa makes the sons assume the character of fathers, addressing them, 'Depart, children;' गोदन गुपपाशके गुपपाशके।। Again; the Vāyu P. declares the seven orders of Pitrīs to have been originally the first gods, the Vairājas, whom Brahmā, with the eye of Yoga, beheld in the eternal spheres, and who are the gods of the gods: लोक वालोविधि मातृ तिरंग भा तोऽं।। ते वैराजां इति तात्त्व देवर्यो देवर्यो इति देवर्यो।। वादिते देवर्यो इति अन्त्वाः।। ते वैराजाः समानननामाः गोदाने लोकपूर्वनाः।। जनवर्यश्चतर्कयो च च जनवर्यसंपूर्वनाः।। अग्रवतवात्त्वकां च जनवर्यसंपूर्वनाः।। अग्रवतवात्त्वकां च जनवर्यसंपूर्वनाः।। Again; in the same work we have the incorporeal Pitrīs called Vairājas, from being the sons of the Prajāpāti Virāja: चन्द्रेण तिरंगाः वृक्षे देवर्यो इति तिरंगाः।। विनिःश्च दिन्ते च सेवाः इति तिरंगाः।। The Mataya agrees with this latter statement, and adds that the gods worship them: चन्द्रेण तिरंगाः वृक्षे न तिरंगाः देवर्यो इति तिरंगाः।। विनिःश्च तिरंगाः वृक्षे न तिरंगाः देवर्यो इति तिरंगाः।। The Hari Vānsa has the same statement, but more precisely Vasus, the winds, the Viśwadevas, the sages, birds, men, animals, reptiles, progenitors, and all existent things, by offering adoration to them distinguishes the Vaiśraj as one class only of the incorporeal Pitrīṣ. The commentator states the same, calling the three incorporeal Pitrīṣ, Vaiśraj, Agniśhāvātaś, and Varhishāda; and the four corporeal orders, Sukālaś, Āngiraś, Suswadhaś, and Somapāś. The Vaiśraj are described as the fathers of Menē, the mother of Uma. Their abode is variously termed the Sāntānīka, Sāntāna, and Soma loka. As the posterity of Viraj, they are the Somasads of Manu. The other classes of Pitrīṣ the three Purāṇas agree with Manu in representing as the sons of the patriarchs, and in general assign to them the same offices and posterity. They are the following:—

Agniśhāvātaś—sons of Marichi, and Pitrīṣ of the gods (Manu, Mataya, Padma): living in Soma-loka, and parents of Achchodā (Mataya, Padma, Hari Vanśa). The Vāyu makes them resident of Vaiśraj-loka, sons of Pulastya, Pitrīṣ of the demi-gods and demons, and parents of Pivari; omitting the next order of Pitrīṣ, to whom these circumstances more accurately refer. The commentator on the Hari V. derives the name from Agniśhu (अग्निशः), 'in or by oblations to fire,' and Ṭitta (टित्त), 'obtained,' 'invoked.'

Varhishādaś—sons of Atri, and Pitrīṣ of the demons (Manu): sons of Pulastya, Pitrīṣ of the demons, residents in Vaibhṛaja, fathers of Pivari (Mataya, Padma, Hari V.).

These three are the formless or incorporeal Pitrīṣ.

Somapāś—descendants of Bhrigu, or sons of Kavi by Śvadhi, the daughter of Agni; and Pitrīṣ of the Brahmans (Manu and Vāyu P.). The Padma calls them Ushmapāś. The Hari V. calls the Somapāś, to whom it ascribes the same descent as the Vāyu, the Pitrīṣ of the Śūdras; and the Sukalās the Pitrīṣ of the Brahmans.

Havishmantas—in the solar sphere, sons of Āngiraś, and Pitrīṣ of the Kāstraś (Manu, Vāyu, Mataya, Padma, Hari Vanśa).

Ajyapāś—sons of Kārtaṇa, Pitrīṣ of the Vaiśyās, in the Kānuda-lōka (Manu, &c.); but the lawgiver calls them the sons of Pulastya. The Pitrīṣ of the Vaiśyās are called Kāvyas in the Nandi Upapuruṣā; and in the Hari Vanśa and its comment they are termed Suswadhaś, sons of Kārtaṇa, descended from Pulaha.

Sukalās—sons of Vaishāś, and Pitrīṣ of the Śūdras (Manu and Vāyu P.). They are not mentioned in the Padma. The Mataya inserts the name and descent, but specifies them as amongst the incorporeal Pitrīṣ: अमुरुव्युद्रि: विक्षः प्रत्योत्स्तदयुः पुपात्र: बद्रा तु भाज्या वरी वाग्ने द्विविघट: । It may be suspected that the passage is corrupt. The Hari Vanśa makes the Sukalās sons of Vaishāś, the Pitrīṣ of the Brahmans; and gives the title of Somapāś to the Pitrīṣ of the Śūdras. In general this work follows the Vāyu; but with omissions and transpositions, as if it had carelessly mutilated its original.

Besides these Pitrīṣ or progenitors, other heavenly beings are sometimes made to adopt a similar character: thus Manu says, "The wise call our fathers Vasus; our paternal grandfathers, Rudras; our paternal great grandfathers, Adityas; agreeably monthly, on the fifteenth day of the moon's wane (or dark fortnight), or on the eighth day of the same period in certain months, or at particular seasons, as I will explain.

"When a householder finds that any circumstance has occurred, or a distinguished guest has arrived, on which account ancestral ceremonies are appropriate, he should celebrate them. He should offer a voluntary sacrifice upon any atmospheric portent, at the equinoctial and solstitial periods, at eclipses of the sun and moon, on the sun's entrance into a zodiacal sign, upon unpropitious aspects of the planets and asterisms, on dreaming unlucky dreams, and on eating the grain of the year's harvest. The Pitris derive satisfaction for eight years from ancestral offerings upon the day of new moon when the star of the conjunction\(^2\) is Anurádhá, Vişákha, or Swáti; and for twelve years when it is Pushya, Árdra, or Punarvasu. It is not easy for a man to effect his object, who is desirous of worshipping the Pitris or the gods on a day of new moon when the stars are those of Dhanishtha, Purvabhárapadá, or Śatábhishá. Hear also an account of another class of Śráddhas, which afford especial contentment to progenitors, as explained by Sanatkumára, the son of Brahmá, to the magnanimous Purúravas, when full of faith and devotion to the Pitris he inquired how he might please them. The third lunar day of the month Vaiśákhá (April, May), and the ninth of Kártika to a text of the Vedas;" that is, these divine beings are to be meditated upon along with, and as not distinct from, progenitors. Hemadri quotes the Nandi Upapuráśa for a different practice, and directs Vishnu to be identified with the father, Brahmá with the grandfather, and Siva with the great grandfather. This, however, is Saiva innovation. The Vaishnávas direct Aniruddha to be regarded as one's-self, and Pradyumna, Sankarshana, and Vásudeva as the three ancestors. Again, they are identified with Varuña, Prájápatya, and Agni; or, again, with months, seasons, and years. Niráaya Sindh, p. 284. It may be doubted how far any of these correctly represent the original notions inculcated by the texts of the Vedas, from which, in the most essential particulars, they are derived.

\(^2\) When the Yogatára, or principal star seen, is the chief star or stars of these asterisms or lunar mansions respectively, see the table given by Mr. Colebrooke: As. Res. IX. p. 346. The first three named in the text are stars in Scorpio, Libra, and Arcturus: the second three are stars in Cancer, Gemini, and Orion: and the third are stars in the Dolphin, Pegasus, and Aquarius.
(October, November), in the light fortnight; the thirteenth of Nabha (July, August), and the fifteenth of Māgha (January, February), in the dark fortnight; are called by ancient teachers the anniversaries of the first day of a Yuga, or age (Yugādyā), and are esteemed most sacred. On these days, water mixed with sesamum-seeds should be regularly presented to the progenitors of mankind; as well as on every solar and lunar eclipse; on the eighth lunations of the dark fortnights of Agraḥāyana, Māgha, and Phālguṇa (December—February); on the two days commencing the solstices, when the nights and days alternately begin to diminish; on those days which are the anniversaries of the beginning of the Manwantarās; when the sun is in the path of the goat; and on all occurrences of meteoric phenomena. A Śrāddha at these seasons contents the Pitrīs for a thousand years: such is the secret which they have imparted. The fifteenth day of the dark half of the month Māgha, when united with the conjunction of the asterism over which Varuṇa presides (Śātābhishā), is a season of no little sanctity, when offerings are especially grateful to the progenitors. Food and water presented by men who are of respectable families, when the asterism Dhanishtā is combined with the day of new moon, content the Pitrīs for ten thousand years; whilst they repose for a whole age when satisfied by offerings made on the day of new moon when Ardrā is the lunar mansion.

"He who, after having offered food and libations to the Pitrīs, bathes in the Ganges, Satlaj, Vipāsā (Beyāh), Saraswati, or the Gomā at Naimisha, expiates all his sins. The Pitrīs also say, 'After having received satisfaction for a twelvemonth, we shall further derive gratification by libations offered by our descendants at some place of pilgrimage, at the end of the dark fortnight of Māgha.' The songs of the Pitrīs confer purity of heart, integrity of wealth, prosperous seasons, perfect rites, and devout faith; all that men can desire. Hear the verses that constitute those songs, by listening to which all those advantages will be secured, oh prince, by you. 'That enlightened individual who begrudges not his wealth, but presents us with cakes, shall be born in a distinguished family. Prosperous and affluent shall that man ever be, who in honour of us gives to the Brahmans, if he is wealthy, jewels, clothes, land, conveyances, wealth, or any valuable presents; or who, with faith and humility, entertains them with food, according to his means, at proper seasons. If he cannot afford to give them dressed food, he must, in proportion to his ability, present them with unboiled grain, or such gifts, however trifling, as he can bestow. Should he be utterly unable even to do this, he must give to some eminent Brahman, bowing at the same time before him, sesame-seeds adhering to the tips of his fingers, and sprinkle water to us, from the palms of his hands, upon the ground; or he must gather, as he may, fodder for a day, and give it to a cow; by which he will, if firm in faith, yield us satisfaction. If nothing of this kind is practicable, he must go to a forest, and lift up his arms to the sun and other regents of the spheres, and say aloud—I have no money, nor property, nor grain, nor any thing whatever fit for an ancestral offering. Bowing therefore to my ancestors, I hope the progenitors will be satisfied with these arms tossed up in the air in devotion.' These are the words of the Pitris themselves; and he who endeavours, with such means as he may possess, to fulfil their wishes, performs the ancestral rite called a Śrāddha.
CHAP. XV.

What Brahmans are to be entertained at Súñdhas. Different prayers to be recited. Offerings of food to be presented to deceased ancestors.

AURVA proceeded.—"Hear next, oh prince, what description of Brahman should be fed at ancestral ceremonies. He should be one studied in various triplets of the Rich and Yajur Vedas¹; one who is acquainted with the six supplementary sciences of the Vedas²; one who understands the Vedas; one who practises the duties they enjoin³; one who exercises penance; a chanter of the principal Sáma-veda⁴; an officiating priest, a sister's son, a daughter's son, a son-in-law, a father-in-law, a maternal uncle, an ascetic, a Brahman who maintains the five fires, a pupil, a kinsman; one who reverences his parents. A man should first employ the Brahmans first specified in the principal obsequial

¹ The Brahmans here particularized are termed Trińáchiketa, Trimadhau, and Trisuparśa; and are so denominated, according to the commentator, from particular parts of the Vedas. The first is so called from studying or reciting three Anuvákas of the Káthaka branch of the Yajur-veda, commencing with the term Trińáchiketa; the second, from three Anuvákas of the same Veda, beginning Madhuvátá, &c.; and the third, from a similar portion, commencing Brahmanavani. The first and third terms occur in Manu, III. 185; and Kulláka Bháṭáta explains Trińáchiketa to mean a portion of the Yajurveda, and the Brahman who studies it; and Trisuparśa, a part of the Rich, and the Brahman who is acquainted with it. The Náitya Sándhu explains the terms in a like manner, but calls the Trisuparśa, as well as the Trińáchiketa prayers, portions of the Yajush. The Trimadhau it assigns to the Rich. Other explanations are also given to the terms Trińáchiketa and Trisuparśa: the first being explained a Brahman who thrice performs the ceremony called Chayana; and the last, one who, after the seven ascending generations, worships the Pitṛis termed Sómapá. These explanations are however considered less correct than the preceding, and which are thus given in the authority cited: ब्राह्मणी निन्दिकेश्वर्याः पुरुषेऽपि महते बहुपति । नीताय चूपेरकित दासयां।

² For the six Angas, see p. 284.

³ So the commentator distinguishes the Vedavit, the Brahman who understands the meaning of the text of the Vedas, from the Srotriya, who practises the rites he studies.

⁴ Portions of the Sáma contained in the Kruñyaka are called the Jyeshṭha, 'elder' or 'principal' Sáman.
rite; and the others (commencing with the ministering priest) in the subsidiary ceremonies instituted to gratify his ancestors.

"A false friend, a man with ugly nails or black teeth, a ravisher, a Brahman who neglects the service of fire and sacred study, a vender of the Soma plant, a man accused of any crime, a thief, a calumniator, a Brahman who conducts religious ceremonies for the vulgar; one who instructs his servant in holy writ, or is instructed in it by his servant; the husband of a woman who has been formerly betrothed to another; a man who is undutiful to his parents; the protector of the husband of a woman of the servile caste, or the husband of a woman of the servile caste; and a Brahman who ministers to idols—are not proper persons to be invited to an ancestral offering. On the first day let a judicious man invite eminent teachers of the Vedas, and other Brahmans; and according to their directions determine what is to be dedicated to the gods, and what to the Pitris. Associated with the Brahmans, let the institutor of an obsequial rite abstain from anger and incontinence. He who having eaten himself in a Śrāddha, and fed Brahmans, and appointed them to their sacred offices, is guilty of incontinence, thereby sentences his progenitors to shameful suffering. In the first place, the Brahmans before described are to be invited; but those holy men who come to the house without an invitation are also to be entertained. The guests are to be reverently received with water for their feet, and the like; and the entertainer, holding holy grass in his hand, is to place them, after they have rinsed their mouths, upon seats. An uneven number of Brahmans is to be invited in sacrifices to the manes; an even or uneven number in those presented to the gods; or one only on each occasion.

"Then let the householder, inspired by religious faith, offer oblations to the maternal grandfather, along with the worship of the Viśwadevas,

---

3 Manu, III. 150, &c.
6 As two or five at a ceremony dedicated to the gods; three at the worship of the Pitris. Nirnāya Sindhu, p. 311.
7 The worship of the Viśwadevas (see p. 321) forms a part of the general Śrāddhas, and of the daily sacrifices of the householder. According to the Vāyu this was a privilege conferred upon them by Brahmā and the Pitris, as a reward for religious austerities practised by them upon Himālaya. Their introduction as a or the ceremony called Vaiśwadeva, which comprehends offerings to both paternal and maternal ancestors, and to ancestors in general. Let him feed the Brahmins who are appropriated to the gods, and to maternal ancestors, with their faces to the north; and those set apart for the paternal ancestors, and ancestors in general, with their faces to the east. Some say that the viands of the Śrāddha should be kept distinct for these two sets of ancestors, but others maintain that they are to be fed with the same food, at the same time. Having spread Kuṣa grass for seats, and offered libations according to rule, let the sensible man invoke the deities, with the concurrence of the Brahmins who are present. Let the man who is acquainted with the ritual offer a libation to the gods with water and barley, having presented to them flowers, perfumes, and incense. Let him offer the same to the Pitris, placed upon his left; and with the consent of the Brahmins, having first provided seats of Kuṣa grass doubled, let him invoke with the usual prayers the manes to the ceremony, offering a libation, on his left hand, of water and sesamum. He will then, with the permission of the Brahmins, give food to any guest who arrives at the time, or who is desirous of victuals, or who is passing along the road; for holy saints specific class seems to have originated in the custom of sacrificing to the gods collectively, or to all the gods, as the name Viśwadevas implies. They appear, however, as a distinct class in the Vedas, and their assumption of this character is therefore of ancient date. The daily offering to them is noticed by Manu, III. 90, 172; and offerings to ‘the gods’ are also enjoined at the beginning and end of a Śrāddha. Kullāka Bhāṭa understands here the Viśwadevas, and it probably is so; but in another verse different divinities are specified: ‘First having satisfied Agni, Soma, Yama, with clarified butter, let him proceed to satisfy the manes of his progenitors.’ v. 211. Manu also directs them to be worshipped first and last in order. See As. Res. VII. 265, 271, &c.

9 The text is सजायत्रा ‘with their assent’; but no noun occurs in the sentence with which the relative is connected. It must mean the Brahmins, however, as in this passage of Vṛddha Pārāśara; ‘Let the sacrificer place his left hand on the Brahman’s right knee, and say, “Shall I invoke the Viśwadevas?” and being desired to invoke them, let him address them with the two Mantras, “Viśwadevas, he is come! Viśwadevas, hear him!”’ and ascetics, benefactors of mankind, are traversing this earth, disguised in various shapes. On this account let a prudent man welcome a person who arrives at such a season; for inattention to a guest frustrates the consequences of an ancestral offering.

"The sacrificer is then to offer food, without salt or seasoning, to fire, three several times, with the consent of the assistant Brahmins; exclaiming first, 'To fire, the vehicle of the oblations; to the manes Swáhá!' Next addressing the oblation to Soma, the lord of the progenitors; and giving the third to Vaivaswata. He is then to place a very little of the residue of the oblation in the dishes of the Brahmins; and next, presenting them with choice viands, well dressed and seasoned, and abundant, he is to request them civilly to partake of it at their pleasure. The Brahmins are to eat of such food attentively, in silence, with cheerful countenances, and at their ease. The sacrificer is to give it to them, not churlishly, nor hurriedly, but with devout faith.

"Having next recited the prayer for the discomfiture of malignant spirits, and scattered sesamum-seeds upon the ground, the Brahmins who have been fed are to be addressed, in common with the ancestors of the sacrificer, in this manner: 'May my father, grandfather, and great grandfather, in the persons of these Brahmins, receive satisfaction! May my father, grandfather, and great grandfather derive nutriment from these oblations to fire! May my father, grandfather, and great grandfather derive satisfaction from the balls of food placed by me upon the ground! May my father, grandfather, and great grandfather be pleased with what I have this day offered them in faith! May my maternal grandfather, his father, and his father, also enjoy contentment from my offerings! May all the gods experience gratification, and all evil beings perish! May the lord of sacrifice, the imperishable deity

---

9 This notion occurs more than once in the Váyu, in nearly the same words: विश्रामः बिभं विद्यते च ब्राह्मणाः पुरुषोदिताः । रक्षोग्निः कर्तव्यामयेऽनुभवतः ॥

10 This places the initiatory oblations noticed by Manu (see note 7) subsequent to the offerings to the Viśva-devas.

11 The Rakshogna Mantra: the extinguishing of a lamp, lighted to keep off evil spirits, which is accompanied by a Mantra, or prayer. As. Res. VII. 274.
Hari, be the acceptor of all oblations made to the manes or the gods! and may all malignant spirits, and enemies of the deities, depart from the rite.'

"When the Brahmans have eaten sufficiently, the worshipper must scatter some of the food upon the ground, and present them individually with water to rinse their mouths; then, with their assent, he may place upon the ground balls made up of boiled rice and condiments, along with sesamum-seeds. With the part of his hand sacred to the manes he must offer sesamum-seeds, and water from his joined palms; and with the same part of his hand he must present cakes to his maternal ancestors. He should in lonely places, naturally beautiful, and by the side of sacred streams, diligently make presents (to the manes and the Brahmanas) 12. Upon Kusa grass, the tips of which are pointed to the south, and lying near the fragments of the meat, let the householder present the first ball of food, consecrated with flowers and incense, to his father; the second to his grandfather; and the third to his great grandfather; and let him satisfy those who are contented with the wippings of his hand, by wiping it with the roots of Kusa grass 13. After presenting balls of food to his maternal ancestors in the same manner, accompanied by perfumes and incense, he is to give to the principal Brahman water to rinse their mouths; and then, with attention and piety, he is to give the Brahmanas gifts, according to his power, soliciting their benedictions, accompanied with the exclamation 'Swadha' 14! Having made presents to the Brahmanas, he is to address himself to the gods, saying, 'May they who are the Visvadevas be pleased with this oblation!' Having thus said, and the blessings to be solicited having been granted by the Brahmanas, he is to dismiss first the paternal ancestors, and then the gods. The order is the same with the maternal ancestors and the gods in respect to food, donation, and dismissal. Commencing with the 12 Part of this passage is in the words of Manu, III. 207: চন্দকারা চন্দকারা নামাত্ম আমীরাত্ম। It is omitted in the MSS. in the Bengali character.

---

13 Manu, III. 216.
14 "Then let the Brahmanas address him, saying, 'Swadha!' for in all ceremonies relating to deceased ancestors, the word Swadha is the highest benison." Manu, III. 252.
washing of the feet, until the dismissing of the gods and Brahmans, the ceremonies are to be performed first for paternal ancestors, and then for ancestors on the mother’s side. Let him dismiss the Brahmans with kindly speeches and profound respect, and attend upon them at the end of the Śráddha, until permitted by them to return. The wise man will then perform the invariable worship of the Viśwadevas, and take his own meal along with his friends, his kinsmen, and his dependants.

 “In this manner an enlightened householder will celebrate the obse-quial worship of his paternal and maternal ancestors, who, satisfied by his offerings, will grant him all his desires. Three things are held pure at obsequies, a daughter’s son, a Nepal blanket, and sesamumseeds; and the gift, or naming, or sight of silver is also propitious.
 The person offering a Śráddha should avoid anger, walking about, and hurry; these three things are very objectionable. The Viśwadevas, and paternal and maternal ancestors, and the living members of a man’s family are all nourished by the offerer of ancestral oblations.

 15 We have here the words of Manu; नीर्दिष्ट च सर्वे पद्मार्द्धे देवी शान्तिः I III.
 235. ‘Three things are held pure at such obsequies, the daughter’s son, the Nepal blanket, and sesamum-seed.’ Sir Wm. Jones’s translation of these terms rests upon the explanation of Kullūka Bhaṭṭa of this and the verse preceding; मन्त्रवर्गोपि
 दीर्घसं च चर्चा श्रीन्वेशय मिलो धर्मभाषा: लभात् I चार्य कुमारस्विमसा
 हुक्सा अनाताप वारिष्का: I चार्य द्वारा विख्यतात् कुसा इति विवेदय: I

 16 So the Mataya P. has ‘the gift, sight, and name of silver are desired.’ रञ्ज तथा तथा दान्ते सह नाम च चेष्ये. The notion originates with Manu, III. 202.
PREFERENCE OF A YOGI OVER THE BRAHMANS.

"The class of Pitris derives support from the moon, and the moon is sustained by acts of austere devotion. Hence the appointment of one who practises austerities is most desirable. A Yogi set before a thousand Brahmans enables the institutor of obsequial rites to enjoy all his desires."

17 The same doctrine is inculcated by the Váyu P.; but it appears to be a Brahman intent on scriptural knowledge and on austere devotion on a level, and Paurāṇik innovation, for Manu places the makes no mention of the Yogi. III. 134.
CHAP. XVI.

Things proper to be offered as food to deceased ancestors: prohibited things. Circumstances vitiating a Śrāddha: how to be avoided. Song of the Pitrīs, or progenitors, heard by Ikshvākū.

AURVĀ continued.—"Ancestors are satisfied for a month with offerings of rice or other grain, with clarified butter, with fish, or the flesh of the hare, of birds, of the hog, the goat, the antelope, the deer, the gayal, or the sheep, or with the milk of the cow, and its products. They are for ever satisfied with flesh (in general), and with that of the long-eared white goat in particular. The flesh of the rhinoceros, the Kālasāka potherb, and honey, are also especial sources of satisfaction to those worshipped at ancestral ceremonies. The birth of that man is the occasion of satisfaction to his progenitors who performs at the due time their obsequial rites at Gaya. Grains that spring up spontaneously, rice growing wild, Panic of both species (white or black), vegetables that grow in forests, are fit for ancestral oblations; as are barley, wheat, rice, sesamum, various kinds of pulse, and mustard. On the other hand, a householder must not offer any kind of grain that is not consecrated by religious ceremonies on its first coming into season; nor the pulse called Rājāmāsha, nor millet, nor lentils, nor gourds, nor garlick, nor onions, nor nightshade, nor camels' thorn, nor salt, nor the efflorescence of salt deserts, nor red vegetable extracts, nor any thing that looks like salt, nor any thing that is not commendable; nor is water fit to be offered at a Śrāddha that has been brought by night, or has been abandoned, or 1 See Manu, III. 265, &c. The articles are much the same; the periods of satisfaction somewhat vary.

2 The expression Gavya (गव्य) implies all that is derived from a cow, but in the text it is associated with 'flesh'; and, as the commentator observes, some consider the flesh of the cow to be here intended: मांसः बच्चो भागनाय: । but this, he adds, relates to other ages. In the Kali or present age it implies milk and preparations of milk. The sacrifice of a cow or calf formed part of the ancient Śrāddha. It then became typical, or a bull was turned loose, instead of being slaughtered; and this is still practised on some occasions. In Manu, the term Gavya is coupled with others, which limit its application: संवर्तं हु गच्छेद पशुम् पापः प्रस्तुतम् । 'A whole year with the milk of cows, and food made of that milk.' III. 271.
is so little as not to satisfy a cow, or smells badly, or is covered with froth. The milk of animals with undivided hoofs, of a camel, a ewe, a deer, or a buffalo, is unfit for ancestral oblations. If an obsequial rite is looked at by a eunuch, a man ejected from society, an outcast, a heretic, a drunken man, or one diseased, by a cock, a naked ascetic, a monkey, a village hag, by a woman in her courses or pregnant, by an unclean person, or by a carrier of corpses, neither gods nor progenitors will partake of the food. The ceremony should therefore be performed in a spot carefully enclosed. Let the performer cast sesamum on the ground, and drive away malignant spirits. Let him not give food that is fetid, or vitiated by hairs or insects, or mixed with acid gruel, or stale. Whatever suitable food is presented with pure faith, and with the enunciation of name and race, to ancestors, at an obsequial oblation, becomes food to them (or gives them nourishment). In former times, O king of the earth! this song of the Pitris was heard by Ikshwáku, the son of Manu, in the groves of Kalápa (on the skirts of the Himálaya mountains): 'Those of our descendants shall follow a righteous path who shall reverently present us with cakes at Gaya. May he be born in our race who shall give us, on the thirteenth of Bhádrapada and Mágha, milk, honey, and clarified butter; or when he marries a maiden, or liberates a black bull, or performs any domestic ceremony agreeable to rule, accompanied by donations to the Brahmans!'

3 Nagna is literally 'naked,' but, as explained in the following chapter, means a Jain mendicant. No such person is included by Manu (III. 239, &c.) amongst those who defile a Sráddha by looking upon it. The Váyu contains the same prohibition: जनात्सरोऽस च प्रधेषु।

4 Niára vriša; but this animal is not altogether or always black. In the Bráhma P., as quoted in the Níráyā Sindhú, it is said to be of a red colour, with light face and tail, and white hoofs and horns; or a white bull, with black face, &c.; or a black bull, with white face, tail, and feet.

5 Very full descriptions of the Sráddha occur in almost all the Puráñas, especially in the Váyu, Kúmára, Máraññéya, Vámana, and Garúḍa. The Matsya and Padma (Śrīśhthi Khaññá) contain descriptions which are much the same as that of the Váyu. The accounts of the Bráhma, Agni, and Varáha are less full and regular than in some of the others; and in none of them is the subject so fully and perspicuously treated as in our text. For satisfactory information, however, the Sráddha Mayúkha and the Níráyā Sindhú should be consulted.
CHAP. XVII.

Of heretics, or those who reject the authority of the Vedas: their origin, as described by Vaśishṭha to Bhīshma: the gods, defeated by the Daityas, praise Viśvānu: an illusory being, or Buddha, produced from his body.

Pārāśara.—Thus, in former days, spake the holy Aurva to the illustrious monarch Sāgara, when he inquired concerning the usages proper to be practised by mankind; and thus I have explained to you the whole of those observances against which no one ought to transgress.

Maitreya.—You have told me, venerable sir, that an ancestral rite is not to be looked upon by certain persons, amongst whom you mentioned such as were apostates. I am desirous to learn whom you intended by that appellation; what practices bestow such a title upon a man; and what is the character of the individual to whom you alluded.

Pārāśara.—The Rig, Yajur, and Sāma Vedas constitute the triple covering of the several castes, and the sinner who throws this off is said to be naked (or apostate). The three Vedas are the raiment of all the orders of men, and when that is discarded they are left bare. On this subject hear what I heard my grandfather, the pious Vaśishṭha, relate to the magnanimous Bhīshma:

1 This idea is expressed in nearly the same terms in the Vāyu P.: संयमित पुरुषार्थ "सति सेवात युक्त पुरुष विजयः पृथक् पृथक् पृथक् समस्तेऽहि निहार: " 'The three Vedas are the covering of all beings, and they who throw it off through delusion are called Nagnas, naked.' The notion is probably original with neither of the Pārāśas, and the metaphorical sense of the term is not that in which it was first employed: ascetics, whether of the Baudha or of the Digambara order of Jains, being literally Nagnas, or going naked. The qualified application of it, however, was rendered necessary by the same practice being familiar to ascetics of the orthodox faith. To go naked was not necessarily a sign of a heretic, and therefore his nudity was understood to be, rejecting the raiment of holy writ. Thus the Vāyu P. extends the word to all ascetics, including naked Brahmans, who practise austerities fruitlessly, that is, heretically or hypocritically: पृथक् पृथक् पृथक् नात्स पारस्य उपासना यथा विजयः 'The Brahman who unprofitably bears a staff, shaves his head, goes naked, makes a vow, or mutters prayers, all such persons are called Nagnas and the like.'
There was formerly a battle between the gods and demons, for the period of a divine year, in which the gods were defeated by the demons under the command of Hráda. The discomfited deities fled to the northern shore of the milky ocean, where engaging in religious penance they thus prayed to Vīshnú: "May the first of beings, the divine Vīshnú, be pleased with the words that we are about to address to him, in order to propitiate the lord of all worlds; from which mighty cause all created things have originated, and into whom they shall again dissolve! Who is able to declare his praise? We, who have been put to shame by the triumph of our foes, will glorify thee, although thy true power and might be not within the reach of words. Thou art earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, crude matter, and primeval soul: all this elementary creation, with or without visible form, is thy body; all, from Brahmá to a stock, diversified by place and time. Glory to thee, who art Brahmá, thy first form, evolved from the lotus springing from thy navel, for the purpose of creation. Glory to thee, who art Indra, the sun, Rudra, the Vasus, fire, the winds, and even also ourselves. Glory to thee, Govinda, who art all demons, whose essence is arrogance and want of discrimination, unchecked by patience or self-control. Glory to thee, who art the Yakshas, whose nature is charmed with sounds, and whose frivolous hearts perfect knowledge cannot pervade. Glory to thee, who art all fiends, that walk by night, sprung from the quality of darkness, fierce, fraudulent, and cruel. Glory to thee, Janárdana, who art that piety which is the instrument of recompensing the virtues of those who abide in heaven. Glory to thee, who art one with the saints, whose perfect nature is ever blessed, and traverses unobstructed all permeable elements. Glory to thee, who art one with the serpent race, double-tongued, impetuous, cruel, insatiate of enjoyment, and abounding with wealth. Glory to thee, who art one with the Rishis, whose nature is free from sin or defect, and is identified with wisdom and tranquility. Glory to thee, oh lotus-eyed, who art one with time, the form that devours, without remorse, all created things at the termination of the Kalpa. Glory to thee, who art Rudra, the being that dances with delight after he has swallowed up all things, the gods and the rest, without distinction. Glory to thee, Janárdana, who art man, the agent in developing the results of that activity which proceeds from the quality of foulness. Glory to thee, who art brute animals, the universal spirit that tends to perversity, which proceeds from the quality of darkness, and is encumbered with the twenty-eight kinds of obstructions. Glory to thee, who art that chief spirit which is diversified in the vegetable world, and which, as the essence of sacrifice, is the instrument of accomplishing the perfection of the universe. Glory to thee, who art every thing, and whose primeval form is the objects of perception, and heaven, and animals, and men, and gods. Glory to thee, who art the cause of causes, the supreme spirit; who art distinct from us and all beings composed of intelligence and matter and the like, and with whose primeval nature there is nothing that can be compared. We bow to thee, O lord, who hast neither colour, nor extension, nor bulk, nor any predicable qualities; and whose essence, purest of the pure, is appreciable only by holy sages. We bow to thee, in the nature of Brahma, uncreated, undecaying; who art in our bodies, and in all other bodies, and in all living creatures; and besides whom there is nothing else. We glorify that Vásudeva, the sovereign lord of all, who is without soil, the seed of all things, exempt from dissolution, unborn, eternal, being in essence the supreme condition of spirit, and in substance the whole of this universe.”

2 A son of Hiranyakaśipu (p. 124).

Upon the conclusion of their prayers, the gods beheld the sovereign deity Hari, armed with the shell, the discus, and the mace, riding on Garuđa. Prostrating themselves before him, they addressed him, and said, “Have compassion upon us, O lord, and protect us, who have come to thee for succour from the Daityas. They have seized upon the three worlds, and appropriated the offerings which are our portion, taking care not to transgress the precepts of the Veda. Although we, as well as they, are parts of thee, of whom all beings consist, yet we behold the world impressed by the ignorance of unity, with the belief of its separate existence. Engaged in the duties of their respective orders, and following the paths prescribed by holy writ, practising also religious penance, it is impossible for us to destroy them. Do thou, whose wisdom is immeasurable, instruct us in some device by which we may be able to exterminate the enemies of the gods."

\(^3\) See p. 35. n. 5.

When the mighty Vishnu heard their request, he emitted from his body an illusory form, which he gave to the gods, and thus spake: "This deceptive vision shall wholly beguile the Daityas, so that, being led astray from the path of the Vedas, they may be put to death; for all gods, demons, or others, who shall be opposed to the authority of the Veda, shall perish by my might, whilst exercised for the preservation of the world. Go then, and fear not: let this delusive vision precede you; it shall this day be of great service unto you, oh gods!"
CHAP. XVIII.

Buddha goes to the earth, and teaches the Daityas to contemn the Vedas: his sceptical doctrines: his prohibition of animal sacrifices. Meaning of the term Baudhā. Jainas and Baudhās; their tenets. The Daityas lose their power, and are overcome by the gods. Meaning of the term Nāga. Consequences of neglect of duty. Story of Satadhanu and his wife Śaivyā. Communion with heretics to be shunned.

Pārāśara.—After this, the great delusion, having proceeded to earth, beheld the Daityas engaged in ascetic penances upon the banks of the Narmadā river; and approaching them in the semblance of a naked mendicant, with his head shaven, and carrying a bunch of peacock’s feathers, he thus addressed them in gentle accents: “Ho, lords of the Daitya race! wherefore is it that you practise these acts of penance? is it with a view to recompense in this world, or in another?” “Sage,” replied the Daityas, “we pursue these devotions to obtain a reward hereafter; why should you make such an inquiry?” “If you are desirous of final emancipation,” answered the seeming ascetic, “attend to my words, for you are worthy of a revelation which is the door to ultimate felicity.” The duties that I will teach you are the secret path to liberation; there are none beyond or superior to them: by following them you shall obtain either heaven or exemption from future existence. You, mighty beings, are deserving of such lofty doctrine.” By such persuasions, and by many specious arguments, did this delusive being mislead the Daityas from the tenets of the Vedas; teaching that the same thing might be for the sake of virtue and of vice; might be, and might not be; might or might not contribute to liberation; might be the

1 The situation chosen for the first appearance of the heresy agrees well enough with the great prevalence of the Jain faith in the west of India in the eleventh and twelfth centuries (As. Res. XVI. 318), or perhaps a century earlier, and is a circumstance of some weight in investigating the date of the Vīshnū Purāṇa.

2 A bunch of peacock’s feathers is still an ordinary accompaniment of a Jain mendicant. According to the Hindi poem, the Prithu Rai Charitra, it was borne by the Buddhist Amara Sinha; but that work is not, perhaps, very good authority for Baudhā observances, at least of an ancient date.
supreme object, and not the supreme object; might be effect, and not be effect; might be manifest, or not be manifest; might be the duty of those who go naked, or who go clothed in much raiment: and so the Daityas were seduced from their proper duties by the repeated lessons of their illusory preceptor, maintaining the equal truth of contradictory tenets\(^3\); and they were called Arhatas\(^4\), from the phrase he had employed of "Ye are worthy (Arhatha) of this great doctrine;" that is, of the false doctrines which he persuaded them to embrace.

The foes of the gods being thus induced to apostatize from the religion of the Vedas, by the delusive person sent by Vishńu, became in their turn teachers of the same heresies, and perverted others; and these, again, communicating their principles to others, by whom they were still further disseminated, the Vedas were in a short time deserted by most of the Daitya race. Then the same deluder, putting on garments of a red colour, assuming a benevolent aspect, and speaking in soft and agreeable tones, addressed others of the same family, and said to them, "If, mighty demons, you cherish a desire either for heaven or for final repose, desist from the iniquitous massacre of animals (for sacrifice), and hear from me what you should do. Know that all that exists is composed of discriminative knowledge. Understand my words, for they have been uttered by the wise. This world subsists without support, and engaged in the pursuit of error, which it mistakes for knowledge, as well as vitiated by passion and the rest, revolves in the straits of existence." In this manner, exclaiming to them, "Know!" (Budhyadwam), and they replying, "It is known" (Budhyate), these Daityas were induced by the \(^3\) In this and the preceding contradictions it is probable that the writer refers, although not with much precision, to the sceptical tenets of the Jainsas, whence they are called commonly Śyādvādīs, assertors of probabilities, or of what may be. These usually form seven categories, or, 1. a thing is; 2. it is not; 3. it is, and it is not; 4. it is not definable; 5. it is, but is not definable; 6. it is not, neither is it definable; 7. it is, and it is not, and is not definable. Hence the Jains are also termed Saptavādīs and Saptabhāṅgis, assertors and oppugners of seven propositions. As. Res. XVII. 271; and Trans. Royal As. Soc. I. 555.

\(^4\) Here is farther confirmation of the Jains being intended by our text, as the term Arhat is more particularly applied to them, although it is also used by the Buddhists.
arch deceiver to deviate from their religious duties (and become Bauddhas), by his repeated arguments and variously urged persuasions. When they had abandoned their own faith, they persuaded others to do the same, and the heresy spread, and many deserted the practices enjoined by the Vedas and the laws.

The delusions of the false teacher paused not with the conversion of the Daityas to the Jaina and Baudhha heresies, but with various erroneous tenets he prevailed upon others to apostatize, until the whole were led astray, and deserted the doctrines and observances inculcated by the three Vedas. Some then spake evil of the sacred books; some blasphemed the gods; some treated sacrifices and other devotional ceremonies with scorn; and others calumniated the Brahmans. "The precepts," they cried, "that lead to the injury of animal life (as in sacrifices) are highly reprehensible. To say that casting butter into flame is productive of reward, is mere childishness. If Indra, after having obtained godhead by multiplied rites, is fed upon the wood used as fuel in holy fire, he is lower than a brute, which feeds at least upon leaves. If an animal slaughtered in religious worship is thereby raised to heaven, would it not be expedient for a man who institutes a sacrifice to kill his own father for a victim? If that which is eaten by one at a Śrāddha gives satisfaction to another, it must be unnecessary for one who resides at a distance to bring food for presentation in person."

"First, then, let it be determined what may be (rationally) believed by mankind, and then," said their preceptor, "you will find that felicity may be expected from my instructions. The words of authority do not, mighty Asuras, fall from heaven: the text that has reason is alone to be acknowledged by me, and by such as you are." By such and similar

---

5 We have therefore the Baudhhas noticed as a distinct set. If the author wrote from a personal knowledge of Buddhists in India, he could not have written much later than the 10th or 11th century.

6 That is, according to the commentator, a Śrāddha may be performed for a man who is abroad by any of his kinsmen who are tarrying at home; it will be of equal benefit to him as if he offered it himself; he will equally eat of the consecrated food.

7 We have in these passages, no doubt, allusion to the Vārhaspatyas, or followers of Vṛhaspati, who seem to have been numerous and bold at some period anterior to the 14th century. As. Res. XVI. 5.
HERETICS NOT TO BE ASSOCIATED WITH.

lessons the Daityas were perverted, so that not one of them admitted the authority of the Vedas.

When the Daityas had thus declined from the path of the holy writings, the deities took courage, and gathered together for battle. Hostilities accordingly were renewed, but the demons were now defeated and slain by the gods, who had adhered to the righteous path. The armour of religion, which had formerly protected the Daityas, had been discarded by them, and upon its abandonment followed their destruction.

Thus, Maitreya, you are to understand that those who have seceded from their original belief are said to be naked, because they have thrown off the garment of the Vedas. According to the law there are four conditions or orders of men (of the three first castes), the religious student, the householder, the hermit, and the mendicant. There is no fifth state; and the unrighteous man who relinquishes the order of the householder, and does not become either an anchorite or a mendicant, is also a naked (seceder). The man who neglects his permanent observances for one day and night, being able to perform them, incurs thereby sin for one day; and should he omit them, not being in trouble, for a fortnight, he can be purified only by arduous expiation. The virtuous must stop to gaze upon the sun after looking upon a person who has allowed a year to elapse without the observance of the perpetual ceremonies; and they must bathe with their clothes on should they have touched him: but for the individual himself no expiation has been declared. There is no sinner upon earth more culpable than one in whose dwelling the gods, progenitors, and spirits, are left to sigh unworshipped. Let not a man associate, in residence, sitting, or society, with him whose person or whose house has been blasted by the sighs of the gods, progenitors, and spirits. Conversation, interchange of civilities, or association with a man who for a twelvemonth has not discharged his

We may have in this conflict of the orthodox divinities and heretical Daityas some covert allusion to political troubles, growing out of religious differences, and the final predominance of Brahmanism. Such occurrences seem to have preceded the invasion of India by the Mohammedans, and prepared the way for their victories.
religious duties, is productive of equality of guilt; and the person who eats in the house of such a man, or sits down with him, or sleeps on the same couch with him, becomes like him instantaneously. Again; he who takes his food without shewing reverence to the gods, progenitors, spirits, and guests, commits sin. How great is his sin! The Brahmins, and men of the other castes, who turn their faces away from their proper duties, become heretics, and are classed with those who relinquish pious works. Remaining in a place where there is too great an intermixture of the four castes is detrimental to the character of the righteous. Men fall into hell who converse with one who takes his food without offering a portion to the gods, the sages, the manes, spirits, and guests. Let therefore a prudent person carefully avoid the conversation, or the contact, and the like, of those heretics who are rendered impure by their desertion of the three Vedas. The ancestral rite, although performed with zeal and faith, pleases neither gods nor progenitors if it be looked upon by apostates.

It is related that there was formerly a king named Śatadhanu, whose wife Śaivyá was a woman of great virtue. She was devoted to her husband, benevolent, sincere, pure, adorned with every female excel-rence, with humility, and discretion. The Rájá and his wife daily worshipped the god of gods, Jauárdana, with pious meditations, oblations to fire, prayers, gifts, fasting, and every other mark of entire faith, and exclusive devotion. On one occasion, when they had fasted on the full moon of Kárтика, and had bathed in the Bhagirathi, they beheld, as they came up from the water, a heretic approach them, who was the friend of the Rájá’s military preceptor. The Rájá, out of respect to the latter, entered into conversation with the heretic; but not so did the princess; reflecting that she was observing a fast, she turned from him, and cast her eyes up to the sun. On their arrival at home, the husband and wife, as usual, performed the worship of Vishńu, agreeably to the ritual. After a time the Rájá, triumphant over his enemies, died; and the princess ascended the funeral pile of her husband.

In consequence of the fault committed by Śatadhanu, by speaking to an infidel when he was engaged in a solemn fast, he was born again as a dog. His wife was born as the daughter of the Rájá of Káší, with a knowledge of the events of her preexistence, accomplished in every science, and endowed with every virtue. Her father was anxious to give her in marriage to some suitable husband, but she constantly opposed his design, and the king was prevented by her from accomplishing her nuptials. With the eye of divine intelligence she knew that her own husband had been regenerate as a dog, and going once to the city of Vaidiása she saw the dog, and recognised her former lord in him. Knowing that the animal was her husband, she placed upon his neck the bridal garland, accompanying it with the marriage rites and prayers: but he, eating the delicate food presented to him, expressed his delight after the fashion of his species; at which she was much ashamed, and, bowing reverently to him, thus spake to her degraded spouse: "Recall to memory, illustrious prince, the ill-timed politeness on account of which you have been born as a dog, and are now fawning upon me. In consequence of speaking to a heretic, after bathing in a sacred river, you have been condemned to this abject birth. Do you not remember it?"

Thus reminded, the Rájá recollected his former condition, and was lost in thought, and felt deep humiliation. With a broken spirit he went forth from the city, and falling dead in the desert, was born anew as a jackal. In the course of the following year the princess knew what had happened, and went to the mountain Koláhala to seek for her husband. Finding him there, the lovely daughter of the king of the earth said to her lord, thus disguised as a jackal, "Dost thou not remember, oh king, the circumstance of conversing with a heretic, which I called to thy recollection when thou wast a dog?" The Rájá, thus addressed, knew that what the princess had spoken was true, and thereupon desisted from food, and died. He then became a wolf; but his blameless wife knew it, and came to him in the lonely forest, and awakened his remembrance of his original state. "No wolf art thou," she said, "but the illustrious sovereign Śatadhanu. Thou wast then a dog, then a jackal, and art now a wolf." Upon this, recollecting himself, the prince abandoned his life, and became a vulture; in which form his lovely queen still found him, and aroused him to a knowledge of the past. "Prince," she exclaimed, "recollect yourself: away with this uncouth form, to which the sin of conversing with a heretic has condemned you!" The Rájá was next born as a crow; when the princess, who through her mystical powers was aware of it, said to him, "Thou art now thyself the eater of tributary grain, to whom, in a prior existence, all the kings of the earth paid tribute." Having abandoned his body, in consequence of the recollections excited by these words, the king next became a peacock, which the princess took to herself, and petted, and fed constantly with such food as is agreeable to birds of its class. The king of Káśi instituted at that time the solemn sacrifice of a horse. In the ablutions with which it terminated the princess caused her peacock to be bathed, bathing also herself; and she then reminded Śatadhanu how he had been successively born as various animals. On recollecting this, he resigned his life. He was then born as the son of a person of distinction; and the princess now assenting to the wishes of her father to see her wedded, the king of Káśi caused it to be made known that she would elect a bridegroom from those who should present themselves as suitors for her hand. When the election took place, the princess made choice of her former lord, who appeared amongst the candidates, and again invested him with the character of her husband. They lived happily together, and upon her father's decease Śatadhanu ruled over the country of Videha. He offered many sacrifices, and gave away many gifts, and begot sons, and subdued his enemies in war; and having duly exercised the sovereign power, and cherished benignantly the earth, he died, as became his warrior birth, in battle. His queen again followed him in death, and, conformably to sacred precepts, once more mounted cheerfully his funeral pile. The king then, along with his princess, ascended beyond the sphere of Indra to the regions where all desires are for ever gratified, obtaining ever-during and unequailed happiness in heaven, the perfect felicity that is the rarely realised reward of conjugal fidelity.

9 There is a play upon the word Bali, which means 'tribute,' or 'fragments of a meal scattered abroad to the birds,' &c. 10 The legend is peculiar to the Vishnú Puráṇa, although the doctrine it inculcates is to be found elsewhere.
Such, Maitreya, is the sin of conversing with a heretic, and such are the expiatory effects of bathing after the solemn sacrifice of a horse, as I have narrated them to you. Let therefore a man carefully avoid the discourse or contact of an unbeliever, especially at seasons of devotion, and when engaged in the performance of religious rites preparatory to a sacrifice. If it be necessary that a wise man should look at the sun, after beholding one who has neglected his domestic ceremonies for a month, how much greater need must there be of expiation after encountering one who has wholly abandoned the Vedas? one who is supported by infidels, or who disputes the doctrines of holy writ? Let not a person treat with even the civility of speech, heretics, those who do forbidden acts, pretended saints, scoundrels, sceptics, and hypocrites. Intercourse with such iniquitous wretches, even at a distance, all association with schismatics, defiles; let a man therefore carefully avoid them.

These, Maitreya, are the persons called naked, the meaning of which term you desired to have explained. Their very looks vitiate the performance of an ancestral oblation; speaking to them destroys religious merit for a whole day. These are the unrighteous heretics to whom a man must not give shelter, and speaking to whom effaces whatever merit he may that day have obtained. Men, indeed, fall into hell as the consequence of only conversing with those who unprofitably assume the twisted hair, and shaven crown; with those who feed without offering food to gods, spirits, and guests; and those who are excluded from the presentation of cakes, and libations of water, to the manes.

11 Haitukas, 'causalists;' either the followers of the Nyāya or 'logical' philosophy, or Baudhās, those who take nothing upon authority, and admit nothing that cannot be proved; or it is explained, those who by argument cast a doubt upon the efficacy of acts of devotion.
VISHṆU PURĀṆA.

BOOK IV.

CHAP. I.

MAITREYA.—Venerable preceptor, you have explained to me the perpetual and occasional ceremonies which are to be performed by those righteous individuals who are diligent in their devotions; and you have also described to me the duties which devolve upon the several castes, and on the different orders of the human race. I have now to request you will relate to me the dynasties of the kings who have ruled over the earth.

Pārśārā.—I will repeat to you, Maitreya, an account of the family of Manu, commencing with Brahmā, and graced by a number of religious, magnanimous, and heroic princes. Of which it is said, “The lineage of him shall never be extinct, who daily calls to mind the race of 1 The complete series of the different dynasties is found elsewhere only in the Váyu, the Brahmáśāla (which is the same), the Matsya, and the Bhágavata Puránas. The Bráhma P. and the Hari Vána, the Agni, Linga, Kúrma, and Garuđa Puránas have lists of various extent, but none beyond the families of Pádiśu and Kráshńa. The Márkańdeya contains an account of a few of the kings of the solar dynasty alone; and the Padma, of a part of the solar and lunar princes only, besides accounts of individuals. In the Rámáyana, Mahábhárata, and in the other Puránas, occasional short genealogies and notices of individual princes occur. In general there is a tolerable conformity, but this is not invariably the case, as we shall have occasion to observe.

Manu, originating with Brahmá.² Listen therefore, Maitreya, to the entire series of the princes of this family, by which all sin shall be effaced.

Before the evolution of the mundane egg, existed Brahmá, who was Hiraíyagarbha, the form of that supreme Brahma which consists of Vishúu as identical with the Ríg, Yajur, and Sáma Vedas; the primeval, uncreated cause of all worlds. From the right thumb of Brahmá was born the patriarch Daksha;³ his daughter was Aditi, who was the mother of the sun. The Manu Váivaswata was the son of the celestial luminary; and his sons were Ikshwákú, Nriga, Dhrishtá, Sárýáti, Narishyanta, Pránóu, Nábhága, Nedishta, Karúsha, and Prishadhra.⁴

² In the historical passages of all the Puráñas in which such occur, and especially in the Vishúu and Váyu, verses, apparently the fragments of a more ancient narrative, are frequently cited. It may also be noticed, as a peculiarity of this part of the Puráña, that the narration is in prose.

³ Daksha is elsewhere said to have been one of the mind-born sons of Brahmá, or to have been the son of the Prachetasas: see p. 115. n. 5.

⁴ According to the nomenclature sometimes followed, and as we shall have reason to conclude intended in this place, there are ten sons of Manu. The commentator regards them, however, as but nine, considering Nábhága-nedíshá but one name, or Nedíshá the father of Nábhága. The number is generally stated to be nine, although there is some variety in the names, particularly in this name, which occurs Nábhágadíshá, Nábhágaríshá; and also separated, as Nábhága, Nabhaga, or Nabága; Nedíshá, Díshá, and Aríshá: the latter, as in the Kúrma, distinctly stated, नामानीकृतम्: Again, नेिद्वः नाम: ज्ञृः: Bráhma P. The commentator on the Hari Vanáśa quotes the Vedas for Nábhágadíshá: नाभागदिशाः नाभागरीशाः: but the name occurs as Nábhánedíshá in the Aitareya Brahmána of the Rigveda, where a story is told of his being excluded from all share of his inheritance, on the plea of his being wholly devoted to a religious life: नाभागरीशाः नाभागदिशाः नाभागरीशाः माहात न भागी निरामायनः See also As. Res. VIII. 384. The name as ordinarily written, Na-bhága, ‘no-share,’ has nevertheless an obvious connexion with the legend. The name of Nriga is found only in our text, the Padma, and the Bhágavata: the Váyu has Nájáva. Pránóu is also the reading of the Váyu and Agni, but not of the rest, which have Veá, Vanya, Daná, Kusánátha or Kavi, in its place. The Mahábhárata, Adi P., p. 113, has Veá, Dhrisháu, Narishyanta, Nábhága, Ikshwákú, Kárúsha, Sárýáti, Ilá, Prishadhra, and Nábhágárisúhrá. The Padma P., in the Pátála Kániúda, says there were ‘ten,’ and names them Ikshwákú, Nriga, Díshá, Dhrisháu, Kárúsha, Sárýáti, Narishyanta, Prishadhra, Nábhága, and Kavi, Before their birth, the Manu being desirous of sons, offered a sacrifice for that purpose to Mitra and Varuṇa; but the rite being deranged, through an irregularity of the ministering priest, a daughter, Ilā, was produced. Through the favour of the two divinities, however, her sex changed.

5 नामप्रभुं श्रोतुपराचे: । 'That sacrifice being wrongly offered, through the improper invocations of the Hotri.' It is also read बतहु 'frustrated.' This is rather a brief and obscure allusion to what appears to be an ancient legend, and one that has undergone various modifications. According to the Matsya, no change of sex took place in the first instance. The eldest son of Manu was Ida or Ilā (ई or ई), whom his father appointed sovereign of the seven Dwipas. In his progress round his dominions, Ila came to the forest of Šambhu or Śiva; entering into which, he was changed to a female, Ilā, agreeably to a promise made formerly by Śiva to Pārvatī, who had been once unseasonably broken in upon by some sages, that such a transformation should be inflicted on every male who trespassed upon the sacred grove. After a season, the brothers of Ilā sought for him, and finding him thus metamorphosed, applied to Vaishñiva, their father's priest, to know the cause. He explained it to them, and directed them to worship Śiva and his bride. They did so, accordingly; and it was announced by the deities, that, upon the performance of an Aśvamedha by Ikshvāku, Ilā should become a Kimpurusha, named Sudyumna, and that he should be a male one month, and a female another month, alternately. The Vāyu, which is followed by most of the other authorities, states, that upon Manu's offering their share of the sacrifice to Mitra and Varuṇa, instead of a boy, a girl was born: according to the Vedas.

6 द्रव्यक श्रोतुपराचे: । Manu desired her to follow him; तामिक्रियापराचे नन्दिष्कट्यां मुने:। चतुर्विवाह नामे ते तामिक्रियाप्रवृत्त रे ॥ whence her name Ilā (from ila or īla, 'come'). There, however, Manu propitiates Mitra and Varuṇa, and the girl Ilā is changed into the boy Ila or Sudyumna by their favour: as the Mārkandeya; प्रवृत्त तामिक्रियाश्रादेह हुर्निडायां च निद्रायां। इत्यादि असनवर । द्रव्यक श्रोतुपराचे ॥ Sudyumna's subsequent change to a female again, is told much as in the Matsya; but his being alternately male and female is not mentioned in the Vāyu any more than it is in our text. The Bhāgavata agrees in that respect with the Matsya, but it has evidently embellished the earlier part of the legend by the introduction of another character, Śraddhā, the wife of the Manu. It is said that it was by her instigation, as she was desirous of having a girl, that the ministering Brahmins altered the purpose of the rite, in consequence of which a girl, instead of a boy, was born. The similarity of the name has induced the learned author of the Origin of Pagan Idolatry to conceive that he has found the Ila of the Hindus in the II or Ilus of the Phoenicians. "The Phoenician II is the masculine Ila of the Hindus and Indo-Scythe, and Ilā was a title of Manu or Buddha, who was preserved in the ark at the time of the deluge:" I. 156; and he thence concludes that Ila must be Noah; whilst other circumstances in his Phoenician history idenwas changed, and she became a man, named Sudyumna. At a subsequent period, in consequence of becoming subject to the effects of a malediction once pronounced by Śiva, Sudyumna was again transformed to a woman in the vicinity of the hermitage of Budha, the son of the deity of the moon. Budha saw and espoused her, and had by her a son named Purúravas. After his birth, the illustrious Rishis, desirous of restoring Sudyumna to his sex, prayed to the mighty Vishnú, who is the essence of the four Vedas, of mind, of every thing, and of nothing; and who is in the form of the sacrificial male; and through his favour Ilá once more became Sudyumna, in which character he had three sons, Utkala, Gaya, and Vinata.

In consequence of his having been formerly a female, Sudyumna was excluded from any share in his paternal dominions; but his father, at the suggestion of Vaśishtha, bestowed upon him the city Pratishthánâ, and he gave it to Purúravas.

tify him with Abraham. I. 159. Again;
"Ilus or Il is a regular Cuthic name of Buddha, which the Phœmiscians, I have no doubt, brought with them; for Buddha or Manu, in the character of Ilâ, is said to have married his own daughter, who is described as the offspring of an ancient personage that was preserved in an ark at the time of the deluge." I. 223. Now whatever connexion there may be between the names of Ilâ, Il, Ilus, Ilium, Ilâ 'the earth,' and Ilos 'alime,' there is no very obvious resemblance between the Paurânik legends of Ilâ and the Mosaic record; nor do the former authorize the particulars of Ilâ stated by Mr. Faber, on the authority probably of Col. Wilford. The Manu Satyavrata, who was preserved in the ark, is never called Ilâ, nor is he the father of Ilâ. Buddha was not so preserved, nor is Ilâ ever a title of Buddha. Budha (not Buddha), the husband of Ilâ, never appears as her father, nor is he a Manu, nor is she the daughter of any ancient personage preserved in an ark. There is not therefore, as far as I am aware, any circumstance in the history of Ilâ or Ilâ which can identify either with Abraham or Noah.

6 The Matsya calls the name of the third Haritásâ; the Váyu &c., Vinitásâ; the Máraśeya, Vinaya; and the Bhágavata, Vimala. All but the last agree in stating that Utkala (Orissa) and Gaya in Behar are named after the two first. The Matsya calls the third the sovereign of the east, along with the Kauravas; the Váyu makes him king of the west. The Bhágavata calls them all three rulers of the south.

7 The authorities agree in this location of Sudyumna. Pratishthánâ was situated on the eastern side of the confluence of the Ganges and Jumna; the country between which rivers was the territory of the direct male descendants of Vaivaswata. In the Hari Vaná it is said that he
Of the other sons of the Manu, Prishadhra, in consequence of the crime of killing a cow, was degraded to the condition of a Śūdra. From Karūsha descended the mighty warriors termed Kārūshas (the sovereigns of the north). The son of Nedishtha, named Nābhāga, became reigned in Pratishtāna, having killed Dhriśtāka, Ambārīsha, and Daṇḍa: M. Langlois had no doubt in his copy, as he renders it, ‘Il donna naissance à trois enfans;’ though, as he observes, Hamilton had called these the sons of Ikshwāku. The Brāhmaṇa P. has not this passage, nor does the commentator on the Hari Vanśa give any explanation; neither does any thing of the kind occur elsewhere. We have however, subsequently in the text, Daṇḍa named as a son of Ikshwāku; and in the Padma P., Srishtī Kharśa, and in the Uttara Kharśa of the Rāmāyaṇa, we have a detailed narrative of Daṇḍa, the son of Ikshwāku, whose country was laid waste by an imprecation of Bhārgava, whose daughter that prince had violated. His kingdom became in consequence the Daṇḍaka forest. The Mahābhārata, Dāna Dharma, alludes to the same story. If therefore the preferable reading of the Hari Vanśa be Suta, ‘son,’ it is at variance with all other authorities. At the same time it must be admitted, that the same work is singular in asserting any collision between Daṇḍa and his brothers and Sudyumma, and the passage seems to have grown out of that careless and ignorant compilation which the Hari Vanśa so perpetually presents. It is not improbably a gratuitous perversion of this passage in the Matsya; Amārīṣa was the son of Nābhāga; and Dhriśtā had three sons.’

* This story has been modified apparently at different periods, according to a progressive horror of the crime. Our text simply states the fact. The Vāyu says he was hungry, and not only killed, but ate the cow of his spiritual preceptor, Chyavana. In the Mārkaṇḍeya he is described as being out a hunting, and killing the cow of the father of Bābhrawya, mistaking it for a Gavaya or Gaya. The Bhāgāvata, as usual, improves upon the story, and says that Prishadhra was appointed by his Guru Vasishtha to protect his cattle. In the night a tiger made his way into the fold, and the prince in his haste, and in the dark, killed the cow upon which he had fastened, instead of the tiger. In all the authorities the effect is the same, and the imprecation of the offended sage degraded Prishadhra to the caste of a Śūdra. According to the Bhāgāvata, the prince led a life of devotion, and perishing in the flame of a forest, obtained final liberation. The obvious purport of this legend, and of some that follow, is to account for the origin of the different castes from one common ancestor.

* The Bhāgāvata also places the Kārūshas in the north; but the country of the Kārūshas is usually placed upon the Paripātra or Vindhya mountains (see p. 186. n. 13).
a Vaiśya\textsuperscript{10}; his son was Bhalandana\textsuperscript{11}; whose son was the celebrated Vatsapri\textsuperscript{12}; his son was Prānsu; whose son was Prajāni\textsuperscript{13}; whose son was Khanitra\textsuperscript{14}; whose son was the very valiant Chakshupa\textsuperscript{15}; whose son was Vinśa\textsuperscript{16}; whose son was Vīvinśati\textsuperscript{17}; whose son was Khaṇinētra; whose son was the powerful, wealthy, and valiant Karandhama\textsuperscript{18}; whose son was Avikshī (or Avikshit\textsuperscript{19}); whose son was the mighty Marutta, of whom this well known verse is recited; “There never was beheld on earth a sacrifice equal to the sacrifice of Marutta: all the implements \textsuperscript{10} The Vāyu has Nābhāga, the son of Ariaśā; \textit{समगरहिष्ठ} the Mārkaṇḍeya has, the son of Dīšā; \textit{विद्वर्धनम्} the Bhāgavata also calls him the son of Dīšā. According to that authority, he became a Vaiśya by his actions. The other Purāṇas generally agree that the descendants of this person became Vaiśyas; but the Matya and Vāyu do not notice it. The Mārkaṇḍeya details a story of Nābhāga’s carrying off and marrying the daughter of a Vaiśya; in consequence of which he was degraded, it is said, to the same caste, and deprived of his share of the patrimonial sovereignty, which his son and successor recovered. The Brāhma P. and Hari Vanśa assert that two sons of Nābhāgārīkhā again became Brahmans; but the duties of royalty imply the Khaṇtriya caste of his posterity; and the commentator on our text observes that the son of Nābhāga was born before his father’s degradation, and consequently the race continued Khaṇtriya; an assertion unsupported by any authority, and it must therefore appear that a race of Vaiśya princes was recognised by early traditions.

\textsuperscript{11} Bhānandana: Bhāgavata.

\textsuperscript{12} Vatsapri: Bhāgavata. Vatsasri: Mārkaṇḍeya. The latter has a story of the destruction of the Daitya Kujāmbha by Vidūratha, the father of Sunandā, the wife of Vatsasri. The Vāyu has Sahasrāri.

\textsuperscript{13} Pramati: Bhāgavata.

\textsuperscript{14} According to the Mārkaṇḍeya, the priests of the royal family conspired against this prince, and were put to death by his ministers.

\textsuperscript{15} Chakshusha: Bhāgavata.

\textsuperscript{16} Vīra: Mārkaṇḍeya.

\textsuperscript{17} Rambha precedes Vīvinśati: Bhāgav.

\textsuperscript{18} Bālapa or Balakāśva or Subalāśva, according to the Mārkaṇḍeya, which explains his name Karandhama to denote his creation of an army, when besieged by his revolted tributaries, by breathing on his hands (\textit{कर + ऊम}).

\textsuperscript{19} Both forms occur, as the commentator observes; \textit{वायस्ववाम काश्मिरविवर्तिम्}. The Mārkaṇḍeya has a long story of this prince’s carrying off the daughter of Viśāla, king of Vaiśāla. Being attacked and captured by his confederated rivals, he was rescued by his father, but was so much mortified by his disgrace, that he vowed never to marry nor reign. The princess, also becoming an ascetic, met with him in the woods, and they were finally espoused; but Avikshit kept his other vow, and relinquished his succession in favour of his son, who succeeded to the kingdoms of both Karandhama and Viśāla.
and utensils were made of gold. Indra was intoxicated with the libations of Soma juice, and the Brahmans were enraptured with the magnificent donations they received. The winds of heaven encompassed the rite as guards, and the assembled gods attended to behold it. Marutta was a Chakravartti, or universal monarch: he had a son named Narishyanta; his son was Dama; his son was Rājyavarddhana; his son was Sudhriti; his son was Nara; his son was Kevala; his son was Bandhumat; his son was Vegavat; his son was Budha; his son was Trinavindu, who had a daughter named Ilavilā. The celestial nymph Alambushā becoming enamoured of Triṇavindu, bore him a son named Viśāla, by whom the city Vaiśāli was founded.

20 Most of our authorities quote the same words, with or without addition. The Vāyu adds, that the sacrifice was conducted by Samvartta, whom the Bhāgavata terms a Yogi, the son of Angirās; and that Vrihaspati was so jealous of the splendour of the rite, that a great quarrel (महान निर्माण) ensued between him and Samvartta. How it involved the king is not told, but apparently in consequence, Marutta, with his kindred and friends, was taken by Samvartta to heaven: समवर्त जीवन नीति महान निर्माणः। अनुग्राहणां:। अनुग्रहणां:। According to the Mārkaṇḍeya, Marutta was so named from the paternal benediction, 'May the winds be thine,' or 'be propitious to thee' (वाच: विहार:।). He reigned, agreeably to that record, 8,5000 years.

21 Omitted in the Bhāgavata.

22 A rather chivalric and curious story is told of Dama in the Mārkaṇḍeya. His bride Sumanā, daughter of the king Daśāra, was rescued by him from his rivals. One of them, Bapushmat, afterwards killed Marutta, who had retired into the woods, after relinquishing his crown to his son. Dama in retaliation killed Bapushmat, and made the Phūḍa, or obsequial offering to his father, of his flesh: with the remainder he fed the Brahmans of Rākṣasāsa origin: such were the kings of the solar race. पुरुस्तलार्कसमपि विषादपन्ते। मार्कण्ड्य:। भोवे भोवे भोवे भोवे भोवे। वासुकिभस्म विशालानवरिः। द्वारतित्रां किर राजानो। राजान:। चक्रवर्तिः।।

23 The Bhāgavata has Bandhavat, Oghasvat, and Bandha.

24 The Vāyu and Bhāgavata both add that she was the wife of Viśravas, and mother of Kuvera. In the Lingā P. she is said to have been the wife of Pulastya, and mother of Viśravas. The weight of authority is in favour of the former statement. See p. 83. n. 5.

25 The Bhāgavata names three sons, Viśāla, Sūnya-bandhu, and Dhūmaketu. Vaiśāli is a city of considerable renown in Indian tradition, but its site is a subject of some uncertainty. Part of the difficulty arises from confounding it with Viśāla, another name of Ujjayin; उज्जयिनीश्चित्राष्ट्रा:। वासुकिभस्म:।। Hemachandra. Also in the Megha Dūta; पार्शवर्षे। पुरुषोत्तमस्यहस्ते। च निबद्धता:।। Having arrived at Avanti, proceed to the illustrious city before indicated, Kings of Vaiśāli.

The son of the first king of Vaiśāli was Hemachandra; his son was Suchandra; his son was Dhúmráswa; his son was Srinjaya; his son was Sahadeva; his son was Kṛiśáswa; his son was Somadatta, who celebrated ten times the sacrifice of a horse; his son was Janamejaya; and his son was Sumati. These were the kings of Vaiśāli; of whom it is said, "By the favour of Triñavindu all the monarchs of Vaiśāli were long lived, magnanimous, equitable, and valiant."

Śaryáti, the fourth son of the Manu, had a daughter named Sukanyá, who was married to the holy sage Chyavana: he had also a righteous son, called Ānarta. The son of the latter was Revata, who ruled over Viśāla. To the city Ujjayini, named Viśāla. Comment. Vaiśāli however appears to be very differently situated. According to the Buddhists, amongst whom it is celebrated as a chief seat of the labours of Sākya and his first disciples, it is the same as Prayág or Allahabad; but the Rámáyaṇa (I. 45) places it much lower down, on the north bank of the Ganges, nearly opposite to the mouth of the Sone; and it was therefore in the modern district of Sárán, as Hamilton (Genealogies of the Hindus) conjectured. In the fourth century it was known to the Chinese traveller Fa-hian as Phi-she-li, on the right bank of the Gandak, not far from its confluence with the Ganges. Account of the Fo-kie-khi: Trans. R. As. Soc. no. IX. p. 128.

26 Dhumrákhā and Samyama: Bhágavata.

27 The text is clear enough; but, as elsewhere noticed (Hindu Theatre, II. 296), the commentator on the Bhágavata interprets the parallel passage, बुधासास्त्र नाम तथा: विशारद: सर्वेश्वरम्: विशारदः सत्तुष्ठिः: very differently, or सदंश्च देवप्रमेय नामार्ध्यानिति: नामार्ध्यानिति: किं तथा: किं तथा: नानात् नासन्यात् नासन्यात्. Kṛiśáswa with Devaja, or, as some copies read, Devaka or Daivata, as if there were two sons of Samyama.

28 The Bhágavata changes the order of these two, making Janamejaya the son of Sumati; or Pramati, Váyu. Sumati, king of Vaiśāli, is made cotemporary with Ráma: Rámáyaṇa, I. 47. 17. The dynasty of Vaiśāli kings is found only in our text, the Váyu, and Bhágavata. Hamilton places them from 1920 to 1240 B.C.; but the latter is incompatible with the date he assigns to Ráma, of 1700 B.C. The cotemporary existence of Sumati and Ráma, however, is rather unintelligible, as, according to our lists, the former is the thirty-fourth, and the latter the sixtieth, from Vaivasvata Manu.

29 The circumstances of their marriage, of Chyavana's appropriating a share of offerings to the Áswini Kumáras, and of his quarrel with Indra in consequence, are told in detail in the Bhágavata and Padma Puráñas.

30 In most of the other Puráñas, Reva or Raiva. The Linga and Matsya insert a Rochamána before him; and the Bhágavata adds to Ānartta, Uttánavarhish and Bhúrisheña.
the country called after his father Ānartta, and dwelt at the capital dominated Kuśasthali. The son of this prince was Raivata or Kakudmān, the eldest of a hundred brethren. He had a very lovely daughter, and not finding any one worthy of her hand, he repaired with her to the region of Brahmā to consult the god where a fit bridegroom was to be met with. When he arrived, the quiristers Hāhā, Hāhū, and others, were singing before Brahmā; and Raivata, waiting till they had finished, imagined the ages that elapsed during their performance to be but as a moment. At the end of their singing, Raivata prostrated himself before Brahmā, and explained his errand. “Whom should you wish for a son-in-law?” demanded Brahmā; and the king mentioned to him various persons with whom he could be well pleased. Nodding his head gently, and graciously smiling, Brahmā said to him, “Of those whom you have named the third or fourth generation no longer survives, for many successions of ages have passed away whilst you were listening to our songsters: now upon earth the twenty-eighth great age of the present Manu is nearly finished, and the Kali period is at hand. You must therefore bestow this virgin gem upon some other husband, for you are now alone, and your friends, your ministers, servants, wife, kinsmen, armies, and treasures, have long since been swept away by the hand of time.” Overcome with astonishment and alarm, the Rājā then said to Brahmā, “Since I am thus circumstanced, do thou, lord, tell me unto whom the maiden shall be given:” and the creator of the world, whose throne is the lotus, thus benignantly replied to the prince, as he stood bowed and humble before him: “The being of whose commencement, course, and termination, we are ignorant; the unborn and omnipresent essence of all things; he whose real and infinite nature and essence we do not know—is the supreme Vishānu. He is time, made up of moments and hours and years; whose influence is the source of perpetual change.
He is the universal form of all things, from birth to death. He is 31 The Bhāgavata ascribes the foundation of Kuśasthali to Revata, who built it;

it is said, within the sea: चक: समुद्रे।
The subsequent legend shews that it was the same, or on the same spot, as Dwārakā; and Ānartta was therefore part of Cutch or Guzerat. See p. 190. n. 77.
eternal, without name or shape. Through the favour of that imperishable being am I the agent of his power in creation: through his anger is Rudra the destroyer of the world: and the cause of preservation, Purusha, proceeds also from him. The unborn having assumed my person creates the world; in his own essence he provides for its duration; in the form of Rudra he devours all things; and with the body of Ananta he upholds them. Impersonated as Indra and the other gods he is the guardian of mankind; and as the sun and moon he disperses darkness. Taking upon himself the nature of fire he bestows warmth and maturity; and in the condition of the earth nourishes all beings.

As one with air he gives activity to existence; and as one with water he satisfies all wants: whilst in the state of ether, associated with universal aggregation, he furnishes space for all objects. He is at once the creator, and that which is created; the preserver, and that which is preserved; the destroyer, and, as one with all things, that which is destroyed; and, as the indestructible, he is distinct from these three vicissitudes. In him is the world; he is the world; and he, the primeval self-born, is again present in the world. That mighty Vishńu, who is paramount over all beings, is now in a portion of himself upon the earth. That city Kuśasthali which was formerly your capital, and rivalled the city of the immortals, is now known as Dwäraka, and there reigns a portion of that divine being in the person of Baladeva; to him, who appears as a man, present her as a wife: he is a worthy bridegroom for this excellent damsel, and she is a suitable bride for him."

Being thus instructed by the lotus-born divinity, Raivata returned with his daughter to earth, where he found the race of men dwindled in stature, reduced in vigour, and enfeebled in intellect. Repairing to the city of Kuśasthali, which he found much altered, the wise monarch bestowed his unequalled daughter on the wielder of the ploughshare, whose breast was as fair and radiant as crystal. Beholding the damsel

---

32 So called from its many Dwáras or gateways: द्वारादा नाम वेदवाद अनेकस्मविषयः।

Váyu.
of excessively lofty height, the chief, whose banner is a palm-tree, shortened her with the end of his ploughshare, and she became his wife. Balaráma having espoused, agreeably to the ritual, Revatí, the daughter of Raivata, the king retired to the mountain Himálaya, and ended his days in devout austerities.

33 The object of this legend, which is told by most of the authorities, is obviously to account for the anachronism of making Balaráma cotemporary with Raivata; the one early in the Treta age, and the other at the close of the Dwápara.
CHAP. II.

Dispersion of Revata's descendants: those of Dhrishta; those of Nabhaga. Birth of Ikahwaku, the son of Vaivasvata: his sons. Line of Vikukshi. Legend of Kakutsetha; of Dhundhumara; of Yuvanaswa; of Mandhatri: his daughters married to Saubhari.

PARASTARA.—Whilst Kakudmin, surnamed Raivata, was absent on his visit to the region of Brahma, the evil spirits or Rakshasas named Pujyajanas destroyed his capital Kuasthali. His hundred brothers, through dread of these foes, fled in different directions; and the Kshatriyas, their descendants, settled in many countries.

From Dhrishta, the son of the Manu, sprang the Kshatriya race of Dharshtaka.

The son of Nabhaga was Nabhaga; his son was Ambari-

1 According to the Vayu, the brothers of Raivata founded a celebrated race called Saryata, from Saryati. The Brahmana P. says they took refuge in secret places (gahana); for which the Hari Vanas substitutes (parvata gaña) mountains. The Vayu has neither, and says merely that they were renowned in all regions: रिकायता रिपु गहरीः।

2 So the Vayu, Linga, Agni, Brahma, and Hari Vanas. The Matya names three sons of Dhrishta, Dhrishtaketu, Chitranshata, and Rajadhrihshata. The Bhagavata adds, that the sons of Dhrishta obtained Brahmmanhood upon earth, though born Kshatriyas: पृष्ठाराजस्य च चर्च प्रदृश्या गरे रिकायते।

3 But who is Nabhaga? for, as above observed, c. 1. n. 2, the son of the Manu is Nabhaga-nedishta, and there is in that case no such person as Nabhaga: on the other hand, if Nabhaga and Nedishta be distinct names, we have ten sons of Vaivaswata, as in the Bhagavata. The descendants of Nedishta, through his son Nabhaga, have been already specified; and after all, therefore, we must consider the text as intending a distinct person by the name Nabhaga; and such a name does occur in the lists of the Agni, Kurma, Matya, and Bhagavata, unquestionably distinct from that with which it is also sometimes compounded. The Bhagavata repeats the legend of the Aitareya Brahma, with some additions, and says that Nabhaga having protracted his period of study beyond the usual age, his brothers appropriated his share of the patrimony. On his applying for his portion, they consigned their father to him, by whose advice he assisted the descendants of Angiras in a sacrifice, and they presented him with all the wealth that was left at its termination. Rudra claimed it as his; and Nabhaga acquiescing, the god confirmed the gift, by which he became possessed of sha; his son was Virúpa; his son was Prishadāswa; his son was Rathínara, of whom it is sung, "These, who were Kṣatriyas by birth, the heads of the family of Rathínara, were called Ángirasas (or sons of Ángiras), and were Brahmans as well as Kṣatriyas."

Ikhwákū was born from the nostril of the Manu, as he happened to sneeze. He had a hundred sons, of whom the three most distinguished were Vikukshi, Nimi, and Dańda. Fifty of the rest, under Śakuni, were the protectors of the northern countries. Forty-eight were the princes of the south.

an equivalent for the loss of territory. Most of the authorities recognise but one name here, variously read either Nabhāga or Nābhāga, the father of Ambarisha. The Váyu, as well as the Bhágavata, concurs with the text.

4 The Bhágavata considers Ambarisha as a king, who reigned apparently on the banks of the Yamuná. He is more celebrated as a devout worshipper of Vishńu, whose discus protected him from the wrath of Durvásas, and humbled that choleric saint, who was a portion of Siva; a legend which possibly records a struggle between two sects, in which the votaries of Vishńu, headed by Ambarisha, triumphed.

5 The Agni, Brahmás, and Mataya stop with Ambarisha. The Váyu and Bhágavata proceed as in the text, only the latter adds to Virúpā, Ketumāt, and Sambhu.

6 The same verse is cited in the Váyu, and affords an instance of a mixture of character, of which several similar cases occur subsequently. Kṣatriyas by birth, become Brahmans by profession; and such persons are usually considered as Ángirasas, followers or descendants of Ángiras, who may have founded a school of warrior-priests. This is the obvious purport of the legend of Nabhāga’s assisting the sons of Ángiras to complete their sacrifice, referred to in a former note, although the same authority has devised a different explanation. Rathínara (or Rathítara, as read in some copies, as well as by the Bhágavata and Váyu) being childless, Ángiras begot on his wife sons radiant with divine glory, who as the sons of the monarch by his wife were Kṣatriyas, but were Brahmans through their actual father. This however is an afterthought, not warranted by the memorial verse cited in our text.

7 So the Bhágavata: ब्राह्मणोभिः राजा जन्मात्र भवेत्

8 The Mataya says that Indra (Devará) was born as Vikukshi, and that Ikhwákū had one hundred and fourteen other sons, who were kings of the countries south of Meru; and as many who reigned north of that mountain. The Váyu and most of the other authorities agree in the number of one hundred, of whom fifty, with Śakuni at their head, are placed in the north; and forty-eight in the south, according to the Váyu, of whom Vimati was the chief. The same authority specifies also Nimi and Dańda as sons of Ikhwákū, as does the Bhágavata, with the addition of their reigning in the central regions. The distribution of the rest in Upon one of the days called Ashtaka, Ikshvaku being desirous of celebrating ancestral obsequies, ordered Vikukshi to bring him flesh suitable for the offering. The prince accordingly went into the forest, and killed many deer, and other wild animals, for the celebration. Being weary with the chase, and being hungered, he sat down, and ate a hare; after which, being refreshed, he carried the rest of the game to his father. Vasishtha, the family priest of the house of Ikshvaku, was summoned to consecrate the food; but he declared that it was impure, in consequence of Vikukshi's having eaten a hare from amongst it (making it thus, as it were, the residue of his meal). Vikukshi was in consequence abandoned by his offended father, and the epithet Shaśāda (hare-eater) was affixed to him by the Guru. On the death of Ikshvaku, the dominion of the earth descended to Shaśāda, who was succeeded by his son Puranjaya.

In the Treta age a violent war broke out between the gods and the Asuras, in which the former were vanquished. They consequently had recourse to Vishnu for assistance, and propitiating him by their adorations. The eternal ruler of the universe, Nārāyaṇa, had compassion upon them, and said, "What you desire is known unto me. Hear how your wishes shall be fulfilled. There is an illustrious prince named Puranjaya, the son of a royal sage; into his person I will infuse a portion of myself, and having descended upon earth I will in his person subdue all your enemies. Do you therefore endeavour to secure the aid that work is twenty-five in the west, as many in the east, and the rest elsewhere; that is, the commentator adds, north and south. It seems very probable that by these sons of Ikshvaku we are to understand colonies or settlers in various parts of India.

9 See p. 322, 323.

10 The Vāyu states that he was king of Ayodhya, after the death of Ikshvaku. The story occurs in all the authorities, more or less in detail.

11 The Vāyu says it was in the war of the starling and the stork; चाराणीये पक्षी: a conflict between Vasishtha and Viswamitra, metamorphosed into birds, according to the Bhāṣṇāvata; but that work assigns it to a different period, or the reign of Hariśchandra. If the tradition have any import, it may refer to the ensigns of the contending parties; for banners, with armorial devices, were, as we learn from the Mahābhārata, invariably borne by princes and leaders.
of Puranjaya for the destruction of your foes." Acknowledging with reverence the kindness of the deity, the immortals quitted his presence, and repaired to Puranjaya, whom they thus addressed: "Most renowned Kshatriya, we have come to thee to solicit thy alliance against our enemies: it will not become thee to disappoint our hopes." The prince replied, "Let this your Indra, the monarch of the spheres, the god of a hundred sacrifices, consent to carry me upon his shoulders, and I will wage battle with your adversaries as your ally." The gods and Indra readily answered, "So be it;" and the latter assuming the shape of a bull, the prince mounted upon his shoulder. Being then filled with delight, and invigorated by the power of the eternal ruler of all movable and immovable things, he destroyed in the battle that ensued all the enemies of the gods; and because he annihilated the demon host whilst seated upon the shoulder (or the hump, Kakud) of the bull, he thence obtained the appellation Kakutsthā (seated on the hump).

The son of Kakutsthā was Anenas, whose son was Prithu, whose son was Viswagāswa, whose son was Ārdra, whose son was Yuvanāśwa, whose son was Śravasta, by whom the city of Śravastī was founded. The son of Śravasta was Vrihadaśwa, whose son was Kuvalayāśwa. This prince, inspired with the spirit of Vishnū, destroyed the Asura Dhundhu, who had harassed the pious sage Uttanka; and he was thence entitled Dhundhumāra. In his conflict with the demon

---

12 The Bhāgavata adds, that he captured the city of the Asuras, situated in the west; whence his name Puranjaya, "victor of the city:" he is also termed Paranjaya, "vanquisher of foes:" he is also called Indravāha, "borne by Indra."

13 Suyodhana: Matya, Agni, Kūrma.

16 Śravasta and Śavasti: Bhāgav. Śravasti: Matya, Linge, and Kūrma, which also say that Śravastī was in the country of Gaura, which is eastern Bengal; but it is more usually placed in Kosala, by which a part of Oude is commonly understood. In my Dictionary I have inserted Śravantī, upon the authority of the Trikāśa Śeṣa, but it is no doubt an error for Śravastī; it is there also called Dharmapattana, being a city of some sanctity in the estimation of the Buddhists. It is termed by Fa-Hian, She-wei; by Hwan Tsang, Shelo-va-si-ti; and placed by both nearly in the site of Fyzabad in Oude. Account of the Foe-kue-ki.

17 This legend is told in much more the king was attended by his sons, to the number of twenty-one thousand; and all these, with the exception of only three, perished in the engagement, consumed by the fiery breath of Dhundhu. The three who survived were Drîdhâśâwa, Chandrâśâwa, and Kapilâśâwa; and the son and successor of the elder of these was Haryyaśâwa; his son was Nikumbha; his son was Sanhatâśâwa; his son was Kriśâśâwa; his son was Prasenajit; and his son was another Yuvanâśâwa.

Yuvanâśâwa had no son, at which he was deeply grieved. Whilst residing in the vicinage of the holy Munîs, he inspired them with pity for his childless condition, and they instituted a religious rite to procure him progeny. One night during its performance the sages having placed a vessel of consecrated water upon the altar had retired to repose. It was past midnight, when the king awoke, exceedingly thirsty; and unwilling to disturb any of the holy inmates of the dwelling, he looked about for something to drink. In his search he came to the water in the jar, which had been sanctified and endowed with prolific efficacy by sacred texts, and he drank it. When the Munis rose, and found that the water had been drunk, they inquired who had taken it, and said, “The queen that has drunk this water shall give birth to a mighty and valiant son.” “It was I,” exclaimed the Rájá, “who unwittingly drank the water!” and accordingly in the belly of Yuvanáswa was conceived a child, and it grew, and in due time it ripped open the right side of the Rájá, and was born, and the Rájá did not die. Upon the birth of the child, “Who will be its nurse?” said the Munis; when Indra, the king of the gods, appeared, and said, “He shall have me for his nurse” (mám dhásyati); and hence the boy was named Mándhátri. Indra put his fore finger into the mouth of the infant, who sucked it, and drew from it heavenly nectar; and he grew up, and became a mighty monarch, and reduced the seven continental zones under his dominion. And here a verse is recited; “From the rising to the going down of the sun, all that is irradiated by his light, is the land of Mándhátri, the son of Yuvanáswa.”

Mándhátri married Vindumati, the daughter of Śásavindu, and had by her three sons, Purukutsa, Ambarisha, and Muchukunda; he had also fifty daughters.

The devout sage Saubhari, learned in the Vedas, had spent twelve years immersed in a piece of water; the sovereign of the fish in which, named Sannada, of large bulk, had a very numerous progeny. His children and his grandchildren were wont to frolic around him in all

19 The Váyu cites this same verse and another, with the remark, that they were uttered by those acquainted with the Puráñas and with genealogies: वर्षापुरुषवाक्यवाच जीवनविमीतीमुक्ति। मायानन्देन्त्यत्र विभाजनः।

20 The Bráhma and Agni omit Ambarisha, for whom the Mataya substitutes Dharmasena. The following legend of Saubhari occurs elsewhere only in the Bhágavata, and there less in detail.
directions, and he lived amongst them happily, playing with them night and day. Saubhani the sage, being disturbed in his devotions by their sports, contemplated the patriarchal felicity of the monarch of the lake, and reflected, "How enviable is this creature, who, although born in a degraded state of being, is ever thus sporting cheerfully amongst his offspring and their young. Of a truth he awakens in my mind the wish to taste such pleasure, and I also will make merry amidst my children." Having thus resolved, the Muni came up hastily from the water, and, desirous of entering upon the condition of a householder, went to Mándhâtri to demand one of his daughters as his wife. As soon as he was informed of the arrival of the sage, the king rose up from his throne, offered him the customary libation, and treated him with the most profound respect. Having taken a seat, Saubhani said to the Rája, "I have determined to marry: do you, king, give me one of your daughters as a wife: disappoint not my affection. It is not the practice of the princes of the race of Kâkustha, to turn away from compliance with the wishes of those who come to them for succour. There are, O monarch, other kings of the earth to whom daughters have been born, but your family is above all renowned for observance of liberality in your donations to those who ask your bounty. You have, O prince, fifty daughters; give one of them to me, that so I may be relieved from the anxiety I suffer through fear that my suit may be denied."

When Mándhâtri heard this request, and looked upon the person of the sage, emaciated by austerity and old age, he felt disposed to refuse his consent; but dreading to incur the anger and imprecation of the holy man, he was much perplexed, and, declining his head, was lost a while in thought. The Rishi, observing his hesitation, said, "On what, O Rája, do you meditate? I have asked for nothing which may not be readily accorded: and what is there that shall be unattainable to you, if my desires be gratified by the damsel whom you must needs give unto me?" To this, the king, apprehensive of his displeasure, answered and said, "Grave sir, it is the established usage of our house to wed our daughters to such persons only as they shall themselves select from suitors of fitting rank; and since this your request is not yet made known to my maidens, it is impossible to say whether it may be equally agreeable to them as it is to me. This is the occasion of my perplexity, and I am at a loss what to do.” This answer of the king was fully understood by the Rishi, who said to himself, “This is merely a device of the Rájá to evade compliance with my suit: he has reflected that I am an old man, having no attractions for women, and not likely to be accepted by any of his dughters: even be it so; I will be a match for him:” and he then spake aloud, and said, “Since such is the custom, mighty prince, give orders that I be admitted into the interior of the palace. Should any of the maidens your daughters be willing to take me for a bridegroom, I will have her for my bride; if no one be willing, then let the blame attache alone to the years that I have numbered.” Having thus spoken, he was silent.

Mándhátri, unwilling to provoke the indignation of the Muni, was accordingly obliged to command the eunuch to lead the sage into the inner chambers; who, as he entered the apartments, put on a form and features of beauty far exceeding the personal charms of mortals, or even of heavenly spirits. His conductor, addressing the princesses, said to them, “Your father, young ladies, sends you this pious sage, who has demanded of him a bride; and the Rájá has promised him, that he will not refuse him any one of you who shall choose him for her husband.”
When the damsels heard this, and looked upon the person of the Rishi, they were equally inspired with passion and desire, and, like a troop of female elephants disputing the favours of the master of the herd, they all contended for the choice. “Away, away, sister!” said each to the other; “this is my election, he is my choice; he is not a meet bridegroom for you; he has been created by Brahmá on purpose for me, as I have been created in order to become his wife: he has been chosen by me before you; you have no right to prevent his becoming my husband.”
In this way arose a violent quarrel amongst the daughters of the king, each insisting upon the exclusive election of the Rishi; and as the blameless sage was thus contended for by the rival princesses, the superintendent of the inner apartments, with a downcast look, reported to the king what had occurred. Perplexed more than ever by this information, the Rájá exclaimed, "What is all this! and what am I to do now! What is it that I have said!" and at last, although with extreme reluctance, he was obliged to agree that the Rishi should marry all his daughters.

Having then wedded, agreeably to law, all the princesses, the sage took them home to his habitation, where he employed the chief of architects, Viśwakarman, equal in taste and skill to Brahma himself, to construct separate palaces for each of his wives: he ordered him to provide each building with elegant couches and seats and furniture, and to attach to them gardens and groves, with reservoirs of water, where the wild-duck and the swan should sport amidst beds of lotus flowers. The divine artist obeyed his injunctions, and constructed splendid apartments for the wives of the Rishi; in which by command of Saubhari, the inexhaustible and divine treasure called Nanda\(^{21}\) took up his permanent abode, and the princesses entertained all their guests and dependants with abundant viands of every description and the choicest quality.

After some period had elapsed, the heart of king Mándhátri yearned for his daughters, and he felt solicitous to know whether they were happily circumstanced. Setting off therefore on a visit to the hermitage of Saubhari, he beheld upon his arrival a row of beautiful crystal palaces, shining as brilliantly as the rays of the sun, and situated amidst lovely gardens, and reservoirs of pellucid water. Entering into one of these magnificent palaces, he found and embraced a daughter, and said to her, as the tears of affection and delight trembled in his eyes, "Dear child, tell me how it is with you. Are you happy here? or not? Does the great sage treat you with tenderness? or do you revert with regret to your early home?" The princess replied, "You behold, my father, how delightful a mansion I inhabit, surrounded by lovely gardens and lakes, where the lotus blooms, and the wild swans murmur. Here I have delicious viands, fragrant unguents, costly ornaments, splendid raiment, soft beds, and every enjoyment that affluence can procure. Why then should I call to memory the place of my birth? To your favour am I \(^{21}\) The great Nidhi: a Nidhi is a treasure, of which there are several belonging to Kuvera; each has its guardian spirit, or is personified.

THE HAPPY LIFE OF THE PRINCESSES.

indebted for all that I possess. I have only one cause of anxiety, which is this; my husband is never absent from my dwelling: solely attached to me, he is always at my side; he never goes near my sisters; and I am concerned to think that they must feel mortified by his neglect: this is the only circumstance that gives me uneasiness."

Proceeding to visit another of his daughters, the king, after embracing her, and sitting down, made the same inquiry, and received the same account of the enjoyment with which the princess was provided: there was also the same complaint, that the Rishi was wholly devoted to her, and paid no attention to her sisters. In every palace Māndhātri heard the same story from each of his daughters in reply to his question; and with a heart overflowing with wonder and delight he repaired to the wise Saubhari, whom he found alone, and, after paying homage to him, thus addressed him: "Holy sage, I have witnessed this thy marvellous power; the like miraculous faculties I have never known any other to possess. How great is the reward of thy devout austerities!" Having thus saluted the sage, and been received by him with respect, the Rājā resided with him for some time, partaking of the pleasures of the place, and then returned to his capital.

In the course of time the daughters of Māndhātri bore to Saubhari a hundred and fifty sons, and day by day his affection for his children became more intense, and his heart was wholly occupied with the sentiment of self 22. "These my sons," he loved to think, "will charm me with their infant-prattle; then they will learn to walk; they will then grow up to youth and to manhood: I shall see them married, and they will have children; and I may behold the children of those children." By these and similar reflections, however, he perceived that his anticipations every day outstripped the course of time, and at last he exclaimed, "What exceeding folly is mine! there is no end to my desires. Though all I hope should come to pass for ten thousand or a hundred thousand years, still new wishes would spring up. When I have seen my infants walk: when I have beheld their youth, their manhood, their marriage, their progeny; still my expectations are unsat-

22 Of Mamātā, ‘mineness’ (ममता); the notion that wives, children, wealth, belong to an individual, and are essential to his happiness.
tisfied, and my soul yearns to behold the descendants of their descendants. Shall I even see them, some other wish will be engendered; and when that is accomplished, how is the birth of fresh desires to be prevented? I have at last discovered that there is no end to hope, until it terminates in death; and that the mind which is perpetually engrossed by expectation, can never be attached to the supreme spirit. My mental devotions, whilst immersed in water, were interrupted by attachment to my friend the fish. The result of that connexion was my marriage; and insatiable desires are the consequences of my married life. The pain attendant upon the birth of my single body, is now augmented by the cares attached to fifty others, and is farther multiplied by the numerous children whom the princesses have borne to me. The sources of affliction will be repeatedly renewed by their children, and by their espousals, and by their progeny, and will be infinitely increased: a married life is a mine of individual anxiety. My devotions, first disturbed by the fish of the pool, have since been obstructed by temporal indulgence, and I have been beguiled by that desire for progeny which was communicated to me by association with Sammada. Separation from the world is the only path of the sage to final liberation: from commerce with mankind innumerable errors proceed. The ascetic who has accomplished a course of self-denial falls from perfection by contracting worldly attachments: how much more likely should one so fall whose observances are incomplete? My intellect has been a prey to the desire of married happiness; but I will now so exert myself for the salvation of my soul, that, exempt from human imperfections, I may be exonerated from human sufferings. To that end I will propitiate, by arduous penance, Vishṇu, the creator of the universe, whose form is inscrutable, who is smaller than the smallest, larger than the largest, the source of darkness and of light, the sovereign god of gods. On his everlasting body, which is both discrete and indiscrėte substance, illimitably mighty, and identical with the universe, may my mind, wholly free from sin, be ever steadily intent, so that I may be born no more. To him I fly for refuge; to that Vishṇu, who is the teacher of teachers, who is one with all beings, the pure eternal lord of all, without beginning, middle, or end, and besides whom is nothing.”
CHAP. III.

Saubhari and his wives adopt an ascetic life. Descendants of Māndhātrī. Legend of Narmadā and Purukutta. Legend of Triśānku. Bāhu driven from his kingdom by the Haihayas and Tālajanghas. Birth of Sagara: he conquers the barbarians, imposes upon them distinguishing usages, and excludes them from offerings to fire, and the study of the Vedas.

Having thus communed with himself, Saubhari abandoned his children, his home, and all his splendour, and, accompanied by his wives, entered the forest, where he daily practised the observances followed by the ascetics termed Vaikhānasas (or anchorets having families), until he had cleansed himself from all sin. When his intellect had attained maturity, he concentrated in his spirit the sacramental fires, and became a religious mendicant. Then having consigned all his acts to the supreme, he obtained the condition of Achyuta, which knows no change, and is not subject to the vicissitudes of birth, transmigration, or death. Whoever reads, or hears, or remembers, or understands, this legend of Saubhari, and his espousal of the daughters of Māndhātrī, shall never, for eight successive births, be addicted to evil thoughts, nor shall he act unrighteously, nor shall his mind dwell upon improper objects, nor shall he be influenced by selfish attachments. The line of Māndhātrī is now resumed.

The son of Ambarīsha, the son of Māndhātrī, was Yuvanāśwa; his son was Harita, from whom the Angirasa Hāritas were descended.

1 So Manu; "Having reposed, as the law directs, the holy fires in his breast," &c. VI. 25.

2 The Vāyu, Linga, Kūrma, and Bhāgavata agree in this series; the others omit it.

3 The words of the text are, हस्ताक्षरोऽवस्थनो ज्ञाते अभिधिता: । अन्तःप्रकटप्रकरे भाषयैति हिंदुवा: । ' Harita was the son of Yuvanāśwa, whose sons were the Hāritas; they were on the part (or followers) of Angiras, and were Brahmans with the properties of Kabatriyas. The Vāyu has, हस्ताक्षरोऽवस्थनो ज्ञाते अभिधिता: । अन्तःप्रकटप्रकरे भाषयैति हिंदुवा: । ' Harita was the son of Yuvanāśwa, from whom were many called...
In the regions below the earth the Gandharbas called Mauneyas (or sons of the Muni Kaśyapa), who were sixty millions in number, had defeated the tribes of the Nāgas, or snake-gods, and seized upon their most precious jewels, and usurped their dominion. Deprived of their power by the Gandharbas, the serpent chiefs addressed the god of the gods, as he awoke from his slumbers; and the blossoms of his lotus eyes opened while listening to their hymns. They said, “Lord, how shall we be delivered from this great fear?” Then replied the first of males, who is without beginning, I will enter into the person of Purukutsa, the son of Māndhātri, the son of Yuvanāśwa, and in him will I quiet these iniquitous Gandharbas.” On hearing these words, the snake-gods bowed and withdrew, and returning to their country dispatched Narmadā to solicit the aid of Purukutsa 4.

Narmadā accordingly went to Purukutsa, and conducted him to the regions below the earth, where, being filled with the might of the deity, he destroyed the Gandharbas. He then returned to his own palace; and the snake-gods, in acknowledgment of Narmadā’s services, conferred upon her as a blessing, that whoever should think of her, and invoke her name, should never have any dread of the venom of snakes. This is the invocation; “Salutation be to Narmadā in the morning; salutation be to Narmadā at night; salutation be to thee, O Narmadā! defend me

Hārita; they were sons of Angiras, and Brahmins with the properties of Khaśtriya. 7 The Bhāgavata has only, मांषि प्रमगिनेऽिे। These (Ambarisha, Purukutsa, and Harita) were, according to Sridhara Swámi’s comment, the chiefs of Māndhātri’s descendants, being founders of three several branches: or it may mean, he says, merely that they had Māndhātri for their progenitor, Māndhātri being by some also named Angiras, according to Aśwakāyana. It may be questioned if the compilers of the Purāṇa, or their annotators, knew exactly what to make of this and similar phrases, although they were probably intended to intimate that some persons of Kshatriya origin became the disciples of certain Brahmins, particularly of Angiras, and afterwards founders of schools of religious instruction themselves. Māndhātri himself is the author of a hymn in the Rig-veda. As. Res. VIII. 385. Hārita is the name of an individual sage, considered as the son of Chyavana, and to whom a work on law is attributed. It is probably rather that of a school, however, than of an individual.

4 Narmadā, the personified Nerbudda river, was, according to the Bhāgavata, the sister of the Nāgas.
from the serpent's poison." Whoever repeats this day and night, shall never be bitten by a snake in the dark nor in entering a chamber; nor shall he who calls it to mind when he eats suffer any injury from poison, though it be mixed with his food. To Purukutsa also the snake-gods announced that the series of his descendants should never be cut off.

Purukutsa had a son by Narmadā named Trasadaysu, whose son was Sambhūta, whose son was Anaranāya, who was slain by Rāvaṇa in his triumphant progress through the nations. The son of Anaranāya was Prishadasa; his son was Haryyaśa; his son was Sumanas; his son was Tridhanwan; his son was Trayyāruṇa; and his son was Satyavrata, who obtained the appellation of Triśanku, and was degraded to the condition of a Chāudāla, or outcast. During a twelve years' famine Triśanku provided the flesh of deer for the nourishment of the wife and children of Viśwāmitra, suspending it upon a spreading fig-tree on the borders of the Ganges, that he might not subject them to the indignity of receiving presents from an outcast. On this account Viśwāmitra, being highly pleased with him, elevated him in his living body to heaven.

3 We have some varieties here. Instead of Trasadaysu the Mataya has Dussaha, whom it makes the husband of Narmadā, and father of Sambhūti, the father of Tridhanwan. The Bhāgavata omits Sambhūti; the Linga makes him the brother of Trasadaysu; and the Agni has in his place Sudhanwan.

6 Vrishadasa: Vāyu. The Mataya, Agni, and Brāhma omit all between Sambhūta and Tridhanwan. The Bhāgavata has a rather different series, or Anaranaya, Haryyaśa, Aruṇa, Tribandhana, Triśanku. As Anaranaya is famous in Hindu story, and Trayyāruṇa is a contributor to the Rig-veda, their omission shews careless compilation.

7 The Vāyu states he was banished by his father for his wickedness (Adharma). The Brāhma P. and Hari Vanā detail his iniquity at length; and it is told more concisely in the Linga. He carried off the betrothed wife of another man, one of the citizens according to the two former, of Vidarbha according to the latter: for this, his father, by the advice of Vaishītha, banished him, and he took refuge with Śrīvās. The Rāmāyana has a different story, and ascribes Triśanku's degradation to the curse of the sons of Vaishītha, to whom the king had applied to conduct his sacrifice, after their father had refused to do so. Before that, he is described as a pious prince (पवित्रां जीवितपालित), and the object of his sacrifice was to ascend to heaven.

8 The occurrence of the famine, and Satyavrata's care of the wife and family of Viśwāmitra, are told, with some variations, in the Vāyu, which has been followed by The son of Triśanku was Harīschandra; his son was Rohitā-the Brāhma and Hari Vanśa. During the famine, when game fails he kills the cow of Vaśishtha; and for the three crimes of displeasing his father, killing a cow, and eating flesh not previously consecrated, he acquires the name of Triśanku (tri, 'three,' śanku, 'sin'). Vaśishtha refusing to perform his regal inauguration, Viśvāmitra celebrates the rites, and on his death elevates the king in his mortal body to heaven. The Rāma-yaṇa relates the same circumstance, but assigns to it a different motive, Viśvāmitra’s resentment of the refusal of the gods to attend Triśanku’s sacrifice. That work also describes the attempt of the gods to cast the king down upon earth, and the compromise between them and Viśvāmitra, by which Triśanku was left suspected, head downwards, in mid-air, forming a constellation in the southern hemisphere, along with other new planets and stars formed by Viśvāmitra. The Bhāgavata has an allusion to this legend, saying that Triśanku is still visible in heaven: भशाये दिनि दृश्यसे। The Vāyu furnishes some further information from an older source: ब्रम्हुभ्रुतारीणांजीयोधियुवा दिशा
विकासा। ब्रम्हात्मारसहस्र निर्माणार्दिष्य राजसे।
वेदोऽवधेः महायोग मुक्तायाः भिन्नता। इन्हें यात्रे
रथ्या हेतुं जतनविद्विधेः। भल्लस्वरुपिनिर्मिति। Both my copies leave a blank where it is marked, and a similar passage does not elsewhere occur; but the word should probably be देव, and the whole may be thus rendered: 'Men acquainted with the Purāṇas recite these two stanzas: 'By the favour of Viśvāmitra the illustrious Triśanku shines in heaven along with the gods, through the kindness of that sage. Slowly passes the lovely night in winter, embellished by the moon, decorated with three watches, and ornamented with the constellation Triśanku.' This legend is therefore clearly astronomical, and alludes possibly to some reformation of the sphere by Viśvāmitra, under the patronage of Triśanku, and in opposition to a more ancient system adva-cated by the school of Vaśishtha. It might be no very rash conjecture, perhaps, to identify Triśanku with Orion, the three bright stars of whose belt may have suggested the three Śankus (stakes or pins) which form his name.

9 The Paurāṇik lists generally dismiss Harīschandra very summarily, but he makes a conspicuous figure in legends of an apparently later date. In the Mahābhārata, Sāhā Parva, it is stated that he resides in the court of Indra, to which he was elevated for his performance of the Rājasūya sacrifice, and for his unbounded liberality. This seems to have served as the groundwork of the tale told in the Mārkandeya and Padma Purāṇas, of his having given his whole country, his wife and son, and finally himself, to Viśvāmitra, in satisfaction of his demands for Dakshinā. In consequence he was elevated with his subjects to heaven, from whence, having been insidiously led by Nārada to boast of his merits, he was again precipitated. His repentance of his pride, however, arrested his downward descent, and he and his train paused in mid-air. The city of Harīschandra is popularly believed to be at times still DEATH OF BÁHU. 373

śwa; his son was Harita; his son was Chunchu, who had two sons named Vijaya and Sudeva. Ruruka was the son of Vijaya, and his own son was Vrika, whose son was Bāhu (or Bāhuka). This prince was vanquished by the tribes of Haihayas and Tālajanghas, and his country was overrun by them; in consequence of which he fled into the forests with his wives. One of these was pregnant, and being an object of jealousy to a rival queen, the latter gave her poison to prevent her delivery. The poison had the effect of confining the child in the womb for seven years. Bāhu, having waxed old, died in the neighbourhood of the residence of the Muni Aurva. His queen having constructed his pile, ascended it with the determination of accompanying him in death; but the sage Aurva, who knew all things, past, present, and to come, issued forth from his hermitage, and forbade her, saying, "Hold! hold! this is unrighteous; a valiant prince, the monarch of many realms, the visible in the skies. The indignation of Vāsishṭha at Viśvāmitra's insatiableness produced a quarrel, in which their mutual imprecations changed them to two birds, the Sarāli, a sort of Turdus, and the Baka, or crane. In these forms they fought for a considerable term, until Brahma interposed, and reconciled them. The Bhāgavata alludes to this story, in its notice of Harīschandra; but the Vāyu refers the conflict to the reign of a different prince; see c. 2. n. 11. According to the Sīva P., Harīschandra was an especial worshipper of that deity; and his wife Satyavatī was a form of Jayā, one of Durga's handmaids.

10 Also read Rohita. Traces of his name appear in the strong holds of Rotas, in Behar and in the Panjab. The Bhāgavata has a legend of his having been devoted to Varuna, before his birth, by his father, who having on various pleas deferred offering his son as promised, was afflicted by a dropsey. Rohita at last purchased Śunahśephas, who was offered as a victim in his stead; see hereafter, note on Śunahśephas.

11 Omitted: Agni, Līnga, and Matsya.

14 Descendants of Yadu. The first springs from a prince who is the twelfth, and the second from one who is the eighteenth, in the lunar line, and both are thus cotemporary with a prince who is the thirty-fifth of the solar dynasty. The Vāyu adds, that they were assisted by Sakas, Yavanas, Kámbojas, Párvas, and Pahlavas.

5 c
offerer of many sacrifices, the destroyer of his foes, a universal emperor, is in thy womb; think not of committing so desperate an act!" Accordingly, in obedience to his injunctions, she relinquished her intention. The sage then conducted her to his abode, and after some time a very splendid boy was there born. Along with him the poison that had been given to his mother was expelled; and Āruva, after performing the ceremonies required at birth, gave him on that account the name of Sagara (from Sa, 'with,' and Gara, 'poison'). The same holy sage celebrated his investiture with the cord of his class, instructed him fully in the Vedas, and taught him the use of arms, especially those of fire, called after Bhārgava.

When the boy had grown up, and was capable of reflection, he said to his mother one day, "Why are we dwelling in this hermitage? where is my father? and who is he?" His mother, in reply, related to him all that had happened. Upon hearing which he was highly incensed, and vowed to recover his patrimonial kingdom, and exterminate the Haihayas and Tālajanghas, by whom it had been overrun. Accordingly when he became a man he put nearly the whole of the Haihayas to death, and would have also destroyed the Śakas, the Yavanas, Kāmbojas, Pāradas, and Pahnnavas, but that they applied to Vaśishtha, the

---

15 The Haihayas we shall have farther occasion to notice. The Śakas are, no doubt, the Sacae or Sakai of the classical geographers, Scythians and Indo-Scythians, Turk or Tartar tribes, who established themselves, about a century and a half before our era, along the western districts of India, and who are not improbably connected with our Saxon forefathers. The Yavanas are the Ionians or Greeks. The Kāmbojas were a people on the north-west of India, of whom it is said that they were remarkable for a capital breed of horses. There is an apparent trace of their name in the Caumogees of Kafiristan, who may have retreated to the mountains before the advance of the Turk tribes. (Elphinstone's Caubul, 619; see also before, p. 104. n. 146.) The Pāradas and Pahlavas or Pahnnavas may designate other bordering tribes in the same direction, or on the confines of Persia. Along with these, in the legend that follows, the Bhāgavata enumerates Barbaras. The Vāyu adds Māhishikas, Chaulas, Dārvās, and Khasas: the two former of which are people on the Malabar and Coromandel coasts; the two latter are usually placed amongst the mountaineers of the Hindu Kosh. The Brāhma P. lengthens the list with the Kolas, the forest races of eastern Gondwana; the Sarpas and the family priest of Sagara, for protection. Vaśishtha regarding them as annihilated (or deprived of power), though living, thus spake to Sagara: “Enough, enough, my son, pursue no farther these objects of your wrath, whom you may look upon as no more. In order to fulfil your vow I have separated them from affinity to the regenerate tribes, and from the duties of their castes.” Sagara, in compliance with the injunctions of his spiritual guide, contented himself therefore with imposing upon the vanquished nations peculiar distinguishing marks. He made the Yavanas\textsuperscript{16} shave their heads entirely; the Śakas he compelled to shave (the upper) half of their heads; the Pāradas wore their hair long; and the Pahnavaša let their beards grow, in obedience to his commands.\textsuperscript{17} Them also, and other Kshatriya races, he deprived of the established usages of oaths to fire and the study of the Vedas; and thus separated from religious rites, and abandoned by the Brahmans, these different tribes became Mlechchhas. Sagara, after the recovery of his kingdom, reigned over the seven-zoned earth with undisputed dominion.\textsuperscript{18}

Keralas, who are the people of Malabar. The Hari Vaná still farther extends the enumeration with the Tusharas or Tokharas, the Turks of Tokharestan; the Chinas, Chinese; the Mádras, people in the Panjáb; the Kishkindhas, in Mysore; Kauntalas, along the Narbudda; Bangas, Bengalis; Sálwas, people in western India; and the Kónkanas, or inhabitants of the Coromandel. It is evident from the locality of most of the additions of the last authority, that its compiler or corrupter has been a native of the Dekhin.

\textsuperscript{16} And Kámbojas: Véyu.

\textsuperscript{17} The Asiatic nations generally shave the head either wholly or in part. Amongst the Greeks it was common to shave the fore part of the head, a custom introduced, according to Plutarch, by the Abantes, whom Homer calls Ἰμίης καμώντες, and followed, according to Xenophon, by the Lacedémonians. It may be doubted, however, if the Greeks or Ionians ever shaved the head completely. The practice prevails amongst the Mohammedans, but it is not universal. The Śakas, Scythians or Tartars, shave the fore part of the head, gathering the hair at the back into a long tail, as do the Chinese. The mountaineers of the Himalaya shave the crown of the head, as do the people of Kaferistan, with exception of a single tuft. What Oriental people wore their hair long, except at the back of the head, is questionable; and the usage would be characteristic rather of the Teutonic and Gothic nations. The ancient Persians had long bushy beards, as the Persepolitan sculptures demonstrate. In Chardin’s time they were out of fashion, but they were again in vogue in that country in the reign of the last king, Fath Shuh.

\textsuperscript{18} So the Véyu, &c.; and a similar statement is given in Manu, X. 44, where to the Sakas, Yavanas, Kámbojas, Páradas, and Pahnavas, are added the Pauñdras (people of western Bengal), Odras (those of Oriasa), Dráviras (of the Coromandel coast), Chinás (Chines), Kirátas (mountainiers), and Daradas (Durs of the Hindu Koh). From this passage, and a similar one in the Rámañña, in which the China are mentioned, the late Mr. Klaproth inferred those works to be not older than the third century B.C., when the reining dynasty of Thatin first gave that name to China (see also p. 194.

n. 145.) It was probable, he supposed, that the Hindus became acquainted with the Chinese only about 200 B.C., when their arms extended to the Oxus; but it is difficult to reconcile this date with the difference of style between the Rámañña particularly and the works of the era of Vikramádiya. It would seem more likely that the later appellations were interpolated. It must have been a period of some antiquity, when all the nations from Bengal to the Coromandel coast were considered as Mlechchhas and outcasts.
CHAP. IV.

The progeny of Sagara: their wickedness: he performs an Aśwamedha: the horse stolen by Kapila: found by Sagara's sons, who are all destroyed by the sage: the horse recovered by Anśumat: his descendants. Legend of Mitrasaha or Kalmāshapāda, the son of Sudāsa. Legend of Khaṭvwānga. Birth of Rāma and the other sons of Daśaratha. Epitome of the history of Rāma: his descendants, and those of his brothers. Line of Kuśa. Vrihadbala, the last, killed in the great war.

SUMATI the daughter of Kaśyapa, and Keśinī the daughter of Raja Viderbha, were the two wives of Sagara. Being without progeny, the king solicited the aid of the sage Aurva with great earnestness, and the Muni pronounced this boon, that one wife should bear one son, the upholder of his race, and the other should give birth to sixty thousand sons; and he left it to them to make their election. Keśinī chose to have the single son; Sumati the multitude: and it came to pass in a short time that the former bore Asamanjas, a prince through whom the dynasty continued; and the daughter of Vinatā (Sumati) had sixty thousand sons. The son of Asamanjas was Anśumat.

Asamanjas was from his boyhood of very irregular conduct. His father hoped that as he grew up to manhood he would reform; but finding that he continued guilty of the same immorality, Sagara abandoned him. The sixty thousand sons of Sagara followed the example of their brother Asamanjas. The path of virtue and piety being obstructed in the world by the sons of Sagara, the gods repaired to the Muni Kapila, who was a portion of Vishñu, free from fault, and endowed with all true wisdom. Having approached him with respect, they said, "O Lord, what will become of the world, if these sons of Sagara are permitted to go on in the evil ways which they have learned from Asamanjas! Do thou, then, assume a visible form, for the protection of the afflicted

1 So the Rámâyana. Sumati is called the daughter of Arishṭánemi: the Mahābhārata calls her Śaivyā. The story of Sagara and his descendants is told at length in the Rámâyana, first book, and in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, III. 106, et seq., as well as in most of the Purāṇas.

2 Or Panchajana: Brāhma. universe.” “Be satisfied,” replied the sage, “in a brief time the sons of Sagara shall be all destroyed.”

At that period Sagara commenced the performance of the solemn sacrifice of a horse, who was guarded by his own sons: nevertheless some one stole the animal, and carried it off into a chasm in the earth. Sagara commanded his sons to search for the steed; and they, tracing him by the impressions of his hoofs, followed his course with perseverance, until coming to the chasm where he had entered, they proceeded to enlarge it, and dig downwards each for a league. Coming to Pátaład, they beheld the horse wandering freely about, and at no great distance from him they saw the Rishi Kapila sitting, with his head declined in meditation, and illuminating the surrounding space with radiance as bright as the splendours of the autumnal sun, shining in an unclouded sky. Exclaiming, “This is the villain who has maliciously interrupted our sacrifice, and stolen the horse! kill him! kill him!” they ran towards him with uplifted weapons. The Muni slowly raised his eyes, and for an instant looked upon them, and they were reduced to ashes by the sacred flame that darted from his person.

When Sagara learned that his sons, whom he had sent in pursuit of the sacrificial steed, had been destroyed by the might of the great Rishi Kapila, he dispatched Anúmat, the son of Asamanjas, to effect the animals recovery. The youth, proceeding by the deep path which the princes had dug, arrived where Kapila was, and bowing respectfully, prayed to him, and so propitiated him, that the saint said, “Go, my

---

3 The Bhágavata has, for a Puráñas, some curious remarks on this part of the story, flatly denying its truth. न सावप्रेषोऽनुसारो नुयिक्षयोहितेऽद्युन्नयति देवायिनामि। कथ संज्ञानस्य विभक्ताव्यतास्य न दस्यापुरुषः। ययोहितस्य सांक्षेपाय युद्धेऽहि भक्तायिनामि। अभ्याप्य नुयिक्षयो विशेषत्वं: पदार्थमुनित्वम् कथ युक्तः। नूयिक्षयोऽनुसारो नुयिक्षयो देवायित्वात् न दस्यापुरुषः। ययोहितस्य सांक्षेपाय युद्धेऽहिं भक्तायित्वात्। अभ्याप्य नुयिक्षयो विशेषत्वं: पदार्थमुनित्वम्। कथ युक्तः।

The report is not true, that the sons of the king were scorched by the wrath of the sage; for how can the quality of darkness, made up of anger, exist in a world-purifying nature, consisting of the quality of goodness; the dust of earth, as it were, in the sky? How should mental perturbation distract that sage, who was one with the supreme, and who has promulgated that Sankhyá philosophy, which is a strong vessel, by which he who is desirous of liberation passes over the dangerous ocean of the world by the path of death?
son, deliver the horse to your grandfather; and demand a boon; thy grandson shall bring down the river of heaven on the earth.” Anśumar requested as a boon that his uncles, who had perished through the sage’s displeasure, might, although unworthy of it, be raised to heaven through his favour. “I have told you,” replied Kapila, “that your grandson shall bring down upon earth the Ganges of the gods; and when her waters shall wash the bones and ashes of thy grandfather’s sons, they shall be raised to Swarga. Such is the efficacy of the stream that flows from the toe of Vishnu, that it confers heaven upon all who bathe in it designedly, or who even become accidentally immersed in it: those even shall obtain Swarga, whose bones, skin, fibres, hair, or any other part, shall be left after death upon the earth which is contiguous to the Ganges.” Having acknowledged reverentially the kindness of the sage, Anśumar returned to his grandfather, and delivered to him the horse. Sagara, on recovering the steed, completed his sacrifice; and in affectionate memory of his sons, denominated Sāgara the chasm which they had dug.

The son of Anśumar was Dilipa; his son was Bhāgiratha, who brought Gangā down to earth, whence she is called Bhāgirathi. The son of Bhāgiratha was Śruta; his son was Nābhāga; his son was Ambarisha; his son was Sindhudwipa; his son was Ayutāśwa; his son was Rituparna, the friend of Nala, skilled profoundly in dice.

4 Sāgara is still the name of the ocean, and especially of the bay of Bengal, at the mouth of the Ganges. On the shore of the island called by the same name, tradition places a Kapilārāma, or hermitage of Kapila, which is still the scene of an annual pilgrimage. Other legends assign a very different situation for the abode of the ascetic, or the foot of the Himālaya, where the Ganges descends to the plains. There would be no incompatibility, however, in the two sites, could we imagine the tradition referred to a period when the ocean washed, as it appears once to have done, the base of the Himālaya, and Saugor (Sāgara) was at Haridwar.
5 Or Khaṭwānga: Brāhma and Hari Vaná: but this is apparently an error. See note 14.
7 Nābhin: Bhāgavata.
9 कालाहस्य: ‘knowing the heart of the dice.’ The same epithet, as well as that of ‘friend of Nala,’ is given him in the Vāyu, Bhāgavata, and Brāhma Purāṇas.
son of Rituparnā was Sarvakāma; his son was Sudāsa; his son was Sāduśa, named also Mitrāsaha.

and in the Hari Vana, and leaves no doubt of their referring to the hero of the story told in the Mahābhārata. Nala however, as we shall hereafter see, is some twenty generations later than Rituparnā in the same family; and the Vāyu therefore thinks it necessary to observe that two Nala are noticed in the Purāṇas, and the one here adverted to is the son of Virasena; the other belongs to the family of Ikshvāku. The same passage occurs in the Brāhma P. and Hari V.; and the commentator on the latter observes, नालो च विश्वासो दुःखित हुए मै चारानाग्रह नालो च विश्वासो दुःखित हुए मै. Nala the son of Nishadha is different from Nala the son of Virasena. It is also to be observed, that the Nala of the tale is king of Nishadha, and his friend Rituparnā is king of Ayodhya. The Nala of the race of Ikshvāku is king of Ayodhya: he is the son of Nishadha, however, and there is evidently some confusion between the two. We do not find Virasena or his son in any of the lists. See n. 19.

10 There is considerable variety in this part of the lists, but the Vāyu and Bhāgavata agree with our text. The Matsya and others make Kalmashapāda the son or grandson of Rituparnā, and place Sarvakāma or Sarvakarman after him. See further on.

11 The Vāyu, Agni, Brāhma, and Hari Vana read Amitrasaha, 'foe-enduring'; but the commentator on our text explains it Mitra, a name of Vasishtha, Saha, 'able to bear' the imprecation of; as in the following legend, which is similarly related in the Bhāgavata. It is not detailed in the Vāyu. A full account occurs in the Mahābhārata, Adi P., s. 175, but with many and important variations. Kalmashapāda, whilst hunting, encountered Sakti, the son of Vasishtha, in the woods; and on his refusing to make way, struck the sage with his whip. Sakti cursed the king to become a cannibal; and Viśvāmitra, who had a quarrel with Vasishtha, seized the opportunity to direct a Rākshas to take possession of the king, that he might become the instrument of destroying the family of the rival saint. Whilst thus influenced, Mitrāsaha, a Brahmā, applied to Kalmashapāda for food, and the king commanded his cook to dress human flesh, and give it to the Brahman, who, knowing what it was, repeated the curse of Sakti, that the king should become a cannibal; which taking effect with double force, Kalmashapāda began to eat men. One of his first victims was Sakti, whom he slew and ate; and then killed and devoured, under the secret impulse of Viśvāmitra's demon, all the other sons of Vasishtha. Vasishtha however liberated him from the Rākshas who possessed him, and restored him to his natural character. The imprecation of the Brahman's wife, and its consequences, are told in the Mahābhārata as in the text; but the story of the water falling on his feet appears to have grown out of the etymology of his name, which might have referred to some disease of the lower extremities, the prince's designation being at length, Mitrāsaha Sāduśa Kalmashapāda, or Mitrāsaha, son of Sudāsa, with the swelled feet.
SAUNDASA CURSED BY VAISHISHTA.

The son of Sudasa having gone into the woods to hunt, fell in with a couple of tigers, by whom the forest had been cleared of the deer. The king slew one of these tigers with an arrow. At the moment of expiring, the form of the animal was changed, and it became that of a fiend of fearful figure, and hideous aspect. Its companion, threatening the prince with its vengeance, disappeared.

After some interval Saudasa celebrated a sacrifice, which was conducted by Vaishista. At the close of the rite Vaishista went out; when the Rakshas, the fellow of the one that had been killed in the figure of a tiger, assumed the semblance of Vaishista, and came and said to the king, "Now that the sacrifice is ended, you must give me flesh to eat: let it be cooked, and I will presently return." Having said this, he withdrew, and, transforming himself into the shape of the cook, dressed some human flesh, which he brought to the king, who, receiving it on a plate of gold, awaited the reappearance of Vaishista. As soon as the Muni returned, the king offered to him the dish. Vaishista surprised at such want of propriety in the king, as his offering him meat to eat, considered what it should be that was so presented, and by the efficacy of his meditations discovered that it was human flesh. His mind being agitated with wrath, he denounced a curse upon the Raja, saying, "Inasmuch as you have insulted all such holy men as we are, by giving me what is not to be eaten, your appetite shall henceforth be excited by similar food."

"It was yourself," replied the Raja to the indignant sage, "who commanded this food to be prepared." "By me!" exclaimed Vaishista; "how could that have been?" and again having recourse to meditation, he detected the whole truth. Foregoing then all displeasure towards the king, he said, "The food to which I have sentenced you shall not be your sustenance for ever; it shall only be so for twelve years." The king, who had taken up water in the palms of his hands, and was prepared to curse the Muni, now considered that Vaishista was his spiritual guide, and being reminded by Madayanti his queen that it ill became him to denounce an imprecation upon a holy teacher, who was the guardian divinity of his race, abandoned his intention.
Unwilling to cast the water upon the earth, lest it should wither up the grain, for it was impregnated with his malediction, and equally reluctant to throw it up into the air, lest it should blast the clouds, and dry up their contents, he threw it upon his own feet. Scalded by the heat which the water had derived from his angry imprecation, the feet of the Rájá became spotted black and white, and he thence obtained the name of Kalmáshapáda, or he with the spotted (kalmása) feet (páda).

In consequence of the curse of Vaśishtha, the Rájá became a cannibal every sixth watch of the day for twelve years, and in that state wandered through the forests, and devoured multitudes of men. On one occasion he beheld a holy person engaged in dalliance with his wife. As soon as they saw his terrific form, they were frightened, and endeavoured to escape; but the regal Rákshasa overtook and seized the husband. The wife of the Brahman then also desisted from flight, and earnestly entreated the savage to spare her lord, exclaiming, “Thou, Mitrasaha, art the pride of the royal house of Ikshwáku, not a malignant fiend! it is not in thy nature, who knowest the characters of women, to carry off and devour my husband.” But all was in vain, and, regardless of her reiterated supplications, he ate the Brahman, as a tiger devours a deer. The Brahman’s wife, furious with wrath, then addressed the Rájá, and said, “Since you have barbarously disturbed the joys of a wedded pair, and killed my husband, your death shall be the consequence of your associating with your queen.” So saying, she entered the flames.

At the expiration of the period of his curse Saudása returned home. Being reminded of the imprecation of the Brahmani by his wife Madayánti, he abstained from conjugal intercourse, and was in consequence childless; but having solicited the interposition of Vaśishtha, Madayánti became pregnant. The child, however, was not born for seven years, when the queen, becoming impatient, divided the womb with a sharp stone, and was thereby delivered. The child was thence called Aśmaka (from Aśman, ‘a stone’). The son of Aśmaka was Múlaka, who, when the warrior tribe was extirpated upon earth, was surrounded and concealed by a number of females; whence he was denominated Náríkavacha (having women for armour)\textsuperscript{12}. The son of Múlaka was Daśaratha; his son was Ilavila; his son was Viśvasāha; his son was Khatwánaga, called also Dilípa\textsuperscript{13}, who in a battle between the gods and the Asuras, being called by the former to their succour, killed a number of the latter. Having thus acquired the friendship of the deities in heaven, they desired him to demand a boon. He said to them, “If a boon is to be accepted by me, then tell me, as a favour, what is the duration of my life.” “The length of your life is but an hour,” the gods replied. On which, Khatwánaga, who was swift of motion, descended in his easy-gliding chariot to the world of mortals. Arrived there, he prayed, and said, “If my own soul has never been dearer to me than the sacred Brahmans; if I have never deviated from the discharge of my duty; if I have never regarded gods, men, animals, vegetables, all created things, as different from the imperishable; then may I, with unswerving step, attain to that divine being on whom holy sages meditate!” Having thus spoken, he was united with that supreme being, who is Vásudeva; with that elder of all the gods, who is abstract existence, and whose form cannot be described. Thus he obtained absorption, according to this stanza, which was repeated formerly by the seven Rishis; “Like unto Khatwánaga will be no one upon earth, who having come from heaven, and dwelt an hour amongst men, became united with the three worlds by his liberality and knowledge of truth\textsuperscript{14}.”

The son of Khatwánaga was Dírghabáhu; his son was Raghu; his son was Aja; his son was Daśaratha\textsuperscript{15}. The god from whose navel the \textsuperscript{12} His name Múlaka, or ‘the root,’ refers also to his being the stem whence the Kshatriya races again proceeded. It may be doubted if the purport of his title Nárikavacha is accurately explained by the text.

\textsuperscript{13} This prince is confounded with an earlier Dilípa by the Bráhma P. and Hari Vansá.

\textsuperscript{14} The term for his obtaining final liberation is rather unusual; यथा यथा भयोका लोकः ‘By whom the three worlds were affected or beloved;’ विषयर्वहितः the three worlds being identified with their source, or the supreme. The text says of this stanza, धूषते and the Váyu, citing it, says, इति चूर्तिः; the legend is therefore from the Vedas.

\textsuperscript{15} The lists here differ very materially, as the following comparison will best shew:
lotus springs became fourfold, as the four sons of Daśaratha, Rāma, Lakśmanda, Bharata, and Śatrughna, for the protection of the world. Rāma, whilst yet a boy, accompanied Viśvāmitra, to protect his sacrifice, and slew Tādakā. He afterwards killed Mārīcha with his resistless shafts; and Subāhu and others fell by his arms. He removed the guilt of Ahalyā by merely looking upon her. In the palace of Janaka he broke with ease the mighty bow of Maheśwara, and received the hand of Sītā, the daughter of the king, self-born from the earth, as the prize of his prowess. He humbled the pride of Paraśurāma, who vaunted his triumphs over the race of Haihaya, and his repeated slaughters of the Kṣatriya tribe. Obedient to the commands of his father, and cherishing no regret for the loss of sovereignty, he entered the forest.

The Vāyu, Bhāgavata, Kūrma, and Linga agree with our text, except in the reading of a few names; as Śataratha for Daśaratha the first; Vairivāra for Ilavīla; and Kritasarmaṇa, Vṛiddhhasarmaṇa, or Vṛiddha-Karmaṇa, for Viśāsaḥa. The Agni and Brāhma and Hari Vansā agree with the second series, with similar occasional exceptions; shewing that the Purāṇas admit two series, differing in name, but agreeing in number. The Rāmāyaṇa, however, differs from both in a very extraordinary manner, and the variation is not limited to the cases specified, as it begins with Bhagiratha, as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Viśāha</th>
<th>Matya</th>
<th>Rāmāyaṇa</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Kalmāśapāda</td>
<td>Kalmāśapāda</td>
<td>Kalmāśapāda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aśmaka</td>
<td>Sarvakarman</td>
<td>Śankana</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūlaka</td>
<td>Anarauya</td>
<td>Sudarśana</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daśaratha</td>
<td>Nighna</td>
<td>Agnivarṇa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ilavīla</td>
<td>Anamitra</td>
<td>Sīghrāga</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Viśāsaḥa</td>
<td>Raghu</td>
<td>Maru</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dīlīpa</td>
<td>Dilīpa</td>
<td>Prasuaruka</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dīrghabāhu</td>
<td>Aja</td>
<td>Ambarisha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raghu</td>
<td>Dīrghabāhu</td>
<td>Nāhusha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aja</td>
<td>Ajapāla</td>
<td>Yayati</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daśaratha</td>
<td>Daśaratha</td>
<td>Nābhāga</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The entire Paurāṇik series comprises twenty descents, and that of the Rāmāyaṇa sixteen. Some of the last names of the poem occur amongst the first of those of the Purāṇas, but there is an irreconcilable difference in much of the nomenclature. The Agni, under the particular account of the descent of Rāma, has for his immediate predecessors Raghu, Aja, Daśaratha, as in our text; and the author of the Raghu Vansā agrees with the Purāṇas from Dīlīpa downwards.
accompanied by his brother Lakshmana and by his wife, where he killed in conflict Virádha, Kharadúshana and other Rákshasas, the headless giant Kabandha, and Bálí the monkey monarch. Having built a bridge across the ocean, and destroyed the whole Rákshasa nation, he recovered his bride Sítá, whom their ten-headed king Rávana had carried off, and returned to Ayodhyá with her, after she had been purified by the fiery ordeal from the soil contracted by her captivity, and had been honoured by the assembled gods, who bore witness to her virtue 16.

Bharata made himself master of the country of the Gandharbas, after destroying vast numbers of them; and Śatrughna having killed the Rákshasa chief Lavaña, the son of Madhu, took possession of his capital Mathurá.

Having thus, by their unequalled valour and might, rescued the whole world from the dominion of malignant fiends, Ráma, Lakshmana, Bharata, and Śatrughna reascended to heaven, and were followed by those of the people of Kośála who were fervently devoted to these incarnate portions of the supreme Vishúu.

Ráma and his brothers had each two sons. Kuśa and Lava were the sons of Ráma; those of Lakshmana were Angada and Chandraketu; the sons of Bharata were Taksha and Pushkara; and Subáhu and Śurasena 17 were the sons of Śatrughna.

16 This is an epitome of the Rámáyaña, the heroic poem of Válmíki, on the subject of Ráma’s exploits. A part of the Rámáyaña was published, with a translation by Messrs. Carey and Marshman, several years since; but a much more correct edition of the text of the two first books, with a Latin translation of the first, and part of the second, have been more recently published by Professor Schlegel; a work worthy of his illustrious name. A summary of the story may be found in Sir Wm. Jones’s Works, Mauritie’s Hindustan, Moor’s Pantheon, &c. It is also the subject of the Uttara Ráma Charitra in the Hindu Theatre, in the introduction to which an outline of the whole is given. The story is therefore, no doubt, sufficiently familiar even to English readers. It seems to be founded on historical fact; and the traditions of the south of India uniformly ascribe its civilization, the subjugation or dispersion of its forest tribes of barbarians, and the settlement of civilized Hindus, to the conquest of Lanká by Ráma.

17 The Váyu specifies the countries or cities over which they reigned. Anguda and Chitraketu, as the Váyu terms the latter, governed countries near the Himálaya,
The son of Kuśa was Atithi; his son was Nishadha; his son was Nala; his son was Nabhas; his son was Puṇḍarīka; his son was Kaheamadhanwan; his son was Devānika; his son was Ahinagu; his son was Pāripātra; his son was Dala; his son was Chhala; his son was Uktha; his son was Vajranābha; his son was Śankhanābha; his son was Abhyutthitāśwa; his son was Vīśwasaha; his son was Hiraṇyanaśtha, who was a pupil of the mighty Yogi Jaimini, and communicated the knowledge of spiritual exercises to Yājnawalkya. The son of this the capitals of which were Angadi and Chandravaktra. Taksha and Pushkara were sovereigns of Gandhāra, residing at Takshaśāla and Pushkaravati. Subāhu and Sūrasena reigned at Mathurā; and in the latter we might be satisfied to find the Sūrasenas of Arrian, but that there is a subsequent origin, of perhaps greater authenticity, in the family of Yadu, as we shall hereafter see. Kuśa built Kuśasthali on the brow of the Vindhyas, the capital of Kośalā; and Lava reigned at Sravasti (see p. 355: 351) in Uttra (northern) Kośalā. Bhūṣaṇa Chauhāna Pravir Pravir Bhaḍavajjīja Sīla Vīśuvamitra, Bhānuvat, and Sītuva, with whom the list ends, except in the Līnga, which adds Bāhula, killed by Ahīmasyu; enumerating therefore from Devānika but seven or eight princes to the great war, instead of twenty-three, as in the other series. The Rāghu Vanśa gives much the same list as our text, ending with Agnivarn.

The Bhāgavata is the only Purāṇa that omits this name, as if the author had been induced to correct the reading in order to avoid the necessity of recognising two Nalas. See above, n. 9.

18 Here again we have two distinct series of princes, independently of variations of individual names. Instead of the list of the text, with which the Vāyu and Bhāgavata nearly, and the Brāhma and Hari Vanśa indifferently conform, we have in the Matysa, Līnga, Kūrma, and Agni the following: Ahinagu, Sahasrāwās, Sahasrāya or Sahasrabala, Chandrāvaloka, Tārapiḍā or Tārādhīśa, Chandragiri, Bhānuraṭha or Bhānumitra, and Sītuva, with whom the list ends, except in the Līnga, which adds Bāhula, killed by Ahīmasyu; enumerating therefore from Devānika but seven or eight princes to the great war, instead of twenty-three, as in the other series. The Rāghu Vanśa gives much the same list as our text, ending with Agnivarn.
saintly king was Pushya; his son was Dhruvasandhi\(^{27}\); his son was Sudarsana; his son was Agravartha; his son was Šighra; his son was Maru\(^{28}\), who through the power of devotion (Yoga) is still living in the village called Kalápa, and in a future age will be the restorer of the Kṣatriya race in the solar dynasty. Maru had a son named Praśusruta; his son was Susandhi; his son was Amarsa; his son was Mahaswat\(^{29}\); his son was Viśrutavat\(^{30}\); and his son was Vrihadabala, who was killed in the great war by Abhimanyu, the son of Anjuna. These are the most distinguished princes in the family of Ikshváku: whoever listens to the account of them will be purified from all his sins\(^{31}\).

in, or king of, Kośalá. The Váyu accordingly terms him, रितसनम्: चोक्सम्: । but in the Bhágavata the epithet Kauśalya is referred by the commentator to Yájnavalkya, the pupil of Hiranyáváha: नम्: ज्ञानात्मा चोक्सम्: वाहंसा शीरार्क्षणाः। The author of the Raghu Vánśa, not understanding the meaning of the term, has converted Kauśalya into the son of Hiranyáváha. Raghu V. 18. 27. The Bhágavata, like our text, calls the prince the pupil of Jaimini. The Váyu, more correctly, मीनते: पीवस्य: स्न्यम्: । ‘the pupil of the sage’s grandson.’ There seems to be, however, something unusual in the account given of the relation borne by the individuals named to each other. As a pupil of Jaimini, Hiranyáváha is a teacher of the Sáma-veda (see p. 283), but Yájnavalkya is the teacher of the Vájasaneyi branch of the Yajush (p. 281). Neither of them is specified by Mr. Colebrooke amongst the authorities of the Pátanjala or Yoga philosophy; nor does either appear as a disciple of Jaimini in his character of founder of the Mímánśa school. Trans. R. As. Soc. vol. I.

\(^{27}\) Arthasiddhi: Brähma P. and Hari V.

\(^{28}\) Maruta: Brähma P. and Hari V.

\(^{29}\) Sahaswat: Váyu.

\(^{30}\) Viśwasaha: Bhágavata.

\(^{31}\) The list closes here, as the author of the Puránás, Váya, is contemporary with the great war. The line of Ikshváku is resumed prophetically in the twenty-second chapter.

The son of Ikshwáku, who was named Nimi, instituted a sacrifice that was to endure for a thousand years, and applied to Vaśishtha to offer the oblations. Vaśishtha in answer said, that he had been pre-engaged by Indra for five hundred years, but that if the Rájá would wait for some time, he would come and officiate assuperintending priest. The king made no answer, and Vaśishtha went away, supposing that he had assented. When the sage had completed the performance of the ceremonies he had conducted for Indra, he returned with all speed to Nimi, purposing to render him the like office. When he arrived, however, and found that Nimi had retained Gautama and other priests to minister at his sacrifice, he was much displeased, and pronounced upon the king, who was then asleep, a curse to this effect, that since he had not intimated his intention, but transferred to Gautama the duty he had first entrusted to himself, Vaśishtha, Nimi should thenceforth cease to exist in a corporeal form. When Nimi woke, and knew what had happened, he in return denounced as an imprecation upon his unjust preceptor, that he also should lose his bodily existence, as the punishment of uttering a curse upon him without previously communicating with him. Nimi then abandoned his bodily condition. The spirit of Vaśishtha also leaving his body, was united with the spirits of Mitra and Varuñá for a season, until, through their passion for the nymph Urvasí, the sage was born again in a different shape. The corpse of Nimi was preserved from decay by being embalmed with fragrant oils and resins, and it remained as entire as if it were immortal. When the sacrifice

1 None of the authorities, except the Váyu and Bhágavata, contain the series of kings noticed in this chapter.

2 This shews that the Hindus were not unacquainted with the Egyptian art of embalming dead bodies. In the Káśi Khaúâ, a. 30, an account is given of a Brahman who carries his mother's bones, was concluded, the priests applied to the gods, who had come to receive their portions, that they would confer a blessing upon the author of the sacrifice. The gods were willing to restore him to bodily life, but Nimi declined its acceptance, saying, "O deities, who are the alleviators of all worldly suffering, there is not in the world a deeper cause of distress than the separation of soul and body: it is therefore my wish to dwell in the eyes of all beings, but never more to resume a corporeal shape!" To this desire the gods assented, and Nimi was placed by them in the eyes of all living creatures; in consequence of which their eyelids are ever opening and shutting.

As Nimi left no successor, the Munis, apprehensive of the consequences of the earth being without a ruler, agitated the body of the prince, and produced from it a prince who was called Janaka, from being born without a progenitor. In consequence of his father being without a body (videha), he was termed also Vaideha, "the son of the bodiless;" and he further received the name of Mithi, from having been produced by agitation (mathana). The son of Janaka was Udávasu; or rather her corpse, from Setubandha or Rámeswara to Káśi. For this purpose he first washes it with the five excretions of a cow, and the five pure fluids, or milk, curds, ghee, honey, and sugar. He then embalms it with Yakshakardama, a composition of Agallochum, camphor, musk, saffron, sandal, and a resin called Kakola; and envelopes it severally with Netra vastra, flowered muslin; Pattamvāra, silk; Surasa vastra, coarse cotton; Mánjishtha, cloth dyed with madder; and Nepala Kambala, nepal blanketings. He then covers it with pure clay, and puts the whole into a coffin of copper, Táma sampuña. These practices are not only unknown, but would be thought impure in the present day.

3 These legends are intended to explain, and were probably suggested by, the terms Vaideha and Mithilá, applied to the country upon the Gandak and Kuśi rivers, the modern Tirhut. The Rámadána places a prince named Mithi between Nimi and Janaka, whence comes the name Mithilá. In other respects the list of kings of Mithilá agrees, except in a few names. Janaka the successor of Nimi is different from Janaka who is celebrated as the father of Sita. One of them, which, does not appear, is also renowned as a philosopher, and patron of philosophical teachers. Mahábhárata, Moksha Dharma. According to the Váyu P., Nimi founded a city called Jayantapur, near the Kárama of Gautama. The remains of a city called Janakpur, on the northern skirts of the district, are supposed to indicate the site of a city founded by one of the princes so named.
his son was Nandivarddhana; his son was Suketu; his son was Devara-ta; his son was Vrihaduktha; his son was Mahavirya; his son was Satyadhiriti; his son was Drishtaketu; his son was Haryyaśwa; his son was Maru; his son was Pratibandhaka; his son was Kritaratha; his son was Krita; his son was Vibudha; his son was Mahādhriti; his son was Kritirāta; his son was Mahāroman; his son was Suvarṇaroman; his son was Hraswaroman; his son was Sīradhwaja.

Sīradhwaja ploughing the ground, to prepare it for a sacrifice which he instituted in order to obtain progeny, there sprang up in the furrow a damsel, who became his daughter Sītā. The brother of Sīradhwaja was Kuśadhwaja, who was king of Kāli; he had a son also, named Bhānumat. The son of Bhānumat was Śatadyumna; his son was Suchi; his son was Urjjavā; his son was Satyadhwa; his son was Kuni; his son was Anjana; his son was Rituji; his son was Arishtanemi; his son was Śrutāyas; his son was Supārśwa; his son was Sanjaya; his son was Kshemārī; his son was Anenas; his son was Minaratha; his son was Satyaratha; his son was Sātyarathī; his son was Upagutu; his son was Āravinda; his son was Suhrisha; his son was Jaya; his son was Vijaya; his son was Rīta; his son was Sunaya; his son was Vitahavya;

4 This identifies Sīradhwaja with the second Janaka, the father-in-law of Rāma. The story of Sītā's birth, or rather discovery, is narrated in the Arānya Khāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, the Vana Parva of the Mahābhārata, and in the Vāyu, Brahma Vaivartta, Kālikā, and other Purāṇas.

5 The Rāmāyaṇa says, 'of Sankasaya,' which is no doubt the correct reading. Fa Hian found the kingdom of Sang-kia-shi in the Doab, about Mainpur. Account of the Foe-kuś-ki. The Bhāgavata makes Kuśadhwaja the son of Sīradhwaja.

6 The Bhāgavata differs from our authority here considerably, by inserting several princes between Kuśadhwaja and Bhānumat; or, Dharmadhwa, who has two sons, Kritadhwaja and Khaṣṭālikya; the former is the father of Kesidhwaja, the latter of Bhānumat. See the last book of the Vishnur.

7 Sakuni, and the last of the series, according to the Vāyu.

8 Between this prince and Suchi the series of the Bhāgavata is Sanadhwa, Urdhwa, Ajīva, Purujit. The following variations are from the same authority.

9 Chitraratha.
10 Kṛṣṇadhi.
11 Omitted.
12 Samarth.
13 Omitted.
14 Upaguru.
15 Upagupta.
16 Vaswananta.
17 Yuvadhana, Subhāsha, Sruta.
18 Śunaka.
his son was Dhriti; his son was Bahuláswa; his son was Kriti, with whom terminated the family of Janaka. These are the kings of Mithilá, who for the most part will be¹⁹ proficient in spiritual knowledge ²⁰.

¹⁹ जालाधरिद्वारसेविको भविष्यित is the reading of all the copies; but why the future verb, ‘will be,’ is used does not appear.

²⁰ Descendants of two of the other sons of the Manu are noticed in the Bhágavata; from Nríga, it is said, proceeded Sumati, Bhútajyotísh, Vasu, Pratíka, Oghvat, and his sister Oghavatí, married to Sudarśana. The Linga gives three sons to Nríga, Vrishí, Dhrishíka, and Rañadhrihísha, and alludes to a legend of his having been changed to a lizard by the curse of a Brahman. Narishyanta’s descendants were Chitrasena, Daksíha, Madhvatí, Purva, Indrasena, Víthotra, Satyasráva, Urúravas, Devadatta, Agniveśya, also called Játukarúśa, a form of Agni, and progenitor of the Agniveśya Brahmans. In the Bráhma P. and Hari V. the sons of Narishyat, whom the commentator on the latter considers as the same with Narishyanta, are termed Sacas, Saca or Scythian; whilst, again, it is said that the son of Narishyanta was Dama, or, as differently read, Yama. As this latter affiliation is stated in the authorities, it would appear as if this Narishyanta was one of the sons of the Manu; but this is only a proof of the carelessness of the compilation, for in the Víshúu, Váyu, and Márkañjéya Purúśás, Narishyanta, the father of Dama, is the son of Marutta, the fourteenth of the posterity of Díshá or Nédishta.
CHAP. VI.

Kings of the lunar dynasty. Origin of Soma, or the moon: he carries off Tárá, the wife of Vrihaspati: war between the gods and Asuras in consequence: appeared by Brahmá. Birth of Budha: married to Ilá, daughter of Vaivaswata. Legend of his son Purúravas, and the nymph Urvāśī: the former institutes offerings with fire: ascends to the sphere of the Gandharbas.

Maitreya.—You have given me, reverend preceptor, an account of the kings of the dynasty of the sun: I am now desirous to hear a description of the princes who trace their lineage from the moon, and whose race is still celebrated for glorious deeds. Thou art able to relate it to me, Brahman, if thou wilt so favour me.

Parásara.—You shall hear from me, Maitreya, an account of the illustrious family of the moon, which has produced many celebrated rulers of the earth; a race adorned by the regal qualities of strength, valour, magnificence, prudence, and activity; and enumerating amongst its monarchs Nahusha, Yayáti, Kárta-virájuna, and others equally renowned. That race will I describe to you: do you attend.

Atri was the son of Brahmá, the creator of the universe, who sprang from the lotus that grew from the navel of Náráyaña. The son of Atri was Soma¹ (the moon), whom Brahmá installed as the sovereign of plants, of Brahmans, and of the stars. Soma celebrated the Rájasóya sacrifice, and from the glory thence acquired, and the extensive dominion with which he had been invested, he became arrogant and licentious, and carried off Tárá, the wife of Vrihaspati, the preceptor of the gods. In vain Vrihaspati sought to recover his bride; in vain Brahmá commanded, and the holy sages remonstrated; Soma refused to relinquish her. Uşanas, out of enmity to Vrihaspati, took part with Soma. Rudra, who had studied under Angiras, the father of Vrihaspati, befriended his fellow-student. In consequence of Uśanas, their preceptor, joining Soma, Jambha, Kujambha, and all the Daityas, Danavas, and other foes of the gods, came also to his assistance; whilst Indra and all the gods were the allies of Vrihaspati.

¹ The Váyu says the essence of Soma (Somatwa) issued from the eyes of Atri, and impregnated the ten quarters. The Bhágavata says merely that Soma was born from the eyes of Atri. The Bráhma P. and Hari V. give a grosser name to the effusion.

Then there ensued a fierce contest, which, being on account of Táraká (or Tárá), was termed the Tárakámaya or Táraká war. In this the gods, led by Rudra, hurled their missiles on the enemy; and the Daityas with equal determination assailed the gods. Earth, shaken to her centre by the struggle between such foes, had recourse to Brahmá for protection; on which he interposed, and commanding Uśanas with the demons and Rudra with the deities to desist from strife, compelled Soma to restore Tárá to her husband. Finding that she was pregnant, Vrihaspati desired her no longer to retain her burden; and in obedience to his orders she was delivered of a son, whom she deposited in a clump of long Munja grass. The child, from the moment of its birth, was endued with a splendour that dimmed the radiance of every other divinity, and both Vrihaspati and Soma, fascinated by his beauty, claimed him as their child. The gods, in order to settle the dispute, appealed to Tárá; but she was ashamed, and would make no answer. As she still continued mute to their repeated applications, the child became incensed, and was about to curse her, saying, "Unless, vile woman, you immediately declare who is my father, I will sentence you to such a fate as shall deter every female in future from hesitating to speak the truth." On this, Brahmá again interfered, and pacified the child; and then, addressing Tárá, said, "Tell me, daughter, is this the child of Vrihaspati, or of Soma?" "Of Soma," said Tárá, blushing. As soon as she had spoken, the lord of the constellations, his countenance bright, and expanding with rapture, embraced his son, and said, "Well done, my boy; verily thou art wise:" and hence his name was Budha².

² 'He who knows.' Much erroneous speculation has originated in confounding this Budha, the son of Soma, and regent of the planet Mercury, 'he who knows,' the intelligent, with Buddha, any deified mortal, or 'he by whom truth is known;' or, as individually applicable, Gautama or Sákya, son of the Raja Suddhodana, by
It has already been related how Budha begot Purúravas by Ilá. Purúravas was a prince renowned for liberality, devotion, magnificence, and love of truth, and for personal beauty. Urvaśī having incurred the imprecation of Mitra and Varuṇa, determined to take up her abode in the world of mortals; and descending accordingly, beheld Purúravas. As soon as she saw him she forgot all reserve, and disregarding the delights of Swarga, became deeply enamoured of the prince. Beholding her infinitely superior to all other females in grace, elegance, symmetry, delicacy, and beauty, Purúravas was equally fascinated by Urvaśī: both were inspired by similar sentiments, and mutually feeling that each was every thing to the other, thought no more of any other object. Confiding in his merits, Purúravas addressed the nymph, and said, “Fair creature, I love you; have compassion on me, and return my affection.” Urvaśī, half averting her face through modesty, replied, “I will do so, if you will observe the conditions I have to propose.” “What are they?” inquired the prince; “declare them.” “I have two rams,” said the nymph, “which I love as children; they must be kept near my bedside, and never suffered to be carried away; you must also take care never to be seen by me undressed; and clarified butter alone must be my food.” To these terms the king readily gave assent.

After this, Purúravas and Urvaśī dwelt together in Alaká, sporting amidst the groves and lotus-crowned lakes of Chaitraratha, and the other forests there situated, for sixty-one thousand years. The love of whom the Buddhists themselves aver their doctrines were first promulgated. The two characters have nothing in common, and the names are identical only when one or other is misspelt.

3 The story of Purúravas is told much in the same strain as follows, though with some variations, and in greater or less detail, in the Vāyu, Matsya, Vāmana, Padma, and Bhāgavata Purāṇas. It is also referred to in the Mahābhārata, vol. I. p. 113. It is likewise the subject of the Vikrama and Urvaśī of Kālidāsa, in which drama the incidents offensive to good taste are not noticed. See Hindu Theatre, vol. I. p. 187. The Matsya Purāṇa, besides this story, which is translated in the introduction to the drama, has in another part, c. 94, an account of a Purúravas, who, in the Chākshusha Manwantara, was king of Mađra, and who by the worship of Vishnù obtained a residence with the Gandharbas. 4 One copy has sixty-one years; the Brāhma P. and Hari V. have fifty-nine: one period is as likely as the other.
Purúravas for his bride increased every day of its duration; and the affection of Urvasi augmenting equally in fervour, she never called to recollection residence amongst the immortals. Not so with the attendant spirits at the court of Indra; and nymphs, genii, and quiristers, found heaven itself but dull whilst Urvasi was away. Knowing the agreement that Urvasi had made with the king, Visvavasu was appointed by the Gandharbas to effect its violation; and he, coming by night to the chamber where they slept, carried off one of the rams. Urvasi was awakened by its cries, and exclaimed, "Ah me! who has stolen one of my children? Had I a husband, this would not have happened! To whom shall I apply for aid?" The Raja overheard her lamentation, but recollecting that he was undressed, and that Urvasi might see him in that state, did not move from the couch. Then the Gandharbas came and stole the other ram; and Urvasi, hearing it bleat, cried out that a woman had no protector who was the bride of a prince so dastardly as to submit to this outrage. This incensed Purûravas highly, and trusting that the nymph would not see his person, as it was dark, he rose, and took his sword, and pursued the robbers, calling upon them to stop, and receive their punishment. At that moment the Gandharbas caused a flash of brilliant lightning to play upon the chamber, and Urvasi beheld the king undressed: the compact was violated, and the nymph immediately disappeared. The Gandharbas, abandoning the rams, departed to the region of the gods.

Having recovered the animals, the king returned delighted to his couch, but there he beheld no Urvasi; and not finding her any where, he wandered naked over the world, like one insane. At length coming to Kurukshetra, he saw Urvasi sporting with four other nymphs of heaven in a lake beautified with lotuses, and he ran to her, and called her his wife, and wildly implored her to return. "Mighty monarch," said the nymph, "refrain from this extravagance. I am now pregnant: depart at present, and come hither again at the end of a year, when I will deliver to you a son, and remain with you for one night." Purûravas, thus comforted, returned to his capital. Urvasi said to her companions, "This prince is a most excellent mortal: I lived with him long and affectionately united.” “It was well done of you,” they replied; “he is indeed of comely appearance, and one with whom we could live happily for ever.”

When the year had expired, Urvaśī and the monarch met at Kurukshetra, and she consigned to him his first-born Ayus; and these annual interviews were repeated, until she had borne to him five sons. She then said to Purūravas, “Through regard for me, all the Gandharbas have expressed their joint purpose to bestow upon my lord their benediction; let him therefore demand a boon.” The Rájá replied, “My enemies are all destroyed, my faculties are all entire; I have friends and kindred, armies and treasures; there is nothing which I may not obtain except living in the same region with my Urvaśī. My only desire therefore is, to pass my life with her.” When he had thus spoken, the Gandharbas brought to Purūravas a vessel with fire, and said to him, “Take this fire, and, according to the precepts of the Vedas, divide it into three fires; then fixing your mind upon the idea of living with Urvaśī, offer oblations, and you shall assuredly obtain your wishes.” The Rájá took the brasier, and departed, and came to a forest. Then he began to reflect that he had committed a great folly in bringing away the vessel of fire instead of his bride; and leaving the vessel in the wood, he went disconsolate to his palace. In the middle of the night he awoke, and considered that the Gandharbas had given him the brasier to enable him to obtain the felicity of living with Urvaśī, and that it was absurd in him to have left it by the way. Resolving therefore to recover it, he rose, and went to the place where he had deposited the vessel; but it was gone. In its stead he saw a young Āśvattha tree growing out of a Šámi plant, and he reasoned with himself, and said, “I left in this spot a vessel of fire, and now behold a young Āśvattha tree growing out of a Šámi plant. Verily I will take these types of fire to my capital, and there, having engendered fire by their attrition, I will worship it.”

Having thus determined, he took the plants to his city, and prepared their wood for attrition, with pieces of as many inches long as there are syllables in the Gayatrí: he recited that holy verse, and rubbed together sticks of as many inches as he recited syllables in the FIRE MADE THREEFOLD.

Gayatri. Having thence elicited fire, he made it threefold, according to the injunctions of the Vedas, and offered oblations with it, proposing as the end of the ceremony reunion with Urvasi. In this way, celebrating many sacrifices agreeably to the form in which offerings are presented with fire, Pururavas obtained a seat in the sphere of the Gandharbas, and was no more separated from his beloved. Thus fire, that was at first but one, was made threefold in the present Manwantara by the son of Ilá.

5 It does not appear why this passage is repeated. The length of the sticks, conformably to the number of syllables in the usual form of the Gayatri, would be twenty-four inches. The Bhāgavata attaches to the operation a piece of mysticism of a Tantrika origin: Pururavas, whilst performing the attrition, mentally identifies himself and Urvasi with the two sticks, and repeats the Mantra, वहीरता मुर्ति दुर्रमति.

6 The division of one fire into three is ascribed to Pururavas by the Mahābhārata and the rest. The commentator on the former specifies them as the Gārhapata, Dakshinā, and Ahavanīya, which Sir Wm. Jones, Manu, II. 231, renders nuptial, ceremonial, and sacrificial fires; or rather, 1. household, that which is perpetually maintained by a householder; 2. a fire for sacrifices, placed to the south of the rest; and 3. a consecrated fire for oblations; forming the Tretāgni, or triad of sacred fires, in opposition to the Laukika, or merely temporal ones. To Pururavas it would appear the triple arrangement was owing; but there are some other curious traditions regarding him, which indicate his being the author of some important innovations in the Hindu ritual. The Bhāgavata says, that before his time there was but one Veda, one caste, one fire, and one god, Nārāyanā; and that, in the beginning of the Treta age, Pururavas made them all three: पुरुरवस सनातनाधिक नेता मुर्ति दुर्रमति.

The commentary, the ritual was then instituted: कपिलसरस: पारस भ–भ. The Matsya P. has an account of this prince's going to the orbit of the sun and moon at every conjunction, when oblations to progenitors are to be offered, as if obsequial rites had originated with Pururavas. The Mahābhārata states some still more remarkable particulars. 'The glorious Pururavas, endowed, although a mortal, with the properties of a deity, governing the thirteen islands of the ocean, engaged in hostilities with the Brahmans in the pride of his strength, and seized their jewels, as they exclaimed against his oppression. Sanatkumāra came from the sphere of Brahmā to teach him the rules of duty, but Pururavas did not accept his instructions, and the king, deprived of understanding by the pride of his power, and actuated by avarice, was therefore ever accursed by the offended great sages, and was destroyed.'
CHAP. VII.

Sons of Purúravas. Descendants of Amávasu. Indra born as Gádhi. Legend of Richíka and Satyavati. Birth of Jamadagni and Viśwámítra. Paraśuráma the son of the former. (Legend of Paraśuráma.) Sunaháéphas and others the sons of Viśwámítra, forming the Kaúśika race.

PURÚRÁVAS had six sons, Áyus, Dhímat, Amávasu, Viśwávasu, Śatáyus, and Śrutáyus. The son of Amávasu was Bhíma; his son was Káñchanaprabha; his son was Suhotra, whose name was Jahnú. This prince, whilst performing a sacrifice, saw the whole of the place overflowed by the waters of the Ganges. Highly offended at this intrusion, his eyes red with anger, he united the spirit of sacrifice with himself, by the power of his devotion, and drank up the river. The gods and sages upon this came to him, and appeased his indignation, and reobtained Gangá from him, in the capacity of his daughter (whence she is called Jahnáví).

1 Considerable variety prevails in these names, and the Mataya, Padma, Bráhma, and Agni enumerate eight. The lists are as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Áyus</td>
<td>Áyus</td>
<td>Áyus</td>
<td>Áyus</td>
<td>Áyus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dhímat</td>
<td>Dhritímat</td>
<td>Dhímat</td>
<td>Máyus</td>
<td>Śrutáyus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amávasu</td>
<td>Vasu</td>
<td>Vasu</td>
<td>Amáyas</td>
<td>Satyáyas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Drútháyus</td>
<td>Drútháyus</td>
<td>Uáryus</td>
<td>Viśwáyas</td>
<td>Ráya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vanáyus</td>
<td>Dhanáyus</td>
<td>Antáyus</td>
<td>Saíyus</td>
<td>Vijaya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Śatáyus</td>
<td>Saíyus</td>
<td>Saíyus</td>
<td>Śrutáyus</td>
<td>Jaya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aśwáyus</td>
<td>Ritáyus</td>
<td>Divijáta</td>
<td>Divijáta</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The list of the Bráhma is that of the Mahábhárata, with the addition of Satyáus and Viśwáyas; and the Padma agrees with the Mataya.

2 Son of Vijaya: Bhágavata. This line of princes is followed only in our text, the Váyu, Bráhma, and Hari V., and the Bhágavata.

3 Káñchanaprabha: Bráhma.
4 Hotraka: Bhágavata.
5 The Bráhma P. and Hari V. add of this prince, that he was the husband of Káveri, the daughter of Yuvanáswa, who by the imprecation of her husband became the Káveri river: another indication of the Dákshina origin of these works. The
The son of Jahnu was Sumantu; his son was Ajaka; his son was Valákásáwa; his son was Kusá, who had four sons, Kusámba, Kuśánábha, Amúrttaya, and Amávasu. Kusámba, being desirous of a son, engaged in devout penance to obtain one who should be equal to Indra. Observing the intensity of his devotions, Indra was alarmed lest a prince of power like his own should be engendered, and determined therefore to take upon himself the character of Kusámba’s son. He was accordingly born as Gádhi, of the race of Kuśa (Kauśika). Gádhi had a daughter named Satyavatí. Richika, of the descendants of Bhrigu, demanded her in marriage. The king was very unwilling to give his daughter to a peevish old Brahman, and demanded of him, as the nuptial present, a thousand fleet horses, whose colour should be white, with one black ear. Richika having propitiated Varuñá, the god of ocean, obtained from him, at the holy place called Aśvatárhà, a thousand such steeds; and giving them to the king, espoused his daughter.

In order to effect the birth of a son, Richika prepared a dish of rice, barley, and pulse, with butter and milk, for his wife to eat; and at her Hari V. has another Jahnu, to whom it gives the same spouse, as we shall hereafter see.

8 The Bráhma P. and Hari V. add that Kuśa was in alliance with the Pahlavas and foresters.
9 Our authorities differ as to these names:
Váyu. Bráhma and Hari V. Bhágavata.
Kuśásáwa or Kuśásáwa Kuśámba
Kuśánábha Kuśánábha Kuśánábha
Amúrttarayasa Amúrttima Amúrttaraya Vasu Kuśika Vasu.
The Rámaññá has Kuśámba, Kuśánábha, Amúrttarajas, and Vasu; and makes them severally the founders of Kuśámbi, of Mahodaya (which afterwards appears the same as Kanoj), Dharmaníya, and Giri-vrṣa; the latter being in the mountainous part of Magadhá. I. s. 29.

10 The Bráhma and Hari V. make Gádhi the son of Kuśika; the Váyu and Bhágavata, of Kuśánábha; the Rámaññá, of Kuśánábha.

11 The Rámaññá notices the marriage, but has no legend. The Mahábhárata, Vana P., has a rather more detailed narration, but much the same as in the text. According to the commentator, Aśvatárhtha is in the district of Kanoj; perhaps at the confluence of the Kálanádi with the Ganges. The agency of the god of Ocean in procuring horses, is a rather curious additional coincidence between Varuñá and Neptune.

12 In the Mahábhárata, Bhrigu, the father of Richika, prepares the Charu. request he consecrated a similar mixture for her mother, by partaking of which she should give birth to a prince of martial prowess. Leaving both dishes with his wife, after describing particularly which was intended for her, and which for her mother, the sage went forth to the forests. When the time arrived for the food to be eaten, the queen said to Satyavatí, “Daughter, all persons wish their children to be possessed of excellent qualities, and would be mortified to see them surpassed by the merits of their mother’s brother. It will be desirable for you, therefore, to give me the mess your husband has set apart for you, and to eat of that intended for me; for the son which it is to procure me is destined to be the monarch of the whole world, whilst that which your dish would give you must be a Brahman, alike devoid of affluence, valour, and power.” Satyavatí agreed to her mother’s proposal, and they exchanged messes.

When Richíka returned home, and beheld Satyavatí, he said to her, “Sinful woman, what hast thou done! I view thy body of a fearful appearance. Of a surety thou hast eaten the consecrated food which was prepared for thy mother: thou hast done wrong. In that food I had infused the properties of power and strength and heroism; in thine, the qualities suited to a Brahman, gentleness, knowledge, and resignation. In consequence of having reversed my plans, thy son shall follow a warrior’s propensities, and use weapons, and fight, and slay. Thy mother’s son shall be born with the inclinations of a Brahman, and be addicted to peace and piety.” Satyavatí, hearing this, fell at her husband’s feet, and said, “My lord, I have done this thing through ignorance; have compassion on me; let me not have a son such as thou hast foretold: if such there must be, let it be my grandson, not my son.”
The Muni, relenting at her distress, replied, “So let it be.” Accordingly in due season she gave birth to Jamadagni; and her mother brought forth Viśvámitra. Satyavatí afterwards became the Kauśíki river. Jamadagni married Reňuká, the daughter of Reńu, of the

So the Rámáyana, after stating that Satyavatí followed her husband in death, aids, that she became the Kauśíki river; the Cosí, which, rising in Nepal, flows through Puraniya into the Ganges, oppos-site nearly to Rájamahá.
family of Ikshwáku, and had by her the destroyer of the Kshatriya race, Paraśuráma, who was a portion of Náráyaña, the spiritual guide of the universe.

---

LEGEND OF PARAŚURÁMA.

(From the Mahábhárata.)

"JAMADAGNI (the son of Richíka) was a pious sage, who by the fervour of his devotions, whilst engaged in holy study, obtained entire possession of the Vedas. Having gone to king Prasenajit, he demanded in marriage his daughter Reńuká, and the king gave her unto him. The descendant of Bhrigu conducted the princess to his hermitage, and dwelt with her there, and she was contented to partake in his ascetic life. They had four sons, and then a fifth, who was Jámadagnya, the last but not the least of the brethren. Once when her sons were all absent, to gather the fruits on which they fed, Reńuká, who was exact in the discharge of all her duties, went forth to bathe. On her way to the stream she beheld Chitraratha, the prince of Mrittikávatí, with a garland of lotuses on his neck, sporting with his queen in the water, and she felt envious of their felicity. Defiled by unworthy thoughts, wetted but not purified by the stream, she returned disquieted to the hermitage, and her husband perceived her agitation. Beholding her fallen from perfection, and shorn of the lustre of her sanctity, Jamadagni reproved her, and was exceeding wroth. Upon this there came her sons from the wood, first the eldest, Rumańwat, then Sushéña, then Vasu, and then Viśwávasu; and each, as he entered, was successively commanded by his father to put his mother to death; but amazed, and influenced by natural affection, neither of them made any reply: therefore Jamadagni was angry, and cursed them, and they became as idiots, and lost all

---

14 The text omits the story of Paraśuráma, but as the legend makes a great figure in the Vaishává works in general, I have inserted it from the Mahábhárata, where it is twice related, once in the Vana Parva, and once in the Rájadharma section of the Sánti Parva. It is told also at length in the ninth book of the Bhágavata, in the Padma and Agni Puráñas, &c.

15 The circumstances of Richíka’s marriage, and the birth of Jamadagni and Viśwámitra, are told much in the same manner as in our text both in the Mahábhárata and Bhágavata.
understanding, and were like unto beasts or birds. Lastly, Ráma returned to the hermitage, when the mighty and holy Jamadagni said unto him, ‘Kill thy mother, who has sinned; and do it, son, without repining.’ Ráma accordingly took up his axe, and struck off his mother’s head; whereupon the wrath of the illustrious and mighty Jamadagni was assuaged, and he was pleased with his son, and said, ‘Since thou hast obeyed my commands, and done what was hard to be performed, demand from me whatever blessings thou wilt, and thy desires shall be all fulfilled.’ Then Ráma begged of his father these boons; the restoration of his mother to life, with forgetfulness of her having been slain, and purification from all defilement; the return of his brothers to their natural condition; and, for himself, invincibility in single combat, and length of days: and all these did his father bestow.

"It happened on one occasion, that, during the absence of the Rishi’s sons, the mighty monarch Kárttavírya, the sovereign of the Haihaya tribe, endowed by the favour of Dattátreya with a thousand arms, and a golden chariot that went wheresoever he willed it to go, came to the hermitage of Jamadagni, where the wife of the sage received him with all proper respect. The king, inflated with the pride of valour, made no return to her hospitality, but carried off with him by violence the calf of the milch cow of the sacred oblation, and cast down the tall trees surrounding the hermitage. When Ráma returned, his father told him what had chanced, and he saw the cow in affliction, and he was filled with wrath. Taking up his splendid bow, Bhárgava, the slayer of hostile heroes, assailed Kárttavírya, who had now become subject to 16 In the beginning of the legend occurs the account of Kárttavíryárjuna, with the addition that he oppressed both men and gods. The latter applying to Vishňú for succour, he descended to earth, and was born as Parasúráma, for the especial purpose of putting the Haihaya king to death.

17 In the Rájadharma the sons of the king carry off the calf. The Bhágavata makes the king seize upon the cow, by whose aid Jamadagni had previously entertained Arjuna and all his train: borrowing, no doubt, these embellishments from the similar legend of Vaśishtha and Viśwámitra, related in the Rámayána.

18 The characteristic weapon of Ráma is however an axe (parásńu), whence his name Ráma, ‘with the axe.’ It was given to him by Siva, whom the hero propitiates on mount Gandhamadana. He at the same time received instruction in the use of weapons generally, and the art of war. Rája Dharma.
the power of death, and overthrew him in battle. With sharp arrows Rāma cut off his thousand arms, and the king perished. The sons of Kārttavirya, to revenge his death, attacked the hermitage of Jamadagni, when Rāma was away, and slew the pious and unresisting sage, who called repeatedly, but fruitlessly, upon his valiant son. They then departed; and when Rāma returned, bearing fuel from the thickets, he found his father lifeless, and thus bewailed his unmerited fate: 'Father, in resentment of my actions have you been murdered by wretches as foolish as they are base! by the sons of Kārttavirya are you struck down, as a deer in the forest by the huntsman's shafts! Ill have you deserved such a death; you who have ever trodden the path of virtue, and never offered wrong to any created thing! How great is the crime that they have committed, in slaying with their deadly shafts an old man like you, wholly occupied with pious cares, and engaging not in strife! Much have they to boast of to their fellows and their friends, that they have shamelessly slain a solitary hermit, incapable of contending in arms!' Thus lamenting, bitterly and repeatedly, Rāma performed his father's last obsequies, and lighted his funeral pile. He then made a vow that he would extirpate the whole Kshatriya race. In fulfilment of this purpose he took up his arms, and with remorseless and fatal rage singly destroyed in fight the sons of Kārttavirya; and after them, whatever Kshatriyas he encountered, Rāma, the first of warriors, likewise slew. Thrice seven times did he clear the earth of the Kshatriya caste; and he filled with their blood the five large lakes of Samanta-panchaka, from which he offered libations to the race of Bhrigu. There did he behold his sire again, and the son of Richika beheld his son, and told him what to do. Offering a solemn sacrifice to the king of the gods, Jamadagnya presented the earth to the ministering priests. To Kaśyapa he gave the altar made of gold, ten fathoms in length, and nine in height. With the permission of Kaśyapa, the Brahmans divided it in pieces amongst them, and they were thence 19 This more than 'thrice slaying of the slain' is explained in the Rājadharma to mean, that he killed the men of so many generations, as fast as they grew up to adolescence.

20 It is sometimes read Narotsedha, 'as high as a man.'
called Khaṇḍavāyana Brahmans. Having given the earth to Kaśyapa, the hero of immeasurable prowess retired to the Mahendra mountain, where he still resides: and in this manner was there enmity between him and the race of Kshatriyas, and thus was the whole earth conquered by Rāma. 21."

The son of Viśwāmitra was Śunahsephas, the descendant of Bhrigu, given by the gods, and thence named Devarāta. 22. Viśwāmitra had

21 The story, as told in the Rājadharmā section, adds, that when Rāma had given the earth to Kaśyapa, the latter desired him to depart, as there was no dwelling for him in it, and to repair to the seashore of the south, where Ocean made for him (or relinquished to him) the maritime district named Śūrāraka. The traditions of the Peninsula ascribe the formation of the coast of Malabar to this origin, and relate that Parasurāma compelled the ocean to retire, and introduced Brahmans and colonists from the north into Kerala or Malabar. According to some accounts he stood on the promontory of Dilli, and shot his arrows to the south, over the site of Kerala. It seems likely that we have proof of the local legend being at least as old as the beginning of the Christian era, as the mons Pyrrhus of Ptolemy is probably the mountain of Parasū or Parasurāma. See Catalogue of Mackenzie Collection, Introd. p. xciv. and vol. II. p. 74. The Rājadharmā also gives an account of the Kshatriyas who escaped even the thrice seven times repeated destruction of their race. Some of the Haihayas were concealed by the earth as women; the son of Viduratha, of the race of Puru, was preserved in the Riksha mountain, where he was nourished by the bears; Sarvakarman, the son of Saudāsa, was saved by Parasurāma, performing the offices of a Sūdra; Gopati, son of Śiśi, was nourished by cows in the forests; Vatsa, the son of Pratardāna, was concealed amongst the calves in a cow-pen; the son of Deviratha was secreted by Gautama on the banks of the Ganges; Vrihadhratha was preserved in Gridhrakūṭa; and descendants of Marutta were saved by the ocean. From these the lines of kings were continued; but it does not appear from the ordinary lists that they were ever interrupted. This legend however, as well as that of the Rāmāyana, b. 1. c. 52, no doubt intimates a violent and protracted struggle between the Brahmans and Kshatriyas for supreme domination in India, as indeed the text of the Mahābhārata more plainly denotes, as Earth is made to say to Kaśyapa, 'The fathers and grandfathers of these Kshatriyas have been killed by the remorseless Rāma in warfare on my account.'

22 The story of Śunahsephas is told by different authorities, with several variations. As the author of various Sūktas in the Rāmāyana, he is called the son of Aigarta. The Rāmāyana makes him the middle son of the sage Richaka, sold to Ambarāhana, king of Ayodhya, by his parents, to be a victim in a human sacrifice offered other sons also, amongst whom the most celebrated were Madhuchhanda, Kritajaya, Devadeva, Ashitaka, Kachchapa, and Hárîta; these founded many families, all of whom were known by the name of Kauśikas, and intermarried with the families of various Rishis.

by that prince. He is set at liberty by Viśvamitra, but it is not added that he was adopted. The Bhāgavata concurs in the adoption, but makes Śunahśēphas the son of Viśvamitra's sister, by Ajigarta of the line of Bhrigu, and states his being purchased as a victim for the sacrifice of Hariśchandra (see n. 9. p. 372). The Vāyu makes him a son of Richika, but alludes to his being the victim at Hariśchandra's sacrifice. According to the Rāmāyana, Viśvamitra called upon his sons to take the place of Śunahśēphas, and on their refusing, degraded them to the condition of Chāndālas. The Bhāgavata says, that fifty only of the hundred sons of Viśvamitra were expelled their tribe, for refusing to acknowledge Śunahśēphas or Devarāta as their elder brother. The others consented; and the Bhāgavata expresses this; यें सवाहस्नं पञ्चमाः वह स हि। 'They said to the elder, profoundly versed in the Mantras, We are your followers' as the commentator; बुनदानां शान्ति स हृदयं। The Rāmāyana also observes, that Śunahśēphas, when bound, praised Indra with Richas or hymns of the Rig-veda. The origin of the story therefore, whatever may be its correct version, must be referred to the Vedas; and it evidently alludes to some innovation in the ritual, adopted by a part only of the Kauśika families of Brahmans.

The Bhāgavata says one hundred sons, besides Devarāta and others, as Ashitaka, Hárîta, &c. Much longer lists of names are given in the Vāyu, Bhāgavata, Brāhma, and Hari V. The two latter specify the mothers. Thus Devasrava, Kati (the founder of the Kṛtyavanas), and Hiranyaksha were sons of Ślavatī; Reśuka, Gālava, Sankriti, Mudgala, Madhuchchandana, and Devala were sons of Reśu; and Ashitaka, Kachchhapas, and Hárîta were the sons of Drishadvatī. The same works enumerate the Gotras, the families or tribes of the Kauśika Brahmans: these are, Pārthivas, Devarātas, Yajñawalkyas, Sāmanahanas, Uḍumbanas, Dumlānas, Tarakāyanas, Munchatas, Lohitas, Renus, Karihus, Babhrus, Pāninas, Dhyānajāpyas, Śyālantas, Hīranyakshah, Sankus, Gālavās, Yamadūtas, Devalas, Śālankāyanas, Bāhkalas, Dadativādaras, Sauśrutas, Sāindhavāyanas, Nishātās, Chunchulas, Śālankrityas, Sankrityas, Vādaraśyas, and an infinity of others, multiplied by intermarriages with other tribes, and who, according to the Vāyu, were originally of the regal caste, like Viśvamitra; but, like him, obtained Brahmanship through devotion. Now these Gotras, or some of them at least, no doubt existed, partaking more of the character of schools of doctrine, but in which teachers and scholars were very likely to have become of one family by intermarrying; and the whole, as well as their original founder, imply the interference of the Kshatriya caste with the Brahmical monopoly of religious instruction and composition.
CHAP. VIII.

ÁYUS, the eldest son of Pururavas, married the daughter of Ráhu (or Árahu), by whom he had five sons, Nabusha, Kshatraviruddha, Rambha, Raji, and Ananás.

The son of Kshatraviruddha was Suhotra, who had three sons, Kása, Lesa, and Ghritsamada. The son of the last was Saunaka, who first established the distinctions of the four castes. The son of Kása was Kaśirája; his son was Dīrghatamas; his son was Dhanwantari, whose nature was exempt from human infirmities, and who in every existence had been master of universal knowledge. In his past life (or when he was produced by the agitation of the milky sea), Nārāyaṇa had conferred upon him the boon, that he should subsequently be born in the 3 Vipáman: Agni and Mataya. Vídáman: Padma. The two last authorities proceed no farther with this line.

4 Sunahotra: Váyu, Bráhma.
5 Kása: Bhágavata.
6 Lesa: Váyu, Bráhma, Hari V.: whose son was Arshítse, father of Charana; Váyu: of Kaśyapa; Bráhma and Hari V.
7 Here is probably an error, for the Váyu, Bhágavata, and Bráhma agree in making Saunaka the son of Ghritsamada, and father of Saunaka.
8 The expression is चालुक्योऽस्मात् प्रसंपरिता: । 'The originator or causer of the distinctions (or duties) of the four castes.' The commentator, however, understands the expression to signify, that his descendants were of the four castes. So also the Váyu: पुरुषसाहस्यम पुजनोऽध्ययनः। 'The virtue of the Brahmans is that of the excellent; and of the four tribes to Bráhma is everywhere admitted. Their separation is assigned to different individuals, whether accurately to any one may be doubted; but the notion indicates that the distinction was of a social or political character.
9 Kaśyapa: Bráhma.
family of Kásirájá, should compose the eightfold system of medical science, and should be thereafter entitled to a share of offerings made to the gods. The son of Dhanwantari was Ketumat; his son was Bhúmaratha; his son was Divodása; his son was Pratardana, so 11 The eight branches of medical science are, 1. Sálya, extraction of extraneous bodies; 2. Sáláká, treatment of external organic affections; these two constitute surgery; 3. Chikitsá, administration of medicines, or medical treatment in general; 4. Bhútavidya, treatment of maladies referred to demoniac possession; 5. Kau-márahritya, midwifery and management of children; 6. Agáda, alexipharmacy; 7. Rásáyana, alchemical therapeutics; 8. Bajikaraás, use of aphrodisiacs. Dhanwantari, according to the Brahma Vai-vartta P., was preceded in medical science by Átreya, Bharadwája, and Charaka; his pupil Súrúta is the reputed author of a celebrated work still extant. It seems probable that Kásí or Benares was at an early period a celebrated school of medicine.

12 Some rather curious legends are connected with this prince in the Váyu and Bráhma Puráñas, and Hari Vansá, and especially in the Kásí Khañátha of the Skánda Puráña. According to these authorities, Siva and Párvati, desirous of occupying Kásí, which Divodása possessed, sent Nikumbha, one of the Gañás of the former, to lead the prince to the adoption of Buddhist doctrines; in consequence of which he was expelled from the sacred city, and, according to the Váyu, founded another on the banks of the Gomáti. We have, however, also some singular, though obscure intimations of some of the political events of this and the succeeding reign. The passage of the Váyu is, भद्रपुड़वस्य पुष्करः विद्यामणि निवर्त्ते. // भद्रपुड़वस्य राज्यं तु तद्रथवेत्रयः च च. // भद्रपुड़वस्य पुष्करः तु द्रव्यं नाम समानः. // निवर्त्ते विद्यामणि पुष्करः तु विनवर्त्ते. // द्रव्यं राज्यं नाम समानः. द्रव्यं तु द्रव्यं विद्यामणिः। निवर्त्ते निवर्त्ते। // "The king Divodása, having slain the hundred sons of Bhadraśréya, took possession of his kingdom, which was conquered by that hero. The son of Bhadraśréya, celebrated by the name of Durdama, was spared by Divodása, as being an infant. Pratardana was the son of Divodása by Dri-shadvatí; and by that great prince, desirous of destroying all enmity, (was recovered) that (territory) which had been seized by that young boy (Durdama)."

This is not very explicit, and something is wanted to complete the sense. The Bráhma P. and Hari V. tell the story twice over, chiefly in the words of the Váyu, but with some additions. In ch. 29, we have, first, the first three lines of the above extract; then comes the story of Benares being deserted; we then have the two next lines; then follow, भद्रपुड़वस्य पुष्करः विद्यामणिः। द्रव्यं राज्यं नाम समानः। भद्रपुड़वस्य पुष्करः तु द्रव्यं। // "That prince (Durdama) invading his patrimonial possessions, the territory which Divodása had seized by force was recovered by the gallant son of Bhadraśréya, Durdama, a warrior desirous, mighty king, named from destroying the race of Bhadraśreṇya. He had various other appellations, as Satrjit, ‘the victor over his foes,’ from having vanquished all his enemies; Vatsa, or ‘child,’ from his father’s frequently calling him by that name; Ritadhvaja, ‘he whose emblem was truth,’ being a great observer of veracity; and Kuvalayāswa, because he had a horse (aśva) called Kuvalaya. The son of this prince was Alarka, of whom this verse is sung in the present day; “For sixty thousand and sixty hundred years no other youthful monarch except Alarka, reigned over the earth.” The son of Alarka was Santo effect the destruction of his foes.’ Here the victory is ascribed to Durdama, in opposition to what appears to be the sense of the Vāyu, and what is undoubtedly that of our text, which says that he was called Pratardana from destroying the race of Bhadraśreṇya, and Satrjit from vanquishing all his foes: नमः प्रतर्दनाः। भद्रश्रेण्यस्मिन्नाविक्षिप्तस्त्राक्कोषोंवेचित्रिति रूपैः पुरुषोऽविद्वार।। By Vairasya anita, ‘the end of hostility or enmity,’ is obviously not to be understood here, as M. Langlois has intimated, a friendly pacification, but the end or destruction of all enemies. In the 32d chapter of the Hari Vansā we have precisely the same lines, slightly varied as to their order; but they are preceded by this verse: भद्रश्रेण्यस्मिन्नाविक्षिप्तस्त्राक्कोषोंवेचित्रिति रूपैः।। ‘The city (that on the Gomati), before the existence of Benares, of Bhadraśreṇya, a pious prince of the Yadu race.’ This verse is not in the Brāhma P. After giving the rest of the above quotation, except the last line, the passage proceeds, वरहोऽन्य ग्युर्यः सुगृहोऽभिवशयस्य च । भवेन नुः पशुभीर नमः रूपमम भवेनेश्वरः।। ‘The king called Ashāratha was the son of Bhāmaratha; and by him, great king, a warrior desirous of destroying his foes was (the country) recovered, the children (of Durdama) being infants.’ गमद दुर्दमः पुष्पदेवाश्रीमाताः। नमः। Com. According to the same authority, we are here to understand Bhimāratha and Ashāratha as epithets of Divodāsa and Pratardana. From these scanty and ill-digested notices it appears, that Divodāsa, on being expelled from Benares, took some city and district on the Gomati from the family of Bhadraśreṇya; that Durdama recovered the country, and that Pratardana again conquered it from his descendants. The alternation concerned apparently only bordering districts, for the princes of Māhishmati and of Kāsi continue, in both an earlier and a later series, in undisputed possession of their capitals and their power.

13 The Vāyu, Agni, Brāhma P., and Hari V. interpose two sons of Pratardana, Garga or Bharga and Vatsa; and they make Vatsa the father of Alarka, except the Brāhma, which has Satrjit and Ritadhvaja as two princes following Vatsa.

14 The Vāyu, Brāhma, and Hari V. repeat this stanza, and add that Alarka enjoyed such protracted existence through the favour of Lopamudrā, and that having descendants of Alarka.

409

tati; his son was Sunitha; his son was Suketu; his son was Dharmaketu; his son was Satyaketu; his son was Vibhu; his son was Suvibhu; his son was Sukumara; his son was Dhrishtaketu; his son was Vaishhotra; his son was Bharga; his son was Bhargabhumi; from whom also rules for the four castes were promulgated. These are the Kasya lived till the period at which the curse upon Kasi terminated, he killed the Rakshas Kashmaka, by which it had been occupied after it was abandoned by Divodasa, and caused the city to be re-inhabited.

The Hari V. agrees as usual with the Brhma, except in the reading of one or two names. It is to be observed, however, that the Agni makes the Kasi princes the descendants of Vitatha, the successor of Bharata. The Brhma P. and Hari V., determined apparently to be right, give the list twice over, deriving it in one place from Khatavridha, as in our text, the Vayu, and the Brhma; and in another, with the Agni, from Vitatha. The series of the Brhma, however, stops with Lauhi, the son of Alarka, and does not warrant the repetition which the carelessness of the compiler of the Hari Vana has superfluously inserted.

Our text is clear enough, and so is the Brhma, but the Vayu, Brhma, and Hari V. contain additions of rather doubtful import. The former has, nehotra purnadrihoti garga vam vamabhojya: garga hoti garga navamabhojya soyam navamabhojya. The son of Vayhuotra was the celebrated Garga; Gargabhumi was the son of Garga; and Vatsa, of the wise Vatsa: virtuous Brahmans and Kshatriyas.
princes, or descendants of Kāśa. We will now enumerate the descendants of Raji.

were the sons of these two. By the second Vatsa is perhaps meant Vatsabhūmi; and the purport of the passage is, that Gārgya (or possibly rather Bhargya, one of the sons of Pratardana) and Vatsa were the founders of two races (Bhumī, 'earth,' implying 'source' or 'founder'), who were Kshatriyas by birth, and Brahmins by profession. The Brāhma and Hari V., apparently misunderstanding this text, have increased the perplexity. According to them, the son of Veṇuhotra was Bhargya; Vatsabhūmi was the son of Vatsa; and Bhargabhūmi (Bhrigubhūmi, Brāhma) was from Bhargava. These sons of Angiras were born in the family of Bhrigu, thousands of great might, Brahmins, Kshatriyas and Vaišyas. The commentator has, Vatsabhīrya Vatsabhūmi Vatsabhūmi Vatsabhārya. Another son of Vatsa, the father of Alarka, is described, Vatsabhūmi, &c. From Bhargava, the brother of Vatsa. (They were) Angirasas from Gālava belonging to that family, (and were born) in the family of Bhrigu from the descent of Viśvāmitra. The interpretation is not very clear, but it authorizes the notion above expressed, that Vatsa and Bhargya, the sons of Pratardana, are the founders of two races of Kshatriya-Brahmans.

17 On the subject of note 12, some farther illustration is derivable from the Mahābhārata, Śānti P. Dāna-dharma. Hariśāwa the king of the Kāsīs, reigning between the Ganges and the Yamunā, or in the Do-ab, was invaded and slain by the Haihayas, a race descended, according to this authority, from Saryāti, the son of Manu (see p. 358). Sudeva, the son of Hariśāwa, was also attacked and defeated by the same enemies. Divodāsa, his son, built and fortified Benares as a defence against the Haihayas, but in vain, for they took it, and compelled him to fly. He sought refuge with Bharadvāja, by whose favour he had a son born to him, Pratardana, who destroyed the Haihayas under their king Vīthāvya, and reestablished the kingdom of Kāśī. Vīthāvya, through the protection of Bhrigu, became a Brahman. The Mahābhārata gives a list of his descendants, which contains several of the names of the Kāśya dynasty of the text; thus, Ghritasamada is said to be his son, and the two last of the line are Šuṇaka and Šaunaka. See n. 7.
CHAP. IX.

Descendants of Raji, son of Ayus: Indra resigns his throne to him: claimed after his death by his sons, who apostatize from the religion of the Vedas, and are destroyed by Indra. Descendants of Pratikshatra, son of Kshatravridha.

RAJI had five hundred sons, all of unequalled daring and vigour. Upon the occurrence of a war between the demons and the gods, both parties inquired of Brahmá which would be victorious. The deity replied, “That for which Raji shall take up arms.” Accordingly the Daityas immediately repaired to Raji, to secure his alliance; which he promised them, if they would make him their Indra after defeating the gods. To this they answered and said, “We cannot profess one thing, and mean another; our Indra is Prahláda, and it is for him that we wage war.” Having thus spoken, they departed; and the gods then came to him on the like errand. He proposed to them the said conditions, and they agreed that he should be their Indra. Raji therefore joined the heavenly host, and by his numerous and formidable weapons destroyed the army of their enemies.

When the demons were discomfited, Indra placed the feet of Raji upon his head, and said, “Thou hast preserved me from a great danger, and I acknowledge thee as my father; thou art the sovereign chief over all the regions, and I, the Indra of the three spheres, am thy son.” The Rája smiled, and said, “Even be it so. The regard that is conciliated by many agreeable speeches is not to be resisted even when such language proceeds from a foe (much less should the kind words of a friend fail to win our affection).” He accordingly returned to his own city, and Indra remained as his deputy in the government of heaven.

When Raji ascended to the skies, his sons, at the instigation of Nárada, demanded the rank of Indra as their hereditary right; and as the deity refused to acknowledge their supremacy, they reduced him to submission by force, and usurped his station. After some considerable time had elapsed, the god of a hundred sacrifices, Indra, deprived of his share of offerings to the immortals, met with Vrihaspati in a retired place, and said to him, "Cannot you give me a little of the sacrificial butter, even if it were no bigger than a jujube, for I am in want of sustenance?" "If," replied Vrihaspati, "I had been applied to by you before, I could have done anything for you that you wished; as it is, I will endeavour and restore you in a few days to your sovereignty." So saying, he commenced a sacrifice for the purpose of increasing the might of Indra, and of leading the sons of Raji into error, and so effecting their downfall. Mised by their mental fascination, the princes became enemies of the Brahmans, regardless of their duties, and contemners of the precepts of the Vedas; and thus devoid of morality and religion, they were slain by Indra, who by the assistance of the priest of the gods resumed his place in heaven. Whoever hears this story shall retain for ever his proper place, and shall never be guilty of wicked acts.

Rambha, the third son of Áyus, had no progeny. Kshatrawriddha had a son named Pratikshatra; his son was Sanjaya; his son was Vijaya; his son was Yajnakrit; his son was Harshavardhana; his son was Sahadeva; his son was Adina; his son was Jayasena; his son was Sankriti; his son was Kshatradharman. These were the descendants of Kshatrawriddha. I will now mention those of Nahusha.

1 The Mataya says he taught the sons of Raji the Jinadharmo or Jain religion: जिनधर्मो समसाधाम पेद्यायै व पेद्यित्त्।
2 The Bhágavata enumerates however, as his descendants, Rabhisa, Gambhirá, and Akriya, whose posterity became Brahmans. The same authority gives as the descendants of Anenas, the fourth son of Áyus, Suddha, Suchi, Trikakud, and Sán-tákhya.
3 The Váyu agrees with our text in making Pratipaksha (Pratikshatra) the son of Kshatrawriddha; but the Bráhma P. and Hari V. consider Anenas to be the head of this branch of the posterity of Áyus. The Bhágavata substitutes Kuša, the Leśa of our text, the grandson of Kshatrawriddha, for the first name; and this seems most likely to be correct. Although the different MSS. agree in reading भगवतगुप्त, it should be perhaps भगवत्गुप्त, the patronymic Kshatrawriddha; making then, as the Bhágavata does, Pratikshatra the son of the son of Kshatrawriddha.
4 Jaya: Bhágavata, Váyu.
6 Haryaśva: Bráhma, Hari V. Haryavana: Bhágavata.
7 The last of the list: Váyu. Ahina: Bhágavata.
8 Kshatrawriddha: Bráhma, Hari V,
CHAP. X.

The sons of Nahuha. The sons of Yayáti: he is cursed by Sukra: wishes his sons to exchange their vigour for his infirmities. Puru alone consents. Yayáti restores him his youth: divides the earth amongst his sons, under the supremacy of Puru.

YATI, Yayáti, Sanyáti, Áyáti, Viyáti, and Kriti were the six valiant sons of Nahuha. Yayáti declined the sovereignty, and Yayáti therefore succeeded to the throne. He had two wives, Devayání the daughter of Uśanas, and Sarmishthá the daughter of Vrishaparvan; of whom this genealogical verse is recited: "Devayání bore two sons, Sayá and Turvasu. Sarmishthá, the daughter of Vrishaparvan, had three sons, Druhyu, Anu, and Puru." Through the curse of Uśanas, Yayáti

1 The Bhágavata refers briefly to the story of Nahuha, which is told in the Mahábhárata more than once, in the Vana Parva, Udyoga P., Dána Dharma P., and others; also in the Pádma and other Puránas. He had obtained the rank of Indra; but in his pride, or at the suggestion of Sáchi, compelling the Rishis to bear his litter, he was cursed by them to fall from his state, and reappear upon earth as a serpent. From this form he was set free by philosophical discussions with Yudhishthira, and received final liberation. Much speculation, wholly unfounded, has been started by Wilford's conjecture that the name of this prince, with Deva, 'divine,' prefixed, a combination which never occurs, was the same as Dionysius or Bacchus. Authorities generally agree as to the names of the first three of his sons: in those of the others there is much variety, and the Matsya, Agni, and Pádma have seven names, as follows omitting the three first of the text:

Udbhava Udbhava Udbhava Saryáti
Panóchi Panchaka Pava Champaka
Sunyáti Pálaka Viyáti Andhaka
Meghayáti Megha Meghayáti

2 Or, as his name implies (सति), he became a devotee, a Yati: Bhágavata, &c.

3 The story is told in great detail in the Adi Parvan of the Mahábhárata, also in the Bhágavata, with some additions evidently of a recent taste. Sarmishthá, the daughter of Vrishaparvan, king of the Daityas, having quarrelled with Devayání, the daughter of Súkra (the religious preceptor of the same race), had her thrown into a well. Yayáti, hunting in the forest, found her, and taking her to her father, with his consent espoused her. Devayání, in resentment of Sarmishthá's treatment, demanded that she should become her handmaid; and Vrishaparvan, afraid of Súkra's displeasure, was compelled to comply. In the service of his queen, however, Yayáti beheld Sarmishthá, and secretly wedded her. Devayání complaining to her father of Yayáti's infidelity, Súkra inflicted on him premature decay, with permission to transfer it to any one willing to give him youth and strength in exchange, as is related in the text. The passage specifying the sons of Yayáti is precisely the same in the Mahábecame old and infirm before his time; but having appeased his father-in-law, he obtained permission to transfer his decrepitude to any one who would consent to take it. He first applied to his eldest son Yadu, and said, "Your maternal grandfather has brought this premature decay upon me: by his permission, however, I may transfer it to you for a thousand years. I am not yet satiate with worldly enjoyments, and wish to partake of them through the means of your youth. Do not refuse compliance with my request." Yadu, however, was not willing to take upon him his father's decay; on which his father denounced an imprecation upon him, and said, "Your posterity shall not possess dominion." He then applied successively to Druhyu, Turvasu, and Anu, and demanded of them their juvenile vigour. They all refused, and were in consequence cursed by the king. Lastly he made the same request of Śarmishthá's youngest son, Puru, who bowed to his father, and readily consented to give him his youth, and receive in exchange Yayáti's infirmities, saying that his father had conferred upon him a great favour.

The king Yayáti being thus endowed with renovated youth, conducted the affairs of state for the good of his people, enjoying such pleasures as were suited to his age and strength, and were not incompatible with virtue. He formed a connexion with the celestial nymph Viśváchí, and was wholly attached to her, and conceived no end to his desires. The more they were gratified, the more ardent they became;
as it is said in this verse, "Desire is not appeased by enjoyment: fire fed with sacrificial oil becomes but the more intense. No one has ever more than enough of rice, or barley, or gold, or cattle, or women:
abandon therefore inordinate desire. When a mind finds neither good nor ill in all objects, but looks on all with an equal eye, then every thing yields it pleasure. The wise man is filled with happiness, who escapes from desire, which the feeble minded can with difficulty relinquish, and which grows not old with the aged. The hair becomes grey, the teeth fall out, as man advances in years; but the love of wealth, the love of life, are not impaired by age." "A thousand years bhárata as in our text, and is introduced in the same way: भरतवे भरतवे भरतवे भरतवे भरतवे have passed,” reflected Yayáti, “and my mind is still devoted to pleasure; every day my desires are awakened by new objects. I will therefore now renounce all sensual enjoyment, and fix my mind upon spiritual truth. Unaffected by the alternatives of pleasure and pain, and having nothing I may call my own, I will henceforth roam the forests with the deer.”

Having made this determination, Yayáti restored his youth to Puru, resumed his own decrepitude, installed his youngest son in the sovereignty, and departed to the wood of penance (Tapovana⁴). To Turvasu he consigned the south-east districts of his kingdom; the west to Druhyu; the south to Yadu; and the north to Anu; to govern as viceroyds under their younger brother Puru, whom he appointed supreme monarch of the earth⁵.

⁴ Bhrgutunga, according to the Bráhma.
⁵ The elder brothers were made Mahá-dála-üruras, kings of circles or districts: Bhágavata. The situation of their governments is not exactly agreed upon.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Váyu and</th>
<th>Bráhma</th>
<th>Bhágavata</th>
<th>and Harí V.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Turvasu</td>
<td>South-east</td>
<td>South-east</td>
<td>West</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Druhyu</td>
<td>West</td>
<td>West</td>
<td>South-east</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yadu</td>
<td>South-west</td>
<td>South</td>
<td>South</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anu</td>
<td>North</td>
<td>North</td>
<td>North</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The LINGA describes the ministers and people as expostulating with Yayáti, for illegally giving the supremacy to the youngest son; but he satisfies them by shewing that he was justified in setting the seniors aside, for want of filial duty. The Mahábhárata, Udyoga P. Gálaya Cáritra, has a legend of Yayáti’s giving a daughter to the saint Gálaya, who through her means obtains from different princes eight hundred horses, white with one black ear, as a fee for his preceptor Visvámitra. Yayáti, after his death and residence in Indra’s heaven, is again descending to earth, when his daughter’s sons give him the benefit of their devotions, and replace him in the celestial sphere. It has the air of an old story. A legend in some respects similar has been related in our text, p. 399.
CHAP. XI.

The Yádava race, or descendants of Yadu. Kártaḍviryá obtains a boon from Dattátreya: takes Rávana prisoner: is killed by Parasúrama: his descendants.

I WILL first relate to you the family of Yadu, the eldest son of Yayáti, in which the eternal immutable Vishnú descended upon earth in a portion of his essence; of which the glory cannot be described, though for ever hymned in order to confer the fruit of all their wishes—whether they desired virtue, wealth, pleasure, or liberation—upon all created beings, upon men, saints, heavenly quiristers, spirits of evil, nymphs, centaurs, serpents, birds, demons, gods, sages, Brahmans, and ascetics. Whoevers hears the account of the race of Yadu shall be released from all sin; for the supreme spirit, that is without form, and which is called Vishnú, was manifested in this family.

Yadu had four sons, Sahasrajit, Kroshti, Nala, and Raghu. Sáta jit was the son of the elder of these, and he had three sons, Haihaya, Vénú, and Haya. The son of Haihaya was Dharmameta; his son was Kuntí; his son was Sáhanji; his son was Mahishmati; his son

1 Or, 'in which Krishná was born.' It might have been expected, from the importance of this genealogy, that it would have been so carefully preserved, that the authorities would have closely concurred in its details. Although, however, the leading specifications coincide, yet, as we shall have occasion to notice, great and irreconcilable variations occur.

2 The two first generally agree. There are differences in the rest; as,

Nila: Nala: Nala: Nila
Ajita: Anjika: Aripu: Jina
Raghu: Payoda: Aripu: Raghu

The Bráhma and Hari V. read Sahasráda for the first name; and the Linga has Balasani in place of Nala. The Agni makes Sáta jit also a son of Yadu.

3 Vénúhaya: Bhágavata, &c. Uttánahaya: Padma. Veśahaya: Matasya. They were the sons of Sahasráda: Bráhma and Hari V.

5 Kírtti: Váyu.

7 By whom the city of Mahishmati on the Narbada was founded: Bráhma P., Hari V. was Bhadrasena; his son was Durdama; his son was Dhanaka, who had four sons, Kritaviryya, Kritagni, Kritavarma, and Kritaujas. Kritaviryya's son was Arjuna, the sovereign of the seven Dwipas, the lord of a thousand arms. This prince propitiated the sage Dattatreya, the descendant of Atri, who was a portion of Vishnu, and solicited and obtained from him these boons—a thousand arms; never acting unjustly; subjugation of the world by justice, and protecting it equitably; victory over his enemies; and death by the hands of a person renowned in the three regions of the universe. With these means he ruled over the whole earth with might and justice, and offered ten thousand sacrifices. Of him this verse is still recited: "The kings of the earth will assuredly never pursue his steps in sacrifice, in munificence, in devotion, in courtesy, and in self-control." In his reign nothing was lost or injured; and so he governed the whole earth with undiminished health, prosperity, power, and might, for eighty five thousand years. Whilst sporting in the waters of the Narmadha, and elevated with wine, Ravaṇa came on his tour of triumph to the city Māhishmati, and there he who boasted of overthrowing the gods, the Daityas, the Gandharvas and their king, was taken prisoner by Kṛttavirya, and confined like a tame beast in a corner of his capital. At the expiration of his long reign Kṛttavirya was killed by Paraśurāma, who was an embodied portion of the mighty Nārāyaṇa. Of the hundred sons of this king, the five principal were Śūra, Śūrasena, Vrishāṇa, Madhu, and 8 So the Bhāgavata; but the Vāyu, more correctly, has Bhadrareṇa. See p. 407, n. 12.

10 According to the Vāyu, Kṛttavirya was the aggressor, invading Lankā, and there taking Rāvana prisoner. The circumstances are more usually narrated as in our text.
11 See page 402. Kṛttavirya's fate was the consequence of an imprecation denounced by Āpava or Vaśiśthī, the son of Varuṇa, whose hermitage had been burnt, according to the Mahābhārata, Rājadrīma, by Chitrabhaṇu, or Fire, to whom the king had in his bounty presented the world. The Vāyu makes the king himself the incendiary, with arrows given him by Śūrya to dry up the ocean.
12 Urjita: Bhāgavata.
14 Kṛṣṇa, in all except the Bhāgavata.
Jayadhwa\textja. The son of the last was Tālajangha, who had a hundred sons, called after him Tālajanghas: the eldest of these was Vīthotra; another was Bharata\textsc{a}, who had two sons, Vrisha and Sujā\textsc{t}; The son of Vrisha was Madhu; he had a hundred sons, the chief of whom was Vrishnī, and from him the family obtained the name of Vrishnī. From the name of their father, Madhu, they were also called Mādhavas; whilst from the denomination of their common ancestor Yadu, the whole were termed Yādavas.

\textsuperscript{15} King of Avanti: Brāhma and Hari Vanśa.

\textsuperscript{16} Ananta: Vāyu and Agni; elsewhere omitted.

\textsuperscript{17} Durjaya only: Vāyu, Matsya.

\textsuperscript{18} This Madhu, according to the Bhāgavata, was the son of Kārttavīryya. The Brāhma and Hari V. make him the son of Vrisha, but do not say whose son Vrisha was. The commentator on the latter asserts that the name is a synonyme of Payoda, the son of Yadu, according to his authority, and to that alone.

\textsuperscript{19} The Bhāgavata agrees with our text, but the Brāhma, Hari V., Linga, and Kūrma make Vrishaṇa the son of Madhu, and derive the family name of Vrishnīs or Vārshnīyas from him.

\textsuperscript{20} The text takes no notice of some collateral tribes, which appear to merit remark. Most of the other authorities, in mentioning the sons of Jayadhwa\ja, observe that from them came the five great divisions of the Haihaya tribe. These, according to the Vāyu, were the Tālajanghas, Vīthotras, Avantyas, Tuūdikeras, and Jātas. The Matsya and Agni omit the first, and substitute Bhojas; and the latter are included in the list in the Brāhma, Padma, Linga, and Hari V. For Jātas the reading is Sanjātas or Sujātas. The Brāhma P. has also Bhāratas, who, as well as the Sujātas, are not commonly specified, it is said, from their great number. They are in all probability invented by the compiler out of the names of the text, Bharata and Sujāti. The situation of these tribes is central India, for the capital of the Tālajanghas was Māhishmati or Chuli-Maheswar, still called, according to Col. Tod, Sahaara-bāhu-ki-basti, the village of the thousand-armed; that is, of Kārttavīryya. Annals of Rajasthan, I. 39. n. The Tuūdikeras and Vīthotras are placed in the geographical lists behind the Vindhyan mountains, and the termination -kaira is common in the valley of the Narmadā, as Bairkaira, &c., or we may have Tuūdikera abbreviated, as Tuūdari on the Tapti. The Avantyas were in Ujajīn, and the Bhojas were in the neighbourhood probably of Dhār in Malwa. These tribes must have preceded, then, the Rajput tribes, by whom these countries are now occupied, or Rahtores, Chauhans, Pawars, Gehlotes, and the rest. There are still some vestiges of them, and a tribe of Haihayas still exists, at the top of the valley of Sohagpur in Bhagel-khāli, aware of their ancient lineage, and though few in number, celebrated for their valour. Tod's Rajasthan, I. 39. The scope of the traditions regarding them, especially of their overrunning the country, along with Sakas and other foreign tribes, in the reign preceding that of Sagara (see p. 373), indicates their foreign origin also; and if we might trust to verbal resemblances, we might suspect that the Hayas and Haihayas of the Hindus had some connexion with the Hia, Hoiei-ke, Hoiei-hu, and similarly denominated Hun or Turk tribes, who make a figure in Chinese history. Des Guignes, Histoire des Huns, I. 7, 55, 231. II. 253, &c. At the same time it is to be observed that these tribes do not make their appearance until some centuries after the Christian era, and the scene of their first exploits is far from the frontiers of India: the coincidence of appellation may be therefore merely accidental. In the word Haya, which properly means 'a horse,' it is not impossible, however, that we have a confirmatory evidence of the Scythian origin of the Haihayas, as Col. Tod supposed; although we cannot with him imagine the word 'horse' itself is derived from haya. Rajasthan, I. 76.
CHAP. XII.

Descendants of Kroshtri. Jyāmagha’s connubial affection for his wife Śāivyā: their descendants kings of Vidarbha and Chedi.

KROSHTRI, the son of Yadu1, had a son named Vrijinīvat2; his son was Swāhī3; his son was Rushadru4; his son was Chitraratha; his son was Śāsavindu, who was lord of the fourteen great gems5; he had a hundred thousand wives and a million of sons6. The most renowned of them were Prithuvasas, Prithukarman, Prithuṣya, Prithukitrī, Prithudāna, and Prithuśravas. The son of the last of these six7 was Tamas8; his son was Uṣanas9, who celebrated a hundred sacrifices of the horse; his son was Śiteyus10; his son was Rukmakavacha11; his son was Parāvrit, who had five sons, Rukmēshu, Prithurukman, Jyāmgha, Pālita, and Harita12. To this day the following verse relating to Jyāmgha

1 In the Brāhma P. and Hari V. we have two families from Kroshtri; one which is much the same as that of the text; the other makes short work of a long story, as we shall again notice.
2 Vajravat: Kūrma.
5 Or articles the best of their kind; seven animate, and seven inanimate; a wife, a priest, a general, a charioteer, a horse, an elephant, and a body of foot soldiers; or, instead of the last three, an executioner, an encomiast, a reader of the Vedas; and a chariot, an umbrella, a jewel, a sword, a shield, a banner, and a treasure.
6 The text states this in plain prose, but the Vāyu quotes a verse which makes out but a hundred hundred or 10,000 sons:
7 The Matsya has the first, third, and fifth of our text, and Prithudharma, Prithukitrī, and Prithumat. The Kūrma has also six names, but makes as many successions.
8 Suyajna: Agni, Brāhma, Matsya. Dharma: Bhāgavata.
9 Uhat: Brāhma, Hari V.
11 Considerable variety prevails here. The Brāhma and Hari V. have Marutta the Rājarshi (a gross blunder, see p. 352), Kambalavarhish, Sātapparśu, Rukmakavacha: the Agni—Marutta, Kambalavarhish, Rukmēshu: whilst the Bhāgavata makes Ruchaka son of Uṣanas, and father to the five princes who in the text are the grandsons of Rukmakavacha.
12 The Bhāgavata has Rukmēshu, Rukman, Jyāmgha, Prithu, and Purujit. The is repeated: "Of all the husbands submissive to their wives, who have been or who will be, the most eminent is the king Jyámagha, who was the husband of Śaivyā." Śaivyā was barren; but Jyámagha was so much afraid of her, that he did not take any other wife. On one occasion the king, after a desperate conflict with elephants and horse, defeated a powerful foe, who abandoning wife, children, kin, army, treasure, and dominion, fled. When the enemy was put to flight, Jyámagha beheld a lovely princess left alone, and exclaiming, "Save me, father! Save me, brother!" as her large eyes rolled wildly with affright. The king was struck by her beauty, and penetrated with affection for her, and said to himself, "This is fortunate; I have no children, and am the husband of a sterile bride; this maiden has fallen into my hands to rear up to me posterity: I will espouse her; but first I will take her in my car, and convey her to my palace, where I must request the concurrence of the queen in these nuptials." Accordingly he took the princess into his chariot, and returned to his own capital.

When Jyámagha's approach was announced, Śaivyā came to the palace gate, attended by the ministers, the courtiers, and the citizens, to welcome the victorious monarch: but when she beheld the maiden standing on the left hand of the king, her lips swelled and slightly quivered with resentment, and she said to Jyámagha, "Who is this light-hearted damsel that is with you in the chariot?" The king unprepared with a reply, Váyu reads the two last names Parigha and Hari. The Bráhma and Hari V. insert Parajit as the father of the five named as in the text.

Most of the other authorities mention that the elder of the five brothers, Rukmeshu, succeeded his father in the sovereignty; and that the second, Prithurukman, remained in his brother's service. Pálita and Harita were set over Videha (विदेह | विदेह अवध) or Tirhut, and Jyámagha went forth to settle where he might; according to the Váyu he conquered Madhyadesā (the country along the Narmáda), Mekála, and the Súktimat mountains. So the Bráhma P. states that he established himself along the Rikshavat mountain, and dwelt in Súktimat. He names his son, as we shall see, Vidarba: the country so called is Berar, and amongst his descendants we have the Chaidyas or princes of Boghelkand, and Chandail, and Dására, more correctly perhaps Dasarí, Chattigaier; so that this story of Jyámagha's adventures appears to allude to the first settlement of the Yádava tribes along the Narmáda, more to the south and west than before.
made answer precipitately, through fear of his queen; "This is my daughter-in-law." "I have never had a son," rejoined Śaivyā, "and you have no other children. Of what son of yours then is this girl the wife?" The king disconcerted by the jealousy and anger which the words of Śaivyā displayed, made this reply to her in order to prevent further contention; "She is the young bride of the future son whom thou shalt bring forth." Hearing this, Śaivyā smiled gently, and said, "So be it;" and the king entered into his great palace.

In consequence of this conversation regarding the birth of a son having taken place in an auspicious conjunction, aspect, and season, the queen, although passed the time of women, became shortly afterwards pregnant, and bore a son. His father named him Vidarbha, and married him to the damsel he had brought home. They had three sons, Kratha, Kasiśka14, and Romapāda15. The son of Romapāda was Babhu16, and his son was Dhriti17. The son of Kasiśka was Chedi, whose descendants were called the Chaidya kings18. The son of Kratha was Kunti19; his son was Vrishú20; his son was Nirvrit21; his son was Daśārha; his son was Vyo man; his son was Jimsīta; his son was Vikriti22; his son was Bhimaratha; his son was Navaratha23; his son was Daśaratha24; his son was Śakuni; his son was Kārmakha; his son was Devarāta; his son was Devakṣhata26; his son was Madhu26; his son was Anavaraṇa; his 14 The Bhāgavata has Kuśa; the Matsya, Kauśika: all the authorities agree in specifying three sons.

15 Lomapāda: Agni.
18 The Bhāgavata, however, makes the princes of Chedi continuous from Romapāda; as, Babhu, Dhriti, Uṣika, Chedi—the Chaidyas, amongst whom were Damaghoša and Sūpāda.
19 Kumbhi: Padma.
21 Nirvriti: Vāyu. Nidhrīti: Agni. The Brāhma makes three sons, Avanta, Daśārha, and Balivishahan. In the Linga it is said of Daśārha that he was gunkal ("destroyer of the host of copper (faced; European?) foes.
22 Vikala: Matsya.
23 Nararatha: Brāhma, Hari V.
26 There is great variety in the succeeding appellations:
son was Kuruvatsa; his son was Anuratha; his son was Puruhotra; his son was Anṣu; his son was Satwata, from whom the princes of this house were termed Sátwatas. This was the progeny of Jyámagha; by listening to the account of whom, a man is purified from his sins.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bhágavata</th>
<th>Véyu</th>
<th>Brahma</th>
<th>Matsya</th>
<th>Padma</th>
<th>Kúrma</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Madhu</td>
<td>Madhu</td>
<td>Madhu</td>
<td>Madhu</td>
<td>Madhu</td>
<td>Madhu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kuruvaśa</td>
<td>Manu</td>
<td>Manavaśas</td>
<td>Uruvas</td>
<td>Puru</td>
<td>Kuru</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anu</td>
<td>Puruvatsa</td>
<td>Purudwat</td>
<td>Purudwat</td>
<td>Punarvasu</td>
<td>Anu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Puruhotra</td>
<td>Purudwat</td>
<td>Madhu</td>
<td>Jantu</td>
<td>Jantu</td>
<td>Ansa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Āyu</td>
<td>Satwa</td>
<td>and Satwa</td>
<td>Satwata</td>
<td>Satwata</td>
<td>Andhaka</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Satwata</td>
<td>Satwata</td>
<td>Satwata</td>
<td>Satwata</td>
<td>Satwata</td>
<td>Satwata</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Linga has Purushaprabhu, Manwat, Pratardāna, Satwata; and the Agni, Dravavasu, Puruhuta, Jantu, and Sátwata. Some of these originate, no doubt, in the blunders of copyists, but they cannot all be referred to that source.
CHAP. XIII.

THE sons of Satwata were Bhajína, Bhajamána, Divya, Andhaka, Devávirdhá, Mahábhoja, and Vrishní. Bhajamána had three sons, Ními, Krikiña, and Vrishní, by one wife, and as many by another, Satají, Sahasrají, and Ayutají. The son of Devávirdhá was Bábhrú of whom this verse is recited; "We hear when afar, and we behold when nigh, that Bábhrú is the first of men, and Devávirdhá is equal to the gods: sixty-six persons following the precepts of one, and six thousand and eight who were disciples of the other, obtained immortality." Mahábhoja was a pious prince; his descendants were the Bhojas, the princes of Mrittikávatí, thence called Mártikávatas. Vrishní had two sons, Sumítra and Yudhají; from the former Añamítra and Síni were

1 The Agní acknowledges but four sons, but all the rest agree in the number, and mostly in the names. Mahábhoja is sometimes read Mahábága.
2 Krikiña: Bráhma, Agní, Kúrma.
4 Dhírishthí: Bhágavata, Bráhma.
5 The Bráhma and Hari V. add to the first three Súra and Puranjaya, and to the second Dásaka.
6 By the Paráśááá river: Bráhma P: a river in Malwa.
7 These are made incorrectly the descendants of Bábhrú in the Hari V.
8 The Bhágavata, Matsya, and Váyu born. The son of Anamitra was Nighna, who had two sons, Prasena and Satrájit. The divine Áditya, the sun, was the friend of the latter.

On one occasion Satrájit, whilst walking along the sea shore, addressed his mind to Sórya, and hymned his praises; on which the divinity appeared and stood before him. Beholding him in an indistinct shape, Satrájit said to the sun, "I have beheld thee, lord, in the heavens as a globe of fire: now do thou shew favour unto me, that I may see thee in thy proper form." On this the sun taking the jewel called Syamantaka from off his neck, placed it apart, and Satrájit beheld him of a dwarfish stature, with a body like burnished copper, and with slightly reddish eyes. Having offered his adorations, the sun desired him to demand a boon, and he requested that the jewel might become his. The sun presented it to him, and then resumed his place in the sky. Having obtained the spotless gem of gems, Satrájit wore it on his neck, and becoming as brilliant thereby as the sun himself, irradiating all the region with his splendour, he returned to Dwáraká. The inhabitants of that city, beholding him approach, repaired to the eternal male, Purushottama, who, to sustain the burden of the earth, had assumed a mortal form (as Krishña), and said to him, "Lord, assuredly the divine sun is coming to visit you." But Krishña smiled, and said, "It is not the divine sun, but Satrájit, to whom Áditya has presented the Syamantaka gem, and he now wears it: go and behold him without apprehension." Accordingly they departed. Satrájit having gone to his house, there deposited the jewel, which yielded daily eight loads of gold, and through its marvellous virtue dispelled all fear of portents, wild beasts, fire, robbers, and famine.

agree in the main, as to the genealogy that follows, with our text. The Váyu states that Virávi had two wives, Mádri and Gándhári; by the former he had Yudhájít and Anamitra, and by the latter Sumitra and Devamídhush. The Matsya also names the ladies, but gives Sumitra to Gándhári, and makes Mádri the mother of Yudhájít, Devamídhusha, Anamitra, and Síni. The Agni has a similar arrangement, but substitutes Dhríshța for Virávi, and makes him the fifteenth in descent from Satwata. The Linga, Padma, Bráhma P., and Hari V. have made great confusion by altering, apparently without any warrant, the name of Virávi to Kroshtí.

9 The Bhágavata makes them sons of Yudhájít; the Matsya and Agni, as observed in the preceding note, his brothers as well as Sumitra's.
Achyuta was of opinion that this wonderful gem should be in the possession of Ugrasena; but although he had the power of taking it from Satrájit, he did not deprive him of it, that he might not occasion any disagreement amongst the family. Satrájit, on the other hand, fearing that Krishnía would ask him for the jewel, transferred it to his brother Prasena. Now it was the peculiar property of this jewel, that although it was an inexhaustible source of good to a virtuous person, yet when worn by a man of bad character it was the cause of his death. Prasena having taken the gem, and hung it round his neck, mounted his horse, and went to the woods to hunt. In the chase he was killed by a lion. The lion, taking the jewel in his mouth, was about to depart, when he was observed and killed by Jámbavat, the king of the bears, who carrying off the gem retired into his cave, and gave it to his son Sukumára to play with. When some time had elapsed, and Prasena did not appear, the Yádavas began to whisper one to another, and to say, “This is Krishnía’s doing: desirous of the jewel, and not obtaining it, he has perpetrated the murder of Prasena in order to get it into his possession.”

When these calumnious rumours came to the knowledge of Krishnía, he collected a number of the Yádavas, and accompanied by them pursued the course of Prasena by the impressions of his horse’s hoofs. Ascertaining by this means that he and his horse had been killed by a lion, he was acquitted by all the people of any share in his death. Desirous of recovering the gem, he thence followed the steps of the lion, and at no great distance came to the place where the lion had been killed by the bear. Following the footmarks of the latter, he arrived at the foot of a mountain, where he desired the Yádavas to await him, whilst he continued the track. Still guided by the marks of the feet, he discovered a cavern, and had scarcely entered it when he heard the nurse of Sukumára saying to him, “The lion killed Prasena; the lion has been killed by Jámbavat: weep not, Sukumára, the Syamantaka is your own.” Thus assured of his object, Krishnía advanced into the cavern, and saw the brilliant jewel in the hands of the nurse, who was giving it as a plaything to Sukumára. The nurse soon descried his approach, and marking his eyes fixed upon the gem with eager desire, called loudly for help. Hearing her cries, Jámbavat, full of anger, came to the cave, and a conflict ensued between him and Achyuta, which lasted twenty-one days. The Yádavas who had accompanied the latter waited seven or eight days in expectation of his return, but as the foe of Madhu still came not forth, they concluded that he must have met his death in the cavern. “It could not have required so many days,” they thought, “to overcome an enemy;” and accordingly they departed, and returned to Dwáракá, and announced that Krishná had been killed.

When the relations of Achyuta heard this intelligence, they performed all the obsequial rites suited to the occasion. The food and water thus offered to Krishná in the celebration of his Śráddha served to support his life, and invigorate his strength in the combat in which he was engaged; whilst his adversary, wearied by daily conflict with a powerful foe, bruised and battered in every limb by heavy blows, and enfeebled by want of food, became unable longer to resist him. Overcome by his mighty antagonist, Jámbavat cast himself before him and said, “Thou, mighty being, art surely invincible by all the demons, and by the spirits of heaven, earth, or hell; much less art thou to be vanquished by mean and powerless creatures in a human shape; and still less by such as we are, who are born of brute origin. Undoubtedly thou art a portion of my sovereign lord Nárâyána, the defender of the universe.” Thus addressed by Jámbavat, Krishná explained to him fully that he had descended to take upon himself the burden of the earth, and kindly alleviated the bodily pain which the bear suffered from the fight, by touching him with his hand. Jámbavat again prostrated himself before Krishná, and presented to him his daughter Jámbavati, as an offering suitable to a guest. He also delivered to his visitor the Syamantaka jewel. Although a gift from such an individual was not fit for his acceptance, yet Krishná took the gem for the purpose of clearing his reputation. He then returned along with his bride Jámbavati to Dwáракá.

When the people of Dwáракá beheld Krishná alive and returned, they were filled with delight, so that those who were bowed down with years recovered youthful vigour; and all the Yádavas, men and women, assembled round Ánakadunduubhi, the father of the hero, and congratulated him. Krishúna related to the whole assembly of the Yádavas all that had happened, exactly as it had befallen, and restoring the Syamantaka jewel to Satrájít was exonerated from the crime of which he had been falsely accused. He then led Jámbavatí into the inner apartments.

When Satrájít reflected that he had been the cause of the aspersions upon Krishúna's character, he felt alarmed, and to conciliate the prince he gave him to wife his daughter Satyabhámá. The maiden had been previously sought in marriage by several of the most distinguished Yádavas, as Akrúra, Kritavarma and Játaadhanwan, who were highly incensed at her being wedded to another, and leagued in enmity against Satrájít. The chief amongst them, with Akrúra and Kritavarma, said to Satadhanwan, "This caitiff Satrájít has offered a gross insult to you, as well as to us who solicited his daughter, by giving her to Krishúna: let him not live: why do you not kill him, and take the jewel? Should Achyuta therefore enter into feud with you, we will take your part."

Upon this promise Satadhanwan undertook to slay Satrájít.

When news arrived that the sons of Pándu had been burned in the house of wax, Krishúna, who knew the real truth, set off for Báravávata to allay the animosity of Duryodhana, and to perform the duties his relationship required. Satadhanwan taking advantage of his absence, killed Satrájít in his sleep, and took possession of the gem. Upon this coming to the knowledge of Satyabhámá, she immediately mounted her chariot, and, filled with fury at her father's murder, repaired to Báravávata, and told her husband how Satrájít had been killed by Satadhanwan in resentment of her having been married to another, and how he had carried off the jewel; and she implored him to take prompt measures to avenge such heinous wrong. Krishúna, who is ever internally placid, being informed of these transactions, said to Satyabhámá, as his eyes flashed with indignation, "These are indeed

---

10 This alludes to events detailed in the Mahábhárata.
audacious injuries, but I will not submit to them from so vile a wretch. They must assail the tree, who would kill the birds that there have built their nests. Dismiss excessive sorrow; it needs not your lamentations to excite any wrath.” Returning forthwith to Dwārakā, Krishnā took Baladeva apart, and said to him, “A lion slew Prasena, hunting in the forests; and now Satrājit has been murdered by Śatadhanwan. As both these are removed, the jewel which belonged to them is our common right. Up then, ascend your car, and put Śatadhanwan to death.”

Being thus excited by his brother, Balarāma engaged resolutely in the enterprise; but Śatadhanwan, being aware of their hostile designs, repaired to Kritavarmā, and required his assistance. Kritavarmā, however, declined to assist him, pleading his inability to engage in a conflict with both Baladeva and Krishnā. Śatadhanwan thus disappointed, applied to Akrūra; but he said, “You must have recourse to some other protector. How should I be able to defend you? There is no one even amongst the immortals, whose praises are celebrated throughout the universe, who is capable of contending with the wielder of the discus, at the stamp of whose foot the three worlds tremble; whose hand makes the wives of the Āșūras widows, whose weapons no host, however mighty, can resist: no one is capable of encountering the wielder of the ploughshare, who annihilates the prowess of his enemies by the glances of his eyes, that roll with the joys of wine; and whose vast ploughshare manifests his might, by seizing and exterminating the most formidable foes.” “Since this is the case,” replied Śatadhanwan, “and you are unable to assist me, at least accept and take care of this jewel.” “I will do so,” answered Akrūra, “if you promise that even in the last extremity you will not divulge its being in my possession.” To this Śatadhanwan agreed, and Akrūra took the jewel; and the former mounting a very swift mare, one that could travel a hundred leagues a day, fled from Dwārakā.

When Krishnā heard of Śatadhanwan’s flight, he harnessed his four horses, Śaivya, Sugrīva, Meghapushpa, and Balāhaka, to his car, and, accompanied by Balarāma, set off in pursuit. The mare held her speed, and accomplished her hundred leagues; but when she reached the country of Mithilā, her strength was exhausted, and she dropped down and died. Śatadhanwan dismounting, continued his flight on foot. When his pursuers came to the place where the mare had perished, Krishṇa said to Balarāma, “Do you remain in the car, whilst I follow the villain on foot, and put him to death; the ground here is bad; and the horses will not be able to drag the chariot across it.” Balarāma accordingly stayed with the car, and Krishṇa followed Śatadhanwan on foot: when he had chased him for two kos, he discharged his discus, and, although Śatadhanwan was at a considerable distance, the weapon struck off his head. Krishṇa then coming up, searched his body and his dress for the Syamantaka jewel, but found it not. He then returned to Balabhadrā, and told him that they had effected the death of Śatadhanwan to no purpose, for the precious gem, the quintessence of all worlds, was not upon his person. When Balabhadrā heard this, he flew into a violent rage, and said to Vāsudeva, “Shame light upon you, to be thus greedy of wealth! I acknowledge no brotherhood with you. Here lies my path. Go whither you please; I have done with Dwārapāla, with you, with all our house. It is of no use to seek to impose upon me with thy perjuries.” Thus reviling his brother, who fruitlessly endeavoured to appease him, Balabhadrā went to the city of Videha, where Janaka\(^\text{12}\) received him hospitably, and there he remained. Vāsudeva returned to Dwārapāla. It was during his stay in the dwelling of Janaka that Duryodhana, the son of Dhritarāṣṭra, learned from Balabhadrā the art of fighting with the mace. At the expiration of three years, Ugrasena and other chiefs of the Yādavas, being satisfied that Krishṇa had not the jewel, went to Videha, and removed Balabhadrā’s suspicions, and brought him home.

Akrūra, carefully considering the treasures which the precious jewel secured to him, constantly celebrated religious rites, and, purified with holy prayers\(^\text{13}\), lived in affluence for fifty-two years; and through the \(^{11}\) The Vāyu calls Sudhanwan or Śatadhanwan king of Mithilā.

\(^{12}\) A rather violent anachronism to make Janaka cotemporary with Balarāma.

\(^{13}\) The text gives the commencement of the prayer, but the commentator does not say whence it is taken: स्वयंत्री यात्तियापैंगी निल्ल व्रह्न भगवति। “Oh, goddess! the virtue of that gem there was no dearth nor pestilence in the whole country. At the end of that period, Śatrughna, the great grandson of Satwata, was killed by the Bhogas, and as they were in bonds of alliance with Akrúra, he accompanied them in their flight from Dwáraká. From the moment of his departure various calamities, portents, snakes, dearth, plague, and the like, began to prevail; so that he whose emblem is Garuḍa called together the Yádavas, with Balabhadrá and Ugrasena, and recommended them to consider how it was that so many prodigies should have occurred at the same time. On this Andhaka, one of the elders of the Yadhu race, thus spake: “Wherever Śwaphalka, the father of Akrúra, dwelt, there famine, plague, dearth, and other visitations were unknown. Once when there was want of rain in the kingdom of Káśirájá, Śwaphalka was brought there, and immediately there fell rain from the heavens. It happened also that the queen of Káśirájá conceived, and was quick with a daughter; but when the time of delivery arrived, the child issued not from the womb. Twelve years passed away, and still the girl was unborn. Then Káśirájá spake to the child, and said, ‘Daughter, why is your birth thus delayed? come forth; I desire to behold you, why do you inflict this protracted suffering upon your mother?’ Thus addressed, the infant answered, ‘If, father, you will present a cow every day to the Brahmans, I shall at the end of three years more be born.’ The king accordingly presented daily a cow to the Brahmans, and at the end of three years the damsel came into the world. Her father called her Gándini, and he subsequently gave her to Śwaphalka, when he came to his palace for his benefit. Gándini, as long as she lived, gave a cow to the Brahmans every day. Akrúra was her murderer of a Kshatriya or Vaisya, engaged in religious duties, is the slayer of a Brahman; the crime is equally heinous. Perhaps the last word should be अति ‘is.’
THE PARENTS OF AKRÚRA.

14 Some of the circumstances of this marvellous gem seem to identify it with a stone of widely diffused celebrity in the East, and which, according to the Mohammedan writers, was given originally by Noah to Japhet; the Hijer al mattyr of the Arabs, Sang yeddut of the Persians, and Jeddah tash of the Turks, the possession of which secures rain and fertility. The author of the Habib us Seir gravely asserts that this stone was in the hands of the Mongols in his day, or in the tenth century.
son by Śwaphalka, and his birth therefore proceeds from a combination of uncommon excellence. When a person such as he is, is absent from us, is it likely that famine, pestilence, and prodigies should fail to occur? Let him then be invited to return; the faults of men of exalted worth must not be too severely scrutinized.

Agreeably to the advice of Audhaka the elder, the Yādavas sent a mission, headed by Keśava, Ugrasena, and Balabhadra, to assure Akrūra that no notice would be taken of any irregularity committed by him; and having satisfied him that he was in no danger, they brought him back to Dwārakā. Immediately on his arrival, in consequence of the properties of the jewel, the plague, dearth, famine, and every other calamity and portent, ceased. Krishṇa, observing this, reflected\(^\text{15}\) that the descent of Akrūra from Gándinī and Śwaphalka was a cause wholly disproportionate to such an effect, and that some more powerful influence must be exerted to arrest pestilence and famine. “Of a surety,” said he to himself, “the great Syamantaka jewel is in his keeping, for such I have heard are amongst its properties. This Akrūra too has been lately celebrating sacrifice after sacrifice; his own means are insufficient for such expenses; it is beyond a doubt that he has the jewel.” Having come to this conclusion, he called a meeting of all the Yādavas at his house, under the pretext of some festive celebration. When they were all seated, and the purport of their assembling had been explained, and the business accomplished, Krishṇa entered into conversation with Akrūra, and, after laughing and joking, said to him, “Kinsman, you are a very prince in your liberality; but we know very well that the precious jewel which was stolen by Sudhanwan was delivered by him to you, and is now in your possession, to the great benefit of this kingdom. So let it remain; we all derive advantage from its virtues.

\(^{15}\) Krishṇa’s reflecting, the commentator observes, is to be understood of him only as consistent with the account here given of him, as if he were a mere man; for, as he was omniscient, there was no occasion for him to reflect or reason. Krishṇa however appears in this story in a very different light from that in which he is usually represented: and the adventure, it may be remarked, is detached from the place in which we might have expected to find it, the narrative of his life, which forms the subject of the next book.
But Balabhadrā suspects that I have it, and therefore, out of kindness to me, shew it to the assembly." When Akrūra, who had the jewel with him, was thus taxed, he hesitated what he should do. "If I deny that I have the jewel," thought he, "they will search my person, and find the gem hidden amongst my clothes. I cannot submit to a search." So reflecting, Akrūra said to Nārāyaṇa, the cause of the whole world, "It is true that the Syamantaka jewel was entrusted to me by Śatadhanwan, when he went from hence. I expected every day that you would ask me for it, and with much inconvenience therefore I have kept it until now. The charge of it has subjected me to so much anxiety, that I have been incapable of enjoying any pleasure, and have never known a moment's ease. Afraid that you would think me unfit to retain possession of a jewel so essential to the welfare of the kingdom, I forbore to mention to you its being in my hands; but now take it yourself, and give the care of it to whom you please." Having thus spoken, Akrūra drew forth from his garments a small gold box, and took from it the jewel. On displaying it to the assembly of the Yādavas, the whole chamber where they sat was illuminated by its radiance. "This," said Akrūra, "is the Syamantaka gem, which was consigned to me by Śatadhanwan: let him to whom it belongs now take it."

When the Yādavas beheld the jewel, they were filled with astonishment, and loudly expressed their delight. Balabhadrā immediately claimed the jewel as his property jointly with Achyuta, as formerly agreed upon; whilst Satyabhāmā demanded it as her right, as it had originally belonged to her father. Between these two Krishna considered himself as an ox between the two wheels of a cart, and thus spake to Akrūra in the presence of all the Yādavas: "This jewel has been exhibited to the assembly in order to clear my reputation; it is the joint right of Balabhadrā and myself, and is the patrimonial inheritance of Satyabhāmā. But this jewel, to be of advantage to the whole kingdom, should be taken charge of by a person who leads a life of perpetual continence: if worn by an impure individual, it will be the cause of his death. Now as I have sixteen thousand wives, I am not qualified to have the care of it. It is not likely that Satyabhāmā will agree to the conditions that would entitle her to the possession of the jewel; and as to Balabhadra, he is too much addicted to wine and the pleasures of sense to lead a life of self-denial. We are therefore out of the question, and all the Yādavas, Balabhadra, Satyabhámá, and myself, request you, most bountiful Akrúra, to retain the care of the jewel, as you have done hitherto, for the general good; for you are qualified to have the keeping of it, and in your hands it has been productive of benefit to the country. You must not decline compliance with our request.” Akrúra, thus urged, accepted the jewel, and thenceforth wore it publicly round his neck, where it shone with dazzling brightness; and Akrúra, moved about like the sun, wearing a garland of light.

He who calls to mind the vindication of the character of Krishná from false aspersions, shall never become the subject of unfounded accusation in the least degree, and living in the full exercise of his senses shall be cleansed from every sin.

16 The story of the Syamantaka gem occurs in the Bhágavata, Váyu, Mataya, Bráhma, and Hari V., and is alluded to in other Puráñas. It may be considered as one common to the whole series. Independently of the part borne in it by Krishná, it presents a curious and no doubt a faithful picture of ancient manners, in the loose self-government of a kindred clan, in the acts of personal violence which are committed, in the feuds which ensue, in the public meetings which are held, and the part that is taken by the elders and by the women in all the proceedings of the community.
Chap. XIV.

Descendants of Śini, of Anamitra, of Śwaphalka and Chitraka, of Andhaka. The children of Devaka and Ugrasena. The descendants of Bhajamána. Children of Súra: his son Vasudeva: his daughter Prithá married to Páádu: her children Yudhishthira and his brothers; also Karúya by Aditya. The sons of Páádu by Mádrí. Husbands and children of Súra's other daughters. Previous births of Súápála.

The younger brother of Anamitra was Śini; his son was Satyaka; his son was Yuyudhána, also known by the name of Sátyaki; his son was Asanga; his son was Túni; his son was Yugandhara. These princes were termed Śaineyas.

In the family of Anamitra, Priáni was born; his son was Śwaphalka, the sanctity of whose character has been described: the younger brother of Śwaphalka was named Chitraka. Śwaphalka had by Gándini, besides Akrúra, Upamadgu, Mridurá, Śáimejaya, Giri, Kahatropakshatra, Sástrughna, Arimarddana, Dharmadhris, Dhrishtasarman, Gandharmojáváha, and Prativáha. He had also a daughter, Sutárá.

Devavat and Upadeva were the sons of Akrúra. The sons of Chitraka were Prithu and Viprithu, and many others. Andhaka had four sons, Kukkura, Bhajamána, Suchí, Kambalavarhish. The son of Kukkura was Vrishta; his son was Kapotaroman; his son was Viloman.

2 The Agni makes these all brother's sons of Satyaka, and adds another, Rishabha, the father of Śwaphalka.

3 The authorities are not agreed here. Śwaphalka, according to the Agni, as just remarked, comes from Śini, the son of Anamitra. The Bhágavata, instead of Priáni, has Vrishñi, son of Anamitra; the Bráhma and Hari V. have Vrishñi; and the Agni, Prishñi, son of Yudhájit. The Matsya also makes Yudhájit the ancestor of Akrúra, through Rishabha and Jayanta. Yudhájit in the Bráhma, &c. is the son of Kroshtri.

4 The different authorities vary in the reading of these names, though they generally concur in the number.

5 The Matsya and Padma call them sons of Akrúra, but no doubt incorrectly.

6 Śámi: Váyu. Śási: Matsya. Śini: Agni. This last makes them the sons of Babhrú, and calls the first Sundara.

8 The Bhágavata puts Viloman first. The Linga makes it an epithet of Kapotaroman, saying he was Vilomaja, irregularly begotten. In place of Viloman we have Rávata, Váyu; Taittiri, Matsya; Tittiri, Agni.
his son was Bhava\textsuperscript{9}, who was also called Chandanodakadundubhi\textsuperscript{10}; he was a friend of the Gandharba Tumburu; his son was Abhijit; his son was Punarvasu; his son was Áhuka, and he had also a daughter named Áhukí. The sons of Áhuka were Devaka and Ugrasena. The former had four sons, Devavat, Upadeva, Súdeva, and Devarakshita, and seven daughters, Vrikdevá, Upadévá, Devarakshitá, Srídevá, Sántidevá, Sahadevá, and Devakí: all the daughters were married to Vasudeva. The sons of Ugrasena were Kansa, Nyagrodha, Sunáman, Kanka, Sánku, Subhámi, Ráshtrapála, Yuddhamushthi, and Tushitmat; and his daughters were Kansa, Kansavati, Sutanu, Ráshtrapálí, and Kankí.

The son of Bhajamána\textsuperscript{11} was Vidúratha; his son was Súra; his son was Sámin\textsuperscript{12}; his son was Pratikshatra\textsuperscript{13}; his son was Swayambhoja\textsuperscript{14}; his son was Hridika, who had Kritavarman, Satadhanu, Devamídhusha, and others\textsuperscript{15}. Súra, the son of Devamídhusha\textsuperscript{16}, was married to Máريshá, and had by her ten sons. On the birth of Vasudeva, who was one of these sons, the gods, to whom the future is manifest, foretold that the divine being would take a human form in his family, and thereupon they sounded with joy the drums of heaven: from this circumstance Vasudeva was also called Ánakadundubhi\textsuperscript{17}. His brothers were Devabhága, Devásravas, Anádhrishti, Karundhaka, Vatsabálaka, Árinjaya, \textsuperscript{10} The Matsya, Váyu, and Agni agree with our text. The Linga, Padma, and Kúrma read Ánakadundubhi as a synonyme of Bala. The Bráhma and Hari V. have no such name, but here insert Punarvasu, son of Taittirí. The Bhágavata has a different series, or Anu, Andhaka, Dundubhi, Arijit, Punarvasu, Áhuka.

\textsuperscript{11} This Bhajamána is the son of Andhaka, according to all the best authorities; so the Padma calls this branch the Andhakas. The Agni makes him the son of Bahhru.
\textsuperscript{12} Váta, Niváta, Sámin : Váyu.
\textsuperscript{14} Bhojaka : Agni. Bhoja : Padma.
\textsuperscript{15} Ten sons : Matsya, &c.
\textsuperscript{16} Devára : Váyu, Padma, Agni, and Matsya; and a different series follows, or Kambalavarihsh, Asamaujas, Samaujas, Sudanstra, Suvasá, Dhristha, Anamitra, Nighna, Satraja. They all make Vasudeva the son of Súra, however; but the three first leave it doubtful whether that Súra was the son of Bhajamána or not. The Bhágavata and Bráhma agree with the text, which is probably correct. The Bráhma has Súra son of Devamídhush, although it does not specify the latter amongst the sons of Hridika.
\textsuperscript{17} Ánaka a larger, and Dundubhi a smaller drum.
Śyāma, Śamīka, and Gańdūsha; and his sisters were Prithā, Śrutadevā, Śrutakīrtti, Śrutāsrasavas, and Rājādhīdevī.

Śrāva had a friend named Kuntibhoja, to whom, as he had no children, he presented in due form his daughter Prithā. She was married to Pańdu, and bore him Yudhishtira, Bhīma, and Arjuna, who were in fact the sons of the deities Dharma, Vāyu (air), and Indra. Whilst she was yet unmarried, also, she had a son named Karūsa, begotten by the divine Āditya (the sun). Pańdu had another wife, named Mádrī, who had by the twin sons of Āditya, Nāsatya and Dasra, two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva 18.

Śrutadevā was married to the Kārushi prince Vṛiddhaśarman, and bore him the fierce Asura Dantavakra. Dhristaketu, raja of Kaikeya 19, married Śrutakīrtti, and had by her Santaruddana and four other sons, known as the five Kaikeyas. Jayasena, king of Avanti, married Rājādhīdevī, and had Vinda and Anavinda. Šrutāsrasavas was wedded to Damaghosha, raja of Chedi, and bore him Śiśupāla 20. This prince was in a former existence the unrighteous but valiant monarch of the Daityas, Hiraṇyakaśipu, who was killed by the divine guardian of creation (in the man-lion Avatāra). He was next the ten-headed sovereign Rāvaṇa, whose unequalled prowess, strength, and power were overcome by the lord of the three worlds, Rāma. Having been killed by the deity in the form of Rāghava, he had long enjoyed the reward of his virtues in exemption from an embodied state, but had now received birth once more as Śiśupāla, the son of Damaghosha, king of Chedi. In this character he renewed, with greater inveteracy than ever, his hostile hatred towards the god surnamed Puśīdarīkāksha, a portion of the supreme being, who had descended to lighten the burdens of the earth; and was in consequence slain by him: but from the circumstance of his thoughts being constantly engrossed by the supreme being, Śiśupāla was united with him after death; for the lord giveth to those to whom he is favourable whatever they desire, and he bestows a heavenly and exalted station even upon those whom he slays in his displeasure.

18 The Mahābhārata is the best authority for these circumstances. 19 The Padma calls him king of Kashmir. 20 The Brāhma P. and Hari V. make Śrutadevā mother of Śiśupāla, and Pri-thukīrtti of Dantavakra.
CHAP. XV.

Explanations of the reason why Śisúpāla in his previous births as Hiraṇyakaśipu and Rāvana was not identified with Vishnú on being slain by him, and was so identified when killed as Śisúpāla. The wives of Vasudeva: his children Balaráma and Krishná his sons by Devakí: born apparently of Rohini and Yasodá. The wives and children of Krishná. Multitude of the descendants of Yadu.

Maitreya.—Most eminent of all who cultivate piety, I am curious to hear from you, and you are able to explain to me, how it happened that the same being who when killed by Vishnú as Hiraṇyakaśipu and Rāvana obtained enjoyments which, though scarcely attainable by the immortals, were but temporary, should have been absorbed into the eternal Hari when slain by him in the person of Śisúpála.

Paráśara.—When the divine author of the creation, preservation, and destruction of the universe accomplished the death of Hiraṇyakaśipu, he assumed a body composed of the figures of a lion and a man, so that Hiraṇyakaśipu was not aware that his destroyer was Vishnú: although therefore the quality of purity, derived from exceeding merit, had been attained, yet his mind was perplexed by the predominance of the property of passion; and the consequence of that intermixture was, that he reaped, as the result of his death by the hands of Vishnú, only unlimited power and enjoyment upon earth, as Daśānana, the sovereign of the three spheres; he did not obtain absorption into the supreme spirit, that is without beginning or end, because his mind was not wholly dedicated to that sole object. So also Daśānana being entirely subject to the passion of love, and engrossed completely by the thoughts of Jánaki, could not comprehend that the son of Daśaratha whom he beheld was in reality the divine Achyuta. At the moment of his death he was impressed with the notion that his adversary was a mortal, and therefore the fruit he derived from being slain by Vishnú was confined to his birth in the illustrious family of the kings of Chedi, and the exercise of extensive dominion. In this situation many circumstances brought the names of Vishnú to his notice, and on all these occasions the enmity that had accumulated through successive births influenced his mind; and in speaking constantly with disrespect of Achyuta, he was ever repeating his different appellations. Whether walking, eating, sitting, or sleeping, his animosity was never at rest, and Krishnā was ever present to his thoughts in his ordinary semblance, having eyes as beautiful as the leaf of the lotus, clad in bright yellow raiment, decorated with a garland, with bracelets on his arms and wrists, and a diadem on his head; having four robust arms, bearing the couch, the discus, the mace, and the lotus. Thus uttering his names, even though in male- diction, and dwelling upon his image, though in enmity, he beheld Krishnā, when inflicting his death, radiant with resplendent weapons, bright with ineffable splendour in his own essence as the supreme being, and all his passion and hatred ceased, and he was purified from every defect. Being killed by the discus of Vishnū at the instant he thus meditated, all his sins were consumed by his divine adversary, and he was blended with him by whose might he had been slain. I have thus replied to your inquiries. He by whom the divine Vishnū is named or called to recollection, even in enmity, obtains a reward that is difficult of attainment to the demons and the gods: how much greater shall be his recompense who glorifies the deity in fervour and in faith!

Vasudeva, also called Anakadandubhi, had Rohini, Pauravī, Bhadrā, Madirā, Devakī, and several other wives. His sons by Rohini were Balabhadrā, Sāraṇa, Sāru, Duramba, and others. Balabhadrā espoused Revati, and had by her Nisatha and Ulmuka. The sons of Sāraṇa were Mārshti, Mārttimat, Śiśu, Satyadrhiti, and others. Bhadrāśva, Bhadrabāhu, Durgama, Bhūta, and others, were born in the family of Rohini (of the race of Puru). The sons of Vasudeva by Madirā were Nanda, Upananda, Krītaka, and others. Bhadrā bore him Upanidhi, Gada, and others. By his wife Vaiśālī he had one son named Kauśika. Devakī bore him six sons, Kirttimat, Susheṇa, Udāyin, Bhadrasena, Rijudaśa, and Bhadradeha; all of whom Kansa put to death.

1 Pauravī is rather a title attached to a second Rohini, to distinguish her from the first, the mother of Balarṣma: she is also said by the Vāyu to be the daughter of Bāhlīka.

2 The enumeration of our text is rather imperfect. The Vāyu names the wives of Vasudeva, Pauravī, Rohini, Madirā, Rudi, Vaiśalī, Devakī; and adds two bondmaids, Sugandhi and Vanarajī. The
When Devakí was pregnant the seventh time, Yoganidrá (the sleep of devotion), sent by Vishńu, extricated the embryo from its maternal womb at midnight, and transferred it to that of Rohíńi; and from having been thus taken away, the child (who was Balárámá) received the name of Sankašańa. Next, the divine Vishńu himself, the root of the vast universal tree, inscrutable by the understandings of all gods, demons, sages, and men, past, present, or to come, adored by Brahmá and all the deities, he who is without beginning, middle, or end, being moved to relieve the earth of her load, descended into the womb of Devakí, and was born as her son Vásudeva. Yoganidrá, proud to execute his orders, removed the embryo to Yasodá, the wife of Nanda the cowherd. At his birth the earth was relieved from all iniquity; the sun, moon, and planets alone with unclouded splendour; all fear of calamitous portents was dispelled; and universal happiness prevailed. From the moment he appeared, all mankind were led into the righteous path in him.

Whilst this powerful being resided in this world of mortals, he had sixteen thousand and one hundred wives; of these the principal were Rukminí, Satyabhámá, Jámbavatí, Játaśaśíní, and four others. By these the universal form, who is without beginning, begot a hundred and eighty thousand sons, of whom thirteen are most renowned, Pradyumna, Cháruñá, Sámbara, and others. Pradyumna married Kakudvatí, the daughter of Rukmin, and had by her Aniruddha. Aniruddha married Subhadrá, the granddaughter of the same Rukmin, and she bore him a son named Vajra. The son of Vajra was Báhu; and his son was Suchárú.

Bráhma P. and Hari V. name twelve wives, and two slaves; Rohíńi, Madirá, Vaiśákhi, Bhadrá, Sunámni, Sahadevá, Sántidevá, Srídevá, Devarakshítá, Vrikadeví, Upadeví, Devaki; and Santanu and Bárvá. The children of the two slaves, according to the Váyu, were Puúdra, who became a king, and Kapíla, who retired to the woods. In the Bhágavata we have thirteen wives, Pauráví, Rohíńi, Bhadrá, Madirá, Rochaná, Ilá, Devakí, Dhritadeví, Sántidevá, Upadeví, Srídevá, Devarakshítá, and Sahadevá: the last seven in this and the preceding list are the daughters of Devaka.

3 The wives and children of Krishna are more particularly described in the next book. The Bráhma P. and Hari V. add some details of the descendants of Vasudeva’s brothers: thus Devabhágä is said to be the father of Uddhava; Anadhriñáki of Devárávas, a great scholar or Puúdit. Devárávas, another brother of Vasudeva, NUMBER OF THE YÁDAVAS.

In this manner the descendants of Yadu multiplied, and there were many hundreds of thousands of them, so that it would be impossible to repeat their names in hundreds of years. Two verses relating to them are current: "The domestic instructors of the boys in the use of arms amounted to three crores and eighty lacs (or thirty-eight millions). Who shall enumerate the whole of the mighty men of the Yádava race, who were tens of ten thousands and hundreds of hundred thousands in number?" Those powerful Daityas who were killed in the conflicts between them and the gods were born again upon earth as men, as tyrants and oppressors; and, in order to check their violence, the gods also descended to the world of mortals, and became members of the hundred and one branches of the family of Yadu. Vishńu was to them a teacher and a ruler, and all the Yádavas were obedient to his commands.

Whoever listens frequently to this account of the origin of the heroes of the race of Vrishńi, shall be purified from all sin, and obtain the sphere of Vishńu.

had Śatrughna and another son called Ekalavya, who for some cause being exposed when an infant, was found and brought up by the Nishádas, and was thence termed Nishádin. Vatsavat (Vat-sabálaka) and Gañđúsha being childless, Vasudeva gave his son Kausíka to be adopted by the former, and Krishńa gave Chárudeshá and three others to the latter. Kanaka (Karundhaka) had two sons, Tantríja and Tantripála. Avákarniçina (Śrinjaya) had also two, Víra and Aśva-bánu. The gracious Śamika became as the son (although the brother) of Śyáma, and disdaining the joint rule which the princes of the house of Bhoja exercised, made himself paramount. Yudhishthíra was his friend. The extravagant numbers of the Yádavas merely indicate that they were, as they undoubtedly were, a powerful and numerous tribe, of whom many traces exist in various parts of India.
PARÁŚARA.—I shall now summarily give you an account of the descendants of Turvasu.

The son of Turvasu was Vahni; his son was Gobhánu; his son was Traisámba; his son was Karandhama; his son was Marutta. Marutta had no children, and he therefore adopted Dushyanta, of the family of Puru; by which the line of Turvasu merged into that of Puru. This took place in consequence of the malediction denounced on his son by Yayáti.

1 Varga: Agni.
2 Bhránumat: Bhágavata, which also inserts Bhaga before him.
4 Besides Bharata, who, as will be hereafter seen, was the son of Dushyanta, the Váyu, Matsya, Agni, and Bráhma Puránas enumerate several descendants in this line, for the purpose evidently of introducing, as the posterity of Turvasu, the nations of the south of India: the series is Varuthha, (Karuththama, Bráhma). Andira (Aktrim, Bráhma); whose sons are Páulya, Karichá, Chola, Kerala; the Hari V. adds Kola, and the Agni very incorrectly Gandhára.

5 The curse alluded to is the failure of his line (Prajásamuchcheda), denounced upon Turvasu as the punishment of refusing to take his father's infirmities upon him (see p. 414). He was also sentenced to rule over savages and barbarians, Mechechhas, or people not Hindus. The Mahábhárata adds that the Yavanas sprang from Turvasu. As sovereign of the southeast, he should be the ancestor of the people of Arracan, Ava, &c.; but the authorities cited in the preceding note refer the nations of the Peninsula to him, and consequently consider them as Mechechhas. Manu also places the Drávis or Tamula amongst Mechechhas; and these and similar passages indicate a period prior to the introduction of Hinduism into the south of India.
CHAP. XVII.

Descendants of Druhyu.

The son of Druhyu was Babhru; his son was Setu; his son was Āradwat; his son was Gándhára; his son was Dharma; his son was Dhrita; his son was Duryáman; his son was Prachetas, who had a hundred sons, and they were the princes of the lawless Mlechchhas or barbarians of the north.

1 Also Araddha in MSS., and Ārātha, Mataya, which last seems to be the preferable reading. The Váyu has Aruddha; the Bráhma, Angárasetu; but Ārātha is a northern country, contiguous to, or synonymous with, Gándhára.

2 Of Gándhára it is said in the Váyu that it is a large country named after him, and is famous for its breed of horses: त्रेत्यं त्रस्तः माता हु गान्धारिनो महान।।

3 The Bráhma P. and Hari V., in opposition to all the rest, make Dharma and his successors the descendants of Anu.

4 Ghrita: Agni.

5 Durdama: Váyu and Bhágavata. The Mataya, Bráhma, and Agni insert a Vidupa, Duduha, or Vidula, before Prachetas.

6 So the Bhágavata and Mataya. The Mahábhárata says the descendants of Druhya are the Vaibhojas, a people unacquainted with the use of cars or beasts of burden, and who travel on rafts: they have no kings.
CHAP. XVIII.

Descendants of Anu. Countries and towns named after some of them, as Anga, Banga, and others.

Anu\(^1\), the fourth son of Yayati, had three sons, Sahbanara, Chakshusha, and Paramesku\(^2\). The son of the first was Kalana\(^3\); his son was Sinjaya; his son was Puranjaya; his son was Janamejaya; his son was Mahamani\(^4\); his son was Mahamanas, who had two sons, Usnara and Titikshu. Usnara had five sons, Sivi, Triña\(^5\), Gara\(^6\), Krimi, Dara\(^7\). Sivi had four sons, Vrishadarbha, Suvira, Kaikeya, and Madra\(^8\). Titikshu had one son, Ushadratha\(^9\); his son was Hema\(^10\); his son was Sutapas; his son was Bali, on whose wife five sons were begotten by Dirghatamas, or Anga, Banga, Kalinga, Suhma, and Purush\(^11\); and their descendants, and the five countries they inhabited, were known by the same names\(^12\).

\(^{1}\) By some unaccountable caprice the Brähma P. and Hari V., unsupported by any other authority, here substitute for Anu the name of Kasaheyu, a descendant of Puru, and transfer the whole series of his posterity to the house of Puru.

\(^{3}\) Kalanala: Vayu. Koláhala: Mataya.

\(^{5}\) Nriga: Agni. Vana: Bhágavata.

\(^{6}\) Nava: Mataya. Sama: Bhágavata.

\(^{7}\) Vrata: Agni. Suvrata: Mataya. Daksha: Bhágavata. According to the Brähma P. and Hari V. the five sons of Usnara were the ancestors of different tribes. Sivi was the progenitor of the Śaivas; Nriga of the Yaudheyas; Nava of the Navarásfras; Vrata of the Ambashátras; and Krimi founded the city Krimilā.

\(^{8}\) Bhadra and Bhadraka: Mataya, Agni. These sons of Sivi give name to different provinces and tribes in the west and north-west of India.

\(^{9}\) Rushadratha: Agni. Tushadratha: Mataya.

\(^{10}\) Pheña: Agni. Sena: Mataya.

\(^{11}\) Odra, or in some copies Andhra: Bhágavata.

\(^{12}\) See p. 185. n. 3; p. 188. n. 46, 49, 50; and p. 190. n. 73. Of Suhma it may be remarked, that it is specified in the Siddhánta Kaumudi as an example of Paṇini's rule; प्राच नामाः ६. ३. २४; by which Nagara compounded with names of countries in the east becomes Nagara, as Sauhanagar (सौहानगर), 'produced, &c. in a city of Suhma.' The descendants of Anu, according to the Mahabhárata were all Melechchhas. The last named work, as well as the Vayu and Mataya Puráñas, have an absurd story of the circumstances of the birth of Dirghatamas, who was the son of Ujjasí or Utathy, the elder brother of Vrihaspati by Mamáte, and of his begetting Anga.
The son of Anga was Pára; his son was Divaratha; his son was Dharmaratha; his son was Chitraratha; his son was Romapáda, also called Daśaratha, to whom, being childless, Daśaratha, the son of Aja, gave his daughter Sántá to be adopted. After this, Romapáda had a son named Chaturanga; his son was Prithuláksha; his son was Champa, who founded the city of Champá. The son of Champa was Haryyanga; his son was Bhadraratha, who had two sons, Vrihatkarman and Vrihadratha. The son of the first was Vrihadbhánú; his son was Vrthanmanas; his son was Jayadratha, who, by a wife who was the daughter of a Kshatriya father and Brahmani mother, had a son named Vijaya; and the rest. They agree in assigning descendants of all four castes to them; the Váyu stating that Bali had घुटङ्गः पालृ शक्तोत्तरः and the Matsya ascribing it to a boon given by Brahmá to Bali: छहुः निव नाथ चत्ताराजः न्यथा समपीते। ‘Do thou establish the four perpetual castes.’ Of these, the Brahmans are known as Báleyas: चालेय शाष्काध्याय। The Matsya calls Bali, the son of Virochana, and बालोक्ष्यवानिक्षः ‘existing for a whole Kalpa;’ identifying him therefore, only in a different period and form, with the Bali of the Vámana Avatára.

14 This prince is said in the Váyu to have drunk the Soma juice along with Indra: वेष विद्युतीया निव गोमु श्रस्त्रस्माधि व पीरो महाभागाः।

15 The Matsya and Agni insert a Satyáratha.

16 This is noticed in the Rámaṇya, in the story of the hermit Rishyasringa, to whom Sántá was given in marriage. Her adoptive father is called in the Rámaṇya, as he is in the Agni and Matsya, Lomapáda: the meaning is the same, ‘airy foot.’ Rámaṇya, IX. X. See also Prelude to the Uttara Ráma Chéritra, Hindu Theatre, I. 289.

17 The Bhágavata differs here from all the other authorities in omitting Champa, the founder of Champapuri, a city of which traces still remain in the vicinity of Bhagalpur, having inserted him previously amongst the descendants of Ikshúvaku (see p. 373. n. 12). Champá is every where recognised as the capital of Anga, and the translators of the Rámaṇya were very wide of the truth, when they conjectured that it might be Angwa or Ava.

18 Vrihadbháná: Bráhma. The Bhágavata omits the two successors of Champa, and makes Vrihadratha, Vrihatkarman, and Vrthanbhán, sons of Prithuláksha.

19 The Váyu, Matsya, and Hari V. make Vijaya the brother of Jayadratha. The Bhágavata agrees with our text. The mother of Vijaya from her origin was of the Súta caste, the genealogist and charioteer. Manu, X. 47. Her son was of the same caste, children taking the caste of the mother: consequently the descendants of Vijaya, kings of Anga, were Sútas; and this explains the contemptuous application of the term Súta to Káraṇa, the half brother of the Pádus; for he, as his son was Dhriti; his son was Dhritavrata; his son was Satyakarman; his son was Adhiratha, who found Karna in a basket on the banks of the Ganges, where he had been exposed by his mother, Prithá. The son of Karna was Vrishasena. These were the Anga kings. You shall next hear who were the descendants of Puru.

will presently be mentioned, was adopted into the Anga family, and succeeded to the crown.

Some variety prevails in the series of princes here, but this arises from not distinguishing the collateral lines, the descendants of Jayadratha from those of Vijaya. The Váyu and Mataya give the latter as in our text, but they agree also with the Agni and Bráhma in the successors of Jayadratha, as Dridharatha or Vrihadratha, and Janamejaya or Viswajit.

The son of Puru was Janamejaya; his son was Prachinvat; his son was Pravira; his son was Manasyu; his son was Bhayada; his son was Sudyumna; his son was Bahugava; his son was Samyati; his son was Ahamyati; his son was Raudrasva, who had ten sons, Riteyu, Kakshyeyu, Sthadileyu, Ghriteyu, Jaleyu, Stahleyu, Santateyu, Dhanyeyu, Vaneyu, and Vrateyu. The son of Riteyu was Rantinara.

---

1 Abhayada: Vayu. Vitamaya: Agni. Vastuyudha: Matsya. Charupada: Bhagavata. The Mahabharta, Adi P., p. 136, 138, has two accounts of the descendants of Puru, differing materially in the beginning from each other, and from the lists of the Puranas. In the first, Pravira is made the son of Puru; his son is Manasyu, who has three sons, Sakta, Sanhana, and Vgamini; and there the line stops. Another son of Puru is Raudrasva, whose sons are Richeyu and the rest, as in our text; making them the second in descent, instead of the eleventh. In the second list, the son of Puru is Janamejaya, whose successors are Prachinvat, Samyati, Ahamyati, Sarvabhauma, Jayatena, Avachina, Ariha, Mahabhauma, Ayutanayin, Akrodhana, Devatithi, Ariha, Riksha, Matinara, who is therefore the fifteenth from Puru, instead of the fourth as in the first account, and the twelfth as in the text.

3 Bahuvirdha: Agni and Matsya.

4 Sampati: Agni.
6 Bhadrswa: Matsya.
7 Rigeyu: Vayu. Richeyu: Agni. They were the sons of the Apsaras Ghritichi: or of Marsakesi: Mahabharta. The Brhma P. and Hari V. have very unaccountably, and in opposition to all other authorities, transferred the whole of the descendants of Anu to this family; substituting for Anu the second name in our text, Kakshyeyu. (p. 444)

8 The Vayu names also ten daughters, Rudra, Sudra, Madra, Subhag, Amalaja, Tal, Khal, Gopajal, Tamradas, and Ratnakoti; and adds that they were married to Prabhakara, a Rishi of the race of Atri. The Brhma P. and Hari V. have a legend of the birth of Soma, the moon, from him and one of these ten; who succeeded to the power and prerogatives of Atri. The sons of the other wives were less distinguished, but they formed families eminent amongst holy Bramhans, called Swastyatreyas.

9 Atimara or Atilhara: Bhagavata. An-whose sons were Tansu, Apratiratha, and Dhruva. The son of the second of these was Kaúwa, and his son was Medhátithi, from whom the Káñwáyána Brahmanas descended. Anila was the son of Tansu, and he had four sons, of whom Dushyanta was the elder. The son of \[\text{tinárā: Matyā. Matinára: Maháhárata, Agni and Bráhma. According to the Matyā and Hari V. (not in the Bráhma P.), Gaurí, the daughter of this prince, was the mother of Mándhátri, of the family of Ikshuśáku.}

10 In place of these the Matyā has Amúrtirayas and Nrichandra, and there are several varieties in the nomenclature. In place of the first we have Vásu or Trasu, Váyú; Tansurodha, Agni; Tansurodha, Bráhma; and Sumati, Bhágavata. Pratiratha is read for the second in the Agni and Bráhma; and for the third, Suratha, Agni; Subahu, Hari V.

11 Medhátithi is the author of many hymns in the Rig-veda, and we have therefore Brahmanas and religious teachers descended from Káñvatirayas.

12 Malina: Váyú. Raibhaya: Bhágavata. Dharmanetra: Bráhma P. The Hari V. omits him, making sad blundering work of the whole passage. Thus the construction is such as to intimate that Tansu or Tansurodha had a wife named Ilk, the daughter of Medhátithi; that is, his brother's great-granddaughter:

\[\text{The daughter of him who was named Ilün; a Raja so called: but in the Váyu and Matyā we have Ilín, the daughter of Yama, married to Tansu, and} mother of Malina or Anila; more correctly perhaps Ailina:

\[\text{The blunder of the Hari V. therefore arises from the compiler's reading Yasya, 'of whom,' instead of Yamsaya, 'Yama.' It is not an error of transcription, for the metre requires Yasya, and the remark of the commentator proves the correctness of the reading. The name occurs Ilina (ईलिना), the son of Tansu, in the Maháhárata, agreeably to the Anuvána śloka, which is there quoted. 'Sa-}

\[\text{raswati bore Tansu to Matinára, and Tansu begot a son, Ilina, by Kálingi: 'Ilín, Charáti,}

\[\text{Tansu, Váyú, Matyā, and Bhágavata agree with our text in making these the grandsons of Tansu: even the Bráhma P. concurs, but the Hari V. makes him their sons, having apparently transformed Tansusuta (तन्सुसतु), the son of Tansu, into a synonyme of Tansu, or Tansurodha; as in these parallel passages: Tansu, Váyú, Matyā, Bhágavata:

\[\text{The son of Tansu was the illustrious sage Dharmanetra: Upadánávi had from him four excellent sons.' Bráhma P. Tansurodha, Váyú, Matyā, Bhágavata:

\[\text{Tansurodha was a royal sage, the illustrious institutor of laws. Upadánávi had four sons from Tansurodha.' Hari V. The commentator explains Dharmanetra (धर्मनेत्र) to be 'in-} Dushyanta was the emperor Bharata; a verse explanatory of his name is chaunted by the gods; "The mother is only the receptacle; it is the father by whom a son is begotten. Cherish thy son, Dushyanta; treat not Sakuntalā with disrespect. Sons, who are born from the paternal loins, rescue their progenitors from the infernal regions. Thou art the parent of this boy; Sakuntalā has spoken truth." From the expression 'cherish,' Bharaswa, the prince was called Bharata 14.

Bharata had by different wives nine sons, but they were put to death by their own mothers, because Bharata remarked that they bore no resemblance to him, and the women were afraid that he would therefore desert them. The birth of his sons being thus unavailing, Bharata sacrificed to the Maruts, and they gave him Bharadwāja, the son of Vrihaspati by Mamatā the wife of Utathyā, expelled by the kick of Dirghatamas, his half brother, before his time. This verse explains the purport of his appellation; "'Silly woman,' said Vrihaspati, 'cherish this child of two fathers' (bhara dvā-jam). 'No, Vrihaspati,' replied Mamatā, do you take care of him.' So saying, they both abandoned him; but from their expressions the boy was called Bharadwāja." He was also termed Vitatha, in allusion to the unprofitable (vitatha) birth of the sons of Bharata 15. The son of Vitatha was Bhavan-

14 These two Slokas are taken from the Mahābhārata, Aṣṭī Purāṇa, p. 112, and are part of the testimony borne by a heavenly messenger to the birth of Bharata. They are repeated in the same book, in the account of the family of Puru, p. 139. They occur, with a slight variation of the order, in other Purāṇas, as the Vayu, &c., and shew the greater antiquity of the story of Sakuntalā, although they do not narrate it. The meaning of the name Bharata is differently explained in Sakuntalā; he is said to be so called from 'supporting' the world: he is also there named Śravadaśrama, 'the conqueror of all.'

15 The Brāhma P. and Hari V., the latter especially, appear to have modified this legend, with the view perhaps of reconciling those circumstances which are related of Bharadwāja as a sage with his manyu; his sons were many, and amongst them the chief were Vrihatshatra, Mahávíryya, Nara, and Garga. The son of Nara was Sankriti; his sons were Ruchiradévi and Rántideva. The son of Garga history as a king. Whilst therefore they state that Bharadwája was brought by the winds to Bharata, they state that he was so brought to perform a sacrifice, by which a son was born, whom Bharadwája also inaugurated: चलेस्वः संवर्जनं वहीतेराव्रि\n सवायवर्जनः महारिवहीतेराव्रि। पुरूषः हृ तिस्ते तस्मी सामी पुरुषमानि। नस्तोहृ तिस्ते नाम भर्गा माता शुद्धोभवत्। In the Váyu, Mataya, and Agni, however, the story is much more consistently narrated; and Bharadwája, being abandoned by his natural parent, is brought by the winds, as a child, not as a sage; and being adopted by Bharata, is one and the same with Vitatha; as our text relates. Thus in the Váyu, the Maruts bring to Bharata, already sacrificing for progeny (अज्ञां तरः वर्ऺ वाहस्यम्), Bharadwája, the son of Vrîhaspati; and Bharata receiving him, says, "This Bharadwája shall be Vitatha!" नाम सिद्धां ग्रह भर्गामाता जान्तर्। The Mataya also says, the Maruts in compassion took the child, and being pleased with Bharata's worship, gave it to him, and he was named Vitatha: जागृही स्वर्गामाता महारिवहीतेराव्रि। नेत्र ने महात्मा वर्णक्षेत्रम् हुद्दु। गवि हृ तिस्ते तस्मी शुद्धोभवत्। And the Agni tells the whole story in one verse: नान्तु महात्मार्गाय मुरुक्तत्स्य नुश्यः। संवर्जने भर्गाय माता शुद्धोभवत्। ‘Then the son of Vrîhaspati, being taken by the winds, Bharadwája was transferred with sacrifice, and was Vitatha.’ The account given in the Bhágavata is to the same purpose. The commentator on the text also makes the matter clear enough: भर्गाविद्वानयुवाचपुलाविद्वार्य निव भवेतमान। "The name of Bharadwája in the condition of son of Bharata was Vitatha." It is clear that a new-born infant could not be the officiating priest at a sacrifice for his own adoption, whatever the compiler of the Hari Vaná may please to assert. From Bharadwája, a Brahman by birth, and king by adoption, descended Brahmanas and Kshatriyas, the children of two fathers: तस्कादेव महाभारताय सवाय वर्णो भूस्वद्। दानविष्कासनाय भुमि वितर्य ददाय दत्ता हृ ने॥ The Mahábhárata, in the Ádi Parvan, tells the story very simply. In one place, p. 135. v. 3710, it says that Bharata, on the birth of his children proving vain, obtained from Bharadwája, by great sacrifices, a son, Bhúmanyu; and in another passage it makes Bhúmanyu the son of Bharata by Sunándé, daughter of Sárvaseña, king of Káśi; p. 139. v. 3785. The two are not incompatible.

16 Manyu: Bhágavata. Suketu: Agni. But the Bráhma and Hari V. omit this and the next generation, and make Suhotra, Anuhotra, Gaya, Garga, and Kápila the sons of Vitatha: they then assign to Suhotra two sons, Káśika and Ghritsamati, and identify them and their descendants with the progeny of Áyu, who were kings of Káśi (see p. 409. n. 15); a piece of confusion unwarranted by any other authority except the Agni.

17 Vrihat, Ahárya, Nara, Garga: Mataya.

18 Guruvírya and Trídeva: Váyu. The first is called Gurudhi, Mataya; and Guru, was Śini\(^{19}\), and their descendants called Gārgyas and Śainyas, although Kashatriyas by birth, became Brahmins\(^{20}\). The son of Mahávriyya was Urukshaya\(^{21}\), who had three sons, Trayyárúśa, Pushkarin, and Kapi\(^{22}\); the last of whom became a Brahman. The son of Vrihatkshatra was Suhotra\(^{23}\), whose son was Hastin, who founded the city of Hastinápura.

Bhágavata: they agree in Rantideva. The Bhágavata describes the great liberality of this prince, and his practice of Yoga. According to a legend preserved in the Megha Duta, his sacrifices of kine were so numerous, that their blood formed the river Charnavanatí, the modern Chambal.

\(^{19}\) Śivi: Mataya.

\(^{20}\) The other authorities concur in this statement; thus furnishing an additional instance of one caste proceeding from another. No reason is assigned: the commentator says it was from some cause:

\(\text{केतन्वतः काठामोक्षाद्वारा...}\)

\(^{22}\) Trayyárúśa, Pushkaráruśa, Kavi; all became Brahmins:

\(\text{रक्षते नागरे तर्कः ज्ञानं गता:}; \) Matsya: and there were three chief branches of the Kávyas, or descendants of Kavi; Matsya:

\(\text{संस्कृतम् काठामोक्षाद्वारा...}\)

\(\text{Gargas, Sankritis, and Kávyas. Ibid.}\)

\(^{23}\) In the Mahábhárata, Suhotra is the son of Bhúmányu; and in one place the father of Ajamídhá, &c., and in another of Hastin. The Brähma P. in some degree, and the Hari Vansa in a still greater, have made most extraordinary confusion in the instance of this name. In our text and in all the best authorities we have three Suhotrás, perfectly distinct: 1. Suhotra, great-grandson of Amávasu, father of Jahnú, and ancestor of Viśvámitra and the Kausíkas (see p. 308); 2. Suhotra son of Káhatra-vriddha, and grandson of Ayus, and progenitor of the race of Kási kings (p. 406); and 3. Suhotra the son of Vrihatkshatra, grandson of Vitatha, and parent of Hastin.

In the two blundering compilations mentioned, we have, first (Hari V. c. 20), a Suhotra son of Vrihatkshatra, of the race of Purú; his descent is not given, but, from the names which follow Suhotras, the dynasty is that of our present text: secondly (Hari V. c. 27), Suhotra son of Kánchana, of the line of Amávasu, and father of Jahnú, &c.; thirdly (Hari V. c. 29), Suhotra the son of Káhatra-vriddha, and progenitor of the Kási kings: fourthly (Hari V. 32), we have the first and third of these personages confounded; Suhotra is made the son of Vitatha, and progenitor of the Kási kings, the dynasty of whom is repeated; thus connecting them with the line of Purú instead of Ayus, in opposition to all authority. Again, we have a notable piece of confusion, and Suhotra the son of Vitatha is made the father of Vrihat, the father of the three princes who in our text and in the Hari V. (c. 20) are the sons of Hastin; and amongst whom Ajamídhá is made the father of Jahnú, and ancestor of the Kausíkas, instead of being, as in c. 27, and as every where else, of the family of Amávasu. The source of all this confusion is obvious. The compilers extracted all the authentic traditions accurately enough, but, puzzled by the identity of name, they have also
The sons of Hastin were Ajamídhá, Dwimídhá, and Purumídhá. One son of Ajamídhá was Kaúwa, whose son was Medhátithi; his other son was Vrihadishu, whose son was Vrihadvasu; his son was Vrihatkarman; his son was Jayadratha; his son was Viśwajit; his son was Senajit, whose sons were Ruchirásáwa, Káśya, Dridhadhanush, and Vasahanú. The son of Ruchirásáwa was Prithusena; his son was Pára; his son was Nipa; he had a hundred sons, of whom Samara, the principal, was the ruler of Kámpilya. Samara had three sons, Pára, Sampára, Sadasáwa. The son of Pára was Prithu; his son was Sukriti; his son was Vibhrátra; his son was Anuha, who married Kritwi, the daughter of Śuka (the son of Vyása), and had by her Brahmadatta;

mixed the different accounts together, and caused very absurd and needless perplexity. It is quite clear also that the Hari Vaná does not deserve the pains taken, and taken fruitlessly, by Mr. Hamilton and M. Langlois to reduce it to consistency. It is of no weight whatever as an authority for the dynasties of kings, although it furnishes some particular details, which it has picked up possibly from authentic sources not now available.

It was finally ruined by the encroachments of the Ganges, but vestiges of it were, at least until lately, to be traced along the river, nearly in a line with Delhi, about sixty miles to the east.

In one place, son of Suhotra; in another, grandson of Hastin: Mahábhárata.

The copies agree in this reading, yet it can scarcely be correct. Kaúwa has already been noticed as the son of Aprátríthá. According to the Bhágavata, the elder son of Ajamídhá was Priyamedhas, from whom a tribe of Brahmans descended. The Matyá has Vrihadhanush, and names the wife of Ajamídhá, Dhúmini. It also however, along with the Váyu, makes Kaúwa the son of Ajamídhá by his wife Keśúní.

Vrihadhanush: Bhágavata. Also called Vrihadharman: Hari V.
Vrihatkáyá: Bhágavata.
Sátyajit: Hari V.

Bhágavata. Matyá. Hari V.

Ruchirásáwa Ruchirásáwa Ruchirá
Káśya Káśya Swetaketu
Dridhadhanu Dridhasáva Mahimáná
Vatsa Vatsa k. of Vatsa k. of Avanti. Avanti.

Kámpilya appears to be the Kampil of the Mohammedans, situated in the Doab. It was included in southern Pánchála. The Matyá makes Samara the son of Káśya.

Vibhrája in MSS., also in the Váyu.

The Bhágavata omits the descents subsequent to Nipa, and makes Brahmadatta the son of Nipa by Sukriti. In the Hari V. is a curious legend of the different transmigrations of Brahmadatta and his six companions, who were successively as many Brahmans, then foresters, then his son was Viśwaksena; his son was Udaksena; and his son was Bhallāta.

The son of Dwimīḍha was Yavinara; his son was Dhritimat; his son was Satyadhriti; his son was Drīdhānemi; his son was Su- pārśwa; his son was Sumati; his son was Sannatimat; his son was Krita, to whom Hiraṇyanābha taught the philosophy of the Yoga, and he compiled twenty-four Sanhitās (or compendia) for the use of the eastern Brahmins, who study the Sāma-veda. The son of Krita was Ugrāyudha, by whose prowess the Nīpa race of Kshatriyas was destroyed; his son was Kṣhemya; his son was Suviṣa; his son was Nripamajaya; his son was Bahuratha. These were all called Pauravas.

Ajamīḍha had a wife called Nilinī, and by her he had a son named Nīla; his son was Śānti; his son was Śuśānti; his son was Purujānu; his son was Chakshu; his son was Haryyaśva, who had five sons, deer, then water-fowl, then swans, and finally Brahmins again, when with the king they obtained liberation. According to the Bhāgavata, Brahmadatta composed a treatise on the Yoga, a Yoga tantra.

33 Daśīdasena: Hari V.
36 Bhallāka: Vāyu. Bhallāda: Bhāgavata. The Vāyu makes him the last of the race. The Hari V. adds that he was killed by Karīna. The Mataya names his successor Janamejaya, when the race of the Nīpas was exterminated by Ugrāyudha; as noticed below.
37 So the Vāyu and Bhāgavata. The Mataya and Hari V., with less consistency, derive this family also from Ajamīḍha.
38 Kritimat: Bhāgavata.
39 Between these two the Vāyu inserts Mahat and Rukmaratha. The Mataya, Sudhanwan, Sarvabhauma, Mahāpaurova, and Rukmadhara. The Brāhma P., Sudharman, Sarvabhauma, Mahat, and Rukmaratha.
40 The Bhāgavata says he was the author of six Sanhitās of the Sāma-veda. (See p. 282.)
41 The Hari V. says he killed Nīpa, the grandfather of Prishata, but it had previously stated that it was the son of Bhallāta, several descents after Nīpa, who was killed by Ugrāyudha: and again (c. 32), Prishata, conformably to other authorities, appears as the father of Drupada, in the family of Śrīnaya. The Hari V. relates the destruction of Ugrāyudha by Bhishma, in consequence of his demanding in marriage the widow of Śāntanu: after which, Prishata, it is said, recovered possession of Kāmpilya.
42 Puranjaya: Bhāgavata.
Mudgala, Śrīnjava, Vṛhadisu, Pravīra, and Kāmpīlya. Their father said, “These my five (pancha) sons are able (alam) to protect the countries;” and hence they were termed the Pāṇchālas. From Mudgala descended the Maudgalya Brahmans: he had also a son named Bahwaśāwa, who had two children, twins, a son and daughter, Divodása and Ahalayā. The son of Śaradwat or Goutama by Ahalayā was Śatānanda; his son was Satyadhriti, who was a proficient in military science. Being enamoured of the nympha Urvaśī, Satyadhriti was the parent of two children, a boy and a girl. Śantau, a Raja, whilst hunting, found these children exposed in a clump of long Śara grass; and, compassionating their condition, took them, and brought them up. As they were nurtured through pity (kripā), they were called Kripa and Kripī. The latter became the wife of Drota, and the mother of Asvatthamāna.

The son of Divodāsa was Mitrāyu; his son was Chyavana; his son 49 Pāṇchāla was at first the country north and west of Delhi, between the foot of the Himalaya and the Chambal. It was afterwards divided into northern and southern Pāṇchāla, separated by the Ganges. Mākandi on the Ganges and Kāmpīla were the chief cities of the latter; Akshātra in the former. The Pāṇchālas, according to the Mahābhārata, expelled Samvarana from Hastinapura, but it was recovered by Kuru. The purport of the term Pāṇchāla is similarly explained in other Puruśas. In the Mahābhārata they are the grandsons of Ajamītha.

50 The Matsya says that they, as well as the Kāñvas, were all followers or partisans of Angiras: मुहुर्तस्यापिभिज्ञानं जन्मगुणिता हिमस्ताय: यथो जनमात्मा निर्विविवेरणां पक्षी उपस्थिताः।
The Hari V. has nearly the same words.

51 Badhrāśāa: Vāyu. Panchāśa: Agni. Bandhyāśa: Matsya. Brāhma: Bhāgavata. But there is some indistinctness as to his descent. The Matsya and Hari V. give the son of Mudgala only his patronymic Maudgalya. According to the first, his son was Indrasena; and his son, Bandhyāśa. The second makes Badhrāśāa the son of Maudgalya by Indrasena. The Bhāgavata makes Brāhma, the patronymic of Maudgala, the son of Brāhma, and who is the father of Divodāsa and Ahalayā: निषुऽवृन मुखावर्त्तिय मित्रायु सम्बोध्येत: पुण्यमुद्रा। The commentator has, भामिकाल अभम्।

52 In the Rāmayana, Śatānanda appears as the family priest of Janaka, the father of Sītā.

53 From whom the Maitreya Brahmans were descended: Hari V. In the Matsya and Agni the son of Mitrāyu is called Maitreya (see p. 3). The Brāhma P. and Hari V. here close the lineage of was Sudāsa; his son was Saudāsa, also called Sahadeva; his son was Somaka; he had a hundred sons, of whom Jantu was the eldest, and Prishata the youngest. The son of Prishata was Drupada; his son was Dhrishtadyumna; his son was Drishtaketu.

Another son of Ajamídhā was named Riksha\(^{34}\); his son was Samvaraṇā; his son was Kuru, who gave his name to the holy district Kurukshetra; his sons were Sudhanush, Jahnū, Parikshit, and many others\(^{35}\). The son of Sudhanush was Suhotra; his son was Chyavana; his son was Krița\(^{56}\); his son was Uparichara the Vāsu\(^{57}\), who had seven children, Vrīhadrath, Pratyaγra, Kuśāmba, Māvella, Matsuṣya, and others. The son of Vrīhadrath was Kuṣāgra; his son was Rishabha\(^{58}\); his son was Pushpavat; his son was Satyadhrita\(^{59}\); his son was Sudhanwan; and his son was Jantu. Vrīhadrath had another son, who being born in two Divodāsa: the Agni adds but one name, Somāpi. They then proceed with the descendants of Srinjaya, one of the Pān-chālas, or Panchadhanush, Somadatta, Sahadeva, and then as in our text. The Vāyu and Bhāgaγata agree with the latter in making the line continuous from Divodāsa. According to the Matsya and Brāhma P. the race of Ajamídhā became extinct in the person of Sahadeva, but Ajamídhā himself was reborn as Somaka, in order to continue his lineage, which was thence called the Somaka family. It was in the reign of Drupada that the possessions of the Pānchālas were divided; Dron, assisted by the Pāṇḍavas, conquering the country, and ceding the southern portion again to Drupada, as related in the Mahābhārata. The two princes last named in the list figure in the great war.

\(^{34}\) One other is named in the Bhāgaγata, Matsya, Brāhma, and Agni; Animeγaγa, Arimardana, and Nishadhāśva. The Hari V. has Sudhanwāt in place of Jahnū; having also Sudhanush.

\(^{57}\) The story of Uparichara, or a Vāsū who by command of Indra became king of Chedi, is told in the Mahābhārata, Ádi Parvan (vol. I. p. 85). He is there said to have at first five sons, Vrīhadrath, king of Magadha, Pratyaγra, Kuśāmba, also called Manivāhana, Māvella, and Yadu, by his wife Girik; afterwards he has, by Adrik, an Apsaras condemned to the form of a fish, Matsya a son, and Satyavati or Kāñk a daughter: the latter was the mother of Vyāśa. The same legend is referred to in the accounts of Uparichara and his family in the Bhāgaγata, Matsya, Hari V., &c.

\(^{58}\) Rishabha: Matsya.

\(^{59}\) Satyajita: Vāyu. Satyadhrita: Bhāgaγavata. Satyadhrita or Pushya: Matsya.
parts, which were put together (sandhita) by a female fiend named Jarâ, he was denominated Jarásandha; his son was Sahadeva; his son was Somápi; his son was Srutaśravas. These were kings of Magadhá.

60 This story is told in the 16th section of the Sabhá Parvan of the Mahábhárata, where also he is called the son of Vrihad-rátha. In the Váyu he is the son of Satyajita. The Agni has Satyahita, Úrja, Sambhava, Jarasandha; and the Matya, Brâhma.

CHAP. XX.

Descendants of Kuru. Devápi abdicates the throne: assumed by Sántanu: he is confirmed by the Brahmanas: Bhríshma his son by Gangá: his other sons. Birth of Dhritaráshta, Páúdu, and Vidura. The hundred sons of Dhritaráshta. The five sons of Páúdu: married to Draupádi: their posterity. Paríkshit, the grandson of Arjuna, the reigning king.

Paríkshit, the son of Kuru, had four sons, Janamejaya, Srutasaña, Ugrasaña, and Bhrímasena 1. The son of Jahnu was Suratha; his son was Vidúratha; his son was Sárvaśama; his son was Jayasaña Árávín; his son was Ayutákás; his son was Akrodhána; one of his sons was Devatithi, and another was called Riksa; his son was Dilípa; his son was Pratípa, who had three sons, Devápi, Sántanu, and Báhlíka. The first adopted in childhood a forest life, and Sántanu became king. Of him this verse is spread through the earth; "Sántanu is his name, because if he lays his hands upon an old man, he restores him to youth, and by him men obtain tranquility (sánti)."

1 This, although it occurs in other authorities, appears to be an error, for these are the sons of a subsequent Paríkshit (see the next chapter, p.451). The Mataya omits Paríkshit here, and the Bhágavata states that he had no children. In most of the Puráñas, however, the line of Paríkshit is continued, but there is very great confusion in the lineage. According to the Váyu, Janamejaya was the son of Paríkshit, whose son was Srutasaña, whose son was Bhrímasena. Janamejaya had also a son named Suratha; but Suratha was also the name of the son of Jahnu, from whom the line continues as in the text. The Bráhma P. and Hari V. also make Suratha the son both of Janamejaya and of Jahnu; and they observe that there are two Rikshas, two Paríkshitas, three Bhrímasenas, and two Janamejayas, in the lunar race. Some of the confusion probably originates with the Mahábhárata, which, as before noticed, gives two lists from Puru to Sántanu, differing from one another and from all the lists of the Puráñas. In the first of these lists such collateral names have been retained as appear to have furnished our text and that of other Puráñas with distinct persons: thus making the members of one fraternity so many descents. Of the two lists, however, the second is probably to be regarded as the more recent, if not more correct; for Vaisámpáyana repeats it at Janamejaya's request, because the latter is not satisfied with the summary account which the former had first communicated to him. Mahábh. vol. I. p. 136 and p. 138.
In the kingdom over which Śántanu ruled there was no rain for twelve years. Apprehensive that the country would become a desert, the king assembled the Brahmans, and asked them why no rain fell, and what fault he had committed. They told him that he was as it were a younger brother married before an elder, for he was in the enjoyment of the earth, which was the right of his elder brother Devápi. “What then am I to do?” said the Rájá: to which they replied, “Until the gods shall be displeased with Devápi, by his declining from the path of righteousness, the kingdom is his, and to him therefore you should resign it.” When the minister of the king, Asmarisárin, heard this, he collected a number of ascetics who taught doctrines opposed to those of the Vedas, and sent them into the forest; where meeting with Devápi, they perverted the understanding of the simple-minded prince, and led him to adopt heretical notions. In the meantime, Śántanu being much distressed to think that he had been guilty of the offence intimated by the Brahmans, sent them before him into the woods, and then proceeded thither himself, to restore the kingdom to his elder brother. When the Brahmans arrived at the hermitage of Devápi, they informed him, that, according to the doctrines of the Vedas, succession to a kingdom was the right of the elder brother: but he entered into discussion with them, and in various ways advanced arguments which had the defect of being contrary to the precepts of the Vedas. When the Brahmans heard this, they turned to Śántanu, and said, “Come hither, Rájá; you need give yourself no further trouble in this matter; the dearth is at an end: this man is fallen from his state, for he has uttered words of disrespect to the authority of the eternal, uncreated Veda; and when the elder brother is degraded, there is no sin in the prior espousals of his junior.” Śántanu thereupon returned to his capital, and administered the government as before; and his elder brother Devápi being degraded from his caste by repeating doctrines contrary to the Vedas, Indra poured down abundant rain, which was followed by plentiful harvests.

2 The Mahábhárata merely states that Devápi retired to a religious life. The story of his heresy is narrated, much as in the text, in the Bhágavata, Váyu, &c. The Mataya adds, that he was also leprous; on which account his subjects contemned him.
The son of Bahlíka was Somadatta, who had three sons, Bhúri, Bhúrisrávas, and Sala. The son of Sántanu was the illustrious and learned Bhásha, who was born to him by the holy river-goddess, Gangá; and he had by his wife Satyavati two sons, Chitrángada and Vichitrávírya. Chitrángada, whilst yet a youth, was killed in a conflict with a Gandharba, also called Chitrángada. Vichitrávírya married Ambá and Ambaliká, the daughters of the king of Káśi; and indulging too freely in connubial rites, fell into a consumption, of which he died. By command of Satyavati, my son Krishña-dwaipáyana, ever obedient to his mother’s wishes, begot upon the widows of his brother the princes Dhritaráshtra and Páñdu, and upon a female servant, Vidura. Dhritaráshtra had Duryodhana, Duhásana, and other sons, to the number of a hundred. Páñdu having incurred the curse of a deer, whose mate he had killed in the chase, was deterred from procreating children; and his wife Kuntí bare to him in consequence three sons, who were begotten by the deities Dharma, Váyu, and Indra; namely, Yudhishtíra, Bhíma, and Arjuna: and his wife Mádri had two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva, by the celestial sons of Aświni. These had each a son by Draupádi. The son of Yudhishtíra was Prativindhya; of Bhíma, Śrutasoma; of Arjuna, Śrutakirtti; of Nakula, Śatánika; and of Sahadeva, Śrutakarman. The Páñdavas had also other sons. By his wife Yaudheyá, Yudhishtíra had Devaka.

He was probably set aside in favour of his younger brother, either on that account or on that of his heresy; such a disposition being conformable to Hindu law. According to the Bhágavata and Mataya he is still alive at a place called Kalápa gráma, where, in the Krita age of the next Maháyugas, he will be the restorer of the Kástra race.

The Mataya says that Bahlíka had a hundred sons or lords of the Bahlíkas.

Before her marriage to Sántanu, Satyavati had a son, Krishña-dwaipáyana or Vyása, by Parásara: he was therefore the half brother of Vichitrávírya, and legally qualified to raise up offspring to him by his widow. This law is abrogated in the present age. The whole story of the sons of Sántanu is told at length in the Mahábhárata.

5 The Mahábhárata names some of them rather differently, and adds some particulars. Thus Yaudheyá was the son of Yudhishtíra by his wife Deviká, daughter of Govásana of the Saívya tribe. The son of Bhúmasena was Sarvage, by Balandhará, princess of Kaśí; he had also Ghashokkacha by Hidimbá. Abhimanyu was the
The son of Bhima by Hidimbá was Ghatotkacha, and he had also Sarvatraga by his wife Káši. The son of Sahadeva by Vijayá was Suhotra; and Niramitra was the son of Nakula by Karéñumati. Arjuna had Irávat by the serpent-nymph Ulupí; Babhruváhana, who was adopted as the son of his maternal grandfather, by the daughter of the king of Manipura; and, by his wife Subhadrá, Abhimanyu, who even in extreme youth was renowned for his valour and his strength, and crushed the chariots of his foes in fight. The son of Abhimanyu by his wife Uttará was Parikshit, who, after the Kurus were all destroyed, was killed in his mother’s womb by the magic Bráhma weapon, hurled by Aswattháman: he was however restored to life by the clemency of that being whose feet receive the homage of all the demons and the gods, and who for his own pleasure had assumed a human shape (Krishña). This prince, Parikshit, now reigns over the whole world with undivided sway 6.

6 In the details immediately preceding, the Puráñas generally concur, deriving them probably from the same source, the Adi Parvan of the Mahábhárata, and employing very frequently the same words. The period at which the chapter closes is supposed to be that at which the Vyásá, who arranged or compiled the Puráñas, is believed to have flourished. Parikshit died of the bite of a snake, according to the Mahábhárata, Adi P. The Bhágavata is supposed to have been narrated to him in the interval between the bite and its fatal effect.
CHAP. XXI.

Future kings. Descendants of Parikshit, ending with Kshemaka.

I WILL now enumerate the kings who will reign in future periods. The present monarch, Parikshit, will have four sons, Janamejaya, Shrutasena, Ugrasena, and Bhimasena. The son of Janamejaya will be Satánika, who will study the Vedas under Yájñavalkya, and military science with Kripa; but becoming dissatisfied with sensual enjoyments, he will acquire spiritual knowledge from the instructions of Saunaka, and ultimately obtain salvation. His son will be Asawamedhadatta (a son given by the gods in reward for the sacrifice of a horse); his son will be Asima-krishna; his son will be Nichakra, who will remove the capital to Kausámbi, in consequence of Hastinápura being washed away by the Ganges; his son will be Ushña; his son will be Chitraratha; his son

1 The style now adopted is that of prophecy, as Vyása could not consistently have recorded the events which were posterior to his time.
2 Also read Parikshita, Pariksha, and Parikshi.
3 See p. 457. The Váyu and Matsya relate, rather obscurely, a dispute between Janamejaya and Vaiśampáyana, in consequence of the former’s patronage of the Brahmans of the Vájasaneyi branch of the Yajurveda, in opposition to the latter, who was the author of the black or original Yajush (see p. 279). Janamejaya twice performed the Aswamedha according to the Vájasaneyi ritual, and established the Trisárví, or use of certain texts by Ásmaka and others, by the Brahmans of Anga, and by those of the middle country. He perished however in consequence, being cursed by Vaiśampáyana. Before their disagreement, Vaiśampáyana related the Mahábhárata to Janamejaya. Mahábh., Adi Parvan.
4 The reading of the text is rather, ‘his (Parikshit’s) other son will be Satánika;’ but the commentator refers ‘his’ to Janamejaya; rashamánayo vasya. The Váyu, Matsya, and Bhágavata also make Satánika the son of Janamejaya. The Bráhma P. has a totally different series, or Parikshit, Súryapíuda, Chandrápidá, Janamejaya, Satyakarí, Swetakarí, Sukumára, and Ajaśyáma.
5 The Bhágavata interposes Sahasrániká. The Vribhakathá has the same descent, but calls the son of Sahasrániká, Udayana or Vatsa. The Bhágavata has Aswamedha.
6 Adhisáma k.: Váyu. Adhisáma k.: Matsya. The former states that the Váyu P. was narrated in this king’s reign, in the second year of a three years’ sacrifice at Kurukshetra.
7 Nemichakra: Bhágav. Vichakshus: Matsya. They agree with the text as to the removal of the capital, and the cause.
will be Vrishnímat; his son will be Susheña; his son will be Sunítha; his son will be Richa; his son will be Nrichakshu; his son will be Sukhibala; his son will be Pariplava; his son will be Sunaya; his son will be Medhávin; his son will be Nripanjaya; his son will be Mridu; his son will be Tigma; his son will be Vrihadratha; his son will be Vasudána; and his son will be another Satánika; his son will be Udayana; his son will be Ahínara; his son will be Khanḍapáni; his son will be Niramitra; his son will be Káhemaka: of him this verse is recited: “The race which gave origin to Brahmans and Káshtriyas, and which was purified by regal sages, terminated with Káhemaka, in the Káli age.”

9 Suchidratna, Váyu; Suchidrava, Masa.; Kaviratna, Bhág.; is interposed between Chitrarathas and Vrishnímat.
10 Sutírtha: Váyu.
12 Chitrákaha: Váyu.
13 Sukhínala: Bhág.
14 Sutapas: Masa.
15 Puranjaya: Masa.
17 Tigmátmána: Masa. Timi: Bhágavata.
19 The Matáya concurs with the text (see above, note 5); the Bhágavata has Durdamana.
20 Váníra: Bhág.
21 Khanḍapáni: Bhág., Váyu, Masa.
22 Nimi: Bhág.
23 Káhepaka: Váyu.
24 The same memorial verse is quoted in the Matáya and Váyu P., preceded by one which states the number of princes twenty-five. The specification however, commencing with Satánika, is twenty-six or twenty-seven. The passage is, संपर्शादशाः सतानिकाः भरतः। अनुन्तस्यांकोशेऽगीतो तत्त्वस्य बुद्धिः। यद्यपि राजेय यो भिन्नो रेषो देवर्षि मंजुः। ब्रह्मवं प्राय राजस्य संस्कारान्तर वायु वायुणिते हि वर्णी॥
CHAP. XXII.

Future kings of the family of Ikshvákú, ending with Sumitra.

I WILL now repeat to you the future princes of the family of Ikshvákú 1.

The son of Vrihadbala 2 will be Vrihatkshaña 3; his son will be Urukšhepa 4; his son will be Vatsa 5; his son will be Vatsavyúha 6; his son will be Prativyoman 7; his son will be Divákara; his son will be Saha-deva; his son will be Vrihadaśwa 8; his son will be Bhánaratha 9; his son will be Supratítha 10; his son will be Marudeva 11; his son will be Sunakshatra; his son will be Kinnara 12; his son will be Antariksha; his son will be Suvarna 13; his son will be Amitrajit 14; his son will be Vrihadrája 15; his son will be Dharman 16; his son will be Kritanámara; his son will be Rañanjaya; his son will be Sanjaya; his son will be Sákya 17; his son will be Sudhodana 18; his son will be Rátula 19; his son will be

1 See p. 359.
2 Vrihadratha: Váyu.
5 Omitted by all three.
6 Vatsavriddha: Bhág.
7 Prativyúha: Váyu.
8 The Bhágavata inserts Bhánu. The Mataya says that Ayodhyá was the capital of Divákara. The Váyu omits the next twelve names; probably a defect in the copies.
9 Dhruvává: Mats.
10 Bhánumat: Bhág. Bhávyarathra or Bhávyar: Mats.
12 Pushkara: Bhág.
13 Suparvan or Sunantra: Mats. Suptapas: Bhág.
14 Amantravit: Mataya.
15 Vrihadbrája: Bhág.
16 Omitted: Mats. Varhish: Bhág. The Bhágavata and Váyu have Sákya. My copy of the Mataya has Súdhya, but the Radcliffe MS., more correctly, no doubt, Sákya (सक्य).
17 In some copies Krodhopada; but it is also Sudhodana, Mats. and Váyu; Sudhoda, Bhág.
18 Rátula: Váyu. Siddhártha or Pushkala: Mats. Lagala: Bhág. This and the two preceding names are of considerable chronological interest; for Sákya is the name of the author or reviver of Buddhism, whose birth appears to have occurred in the seventh, and death in the sixth century before Christ (B.C. 621—545). There can be no doubt of the individual here intended, although he is out of his place, for he was the son, not the father, of Sudhodana, and the father of Rátula; as he is termed in the Amara Prasenajit; his son will be Kshudraka; his son will be Kuñolaka; his son will be Suratha; his son will be Sumitra. These are the kings of the family of Ikshvaku, descended from Vrihadvala. This commemorative verse is current concerning them; “The race of the descendants of Ikshvaku will terminate with Sumitra: it will end in the Kali age with him.”

and Haima Koshas, Sudhodani or Sudhodana, son of Sudhodana, and Rāhulasañ the parent of Rāhula; so also in the Mahāvanaśa, Siddhārtha or Śākya is the son of Sudhodana, and father of Rāhula. Tournaire’s translation, p. 9. Whether they are rightly included amongst the princes of the race of Ikshvaku is more questionable, for Sudhodana is usually described as a petty prince, whose capital was not Ayodhyā, but Kapila or Kapilavastu. At the same time it appears that the provinces of the Doab had passed into the possession of princes of the lunar line, and the children of the sun may have been reduced to the country north of the Ganges, or the modern Gorakhpur, in which Kapila was situated. The Buddhists do usually consider their teacher Śākya to be descended from Ikshvaku. The chronology is less easily adjusted, but it is not altogether incompatible. According to the lists of the text, Śākya, as the twenty-second of the line of Ikshvaku, is contemporaneous with Ripunjaya, the twenty-second and last of the kings of Magadhā, of the family of Jārasandha; but, agreeably to the Buddhist authorities, he was the friend of Bimbisāra, a king who in the Paurāṇik list appears to be the fifth of the Sāsiunāga dynasty, and tenth from Ripunjaya. The same number of princes does not necessarily imply equal duration of dynasty, and Ikshvaku’s descendants may have outlasted those of Jārasandha; or, as is more likely—for the dynasty was obscure, and is evidently imperfectly preserved—several descents may have been omitted, the insertion of which would reconcile the Paurāṇik lists with those of the Buddhists, and bring Śākya down to the age of Bhimasāra. It is evident, from what occurs in other authorities, that the Aikshvākaya princes are regarded as contemporaries even of the Sāsiunāga dynasty: see c. 24. n. 17.

31 Kahulika: Vāyu. Kulaka or Kahullaka: Mats. Omitted: Bhāg. In the Mahāvīra Charitra, a work written by the celebrated Hemachandra, in the twelfth century, we have a Prasenajit, king of Magadhā, residing at Rajgriha, succeeded by Srenika, and he by Kuḷika. The Buddhists have a Prasenajit cotemporary with Śākya, son of Mahāpadma, king of Magadhā. There is some confusion of persons either in the Paurāṇik genealogies or in the Buddhist and Jain traditions, but they agree in bringing the same names together about the same period.

32 Omitted: Bhāg.

33 The Vāyu and Bhāgavata have the same stanza. We have here twenty-nine or thirty princes of the later solar line, cotemporary with the preceding twenty-six or twenty-seven of the later dynasty of the moon.
CHAP. XXIII.

Future kings of Magadhá: descendants of Vrihadratha.

I WILL now relate to you the descendants of Vrihadratha, who will be the kings of Magadhá. There have been several powerful princes of this dynasty, of whom the most celebrated was Jarásandha; his son was Sahadeva; his son is Somápi; his son will be Śrutavat; his son will be Ayutáyuś; his son will be Niramitra; his son will be Sukshatra; his son will be Vrihatkarman; his son will be Senajit; his son will be Śrutanjaya; his son will be Vipra; his son will be Śuchi; his son will be Kshemya; his son will be Suvrata; his son will be Dharma; his son will be Suśuma; his son will be Dridhasena; his son will be Sumati; his son will be Suvala; his son will be Sunita; his son will be Satyajit; his son will be Viśwajit; his son will be Ripunjaya.

These are the Vāhradrathas, who will reign for a thousand years.

1 Somádhi; Váyu, Matsya: and they now affect greater precision, giving the years of the reigns. Somádhi 58, V.; 50, M.
2 Śrutāravas, 67 yrs. V.; 64, M.
3 36 yrs. V.; Apratis, 26, M.
4 100 yrs. V.; 40, M.
5 58 yrs. V.; 56, M.; Sunakshatra, Bhág.
6 23 yrs. V. and M.; Vrihatsera, Bhág.
7 23 yrs. V.; 50, M.; Karmajit, Bhág.
8 40 yrs. V. and M.
9 Mahásula, 25 yrs. V.; Vidhu, 28, M.
10 58 yrs. V.; 64, M.
11 28 yrs. V. and M.
12 60 yrs. V.; 64, M.
13 5 yrs. V.; Sunetra, 35, M.; Dharmanetra, Bhág.
14 38 yrs. V.; Nivritti, 58, M.; Sama, Bhág.
15 48 yrs. V.; Trintra, 38, M.; Dymphatsena, Bhág.
16 33 yrs. V.; Mahatsena, 48, M.
17 22 yrs. V.; Netra, 33, M.
18 40 yrs. V.; Abala, 32, M.
19 80 yrs. V.; omitted, M.
20 35 yrs. V.; omitted, M.
21 50 yrs. V. and M.; Puranajaya and Viśwajit are identified, Bhág.
22 Our list and that of the Váyu specifies twenty-one kings after Sahadeva: the Bhágavata specifies twenty, and in another passage states that to be the number. My copy of the Matsya names but nineteen, and the Radcliffe but twelve; but both agree in making the total thirty-two. They all concur with the text also in stating that 1000 years had elapsed from the great war, at the death of the last Vāhradratha prince; and this is more worthy of credit than the details, which are obviously imperfect.

6 c
CHAP. XXIV.

The last of the Vṛkṣadratha dynasty, Ripunjaya, will have a minister named Sunika, who having killed his sovereign, will place his son Pradyota upon the throne: his son will be Pālaka; his son will be Viśākhavīpo; his son will be Janaka; and his son will be Nandivardhana. These five kings of the house of Pradyota will reign over the earth for a hundred and thirty-eight years.

The next prince will be Śiśunāga; his son will be Kākavāra; his son will be Kṣemadharmā; his son will be Kṣatrujaya; his son will be Vidmisāra; his son will be Ajātaśatru; his son will be

1 Munika, Vāyu; Pulika, Matsya; Śiśunāka, Bhaṭag.
2 For 23 years, V. and M.
3 24 yrs. V.; Tilaka or Bālaka, 28, M.
4 50 yrs. V.; 53, M.
5 Ajaka, 21 yrs. V.; Śūryaka, 21, M.; Rajaka, Bhaṭag.
6 20 yrs. V. and M.
7 This number is also specified by the Vāyu and Bhāgavata, and the several years of the reign of the former agree with the total. The particulars of the Matsya compose 145 years, but there is no doubt some mistake in them.
8 Śiśunāka, who according to the Vāyu and Matsya relinquished Benares to his son, and established himself at Girivraja or Raṣigriha in Behar, reigns 40 years, V. and M.
9 36 yrs. V. and M.
10 Kṣemakarman, 20 yrs. V.; Kṣemadharmā, 36, M.
11 40 yrs. V.; Kṣemajit or Kṣemārchin, 36, M.; Kṣetrajna, Bhaṭag.
12 Vimbisāra, 28 yrs. V.; Vindusena or Vindhyasena, 28, M.; Vīdhisāra, Bhaṭag.
13 25 yrs. V.; 27, M.; but the latter inserts a Kaṇvāya, 9 yrs., and Bhūmitra or Bhūmiputra, 14 yrs, before him. In this and the preceding name we have appellations of considerable celebrity in the traditions of the Baudhās. Vīdhisāra, read also Vindhusāra, Vīliśāra, &c., is most probably their Vimbisāra, who was born at the same time with Śākya, and was reigning at Raṣigriha when he began his religious career. The Mahāwansa says that Siddhātto and Bimbisaro were at-Dhangaka\(^\text{14}\); his son will be Udayśwa\(^\text{15}\); his son will also be Nandivaruddhara; and his son will be Mahānandī\(^\text{16}\). These ten Śāśunāgas will be kings of the earth for three hundred and sixty-two years\(^\text{17}\).

The son of Mahānanda will be born of a woman of the Śūdra or servile class; his name will be Nanda, called Mahāpadma, for he will be exceedingly avaricious\(^\text{18}\). Like another Parāśurāma, he will be the annihilator of the Kshatriya race; for after him the kings of the earth will be Śūdras. He will bring the whole earth under one umbrella: he tached friends, as their fathers had been before them; p. 10. Śākya is said to have died in the reign of Ajātasatru, the son of Vimbavāra, in the eighth year of his reign. The Vāyu transposes these names, and the Matsya still more alters the order of Ajātasatru; but the Bhāgavata concurs with our text. The Buddhist authority differs from the Purāṇas materially as to the duration of the reigns, giving to Bimbisāra 52 years, and to Ajatasatru 32: the latter, according to the same, murdered his father. Mahāvamsa, p. 10. We may therefore with some confidence claim for these princes a date of about six centuries B.C. They are considered contemporary with Sudhodana, &c., in the list of the Aikshvākavas (p. 463, n. 20).

\(^\text{14}\) Harshaka, 25 yrs. V.; Vansaka, 24, M.
\(^\text{15}\) 33 yrs. V.; Udibhi or Udasi, 33, M. According to the Vāyu, Udaya or Udayśwara founded Kusumanapr or Pañali putra, on the southern angle of the Ganges: न उत्तरं रत्नाकरं मुरलाखरं मितारामी। कुन्तारक, सिर्काथे चोके चूपुरं देव विरामी। The legends of Śākya, consistently with this tradition, take no notice of this city in his peregrinations on either bank of the Ganges. The Mahāvamsa calls the son and successor of Ajātasatru, Udayiśhādaka (Udayiśhādraka); p. 15.

\(^\text{16}\) 42 and 43 yrs. V.; 40 and 43, M.

The Mahāvamsa has in place of these, Anuruddhako, Mundo, and Nāgadāso; all in succession parricides: the last deposed by an insurrection of the people: p. 15.

\(^\text{17}\) The several authorities agree in the number of ten Śāśunāgas, and in the aggregate years of their reigns, which the Matsya and the Bhāgavata call 360: the Vāyu has 362, with which the several periods correspond: the details of the Matsya give 353.

The Vāyu and Matsya call the Śāśunāgas, Kahatrbandhus, which may designate an inferior order of Kshatriya: they also observe, that contemporaneous with the dynasties already specified, the Pauravas, the Vāhradrathas, and Māgadhas, there were other races of royal descent; as, Aikshvākava princes, 24: Pānchālas, 25, V.; 27, M: Kālakas or Kāsakas or Kāsayas, 24: Haihaya, 24, V.; 28, M.: Kaśingas, 32, V.; 40, M.: Sākas, V.; Aśmakas, M., 25: Kuravas, 25: Maithilas, 28: Śūra Senas, 23: and Viśhotras, 20.

\(^\text{18}\) The Bhāgavata calls him Mahāpadhamapati, the lord of Mahāpadma; which the commentator interprets, ‘sovereign of an infinite host,’ or ‘of immense wealth;’ Mahāpadma signifying 100,000,000. The Vāyu and Matsya, however, consider Mahāpadma as another name of Nanda.
will have eight sons, Sumálya and others, who will reign after Mahápadma; and he and his sons will govern for a hundred years. The Brahman Kautilya will root out the nine Nandas.

Upon the cessation of the race of Nanda, the Mauryas will possess the earth, for Kautilya will place Chandragupta on the throne: his son 19 So the Bhágavata also; but it would be more compatible with chronology to consider the nine Nandas as so many descents. The Váyu and Matsya give eighty-eight years to Mahápadma, and only the remaining twelve to Sumálya and the rest of the remaining eight; these twelve years being occupied with the efforts of Kautilya to expel the Nandas. The Maháwasó, evidently intending the same events, gives names and circumstances differently; it may be doubted if with more accuracy. On the deposal of Nágadás, the people raised to the throne the minister Susunága, who reigned eighteen years. This prince is evidently confounded with the Sísúnága of the Puráñas. He was succeeded by his son Kálásoko, who reigned twenty years; and he was succeeded by his sons, ten of whom reigned together for twenty-two years: subsequently there were nine, who, according to their seniority, reigned for twenty-two years. The Brahman Chánasko put the ninth surviving brother, named Dhana-Nando (Rich-Nanda), to death, and installed Chandragutto. Maháwasó, p. 15 and 21. These particulars, notwithstanding the alteration of some of the names, belong clearly to one story; and that of the Buddhists looks as if it was borrowed and modified from that of the Brahmans. The commentary on the Maháwasó, translated by Mr. Turnour (Introduction, p. xxxviii.), calls the sons of Kálásoko the ‘nine Nandas;’ but another Buddhist authority, the Dipawansó, omits Kálásoko, and says that Susunága had ten brothers, who after his demise reigned collectively twenty-two years. Journal of the As. Soc. of Bengal, Nov. 1838, p. 930.

20 For the particulars of the story here alluded to, see the Mudrá Ráksha, Hindu Theatre, vol. II. Kautilya is also called, according to the commentator on our text, Vástyáya, Vishñúgupta, and Chánákya. According to the Mataya P., Kautilya retained the regal authority for a century; but there is some inaccuracy in the copies. 21 This is the most important name in all the lists, as it can scarcely be doubted that he is the Sandrocottus, or, as Athenaeus writes more correctly, the Sandrocop, of the Greeks, as I have endeavoured to prove in the introduction to the Mudrá Ráksha. The relative positions of Chandragupta, Vidmissa, or Bimbissára, and Ajátastra, serve to confirm the identification. Sákya was contemporary with both the latter, dying in the eighth year of Ajátastra’s reign. The Maháwasó says he reigned twenty-four years afterwards; but the Váyu makes his whole reign but twenty-five years, which would place the close of it B. C. 526. The rest of the Sásunága dynasty, according to the Váyu and Mataya, reigned 143 or 140 years; bringing their close to B. C. 383. Another century being deducted for the duration of the Nandas, would place the accession of PRINCES OF THE MAURYA FAMILY.

Chandragupta B.C. 323. Chandragupta was the contemporary of Seleucus Nicator, who began his reign B.C. 310, and concluded a treaty with him B.C. 305. Although therefore his date may not be made out quite correctly from the Paurāṇik premises, yet the error cannot be more than twenty or thirty years. The result is much nearer the truth than that furnished by Buddhist authorities. According to the Mahāvamsā a hundred years had elapsed from the death of Buddha to the tenth year of the reign of Kāśyapa (p. 15). He reigned other ten years, and his sons forty-four, making a total of 154 years between the death of Sākyas and the accession of Chandragupta, which is consequently placed B.C. 389, or above seventy years too early. According to the Buddhist authorities, Chan-ta-kutta or Chandragupta commenced his reign 396 B.C. Burmese Table; Prinsep’s Useful Tables. Mr. Turnour, in his Introduction, giving to Kāśyapa eighteen years subsequent to the century after Buddha, places Chandragupta’s accession B.C. 391, which, he observes, is sixty years too soon; dating, however, the accession of Chandragupta from 323 B.C. or immediately upon Alexander’s death, a period too early by eight or ten years at least. The discrepancy of dates, Mr. Turnour is disposed to think, proceeds from some intentional perversion of the buddhistical chronology. Introd. p. I. The commentator on our text says that Chandragupta was the son of Nanda by a wife named Murā, whence he and his descendants were called Mauryas: चन्द्रगुप्त नन्दस्वेत पञ्चलवर्धन नुभुशस्व नृप भैरववाहि प्रत्यगे। Col. Tod considers Maurya a corruption of Mori, the name of a Rajput tribe. The Tika on the Mahāvamsā builds a story on the fancied resemblance of the word to Mayūra, S. Mori, Pr. ‘a peacock.’ There being abundance of pea-fowl in the place where the Sākya tribe built a town, they called it Mori, and there princes were thence called Mauryas. Turnour, Introduction to the Mahāvamsā, p. xxxix. Chandragupta reigned, according to the Vāyu, 24 years; according to the Mahāvamsā, 34; to the Dīpavamsa, 24.

22 So the Mahāvamsā, Bindusāra, Burmese Table, Bin-tu-sara. The Vāyu has Bhadrāśāra, 25 years; the Bhāgavata, Vārisāra. The Mataya names but four princes of this race, although it concurs with the others in stating the series to consist of ten. The names are also differently arranged, and one is peculiar: they are, Satadhana, Vrihadratu, Suka, and Dārathu.

23 Aśoka, 36 years, Vāyu; Suka, 26, Mats.; Aṣokavardhana, Bhāg.; Aśoko and Dhammasoko, Mahāvamsā. This king is the most celebrated of any in the annals of the Buddhists. In the commencement of his reign he followed the Brahmanical faith, but became a convert to that of Buddha, and a zealous encourager of it. He is said to have maintained in his palace 64,000 Buddhist priests, and to have erected 84,000 columns or topes throughout India. A great convocation of Buddhist priests was held in the eighteenth year of his reign, which was followed by missions to Ceylon and other places. According to Buddhist chronology he ascended the throne 218 years after the death of Buddha, B.C. 325.
The dynasty of the Śungas will next become possessed of the sovereignty; for Pushpamitra, the general of the last Maurya prince, will the grandson of Chandragupta, however, he must have been some time subsequent to this, or, agreeably to the joint duration of the reigns of Chandragupta and Bindusāra, supposing the former to have commenced his reign about B.C. 315, forty-nine years later, or B.C. 266. The duration of his reign is said to have been thirty-six years, bringing it down to B.C. 230: but if we deduct these periods from the date assignable to Chandragupta, of B.C. 283, we shall place Aśoka's reign from B.C. 234 to 198. Now it is certain that a number of very curious inscriptions, on columns and rocks, by a Buddhist prince, in an ancient form of letter, and the Pāli language, exist in India; and that some of them refer to Greek princes, who can be no other than members of the Seleucid and Ptolemaic dynasties, and are probably Antiochus the Great and Ptolemy Euergetes, kings of Syria and Egypt in the latter part of the third century before Christ. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, February and March, 1838. The Indian king appears always under the appellation Piyādāsi or Piya-dārāśīn, 'the beautiful;' and is entitled Devānām-piya, 'the beloved of the gods.' According to Buddhist authorities, the Rasawāhīnī and Dipawansō, quoted by Mr. Turnour (J. As. Soc. of Bengal, Dec. 1837, p. 1056, and Nov. 1838, p. 930), Piyādāsi or Piyadāsano is identified both by name and circumstances with Aśoka, and to him therefore the inscriptions must be attributed. Their purport agrees well enough with his character, and their wide diffusion with the traditionary report of the number of his monuments. His date is not exactly that of Antiochus the Great, but it is not very far different, and the corrections required to make it correspond are no more than the inexact manner in which both Brahmanical and Buddhist chronology is preserved may well be expected to render necessary.

24 The name of Daśaratha, in a similar ancient character as that of Piyādāsi's inscriptions, has been found at Gaya amongst Buddhist remains, and like them deciphered by Mr. Prinsep, Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, Aug. 1837, p. 677. A different series of names occurs in the Vāyu; or, Kuśala, 8 yrs.; Bandhupālīta, Indrapālīta, Daśavarman, 7 yrs.; Śatadhara, 8 yrs.; and Viṛhadaśwa, 7 yrs. The Bhāgavata agrees in most of the names, and its omission of Daśaratha is corrected by the commentator. 25 Śatadhavanwan, Bhāg.

26 The Vāyu says nine Sumūrttyas reigned 137 years. The Matsya and Bhāgavata have ten Mauryas, and 137 years. The detailed numbers of the Vāyu and Matsya differ from their totals, but the copies are manifestly corrupt.
put his master to death, and ascend the throne: his son will be Agnimitra; his son will be Sujyeshtha; his son will be Vasumitra; his son will be Ardaka; his son will be Pulindaka; his son will be Ghoshavasu; his son will be Vajramitra; his son will be Bhagavata; his son will be Devabhuti. These are the ten Sungas, who will govern the kingdom for a hundred and twelve years.

Devabhuti, the last Sunga prince, being addicted to immoral indulgences, his minister, the Kania named Vasudeva will murder him, and usurp the kingdom: his son will be Bhumnimitra; his son will be Narayana; his son will be Suamarman. These four Kania will be kings of the earth for forty-five years.

---

27 The Bhagavata omits this name, but states that there were ten Sungas, although, without Pushpamitra, only nine are named. The Vayu and Mataya have the same account of the circumstances of his accession to the throne; the former gives him a reign of sixty, the latter of thirty-six years. In a play attributed to Kalidasa, the Malavikagnimitra, of which Agnimitra is the hero, his father is alluded to as the Senani or general, as if he had deposed his master in favour, not of himself, but of his son. Agnimitra is termed king of Vidi, not of Magadh. Pushpamitra is represented as engaged in a conflict with the Yavanas on the Indus; thus continuing the political relations with the Greeks or Scythians of Bactria and Ariana. See Hindu Theatre, vol. I. 347.

28 8 yrs. V.; omitted M.

29 7 yrs. V. and M.; but the latter places him after Vasumitra; and in the drama the son of Agnimitra is called Vasumitra.

30 8 yrs. V.; 10 yrs. M.

31 Andraka, V.; Antaka, M.: they agree in his reign, 2 years. Bhadraka, Bhag.

32 3 yrs. V. and M.

33 3 yrs. V.; omitted, M.; Ghosha, Bhag.

34 9 yrs. M.

35 Bhag., M.; 32 yrs. V. and M.

36 Kehemabhumi, V.; Devabhumi, M.; 10 yrs. both.

37 The Bhagavata says, 'more than a hundred,'७५१६९७४२५१७५१७५१. The commentator explains it 112, ७५१६९७४२५१७५१. The Vayu and Mataya have the same period.

38 The names of the four princes agree in all the authorities. The Mataya transfers the character of Vyasani to the minister, with the further addition of his being a Brahman; Dwija. In the lists given by Sir Wm. Jones and Col. Wilford, the four Kaiwas are said to have reigned 345 years; but in seven copies of the Vishnu P., from different parts of India, the number is, as given in the text, forty-five: ये काळायनप्राग्यां पंचमाकालिकाः पौर्णिमा कुमारः भविष्यति। There is however authority for the larger number, both in the text of the Bhagavata and the comment. The former has, काळायनप्राग् ये गुरुकृपालिका पंचमाः पौर्णिमा कुमार: च कल्ली युगः इ and the latter, काळायनप्राग्याः Suśarman the Káñwa will be killed by a powerful servant named Śirpraka, of the Ándhra tribe, who will become king, and found the Ándhrabhṛitya dynasty:

- his son will be Śí Śatakarni;
- his son will be Purñotsanga;
- his son will be Śatakarni (2nd);
- his son will be Lambodara;
- his son will be Ivilaka;
- his son will be Meghaswáti;
- his son will be Patumat.

There is no doubt therefore of the purport of the text; and it is only surprising that such a chronology should have been inserted in the Bhágavata, not only in opposition to all probability, but to other authority. The Váyu and Matsya not only confirm the lower number by stating it as a total, but by giving it in detail; thus:

- Vasudeva will reign 9 years
- Bhúmitra ———— 14
- Náráyána ———— 12
- Suśarman ———— 10
- Total 45

And six copies of the Matsya concur in this statement.

The expressions Ándhrabhṛityas and Ándhrabhṛityas have much perplexed Col. Wilford, who makes 3 races out of one, Ándras, Ándhrabhṛityas, and Ándhrabhṛityas. As. Res. IX. 101. There is no warrant for three races in the Puráṇas, although the Matsya, and perhaps the Váyu, distinguishes two, as we shall hereafter see. Our text has but one, to which all the terms may be applied. The first of the dynasty was an Ándhra by birth or caste (játiya), and a servant (bhṛitya) of the last of the Káñwa race. So the Váyu; the Matsya; the Ándhrabhṛityas of the Bhágavata; the Ándhrabhṛityas; the Ándhrabhṛityas; the Ándhrabhṛityas; and the Ándhrabhṛityas.

10 yrs. V.; 18, M.
5 yrs. V.; 18, M.; 10, Brahmacáda, Wilford; Simálkarni, Matsa; Sántakarni, Bhág.
Omitted, V. and Bhág.; 5 yrs. M.; but the latter has before him a Śrivaswáni, 18 yrs.
18 yrs. M.
12 yrs. V. and M.; Chivicika or Viviká, Bhág.
Omitted, V. and M.
24 yrs. V.; Drīrmána, Bhág.
son will be Arishtakarman; his son will be Hála; his son will be Tálaka; his son will be Pravilasena; his son will be Sundara, named Śātakarṇī; his son will be Chakora Śātakarṇī; his son will be Śivaswáti; his son will be Gomatiputra; his son will be Pulimat; his son will be Śivasrá Śātakarṇī; his son will be Śivasāndha; his son will be Yajnasrá; his son will be Vijaya; his son will be Chandraśrí; his son will be Pulomáricha. These thirty Andhrabhṛitya kings will reign four hundred and fifty-six years.

48 Nemi-krishña, 25 yrs. V.; Arishtakarṇī, 25 yrs. M.
49 Hála, 1 yr. V.; 5 yrs. M.; Háleya, Bhág.
50 Mandalaka, 5 yrs. M.; omitted, Bhág.
51 Purishasena, 21 yrs. V.; Purindrasena, 5 yrs. M.; Purishatru, Bhág.
52 Śātakarṇi only, V. and M.; the first gives him three years, the second but one.
53 Sunanda, Bhág.
54 Chakora, 6 months, V.; Vikarñí, 6 months, M.
55 28 yrs. V. and M.
56 Gotamiputra, 21 yrs. V. and M.
57 Pulomat, 28 yrs. M.; Purimat, Bhág.
59 Omitted, V.; 7 yrs. M.
60 29 yrs. V.; 9 yrs. M.
61 Daśadāri, 3 yrs. V.; Chandrasrá, 10 yrs. M.; Chandravijaya, Bhág.
62 Pulovápi, 7 yrs. V.; Pulomat, 7 yrs. M.; Sulomadhí, Bhág.
63 The Váyu and Bhágavata state also 30 kings, and 456 years; the Mataya has 29 kings, and 460 years. The actual enumeration of the text gives but 24 names; that of the Bhágavata but 23; that of the Váyu but 17. The Mataya has the whole 29 names, adding several to the list of our text; and the aggregate of the reigns amounts to 435 years and 6 months. The difference between this and the total specified arises probably from some inaccuracy in the MSS. As this list appears to be fuller than any other, it may be advisable to insert it as it occurs in the Radcliffe copy of the Mataya P.

1. Śíasuka........23 yrs.
2. Krihna........18
3. Simalakarñí........18
4. Purnotsanga........18
5. Śrivaswáni........18
6. Sātakarñí........56
7. Lambodara........18
8. Apítaka........12
9. Sangha........18
10. Sātakarñí........18
11. Skandhaswáti...
12. Mrigendra....3
13. Kuntalasváti...
14. Śwātikarña....1
15. Pulomávīt.....36
16. Goraksháswaári...
17. Hála........5
18. Mantalaka....5
19. Purindrasena...
20. Rajádaswáti...6 months
21. Śivaswáti......28
22. Gautamiputra...21
23. Pulomat......28

6
After these, various races will reign, as seven Ábhíras, ten Gardhábas, sixteen Śakas, eight Yavanas, fourteen Tusháras, thirteen Muñdás,

24. Sivasrī ............ 7
25. Skandhasvāti ... 7
26. Yajnāsṛī ....... 9
27. Vijaya ............ 6
28. Vādasṛī .......... 10
29. Pulomāt ......... 7

Total 435 yrs. 6 m.

Several of the names vary in this list from those in my copy. The adjuncts Śvāti and Sātikarśa appear to be conjoined or not with the other appellations, according to the convenience of the metre, and seem to be the family designations or titles. The dynasty is of considerable chronological interest, as it admits of some plausible verifications. That a powerful race of Andhra princes ruled in India in the beginning of the Christian era, we learn from Pliny, who describes them as possessed of thirty fortified cities, with an army of 100,000 men and 1000 elephants. The Andρe of this writer are probably the people of the upper part of the peninsula, Andhra being the proper designation of Telengana. The Peutingerian tables, however, place the Andre-Indi on the banks of the Ganges, and the southern princes may have extended or shifted the site of their power. Towards the close of the dynasty we find names that appear to agree with those of princes of middle India, of whom mention is made by the Chinese; as, Yue-gnai (Yajnāsṛī), king of Kiapilī, A.D. 408; Des Guignes, I. 45; and Ho-lo-mien (Pulomān), king of Magadhā in 621; ibid. I. 56. The Purāṇik lists place these two princes more nearly together, but we cannot rely implicitly upon their accuracy. Calculating from Chandragupta downwards, the Indian date of Yajna and the Chinese Yue-gnai corresponds; for we have,

10 Mauryas .................. 137 yrs.
10 Sungas .................. 112
4 Kaśvas .................. 45
27 Andhras ................. 437

Deduct for Chandragupta's date 312 B.C.

419 A.C.

A date remarkably near that derivable from the Chinese annals. If the Indian Pulomān be the same with the Chinese Ho-lo-mien, there must be some considerable omission in the Purāṇik dynasty. There is a farther identification in the case of Ho-lo-mien, which makes it certain that a prince of Magadhā is intended, as the place of his residence is called by the Chinese Kia-so-mo-pulo-ching and Potolitae-ching; or in Sanscrit, Kusums-pura and Pāñali-putra. The equivalent of the latter name consists, not only in the identity of the sounds Pāñali and Po-lo-li, but in the translation of 'putra' by 'son,' each word meaning in their respective languages 'son.' No doubt can be entertained therefore that the city intended is the metropolis of Magadhā, Pāñali-putra or Pali-bothra. Wilford identifies Pulomāt or Pulomān with the Po-lo-muen of the Chinese; but Des Guignes interprets Po-lo-muen kuś, 'royaume des Brahmanes.' Buchanān (Hamilton), following the Bhāgavata as to the name of the last king, Sulomadhi, would place him about A.D. 846; but his premises are far from accu-eleven Maunas, altogether seventy-nine princes, who will be sovereigns rate, and his deduction in this instance at least is of no weight. General of the Hindus, Introd. p. 16. He supposes the Andhra kings of Magadhá to have retained their power on the Ganges until the Mohammedan invasion, or the twelfth century, when they retired to the south, and reigned at Warankal in Telingana.
Inscriptions and coins, however, confirm the statement of the Puráñas, that a diff erent dynasty succeeded to the Andhras some centuries before the Mohammedan conquests; and the Chinese also record, that upon the death of the king of Magadhá, Ho-lo-mien (Puloman?), some time before A.D. 648, great troubles in India took place. Des Guignes. Some very curious and authentic testimony to the actual existence of these Andhra kings has been lately afforded by the discovery of an ancient inscription in Guzarat, in which Rudra Dámá, the Kshatraka or Satrap of Surashtra, is recorded to have repeatedly overcome Sátakarni, king of the southern country (Dakshínápatha).
The inscription is without date, but it is in an old character, and makes mention of the two Maurya princes, Chandragupta and Aśoka, as if not very long prior to its composition. Mr. J. Prinsep, to whom we are indebted for the deciphering and translating of this important document, has been also successful in deciphering the legends on a series of coins belonging to the princes of Surashtra, amongst whom the name of Rudra Dámá occurs; and he is inclined, although with hesitation, to place these princes about a century after Aśoka, or Rudra Dámá about 153 B.C.
J. As. Soc. Bengal, May 1837, and April

1858. According to the computation haz-arded above from our text, the race of Andhra kings should not commence till about 20 years B.C., which would agree with Pliny’s notice of them; but it is possible that they existed earlier in the south of India, although they established their authority in Magadhá only in the first centuries of the Christian era.

64 These parallel dynasties are thus particularized in our other authorities:

A’híras, 7, M.; 10, V.; kings of Ava-bhriti, 7, Bhág.
Gardábbhás, 10, M. V. Bhág.
Sákas, 18, M. V.; Kanksas, 16, Bhág.
Yavanás, 8, M. V. Bhág.
Tusháras, 14, M. V.; Tushárás, 14, Bhág.
Márudádas, 13, V.; Purúdéas, 13, M.
Surúdéas, 10, Bhág.
Maunas, 18, V.; Húñas, 19, M.; Maulas, 11, Bhág.
Total—85 kings, Váyu; 89, Mataya;
76, and 1399 years, Bhág.
The other two authorities give the years of each dynasty severally. The numbers are apparently intended to be the same, but those of the Mataya are palpable blunders, although almost all the MSS. agree in the reading. The chronology of the Váyu is, Áhíras, 67 years; Gardábbhás,
72; Sákas, 380; Yavanás, 82; Tusháras, 500 (all the copies of the Mataya have 7000); Marúdéas, 200; and Mlečchhas, intending perhaps Maunas, 300 yrs. Total 1601 years, or less than 19 years to a reign. They are not however continuous, but nearly cotemporary dynasties; and if they comprise, as they probably do, the Greek and Scythian princes of the west of India, the periods may not be very wide of the earth for one thousand three hundred and ninety years; and of the truth. The Mataya begins the list with one more dynasty, another Andhra (see n. 39), of whom there were seven: अङ्कायं स्वभावं राज्यं श्रेयं मुक्तायं नुयः। सति श्वायं भवत्सिदैष जनानायं नुयः। ‘When the dominion of the Andhras has ceased, there shall be seven other Andhras, kings of the race of their servants; and then nine आभीराक्रमणां अङ्कायं राज्यं श्रेयं मुक्तायं नुयां। ‘Of these, the Andhras having passed away, there shall be seven contemporary races; as, ten आभीराक्रमणां अङ्कायं राज्यं श्रेयं मुक्तायं नुयां। ‘The Andhras shall possess the earth two hundred years and one hundred.’ The Mataya has twice five hundred: अङ्कायं स्वभावं राज्यं श्रेयं मुक्तायं नुयां। ‘The Śrīparvatiya Andhras twice five hundred years.’ One MS. has more consistently fifty-two years: श्रीपर्वतियां अङ्कायं राज्यं श्रेयं मुक्तायं नुयां। But there is evidently something faulty in all the MSS. The expression of the Mataya, श्रीपर्वति अङ्कायं, is remarkable; Śrīparvata being in Telingana. There is probably some confusion of the two races, the Magadh and Tailanga kings, in these passages of the Purāṇas. The Bhāgavata has a dynasty of seven Andhra kings, but of a different period (see n. 39). Col. Wilford has attempted a verification of these dynasties; in some instances per-then eleven Pauras will be kings for three hundred years. When they are destroyed, the Kailakila Yavanas will be kings; the chief of whom will be Vindhyāsakti; his son will be Puranjaya; his son will be Rāma-chandra; his son will be Adharma, from whom will be Varāṅga, Kritanandana, Sudhinand, Nandiyāsás, Śīsuka, and Pravira; these will rule for a hundred and six years. From them will proceed thirteen sons; evidently some affinity between these Garddabhins and the old Gadha Pysa, or as money, as vulgarly termed, found in various parts of western India, and which is unquestionably of ancient date. Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, Dec. 1835, p. 688. It may be the coinage of the Garddabha princes; Garddabha, being the original of Gadha, meaning also an ass. I have elsewhere conjectured the possibility of their being current about a century and a half before our era. Journ. R. As. Soc. vol. III. 385. Col. Tod, quoting a parallel passage in Hindi, reads, instead of Garddabhin, Gor-ind, which he explains the Indras or lords of Gor; but the reading is undoubtedly erroneous.

The copies agree in reading Pauras, but the commentator remarks that it is sometimes Maunas, but they have already been specified; unless the term be repeated in order to separate the duration of this dynasty from that of the rest. Such seems to be the purport of the similar passage of the Bhāgavata. 'These kings (Andhras, &c.) will possess the earth 1099 years, and the eleven Maulas 300.' No such name as Pauras occurs in the other authorities. The analogy of duration identifies them with the Mlechchhas of the Vāyu: 'Eleven Mlechchhas will possess the earth for three centuries;'

and the Vāyu may refer to the Maunas, as no other period is assigned for them. The periods of the Bhāgavata, 1099 and 300, come much to the same as that of our text, 1390; the one including the three centuries of the Maunas, the other stating it separately. The Vāyu apparently adds it to the rest, thus making the total 1601, instead of 1390. It is evident that the same scheme is intended by the several authorities, although some inaccuracy affects either the original statement or the existing manuscripts.

Kilakila, Kolakila, Kolikila, Kilina-kila, as it is variably read. Sir Wm. Jones's Pandit stated that he understood it to be a city in the Mahratta country (As. Res. XI. 142); and there has been found a confirmation of his belief in an inscription, where Kilagila, as it is there termed, is called the capital of Márasinha Deva, king of the Konkan. Journ. R. As. Soc. vol. IV. p. 282. This inscription dates A. D. 1058. The Purāṇas refer probably to a long antecedent date, when the Greek princes, or their Indo-Scythic successors, following the course of the Indus, spread to the upper part of the western coast of the peninsula. The text calls them Yavanas; and the Vāyu and Matsya say they were Yavanas in institutions, manners, and policy: श्लोकः: जालापाल्यः। The Bhāgavata names five of their princes, Bhūtananda, then three Bāhlīkas, and Pushpamitra, and Patumitra, and others, to the number of thirteen, will rule over Mekalā.

Bangiri, Śisunandi, Yasaṇandi, and Pravira, who will reign 106 years, and they are therefore imperfect representatives of the series in our text. The Mataya has no farther specific enumeration of any dynasty. The Vāyu makes Pravira the son of Vindhyāsakti; the latter reigning 96 years, and the former 60: the latter is king of Kāchana puri, 'the golden city,' and is followed by four sons, whose names are not mentioned. Between Vindhyāsakti and Pravira, however, a dynasty of kings is introduced, some of the names of which resemble those of the Kīkāli princes of the text. They are, Bhogin the son of Seshanaga, Sadāchandra, Nakhatav, Dhanadhamaṇita, Vivasja, Bhutinandana—at a period before the end of the Sungsas? (the copies have बुजूर्गमि व बुजूर्ग स्नां—Madhunanda, his younger brother Nandiyasas; and in his race there will be three other Rājas, Dauhitra, Śisuka, and Ripukyān. These are called princes of Vidiśa or Videsa; the latter meaning perhaps 'foreign,' and constitute the Nāga dynasty. Our text calls Vindhyāsakti a Muruddabhiśhikita, a warrior of a mixed race, sprung from a Brahman mother and a Kāhatriya mother.

The text of this passage runs thus: 1: The commentator explains by विनधयासक्ति विवासत्रिकोंकोसानां 2: 'Their sons,' 3: The commentator explains by नंदियसास वर्णस्य हस्तस्युपरि: 4: 'thirteen sons of Vindhyāsakti and the rest.' The Bhāgavata has a different statement, identifying the sons of the Vindhyra race with the Bāhlīkas, and making them thirteen: 5: The Bāhlīkas will be their thirteen sons.' As the commentator; 6: The following verse is, गुप्तवाणी राजम् श्रमवेणाम तवेशाय: 7: 'Pushpamitra, a king, and then Durmitra: who or what they were does not appear. The commentator says, 'Pushpamitra was another king, and Durmitra was his son: 8: गुप्तवाणी राजम् श्रमवेणाम तवेशाय: 9: Here is evidently careless and inaccurate compilation. The Vāyu, though not quite satisfactory, accords better with our text. 10: Pravira,' it says, 'will have four sons: when the Vindhyra race is extinct, there will be three Bāhlīka kings, Supratika, Nabhira, who will reign thirty years, and Sakyamānbhava (quere this name), king of the Mahihasas. The Pushpamitrās will then be, and the Paumitrās also, who will be seven kings of Mekalā. Such is the generation.' The plural verb with only two Bāhlīka names indicates some omission, unless we correct it to भोजोते they will reign; but the following name and title, Sakyamānbhava, king of the Mahihasas, seems to have little connexion with the Bāhlīkas. If, in a subsequent part of the citation, the reading 'trayodasā' be correct, it must then be thirteen Paumitrās; but it will be difficult to know what to do with Saptam, 'seven.' If for Santati we might read kings in the seven Kośalas, and there will be as many Naishadhha princes.

In Magadhā a sovereign named Viśvaspatika will establish other tribes; he will exterminate the Kṣhatriya or martial race, and elevate fishermen, barbarians, and Brahmans, and other castes, to power. The nine Nāgas will reign in Padmāvati, Kāntipuri, and Mathurā; and the Guptas of Magadhā along the Ganges to Prayāga. A prince named Saptati, 'seventy,' the sense might be, 'these thirteen kings ruled for seventy-seven years.' However this may be, it seems most correct to separate the thirteen sons or families of the Vindhyas princes from the three Bāhlikas, and them from the Pushpamitras and Paṇumitras, who governed Mekalā, a country on the Narbada (see p. 186. n. 18). What the Bāhlikas, or princes of Balkh, had to do in this part of India is doubtful. The Durmitra of the Bāhagavata has been conjectured by Col. Tod (Trans. R. As. Soc. I. 325) to be intended for the Bactrian prince Demetrius; but it is not clear that even the Bāhagavata considers this prince as one of the Bāhlikas, and the name occurs nowhere else.

69 The Vāyu has Viśvasphāni and Viśvasphātu; the Bhāgavata, Viśvasphūrtī, or in some MSS. Viśvaphūrti. The castes he establishes or places in authority, to the exclusion of the Kṣhatriyas, are called in all the copies of our text Kaivrattas, Paṃas, Pulindas, and Brahmans. The Vāyu (three MSS.) has Kaivrattas, Pan-cchas, Pulindas, and Brahmans: वर्षान्तर वस्मयमय निसविनयमय असुस्तता। The Bhāgavata has, Pulindas, Yadus, and Mādrakas. The Vāyu describes Viśvasphāti as a great warrior, and apparently as a eunuch: विश्वस्वायथ महाराजी दुःख विषुवली गती। विश्वस्वायथ मैत्रीती जीवा बिकृत्तस्य प्रेण। He worshipped the gods and manes, and dying on the banks of the Ganges went to the heaven of Indra: भागवत्तानां प्राप्त यदैं जगद्यमित्र नाबं गतिः।

70 Such appears to be the purport of our text: नव नागाः भोगसाभाः समसूत्राणं नानु वा। गन्धारतां भुग्णादानां भोगसाभाः। The nine Nāgas might be thought to mean the same as the descendants of Sesa Nāga, but the Vāyu has another series here, analogous to that of the text: 'The nine Naka kings will possess the city Champāvatī, and the seven Nāgas (?) the pleasant city Mathura. Princes of the Guptas will possess all these countries, the banks of the Ganges to Prayāga and Sāketa and Magadhā.' नव मादबालिनां भुग्नाब स्मृतां नागाः भोगसाभाः। गन्धारतां भुग्णादानां भोगसाभाः।
Devarakshita will reign, in a city on the sea shore, over the Kośalas, Oḍras, Puṇḍras, and Tāmraliptas. The Guhas will possess Kālinga, Māhihaka, and the mountains of Mahendra. The race of Mañishanu will occupy the countries of the Nishādas, Naimishikas, and Kālatoyas.

The Nākas were Rājas of Bhāgalpur; the Nāgas, of Mathura; and the intermediate countries along the Ganges were governed by the Guptas, or Rājas of the Vaiśa caste. The Bhāgavata seems to have taken great liberties with the account, as it makes Viśwaśphūrtti king over Anugangā, the course of the Ganges from Haridwar, according to the commentator, to Pravāha, residing at Padmāvatī. Wilford considers the Nāgas, Nākas, and Guptas to be all the same: he says, ‘Then came a dynasty of nine kings, called the nine Nācas or Nāgas; these were an obscure tribe, called for that reason Guptavaisas, who ruled in Padmāvatī.’ That city he calls Pota; but in the Mālati and Mādhava, Padmāvatī lies amongst the Vindhya hills. Kāntipuri he makes Cotwal, near Gwalior. The reading of the Vāyu, Cham-pāvati, however, obviates the necessity of all vague conjecture. According to Wilford there is a powerful tribe still called Nākas between the Jamuna and the Betwa. Of the existence and power of the Guptas, however, we have recently had ample proofs from inscriptions and coins, as in the Chandragupta and Samudragupta of the Allatabad column; Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, March and June, 1834; and Kumāragupta, Chandragupta, Samudragupta, Saśigupta, &c. on the Archer coins, found at Kanoj and elsewhere; As. Res. XVII. pl. 1. fig. 5, 7, 13, 19; and Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, Nov. 1835, pl. 38 and 39; and in other numbers of the same Journal: in all which, the character in which the legends are written is of a period prior to the use of the modern Devanagari, and was current in all probability about the fifth century of our era, as conjectured by Mr. Prinsep: see his table of the modifications of the Sanscrit alphabet from 543 B. C. to 1200 A. D. Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, March 1838.

71 The Vāyu also mentions the descendants of Devarakshita or Daivarakshitas as kings of the Kośalas, Tāmralipta, and the sea coast; so far conforming with our text as to include the western parts of Bengal, Tamlook, Medinipur, and Orissa. One copy reads Andhra, perhaps for Odra, Orissa; and one has Champá for the capital, which is probably an error, although the two other MSS., being still more faulty, do not offer the means of correction.

72 The Vāyu has the same. The countries are parts of Orissa and Berar.

73 The Vāyu has sons of Mañishanīya for the ruling dynasty, but names the countries those of the Naishadhás, Yudás, Saśikas, and Kālatoyas. The first name applies to a tract of country near
The people called Kanakas will possess the Amazon country, and that called Mūshka. Men of the three tribes, but degraded, and Ābhiras and Śūdras, will occupy Śaurāshtra, Avanti, Śūra, Arbuda, and Maru-bhūmi: and Śūdras, outcastes, and barbarians will be masters of the banks of the Indus, Dārvika, the Chandrabhāgā, and Kashmir. The Vindhyā mountains, but the last to a country in the north. The west or southwest, however, is probably intended in this place.

The Śtri Rāja is usually placed in Bhoṭe. It may perhaps here designate Malabar, where polyandry equally prevails. Mūshika, or the country of thieves, was the pirate coast of the Konkan. The Vāyu reads Bhokshyaka or Bhokhyaka for Mūshika: सौराष्ट्र भोक्ष्यक्षिण भोक्ष्यक्ष कस्मिन्स्तान, The Bhāgavata omits all these specifications subsequent to the notice of Viśvasphūrti.

From this we might infer that the Viśhū P. was compiled when the Mohammedans were making their first encroachments on the west. They seem to have invaded and to have settled in Sindh early in the eighth century, although Indian princes continued on the Indus for a subsequent period. Scriptor. Arab. de rebus Indicis. Gildemeister, p. 6. They were engaged in hostilities in 698 or 700 with the prince of Kābul, in whose name, however disguised by its Mohammedan representations of Rātīl, Rātabal, or Ratībal, it is not difficult to recognise the genuine Hindu appellation of Ratanpāl, or Ratnapāl. Their progress in this direction has not been traced; but at the period of their invasion of Sindh they advanced to Multan, and probably established themselves there and at Lahore within a century. Kashmir they did not occupy till a much later date, and the Rāja Tarangini takes no notice of any attacks upon it; but the Chinese have recorded an application from the king of Kashmir, Chin-tho-lo-pi-li, evidently the Chandrāpīḍa of the Sanscrit, for aid against the Arabs, about A. D. 713. Gildemeister, p. 13. Although, therefore, not actually settled at the Panjab so early as the beginning, they had commenced their incursions, and had no doubt made good their footing by the end of the eighth or commencement of the ninth century. This age of the Purāṇa is compatible with reference to the contemporary race of Guptan kings, from the fourth or fifth to the seventh or eighth century; or, if we are disposed to go farther back, we may apply the passage to the Greek and Indo-Scythian princes. It seems more likely to be the former period; but in all such passages in this or other Purāṇas there is the risk that verses inspired by the presence of Mohammedan rulers may have been interpolated into the original text. Had the Mohammedans of Hindustan, however, been intended by the latter, the indications would have been more distinct, and the localities assigned to them more central. Even the Bhāgavata, the date of which we have good reason for conjecturing to be the middle of the twelfth century, and which influenced the form assumed about that time by the worship of Viśhū, cannot be thought to refer to the Mohammedan conquerors of These will all be contemporary monarchs, reigning over the earth; kings of churlish spirit, violent temper, and ever addicted to falsehood and wickedness. They will inflict death on women, children, and cows; they will seize upon the property of their subjects; they will be of limited power, and will for the most part rapidly rise and fall; their lives will be short, their desires insatiable, and they will display but little piety. The people of the various countries intermingling with them will follow their example, and the barbarians being powerful in the patronage of the princes, whilst purer tribes are neglected, the people will perish. Wealth and piety will decrease day by day, until upper India. It is there stated, that 'rulers fallen from their castes, or Sudras, will be the princes of Saurashtra, Avanti, Abhira, Sura, Arbuda, and Malava; and barbarians, Sudras, and other outcasts, not enlightened by the Vedas, will possess Kashmir, Kautsi, and the banks of the Chandrabhaga and Indus.' The commentator, having no doubt the existing state of things in view, interprets the passage somewhat differently: the original is, 'वीराः साधुस्वादकमीलविस्तर गानात्सर्वात्सर्वायुं, मुक्तार्थार्थार्थार्थार्थ विलोकनाधिति,' and adds, 'the Mlechchas will be in the centre, and the Aryyas at the end.' Now it was not until the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries that the Mohammedans established themselves in Guzerat and Malava, and the Bhagavata was unquestionably well known in various parts of India long before that time. (Account of Hindu Sects, As. Res. vol. XVI.) It cannot therefore allude to Mohammedans. By specifying the princes as seceders from the Vedas, there is no doubt that the barbarians and outcasts intended are so only in a religious sense; and we know from indisputable authorities that the western countries, Guzerat, Abu, Malava, were the chief seats, first of the Buddhists, and then of the Jainas, from a period commencing perhaps before the Christian era, and scarcely terminating with the Mohammedan conquest. Inscriptions from Abu, As. Res. vol. XVI.
the world will be wholly deprived. Then property alone will confer rank; wealth will be the only source of devotion; passion will be the sole bond of union between the sexes; falsehood will be the only means of success in litigation; and women will be objects merely of sensual gratification. Earth will be venerated but for its mineral treasures; the Brahmanical thread will constitute a Brahman; external types (as the staff and red garments) will be the only distinctions of the several orders of life; dishonesty will be the universal means of subsistence; weakness will be the cause of dependence; menace and presumption will be substituted for learning; liberality will be devotion; simple ablution will be purification; mutual assent will be marriage; fine clothes will be dignity; and water afar off will be esteemed a holy spring. Amidst all castes he who is the strongest will reign over a principality thus vitiated by many faults. The people, unable to bear the heavy burdens imposed upon them by their avaricious sovereigns, will take refuge amongst the valleys of the mountains, and will be glad to feed upon wild honey, herbs, roots, fruits, flowers, and leaves: their only covering will be the bark of trees, and they will be exposed to the cold, and wind, and sun, and rain. No man's life will exceed three and twenty years. Thus in the Kali age shall decay constantly proceed, until the human race approaches its annihilation.

When the practices taught by the Vedas and the institutes of law shall nearly have ceased, and the close of the Kali age shall be nigh, a-institutions, exist in a state of disorder, and the subjects shall be destroyed. The expression Mlechchāchārāśa being used instead of Mlechchāsāchārāśa. A passage similar to that of the text, noticing the intermixture of Hindus and barbarians, occurs in a different place (see p. 175. n. 4), and designates the condition of India in all ages: at no period has the whole of the population followed Brahmanical Hinduism.

That is, there will be no Tirthas, places held sacred, and objects of pilgrimage; no particular spot of earth will have any especial sanctity.

Gifts will be made from the impulse of ordinary feeling, not in connexion with religious rites, and as an act of devotion; and ablution will be performed for pleasure or comfort, not religiously with prescribed ceremonies and prayers.

The expression Sadvādāśā (सद्वादान) is explained to mean either one who wears fine clothes, or who assumes the exterior garb of sanctity. Either interpretation is equally allowable.
portion of that divine being who exists of his own spiritual nature in the character of Brahma, and who is the beginning and the end, and who comprehends all things, shall descend upon earth; he will be born in the family of Vishnuyasas, an eminent Brahman of Sambhala village, as Kalki, endowed with the eight superhuman faculties. By his irresistible might he will destroy all the Mlecchhas and thieves, and all whose minds are devoted to iniquity. He will then re-establish righteousness upon earth; and the minds of those who live at the end of the Kali age shall be awakened, and shall be as pellucid as crystal. The men who are thus changed by virtue of that peculiar time shall be as the seeds of human beings, and shall give birth to a race who shall follow the laws of the Krita age, or age of purity. As it is said; "When the sun and moon, and the lunar asterism Tishya, and the planet Jupiter, are in one mansion, the Krita age shall return."

Thus, most excellent Muni, the kings who are past, who are present, and who are to be, have been enumerated. From the birth of Parikshit to the coronation of Nanda it is to be known that 1015 years have elapsed. When the two first stars of the seven Rishis (the great Bear)

The Bhagavata agrees with the text in these particulars. The chief star of Tishya is 3 in the constellation Cancer.

All the copies concur in this reading; Three copies of the Vayu assign to the same interval 1050 years; and of the Matsya five copies have the same, or 1050 years; whilst one copy has 1500 years; The Bhagavata has 1115 years; which the commentator explains, 'a thousand years and a hundred with fifteen over;' He notices nevertheless, although he does not attempt to account for the discrepancy, that the total period from Parikshit to Nanda was actually, according to the duration of the different intermediate dynasties, as enumerated by all the authorities, fifteen centuries; viz.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Kingdom</th>
<th>Time</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Magadha</td>
<td>1000 yrs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pradyota, &amp;c.</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Si Simmons, &amp;c.</td>
<td>362</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The shorter period is best proportioned to the number of kings; for reckoning from Sahadeva, who was cotemporary with Parikshit, and taking the number of the Vahradrathas from the Matsya, we have thirty-two of them, five of the Pradyota race, and ten Si Simmons, or in all forty-seven; which, as the divisor of 1050, gives rather more than twenty-two years to a reign. The Vayu and the Matsya further specify the interval from Nanda to Pulomat, the last of the Anhira kings, as being 836 years; a total that does not rise in the heavens, and some lunar asterism is seen at night at an equal distance between them, then the seven Rishis continue stationary in that conjunction for a hundred years of men. At the birth of agree exactly with the items previously specified:

9 Nandas ............... 100 yrs.
10 Mauryas .............. 137
10 Sūngas ............... 112
4 Kāṇivas ............... 45
29 Andhras ............. 460

\[ \frac{62}{854} \]

In either case the average duration of reign is not improbable, as the highest number gives less than fourteen years to each prince. It is important to remember that the reign of Pāṇḍuśīt is, according to Hindu chronology, coeval with the commencement of the Kali age; and even therefore taking the longest Paurāṇik interval we have but sixteen centuries between Chandragupta—or considering him as the same with Sandrocoptos, nineteen centuries B.C.—for the beginning of the Kali age. According to the chronology of our text, however, it would be but B.C. 1415; to that of the Vāyu and Mataya, B.C. 1450; and to that of the Bhāgavata, 1515. According to Col. Wilford's computations (As. Res. vol. IX. Chron. Table, p. 115) the conclusion of the great war took place B.C. 1370: Buchanan conjectures it to have occurred in the thirteenth century B.C. Vṛṣaś was the putative father of Pāṇḍu and Dhritarāṣṭra, and consequently was contemporary with the heroes of the great war. Mr. Colebrooke infers from astronomical data that the arrangement of the Vedas attributed to Vṛṣaś took place in the fourteenth century B.C. Mr. Bentley brings the date of Yudhishthira, the chief of the Pāṇḍavas, to 575 B.C. (Historical View of Hindu Astronomy, p. 67); but the weight of authority is in favour of the thirteenth or fourteenth century B.C. for the war of the Mahābhārata, and the reputed commencement of the Kali age.

A similar explanation is given in the Bhāgavata, Vāyu, and Mataya Purāṇas; and like accounts from astronomical writers are cited by Mr. Colebrooke, As. Res. vol. IX. p. 358. The commentator on the Bhāgavata thus explains the notion: “The two stars (Pulaha and Kratu) must rise or be visible before the rest, and whichever asterism is in a line south from the middle of those stars, is that with which the seven stars are united; and so they continue for one hundred years.” Col. Wilford has also given a like explanation of the revolution of the Rishis; As. Res. vol. IX. p. 83. According to Bentley the notion originated in a contrivance of the astronomers to shew the quantity of the precession of the equinoxes. “This was by assuming an imaginary line or great circle passing through the poles of the ecliptic and the beginning of the fixed Maghā, which circle was supposed to cut some of the stars in the Great Bear. The seven stars in the Great Bear the circle so assumed was called the line of the Rishis, and being fixed to the beginning of the lunar asterism Maghā, the precession would be solved by stating the degree &c. of any moveable lunar mansion cut by that fixed line or circle as an Paríkṣiṣṭ they were in Maṅgá, and the Kali age then commenced, which consists of 1200 (divine) years. When the portion of Viṣṇu (that had been born from Vasudeva) returned to heaven, then the Kali age commenced. As long as the earth was touched by his sacred feet, the Kali age could not affect it. As soon as the incarnation of the eternal Viṣṇu had departed, the son of Dharma, Yudhishthira, with his brethren, abdicated the sovereignty. Observing unpropitious portents, consequent upon Viṣṇu’s disappearance, he placed Paríkṣiṣṭ upon the throne. When the seven Rishis are in Purváśādha, then Nanda will begin to reign, and thenceforward the influence of the Kali will augment.

index. Historical View of Hindu Astronomy, p. 65.

The Bhágavata has the same; and this agrees with the period assigned for the interval between Paríkṣiṣṭ and Nanda of 1050 years; as, including Maṅgá, we have ten asterisms to Purváśādha, or 1000 years. The Váyu and Mataya are so very inaccurate in all the copies consulted, that it is not safe to affirm what they mean to describe. Apparently they state that at the end of the Andhra dynasty the Rishis will be in Krittiká, which furnishes other ten asterisms; the whole being nearly in accordance with the chronology of the text, as the total interval from Paríkṣiṣṭ to the last of the Andhras is 1050 +36 = 1886, and the entire century of each asterism at the beginning and end of the series need not be taken into account. The copies of the Mataya read, saṃśajñá kham pratisamajñá kham — ‘The seven Rishis are on a line with the brilliant Agni;’ that is, with Krittiká, of which Agni is the presiding deity. The Váyu intends in all probability the same phrase, but the three copies have, práne rāki a very unintelligible clause. Again, it seems as if they intended to designate the end of the Andhra race as the period of a complete revolution, or 2700 years; for the Váyu has, samānmu: sahi bhāṣajata samajñáma bhaktvi — ‘The races at the end of the Andhrs will be after 2700 years:’ the Mataya has, samānmu: sahi bhāṣajata samajñáma bhaktvi (?) puna: and at the close of the passage, after specifying as usual that ‘the seven Rishis were in Maṅgá in the time of Paríkṣiṣṭ,’ pránte násatama: caite vărīka: kham the Váyu adds, saṃśajñá kham pratisamajñá kham — a passage which, though repeated in the MSS., is obviously most inaccurate; although it might perhaps be understood to intimate that the Rishis will be in the twenty-fourth asterism after the Andhra race; but that would give only 1400 years from Paríkṣiṣṭ to Pulomat; whilst if the twenty-fourth from Maṅgá was intended, it would give 2400 years: both periods being incompatible with previous specifications. The Mataya has a different reading of the second line, but one not much more satisfactory; práabha saṁśajñá vṛttir vṛttir svarajyam — ‘A hundred years of Brahmá will be in the twenty-fourth (asterism?).’ In neither of these authorities, however, is it proposed by the last-cited passages to illustrate the chronology of princes or dynasties: the speci-
The day that Krishña shall have departed from the earth will be the first of the Kali age, the duration of which you shall hear; it will continue for 360,000 years of mortals. After twelve hundred divine years shall have elapsed, the Krita age shall be renewed.

Thus age after age Brahmans, Kshatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śúdras, excellent Brahman, men of great souls, have passed away by thousands; whose names and tribes and families I have not enumerated to you, from their great number, and the repetition of appellations it would involve. Two persons, Devápi of the race of Puru, and Maru of the family of Ikshwáku, through the force of devotion continue alive throughout the whole four ages, residing at the village of Kalápa: they will return hither in the beginning of the Krita age, and, becoming members of the family of the Manu, give origin to the Kshatriya dynasties. In this manner the earth is possessed through every series of the three first ages, the Krita, Treta, and Dwápara, by the sons of the Manu; and some remain in the Kali age, to serve as the rudiments of renewed generations, in the same way as Devápi and Maru are still in existence.

I have now given you a summary account of the sovereigns of the earth; to recapitulate the whole would be impossible even in a hundred lives. These and other kings, who with perishable frames have possessed this ever-during world, and who, blinded with deceptive notions of individual occupation, have indulged the feeling that suggests, "This earth is mine—it is my son's—it belongs to my dynasty," have all passed away. So, many who reigned before them, many who succeeded them, and many who are yet to come, have ceased, or will cease, to be. Earth laughs, as if smiling with autumnal flowers, to behold her kings unable to effect the subjugation of themselves. I will repeat to you, Maitreya, the stanzas that were chanted by Earth, and which the Muni Asita communicated to Janaka, whose banner was virtue. "How great is the folly of princes, who are endowed with the faculty of reason, to cherish the confidence of ambition, when they themselves are but foam upon the wave. Before they have subdued themselves, they seek to reduce their ministers, their servants, their subjects, under their authority; they then endeavour to overcome their foes. 'Thus,' say they, 'will we conquer the ocean-circled earth;' and, intent upon their project, behold not death, which is not far off. But what mighty matter is the subjugation of the sea-girt earth to one who can subdue himself. Emancipation from existence is the fruit of self-control. It is through infatuation that kings desire to possess me, whom their predeccessors have been forced to leave, whom their fathers have not retained. Beguiled by the selfish love of sway, fathers contend with sons, and brothers with brothers, for my possession. Foolishness has been the character of every king who has boasted, 'All this earth is mine—every thing is mine—it will be in my house for ever;' for he is dead. How is it possible that such vain desires should survive in the hearts of his descendants, who have seen their progenitor, absorbed by the thirst of dominion, compelled to relinquish me, whom he called his own, and tread the path of dissolution? When I hear a king sending word to another by his ambassador, 'This earth is mine; immediately resign your pretensions to it;' I am moved to violent laughter at first, but it soon subsides in pity for the infatuated fool."

84 The Bhágavata has the same. Devápi, as the commentator observes, being the restorer of the lunar, and Maru of the solar race.

These were the verses, Maitreya, which Earth recited, and by listening to which ambition fades away like snow before the sun. I have now related to you the whole account of the descendants of the Manu; amongst whom have flourished kings endowed with a portion of Vishnu, engaged in the preservation of the earth. Whoever shall listen reverently and with faith to this narrative, proceeding from the posterity of Manu, shall be purified entirely from all his sins, and, with the perfect possession of his faculties, shall live in unequalled affluence, plenty, and prosperity. He who has heard of the races of the sun and moon, of Ikshwaku, Jahu, Manohatra, Sagar, and Raghu, who have all perished; of Yayati, Nahusha, and their posterity, who are no more; of kings of great might, resistless valour, and unbounded wealth, who have been overcome by still more powerful time, and are now only a tale; he will learn wisdom, and forbear to call either children, or wife, or house, or lands, or wealth, his own. The arduous penances that have been performed by heroic men obstructing fate for countless years, religious rites and sacrifices of great efficacy and virtue, have been made by time the subject only of narration. The valiant Prithu traversed the universe, everywhere triumphant over his foes; yet he was blown away, like the light down of the Simal tree, before the blast of time. He who was Kārtavīrya subdued innumerable enemies, and conquered the seven zones of the earth; but now he is only the topic of a theme, a subject for affirmation and contradiction. Fie upon the empire of the sons of Raghu, who triumphed over Daśāñana, and extended their sway to the ends of the earth; for was it not consumed in an instant by the frown of the destroyer? Maṇḍhātri, the emperor of the universe, is embodied only in a legend; and what pious man who hears it will ever be so unwise as to cherish the desire of possession in his soul? Bhagiratha, Sagara, Kakutsha, Daśāñana, Rāma, Lakshmana, Yudhishthira, and others, have been. Is it so? Have they ever really existed? Where are they now? we know not! The powerful kings who now are, or who will be, as I have related them to you, or any others who are unspecified, are all subject to the same fate, and the present and the future will perish and be forgotten, like their predecessors. Aware of this truth, a wise man will never be influenced by the principle of individual appropriation; and regarding them as only transient and temporal possessions, he will not consider children and posterity, lands and property, or whatever else is personal, to be his own.

85 To be the cause of Sankalpa, 'conviction,' 'belief;' and Vikalpa, 'doubt,' 'disbelief.' The Bhāgavata indulges in a similar strain, and often in the same words. The whole recalls the words of the Roman satirist; I demens et aevas curre per alpes, Ut pueris placens et declamatio fas.
VISHṆU PURĀṆA.

BOOK V.

CHAP. I.

The death of Kansa announced. Earth, oppressed by the Daityas, applies to the gods. They accompany her to Vishnu, who promises to give her relief. Kansa imprisons Vasudeva and Devaki. Vishnu's instructions to Yoganidra.

MAITREYA. — You have related to me a full account of all the different dynasties of kings, and of their successive transactions. I wish

1 The whole of this book is dedicated to the biography of Krishnā. Many of the Purāṇas omit this subject altogether, or only allude to it occasionally. In others it is equally prominent. The Brāhma P. gives the story exactly in the same words as our text: which has the best right to them may be questioned; but, as it is usually met with, the Brāhma P. is a very heterogeneous compilation. The Hari Vanaṇa has a narrative more detailed than that of the text, with additions and embellishments of its own. The Brāhma Vaivarta throughout celebrates the acts of Krishnā; and one portion of it, the Krishnā Janna Khaṇḍa, especially describes his boyhood and youth. The incidents are the same in general as those in the text, but they are lost amidst innumerable descriptions of Krishnā's sports with the Gopis and with his mistress Rādhā, a person not noticed elsewhere; the whole is in a style indicative of a modern origin. The Agni P. and Padma P. (Uttara Khaṇḍa) have accounts of Krishnā, but they are mere summaries, compiled evidently from other works. The principal authority for the adventures of Krishnā is the Bhāgavata, the tenth book of which is exclusively devoted to him. It is this work which has, no doubt, mainly extended the worship of Krishnā, as its popularity is evinced by its having been translated into all the spoken languages of India professing to have a literature. The Prem-sagar, its Hindi version, is well known; but there are also translations in Mahratta, Telugu, Tamil, &c. It does not seem likely, however, that the Vishnū P. has copied the Bhāgavata; for although its greater conciseness may sometimes look like abridgment, yet the descriptions are generally of a more simple and antiquated character. Here, as usual, the now to hear a more particular description, holy Rishi, of the portion of Vishnu that came down upon earth, and was born in the family of Yadu. Tell me also what actions he performed in his descent, as a part of a part of the supreme, upon the earth.

Parasara.—I will relate to you, Maitreya, the account which you Mahabharata is no doubt the earliest extant authority; but it is not the earliest, for whilst it omits to narrate most of his personal adventures unconnected with his alliance with the Pandavas, it often alludes to them, and names repeatedly his capital, his wives, and his progeny. It also devotes a section, the Mausala P., to the destruction of the Yadavas. The story of Krishna the prince and hero must have been complete when the Mahabharata was compiled. It is doubtful, however, if Krishna the boy, and his adventures at Vrindavan, were not subsequent inventions. There are no allusions to them in the poem, of an unsuspicious nature. The only ones that I have met with are contained in a speech by Siispala, Sahh P., vol. I. p. 360, in which he reviles Krishnā; but they may easily have been interpolated. There may be others scattered through the poem, but I have not observed them.

1 The notices of Krishnā’s origin and character in various passages of the Mahabharata are by no means consistent, and indicate different dates at least. In an address to him by Arjuna, Vana P., vol. I. p. 425, he is said to have passed thousands of years in various holy places, engaged in arduous penances. He is frequently identified with the Rishi Narayana, or he and Arjuna are said to be Nara and Narayana: In the Dāna-dharma he is represented as a worshipper of Siva, and propitiating him and his wife Umā, and receiving as boons from them wives and children. As a warrior and prince he is always on the scene; but he is repeatedly called an Anśa, or portion of Vishnu; whilst in a great number of places he is identified with Vishnu or Narayana, and is consequently ‘all things.’ This latter is his character, of course, amongst the Vaishnavas, agreeably to the text of the Bhāgavata: ‘Kṛṣṇa is the lord (Vishnu) himself.’

2 This is a still farther diminution of Krishnā’s dignity; he is not even a part, but ‘a part of a part,’ Anśa-anśavatāra (वास्तत्व आन्तरण): but this, the commentator maintains, is to be understood only of his form or condition as man, not of his power, as it suffered no diminution, either in its primary or secondary state, as light by suffusion suffers no decrease; and a verse of the Veda is cited to this effect: ‘Though that which is full be taken from what is full, yet the remainder is diminished’;

3 ‘Krishnā is nevertheless the very supreme Brahma, though it be a mystery how the supreme should assume the form of a man; nor is this surprising. ‘The supreme,’ he says, ‘is the flowering plant, the plant that is differentiated. ‘So the Bhāgavata in one passage predicts that the Para-purusha, Purushottama or Vishnu, will be born visibly in the dwelling of Vasudeva; वसुदेवस न वि, the supreme, will manifest to the eyes of humanity.’
have requested; the birth of a part of a part of Vishnu, and the benefits which his actions conferred upon the world.

Vasudeva formerly married the daughter of Devaka, the illustrious Devaki, a maiden of celestial beauty. After their nuptials, Kansa, the increaser of the race of Bhoja, drove their car as their charioteer. As they were going along, a voice in the sky, sounding aloud and deep as thunder, addressed Kansa, and said, “Fool that you are, the eighth child of the damsel whom you are driving in the car shall take away your life!” On hearing this, Kansa drew his sword, and was about to put Devaki to death; but Vasudeva interposed, saying, “Kill not Devaki, great warrior; spare her life, and I will deliver to you every child that she may bring forth.” Appeased by which promise, and relying on the character of Vasudeva, Kansa desisted from the attempt.

At that time, Earth, overburdened by her load, repaired to mount Meru to an assembly of the gods, and addressing the divinities, with Brahmā at their head, related in piteous accents all her distress. “Agni,” said Earth, “is the progenitor of gold; Sūrya, of rays of light: the parent and guide of me and of all spheres is the supreme Nārāyaṇa, who is Brahmā, the lord of the lord of patriarchs; the eldest of the eldest born; one with minutes and hours; one with time; having form, though indiscreet. This assemblage of yourselves, O gods, is but a part of him. The sun, the winds, the saints, the Rudras, the Vasus, the Aświns, fire, the patriarch creators of the universe, of whom Atri is the first, all are but forms of the mighty and inscrutable Vishnu. The Yakshas, Rakṣasas, Daityas, spirits of evil, serpents, and children of Danu, the singers and nymphs of heaven, are forms of the great spirit, Vishnu. The heavens painted with planets, constellations, and stars; fire, water, wind, and myself, and every perceptible thing; the whole universe itself—consists of Vishnu. The multifarious forms of that manifold being encounter

---

4 The Bhāgavata tells the circumstance as in the text. The Hari Vanśa makes Nārada apprise Kansa of his danger. Nārada’s interposition is not mentioned until afterwards by our authority. Devaki is the cousin of Kansa; see p. 436.

5 Agni, or fire, refines gold, burns away the dross, according to the commentator. The sun is the lord of the rays of light; or, as the cause of rain and vegetation, the lord of cattle. The phrase is, गर्व दृष्टे: परो नुसर; 1 and succeed one another, night and day, like the waves of the sea. At this present season many demons, of whom Kālanemi is the chief, have overrun and continually harass the region of mortals. The great Asura Kālanemi⁶, that was killed by the powerful Vishṇu, has revived in Kansa, the son of Ugrasena, and many other mighty demons, more than I can enumerate, as Arishta, Dhenuka, Keśiṇ, Pralamba, Naraka, Sunda, and the fierce Bána, the son of Bali⁷, are born in the palaces of kings. Countless hosts of proud and powerful spirits, chiefs of the demon race, assuming celestial forms, now walk the earth; and, unable to support myself beneath the incumbent load, I come to you for succour. Illustrious deities, do you so act that I may be relieved from my burden, lest helpless I sink into the nethermost abyss."

6 K

When the gods had heard these complaints of Earth, Brahма at their request explained to them how her burden might be lightened. "Celestials," said Brahма, "all that Earth has said is undoubtedly true. I, Mahádeva, and you all, are but Nárāyaṇa; but the impersonations of his power are for ever mutually fluctuating, and excess or diminution is indicated by the predominance of the strong, and the depression of the weak. Come therefore, let us repair to the northern coast of the milky sea, and having glorified Hari, report to him what we have heard. He, who is the spirit of all, and of whom the universe consists, constantly, for the sake of Earth, descends in a small portion of his essence to establish righteousness below." Accordingly Brahма, attended by the gods, went to the milky sea, and there, with minds intent upon him, praised him whose emblem is Garūḍa.

"O thou," said Brahма, "who art distinct from holy writ⁸; whose double nature is twofold wisdom⁹, superior and inferior, and who art the ⁶ According to the Váyu, Kālanemi or Kayabadh was a son of Virochana, the grandson of Hiraṇyakaśipu; his death is described in the Hari Vanśa.

⁷ These appear subsequently in the narration, and are destroyed by Krishṇa.

⁸ Anāmnāya (अनाम्नाय); not the immediate object of the Vedas, which is devotion, not abstraction; ritual or worship, not knowledge.

⁹ The two kinds of knowledge (स्मरण) are termed Parā (परा), 'supreme,' and Aparā (अपरा), 'other' or 'subordinate;' the first is knowledge of Para Brahма, of spirit abstractedly considered, perfect knowledge derived from abstraction; the essential end of both; who, alike devoid and possessed of form, art the twofold Brahma; smallest of the least, and largest of the large; all, and knowing all things; that spirit which is language; that spirit which is supreme; that which is Brahma, and of which Brahma is composed! Thou art the Rich, the Yajush, the Saiman, and the Atharvan Vedas. Thou art accentuation, ritual, signification, metre, and astronomy; history, tradition, grammar, theology, logic, and law: thou who art inscrutable. Thou art the doctrine that investigates the distinctions between soul, and life, and body, and matter endoweth with qualities; and that doctrine is nothing else but thy nature inherent in and presiding over it. Thou art imperceptible, indescribable, inconceivable; without name, or colour, or hands, or feet; pure, eternal, and infinite. Thou hearest without ears, and seest without eyes. Thou art one and multi-form. Thou movest without feet; thou seizest without hands. Thou knowest all, but art not by all to be known. He who beholds thee as the most subtile of atoms, not substantially existent, puts an end to ignorance; and final emancipation is the reward of that wise man whose understanding cherishes nothing other than thee in the form of supreme delight. Thou art the common centre of all, the protector of the second is knowledge of Śabda Brahma, of spirit as described and taught in the Vedas, or their supplementary branches. The identity of the supreme with both descriptions of holy knowledge pervades the whole of the address.

10 Para Brahma and Śabda Brahma: see the preceding note.

11 The doctrine alluded to may be either intended generally, or in the several instances, the discussion of the spiritual soul and living soul, of body subtile and sensible, and of matter endoweth with qualities, reference may be purposed to the Vedánta, Yoga, and Sánkhya systems.

12 That is, as the Śabda Brahma, the supreme is identical with philosophical doctrines, being the object, the instigator, and the result.

13 This is taken from the Vedas, the original of which is quoted and translated by Sir Wm. Jones: see his Works, XIII. 368. The passage is thus cited by the commentator on our text: जयसिवायतो महायो गृहीता पत्नसचू: स मृत्युज्जवली: स कैविते श्रीम ॥ वेद नेत्रा तत्तावुर्ध्वम् युध्येत्स महां ॥ 'Without hand or foot he runs, he grasps; without eyes he seeth; and without ears he heareth: he knoweth all that may be known, and no one knoweth him. Him they call the first great spirit.'

14 Varenya rūpa, explained by Paramánanda murti; he whose form or impersonation is supreme felicity.

15 Literally 'navel of all'; नं विश्वनाभि:
world, and all beings exist in thee: all that has been, or will be, thou art. Thou art the atom of atoms; thou art spirit; thou only art distinct from primeval nature. Thou, as the lord of fire in four manifestations, givest light and fertility to Earth. Thou art the eye of all, and wearer of many shapes, and unobstructedly traversest the three regions of the universe. As fire, though one, is variously kindled, and, though unchangeable in its essence, is modified in many ways, so thou, lord, who art one omnipresent form, taketh upon thee all modifications that exist. Thou art one supreme; thou art that supreme and eternal state which the wise behold with the eye of knowledge. There is nothing else but thou, O lord; nothing else has been or will be. Thou art both discrete and indiscrete, universal and individual, omniscient, all-seeing, omnipotent, possessed of all wisdom and strength and power. Thou art liable neither to diminution nor increase; thou art independent and without beginning; thou art the subjugator of all. Thou art unaffected by weariness, sloth, fear, anger, or desire. Thou art free from soil, supreme, merciful, uniform, undecaying, lord over all, the stay of all, the fountain of light, imperishable. To thee, uninvested by material envelopes, unexposed to sensible imaginings, aggregate of elemental substance, spirit supreme, be adoration. Thou assumest a shape, O pervader of the universe, not as the consequence of virtue or vice, nor from any mixture of the two, but for the sole object of maintaining piety in the world."

The passage is also read, तस निषिद्धार्थः, "Thou art all and the first;" the cause or creator.

16 Or the passage is understood, 'Thou art one subsequently to Prakriti;' that is, thou art Brahmā, the active will of the supreme, creating forms from rudimental matter.

17 As the three fires enjoined by the Vedas, and the fire metaphorically of devotion; or lightnings, solar heat, fire generated artificially, and the fire of digestion or animal fire; or Vishnu in that character bestows beauty, vigour, power, and wealth.

18 Prīta: one copy has Śanta, 'calm,' 'undisturbed.'

19 Beyond the separate layers or envelopes of elementary substances (see p. 19); or, according to the Vedānta notions, uninvested by those grosser sheaths or coverings, derived from food and the like, by which subtle body is enclosed.

20 Mahāvyāhūti sansthāna (समस्थान). Vībhūti is explained by Prapancha, sensible, material, or elementary substance, constituting body.

21 The passage is somewhat obscurely expressed, and is differently interpreted;
The unborn, universal Hari, having heard with his mental ear these eulogiums, was pleased, and thus spake to Brahmá: “Tell me, Brahmá, what you and the gods desire: speak boldly, certain of success.” Brahmá, beholding the divine, universal form of Hari, quickly prostrated himself, and again renewed his praises. “Glory to thee, the thousand-formed, the thousand-armed, the many-visaged, many-footed; to thee, the illimitable author of creation, preservation, and destruction; most subtle of the subtle, most vast of the great: to thee, who art nature, intellect, and consciousness; and who art other spirit even than the spiritual root of those principles.” Do thou shew favour upon us. Behold, lord, this earth, oppressed by mighty Asuras, and shaken to her mountain base, comes to thee, who art her invincible defender, to be relieved from her burden. Behold me, Indra, the Aświns, Varuṇa, and Yama, the Rudras, the Vāsus, the suns, the winds, fire, and all other celestials, prepared to execute whatever thou shalt will that we shall do. Do thou, in whom there is no imperfection, O sovereign of the deities, give thy orders to thy servants: lo, we are ready.”

When Brahmá had ended, the supreme lord plucked off two hairs, one white and one black, and said to the gods, “These my hairs shall descend upon earth, and shall relieve her of the burden of her distress.”

it is, नायकोकाला अयाकालोक्षः। Not from no cause, nor from cause, nor from cause and no cause.

The term ‘no cause’ may, the commentator says, designate fixed prescribed duties, the Nitya-karma; ‘cause’ may signify occasional sacrifices, the Kāmya-karma: neither of these can form any necessity for Vīshnú’s descent, as they might of a mere mortal’s being born on the earth: or Kāraṇa is explained to mean ‘obtaining pleasure,’ from Ka (क) and Kāraṇ (कारण), ‘obtaining; obtaining happiness, or the cause of it, piety, virtue (पवन); and with the negative, Akāraṇa (अकारण), the reverse, pain, the consequence of wickedness (पचले). The purport is clear enough; it is merely meant to state that Vīshnú is not subject to the necessity which is the cause of human birth.

The term Pradhána, which is repeated in this passage, is explained in the second place to mean Pumán, ‘soul’ or ‘spirit.’

The same account of the origin of Krishná is given in the Mahábhárata, Adi P., vol. I. p. 266. The white hair is impersonated as Balaráma; the black, as Krishná. The commentator on our text maintains that this is not to be literally understood: ‘Vīshnú did not intend that the two hairs should become incarnate, but he meant to signify, that, should he send them, they would be more than sufficient to destroy Kansa and his demons: or the birth of Ráma and Krishná was a double illusion, Let all the gods also, in their own portions, go down to earth, and wage war with the haughty Asuras, who are there incorporate, and who shall every one of them be destroyed. Doubt not of this: they shall perish before the withering glance of mine eyes. This my (black) hair shall be impersonated in the eighth conception of the wife of Vasudeva, Devaki, who is like a goddess; and shall slay Kansa, who is the demon Kālanemi.” Thus having spoken, Hari disappeared; and the gods bowing to him, though invisible, returned to the summit of mount Meru, from whence they descended upon earth.

The Muni Nárada informed Kansa that the supporter of the earth, Vishúu, would be the eighth child of Devakí; and his wrath being excited by this report, he placed both Vasudeva and Devakí in confinement. Agreeably to his promise, the former delivered to Kansa each infant as soon as it was born. It is said that these, to the number of six, were the children of the demon Hirañyakaśipu, who were introduced into the womb of Devakí, at the command of Vishúu, during the hours of Devakí’s repose, by the goddess Yoganidrá\(^\text{24}\), the great illusory energy of Vishúu, by whom, as utter ignorance, the whole world is beguiled. To her Vishúu said, “Go, Nidrá, to the nether regions, and by my command conduct successively six of their princes to be conceived of Devakí. When these shall have been put to death by Kansa, the seventh conception shall be formed of a portion of Śesha, who is a part of me; and this you shall transfer, before the time of birth, to Rohini, another wife of Vasudeva, who resides at Gokula. The report shall run, that Devakí miscarries, through the anxiety of imprisonment, and dread of the Rája of the Bhojas. From being extracted from his mother’s womb, the child shall be known by the name of Sankarshana, and he shall be valiant and strong, and like the peak of the white mountain in \(^{24}\) Yoganidrá (योगनिद्रा) is the sleep of devotion or abstraction, the active principle of illusion, personified, and also termed Māyā and Mahamāyā, also Avidyā or ignorance. In the Durgā Mahámya of the Márkaṇḍeya Puráṇa she appears as Devi or Durgá, the Sakti or bride of Śiva; but in our text as Vaishnavi, or the Sakti of Vishúu.

bulk and complexion. I will myself become incarnate in the eighth conception of Devaki; and you shall immediately take a similar character as the embryo offspring of Yasodá. In the night of the eighth luna tion of the dark half of the month Nabhas, in the season of the rains, I shall be born. You shall receive birth on the ninth. Impelled and aided by my power, Vasudeva shall bear me to the bed of Yasodá, and you to that of Devaki. Kansa shall take you, and hold you up to dash you against a stone; but you shall escape from his grasp into the sky, where the hundred-eyed Indra shall meet and do homage to you, through reverence for me, and shall bow before you, and acknowledge you as his sister. Having slain Sumbha, Nisumbha, and numerous other demons, you shall sanctify the earth in many places. Thou art wealth, progeny, fame, patience, heaven and earth, fortitude, modesty, nutrition, dawn, and every other female (form or property). They who address thee morning and afternoon with reverence and praise, and call thee Áryá, Durgá, Vedagarbhá, Ambiká, Bhadrá, Bhadrakáli, Kshemí, or Kshemankari, shall receive from my bounty whatever they desire. Propiti ated with offerings of wine and flesh and various viands, thou shalt bestow upon mankind all their prayers. Through my favour all men shall ever have faith in thee. Assured of this, go, goddess, and execute my commands.”

23 Allusion is here made to the exploits of Durgá, as celebrated especially in the Durgá Máhátya; and it must be posterior to the date of that or some similar composition. The passage may be an interpolation, as the Márkandeya P. in general has the appearance of being a more recent compilation than the Vishnú.

26 This refers to the Pítha sthánas, ‘fifty-one places,’ where, according to the Tantras, the limbs of Satí fell, when scattered by her husband Siva, as he bore her dead body about, and tore it to pieces, after she had put an end to her existence at Daksha’s sacrifice. This part of the legend seems to be an addition to the original fable made by the Tantras, as it is not in the Puránas (see the story of Daksha’s sacrifice). It bears some analogy to the Egyptian fable of Isis and Osiris. At the Pítha sthánas, however, of Jwálanukhá, Vindhyavásini, Káliká, and others, temples are erected to the different forms of Deví or Satí, not to the phallic emblem of Mahádeva, which, if present, is there as an accessory and embellishment, not as a principal, and the chief object of worship is a figure of the goddess; a circumstance in which there is an essential difference between the temples of Durgá and shrines of Osiris.
CHAP. II.

The conception of Devakī: her appearance: she is praised by the gods.

The nurse of the universe, Jagaddhátrí, thus enjoined by the god of gods, conveyed the six several embryos into the womb of Devakī, and transferred the seventh after a season to that of Rohini; after which, Hari, for the benefit of the three regions, became incarnate as the conception of the former princess, and Yoganidrá as that of Yasodá, exactly as the supreme Vishnu had commanded. When the portion of Vishnu had become incorporate upon earth, the planetary bodies moved in brilliant order in the heavens, and the seasons were regular and genial. No person could bear to gaze upon Devakī, from the light that invested her; and those who contemplated her radiance felt their minds disturbed. The gods, invisible to mortals, celebrated her praises continually from the time that Vishnu was contained in her person. "Thou," said the divinities, "art that Prakriti, infinite and subtile, which formerly bore Brahmá in its womb: then wast thou the goddess of speech, the energy of the creator of the universe, and the parent of the Vedas. Thou, eternal being, comprising in thy substance the essence of all created things, wast identical with creation: thou wast the parent of the triform sacrifice, becoming the germ of all things: thou art sacrifice, whence all fruit proceeds: thou art the wood, whose attrition engenders fire. As Aditi, thou art the parent of the gods; as Diti, thou art the mother of the Daityas, their foes. Thou art light, whence day is begotten: thou art humility, the mother of true wisdom: thou art kingly policy, the parent of order: thou art modesty, the progenitrix of affection: thou art desire, of whom love is born: thou art contentment, whence resignation is derived: thou art intelligence, the mother of knowledge: thou art patience, the parent of fortitude: thou art the heavens, and thy children are the stars: and from thee does all that exists proceed. Such, goddess,

1 It is mentioned in the preceding chapter that they were all put to death, in which the Hari Vanśa concurs. The Bhāgavata makes Kansa spare them, and restore them to their parents, as he had nothing to apprehend from their existence. and thousands more, are thy mighty faculties; and now innumerable are the contents of thy womb, O mother of the universe. The whole earth, decorated with oceans, rivers, continents, cities, villages, hamlets, and towns; all the fires, waters, and winds; the stars, asterisms, and planets;
the sky, crowded with the variegated chariots of the gods, and ether, that provides space for all substance; the several spheres of earth, sky, and heaven; of saints, sages, ascetics, and of Brahmá; the whole egg of Brahmá, with all its population of gods, demons, spirits, snake-gods, fiends, demons, ghosts, and imps, men and animals, and whatever creatures have life, comprised in him who is their eternal lord, and the object of all apprehension; whose real form, nature, name, and dimensions are not within human apprehension—are now with that Vishńu in thee.
Thou art Swáhá; thou art Swadhá; thou art wisdom, ambrosia, light, and heaven. Thou hast descended upon earth for the preservation of the world. Have compassion upon us, O goddess, and do good unto the world. Be proud to bear that deity by whom the universe is upheld.”
CHAP. III.

Birth of Krishâa: conveyed by Vasudeva to Mathurâ, and exchanged with the new-born daughter of Yaśodâ. Kansa attempts to destroy the latter, who becomes Yoganidrâ.

Thus eulogized by the gods, Devâkî bore in her womb the lotus-eyed deity, the protector of the world. The sun of Achyuta rose in the dawn of Devâkî to cause the lotus petal of the universe to expand. On the day of his birth the quarters of the horizon were irradiate with joy, as if moonlight was diffused over the whole earth. The virtuous experienced new delight, the strong winds were hushed, and the rivers glided tranquilly, when Janârddana was about to be born. The seas with their own melodious murmurings made the music, whilst the spirits and the nymphs of heaven danced and sang: the gods, walking the sky, showered down flowers upon the earth, and the holy fires glowed with a mild and gentle flame. At midnight, when the supporter of all was about to be born, the clouds emitted low pleasing sounds, and poured down rain of flowers.

As soon as Ānakadundubhi beheld the child, of the complexion of the lotus leaves, having four arms, and the mystic mark Śrîvatasa on his breast, he addressed him in terms of love and reverence, and represented the fears he entertained of Kansa. “Thou art born,” said Vasudeva, “O sovereign god of gods, bearer of the shell, the discus, and the mace; but now in mercy withhold this thy celestial form, for Kansa will assuredly put me to death when he knows that thou hast descended in my dwelling.” Devâkî also exclaimed, “God of gods, who art all things, who comprisest all the regions of the world in thy person, and who by thine illusion hast assumed the condition of an infant, have compassion upon us, and forego this thy four-armed shape, nor let Kansa, the impious son of Diti, know of thy descent.”

To these applications Bhagavat answered and said, “Princess, in former times I was prayed to by thee and adored in the hope of progeny: thy prayers have been granted, for I am born thy son.” So saying, he was silent: and Vasudeva, taking the babe, went out that same night; for the guards were all charmed by Yoganidrâ, as were the warders at the gates of Mathurá, and they obstructed not the passage of Ánakadundubhi. To protect the infant from the heavy rain that fell from the clouds of night, Šesha, the many-headed serpent, followed Vasudeva, and spread his hoods above their heads; and when the prince, with the child in his arms, crossed the Yamuná river, deep as it was, and dangerous with numerous whirlpools, the waters were stillled, and rose not above his knee. On the bank he saw Nanda and the rest, who had come thither to bring tribute due to Kansa; but they beheld him not. ¹
At the same time Yaśodá was also under the influence of Yoganidrá, whom she had brought forth as her daughter, and whom the prudent Vasudeva took up, placing his son in her place by the side of the mother: he then quickly returned home. When Yaśodá awoke, she found that she had been delivered of a boy, as black as the dark leaves of the lotus, and she was greatly rejoiced.

Vasudeva, bearing off the female infant of Yaśodá, reached his mansion unobserved, and entered and placed the child in the bed of Devaki:
he then remained as usual. The guards were awakened by the cry of the new-born babe, and, starting up, they sent word to Kansa that Devakí had borne a child. Kansa immediately repaired to the residence of Vasudeva, where he seized upon the infant. In vain Devakí convulsively entreated him to relinquish the child: he threw it ruthlessly against a stone; but it rose into the sky, and expanded into a gigantic figure, having eight arms, each wielding some formidable weapon. This terrific being laughed aloud, and said to Kansa, “What avails it thee, Kansa, to have hurled me to the ground? he is born who shall kill thee, the mighty one amongst the gods, who was formerly thy destroyer. Now quickly secure him, and provide for thine own welfare.” Thus having spoken, the goddess, decorated with heavenly perfumes and garlands, and hymned by the spirits of the air, vanished from before the eyes of Bhoja rájá.²

¹ The Bhágavata more consistently makes Vasudeva find Nanda and the rest fast asleep in their houses, and subsequently describes their bringing tribute or tax (kara) to Kansa.

² Chief of the tribe of Bhoja, a branch of the Yádavas: see p. 424.
CHAP. IV.

Kansa addresses his friends, announces their danger, and orders male children to be put to death.

Kansa, much troubled in mind, summoned all his principal Asuras, Pralamba, Kesin, and the rest, and said to them, “O valiant chiefs, Pralamba, Kesin, Dhenuka, Pūtanā, Arishta, and all the rest of you, hear my words. The vile and contemptible denizens of heaven are assiduously plotting against my life, for they dread my prowess: but, heroes, I hold them of no account. What can the impotent Indra, or the ascetic Hara, perform? or what can Hari accomplish, except the murder of his foes by fraud? What have we to fear from the Ádityas, the Vasus, the Agnis, or any others of the immortals, who have all been vanquished by my resistless arms? Have I not seen the king of the gods, when he had ventured into the conflict, quickly retreat from the field, receiving my shafts upon his back, not bravely upon his breast? When in resentment he withheld the fertilizing showers from my kingdom, did not my arrows compel the clouds to part with their waters, as much as were required? Are not all the monarchs of the earth in terror of my prowess, and subject to my orders, save only Jarásandha my sire? Now, chiefs of the Dāitya race, it is my determination to inflict still deeper degradation upon these evil-minded and unprincipled gods. Let therefore every man who is notorious for liberality (in gifts to gods and Brahmans), every man who is remarkable for his celebration of sacrifices, be put to death, that thus the gods shall be deprived of the means by which they subsist. The goddess who has been born as the infant child of Devakí has announced to me that he is again alive who in a former being was my death. Let therefore active search be made for whatever young children there may be upon earth, and let every boy in whom there are signs of unusual vigour be slain without remorse.”

Having issued these commands, Kansa retired into his palace, and liberated Vasudeva and Devakí from their captivity. “It is in vain,”

1 Jarásandha, prince of Magadhá, was the father-in-law of Kansa. said he to them, "that I have slain all your children, since after all he who is destined to kill me has escaped. It is of no use to regret the past. The children you may hereafter have may enjoy life unto its natural close; no one shall cut it short." Having thus conciliated them, Kansa, alarmed for himself, withdrew into the interior apartments of his palace.
CHAP. V.

Nanda returns with the infant Prasúna and Balaráma to Gokula. Pútaná killed by the former. Prayers of Nanda and Yasodá.

WHEN Vasudeva was set at liberty, he went to the waggon of Nanda, and found Nanda there rejoicing that a son was born to him 1. Vasudeva spake to him kindly, and congratulated him on having a son in his old age. “The yearly tribute,” he added, “has been paid to the king, and men of property should not tarry near the court, when the business that brought them there has been transacted. Why do you delay, now that your affairs are settled? Up, Nanda, quickly, and set off to your own pastures; and let this boy, the son whom Rohini has borne me, accompany you, and be brought up by you as this your own son.” Accordingly Nanda and the other cowherds, their goods being placed in their waggons, and their taxes having been paid to the king, returned to their village.

Some time after they were settled at Gokula, the female fiend Pútaná, the child-killer, came thither by night, and finding the little Prasúna asleep, took him up, and gave him her breast to suck 2. Now whatever child is suckled in the night by Pútaná instantly dies; but Prasúna, laying hold of the breast with both hands, sucked it with such violence, that he drained it of the life; and the hideous Pútaná, roaring aloud, and giving way in every joint, fell on the ground expiring. The inhabitants of Vraja awoke in alarm at the cries of the fiend, ran to the spot, and beheld Pútaná lying on the earth, and Prasúna in her arms. Yasodá snatching up Prasúna, waved over him a cow-tail brush to guard him from harm, whilst Nanda placed dried cow-dung powdered upon his head; he gave him also an amulet, saying at the same time, "May Hari, the lord of all beings without reserve, protect you; he from the lotus of whose navel the world was developed, and on the tip of whose tusks the globe was upraised from the waters. May that Keśava, who assumed the form of a boar, protect thee. May that Keśava, who, as the man-lion, rent with his sharp nails the bosom of his foe, ever protect thee. May that Keśava, who, appearing first as the dwarf, suddenly traversed in all his might, with three paces, the three regions of the universe, constantly defend thee. May Govinda guard thy head; Keśava thy neck; Vishnú thy belly; Janárddana thy legs and feet; the eternal and irresistible Náráyaña thy face, thine arms, thy mind, and faculties of sense. May all ghosts, goblins, and spirits malignant and unfriendly, ever fly thee, appalled by the bow, the discus, mace, and sword of Vishnu, and the echo of his shell. May Vaikuntha guard thee in the cardinal points; and in the intermediate ones, Madhusúdana. May Rishikēśa defend thee in the sky, and Mahídharma upon earth." Having pronounced this prayer to avert all evil, Nanda put the child to sleep in his bed underneath the waggon. Beholding the vast carcass of Pútaná, the cowherds were filled with astonishment and terror.

1 It is literally ‘went to the cart’ or ‘waggon’ ॥ नदेः शक्ते गाहाः ॥ as if Nanda and his family dwelt in such a vehicle, as the Scythians are said to have done. The commentator explains Sakaśa (शक्ति) ‘the place of loosing or unharnessing the waggon; शक्तिस्यन्मण्यार्थम् ॥ In the Bhágavata, Vasudeva does not quit Mathura, but goes to the halting ground of Nanda, who has come to that city to pay his taxes: ब्रह्म तद्धन्यथर्य त्र्यो महान्तरोऽर्थसमूहोऽर्थसमर्यते ॥

2 In the Hari Vansá this female fiend is described as coming in the shape of a bird.
PÚTANÁ KILLED BY KRISHṆA.

The Rakshá, the preserver, or preservative against charms, is a piece of thread or silk, or some more costly material, bound round the wrist or arm, with an appropriate prayer such as that in the text. Besides its application to children, to avert the effects of evil eyes, or to protect them against Dáini witches, there is one day in the year, the Rakhi Purnimá, or full moon in the month of Sravan (July—August), when it is bound upon the wrists of adults by friendly or kindred Brahmans, with a short prayer or benediction. The Rakhi is also sent sometimes by persons of distinction, and especially by females, to members of a different family, or even race and nation, to intimate a sort of brotherly or sisterly adoption. Tod's Rajasthan, I. 312.
CHAP. VI.

Krishná overturns a waggon; casts down two trees. The Gopas depart to Vrindávana.

Sports of the boys. Description of the season of the rains.

On one occasion, whilst Madhusúdana was asleep underneath the waggon, he cried for the breast, and kicking up his feet he overturned the vehicle, and all the pots and pans were upset and broken. The cowherds and their wives, hearing the noise, came exclaiming, “Ah! ah!” and there they found the child sleeping on his back. “Who could have upset the waggon?” said the cowherds. “This child,” replied some boys, who witnessed the circumstance; “we saw him,” said they, “crying, and kicking the waggon with his feet, and so it was overturned: no one else had any thing to do with it.” The cowherds were exceedingly astonished at this account; and Nanda, not knowing what to think, took up the boy; whilst Yaśodá offered worship to the broken pieces of pots and to the waggon, with curds, flowers, fruit, and unbruised grain.

The initiatory rites requisite for the two boys were performed by Garga, who was sent to Gokula by Vasudeva for that purpose: he celebrated them without the knowledge of the cowherds; and the wise sage, eminent amongst the wise, named the elder of them Rámá, and the other Krishná. In a short time they began to crawl about the ground, supporting themselves on their hands and knees, and creeping every where, often amidst ashes and filth. Neither Rohíni nor Yaśodá was able to prevent them from getting into the cowpens, or amongst the calves, where they amused themselves by pulling their tails. As they disregarded the prohibitions of Yaśodá, and rambled about together constantly, she became angry, and taking up a stick, followed them, and threatened the dark-complexioned Krishná with a whipping. Fastening a cord round his waist, she tied him to the wooden mortar, and being in

1 The Bhágavata describes Garga’s interview with Nanda, and the inducements of the latter to keep the former’s celebration of the Sanskáras, or initiatory rites of the two boys, secret from the Gopas. Garga there describes himself as the Purdhat, or family priest, of the Yaśavas.

2 The Ulúkhala, or mortar is a large a great passion, she said to him, "Now, you naughty boy, get away from hence if you can." She then went about her domestic affairs. As soon as she had departed, the lotus-eyed Krishṇa, endeavouring to extricate himself, pulled the mortar after him to the space between two Arjuna trees that grew near together: having dragged the mortar between these trees, it became wedged awry there, and as Krishṇa pulled it through, it pulled down the trunks of the trees. Hearing the crackling noise, the people of Vraja came to see what was the matter, and there they beheld the two large trees, with shattered stems and broken branches, prostrate on the ground, with the child fixed between them, with a rope round his belly, laughing, and shewing his white little teeth, just budded. It is hence that Krishṇa is called Dāmodara, from the binding of the rope (dāma) round his belly (udara). The elders of the cowherds, with Nanda at their head, looked upon these circumstances with alarm, considering them as of evil omen. "We cannot remain in this place," said they; "let us go to some other part of the forest; for here many evil signs threaten us with destruction; the death of Pūtanā, the upsetting of the waggon, and the fall of the trees without their being blown down by the wind. Let us depart hence without delay, and go to Vrindāvana, where terrestrial prodigies may no more disturb us."

Having thus resolved, the inhabitants of Vraja communicated their intention to their families, and desired them to move without delay. Accordingly they set off with their waggons and their cattle, driving before them their bulls and cows and calves; the fragments of their household stores they threw away, and in an instant Vraja was overspread with flights of crows. Vrindāvana was chosen by Krishṇa, whom acts do not affect, for the sake of providing for the nourishment of the wooden bowl on a solid stand of timber, both cut out of one piece; the pestle is also of wood; and they are used chiefly for bruising or threshing unwinned corn, and separating the chaff from the grain. As important agents in household economy, they are regarded as sacred, and even hymned in the Vedas.

3 Our text, and that of the Hari Vana, take no notice of the legend of Nalakuruva and Mañigriva, sons of Kuvera, who, according to the Bhāgavata, had been metamorphosed, through a curse of Nārada, into these two trees, and for whose liberation this feat of Krishṇa was intended.
kine; for there in the hottest season the new grass springs up as verdantly as in the rains. Having repaired, then, from Vraja to Vrindávana, the inhabitants of the former drew up their waggons in the form of a crescent 4.

As the two boys, Ráma and Dámodara, grew up, they were ever together in the same place, and engaged in the same boyish sports. They made themselves crests of the peacocks' plumes, and garlands of forest flowers, and musical instruments of leaves and reeds, or played upon the pipes used by the cowherds: their hair was trimmed like the wings of the crow 5, and they resembled two young princes, portions of the deity of war: they were robust, and they roamed about, always laughing and playing, sometimes with each other, sometimes with other boys; driving along with the young cowherds the calves to pasture. Thus the two guardians of the world were keepers of cattle, until they had attained seven years of age, in the cow-pens of Vrindávan.

Then came on the season of the rains, when the atmosphere laboured with accumulated clouds, and the quarters of the horizon were blended into one by the driving showers. The waters of the rivers rose, and overflowed their banks, and spread beyond all bounds, like the minds of the weak and wicked transported beyond restraint by sudden prosperity. The pure radiance of the moon was obscured by heavy vapours, as the lessons of holy writ are darkened by the arrogant scoffs of fools (and unbelievers). The bow of Indra held its place in the heavens all unstrung, like a worthless man elevated by an injudicious prince to honour. The white line of storks appeared upon the back of the cloud, in such contrast as the bright conduct of a man of respectability opposes to the behaviour of a scoundrel. The ever-fitful lightning, in its new alliance with the sky, was like the friendship of a profligate for a man

4 The Hari Vaná, not satisfied with the prodigies which had alarmed the cowherds, adds another, not found, it is believed, anywhere else. The emigration, according to that work, originates, not with the Gopas, but the two boys, who wish to go to Vrindávana, and in order to compel the removal, Krishná converts the hairs of his body into hundreds of wolves, who so harass and alarm the inhabitants of Vraja, that they determine to abandon their homes.

5 The Káka-pákha, or crow's wing, implies the hair left on each side of the head, the top being shaved.
of worth. Overgrown by the spreading grain, the paths were indistinctly traced, like the speech of the ignorant, that conveys no positive meaning.

At this time Krishṇa and Rāma, accompanied by the cow-boys, traversed the forests, that echoed with the hum of bees and the peacock's cry. Sometimes they sang in chorus, or danced together; sometimes they sought shelter from the cold beneath the trees; sometimes they decorated themselves with flowery garlands, sometimes with peacocks' feathers; sometimes they stained themselves of various hues with the minerals of the mountain; sometimes weary they reposed on beds of leaves, and sometimes imitated in mirth the muttering of the thundercloud; sometimes they excited their juvenile associates to sing, and sometimes they mimicked the cry of the peacock with their pipes. In this manner participating in various feelings and emotions, and affectionately attached to each other, they wandered, sporting and happy, through the wood. At eveningtide came Krishṇa and Balarāma, like two cow-boys, along with the cows and the cowherds. At eveningtide the two immortals, having come to the cow-pens, joined heartily in whatever sports amused the sons of the herdmens.
CHAP. VII.

Krishna combats the serpent Káliya: alarm of his parents and companions: he overcomes the serpent, and is propitiated by him: commands him to depart from the Yamuná river to the ocean.

ONE day Krishna, unaccompanied by Ráma, went to Vrindávan: he was attended by a troop of cowherds, and gaily decorated with wild flowers. On his way he came to the Yamuná, which was flowing in sportive undulations, and sparkling with foam, as if with smiles, as the waves dashed against the borders. Within its bed, however, was the fearful pool of the serpent Káliya, boiling with the fires of poison¹; from the fumes of which, large trees upon the bank were blighted, and by whose waters, when raised by a gale into the air, birds were scorched. Beholding this dreadful lake, which was like another mouth of death, Madhusúdana reflected that the wicked and poisonous Káliya, who had been vanquished by himself (in the person of Garúda), and had been obliged to fly from the ocean (where he had inhabited the island Ramañaka), must be lurking at its bottom, and defiling the Yamuná, the consort of the sea, so that neither man nor cattle could slake their thirst by her waters. Such being the case, he determined to dislodge the Nága, and enable the dwellers of Vraja to frequent the vicinage without fear; for it was the especial purpose he considered of his descent upon earth to reduce to subjection all such violators of law. “Here,” thought he, “is a Kadamba tree, which is sufficiently near; I can climb up it, and thence leap into the serpent’s pool.” Having thus resolved, he bound his clothes tightly about him, and jumped boldly into the lake of the serpent-king. The waters, agitated by his plunge amidst them, were scattered to a considerable distance from the bank, and the spray falling upon the trees, they were immediately set on fire by the heat of the

¹ The commentator says this means nothing more than that the waters of the pool were hot: विपिनननायणस्य कालार्थे यस्मिन्।
I do not know if hot springs have been found in the bed or on the borders of the Jumna: the hot well of Sita-kund, near Mongir, is not far from the Ganges.
poisonous vapour combined with the water; and the whole horizon was in a blaze. Krishña, having dived into the pool, struck his arms in defiance, and the snake-king, hearing the sound, quickly came forth: his eyes were coppery red, and his hoods were flaming with deadly venom: he was attended by many other powerful and poisonous snakes, feeders upon air, and by hundreds of serpent-nymphs, decorated with rich jewels, whose earrings glittered with trembling radiance as the wearers moved along. Coiling themselves around Krishña, they all bit him with teeth from which fiery poison was emitted. Krishña’s companions, beholding him in the lake, encompassed by the snakes, twining around him, ran off to Vraja, lamenting and bewailing aloud his fate. “Krishña,” they called out, “has foolishly plunged into the serpent’s pool, and is there bitten to death by the snake-king! Come and see.” The cowherds and their wives and Yaśodá, hearing this news, which was like a thunderbolt, ran immediately to the pool, frightened out of their senses, and crying, “Alas! alas! where is he?” The Gopís were retarded by Yaśodá, who in her agitation stumbled and slipped at every step; but Nanda and the cowherds and the invincible Ráma hastened to the banks of the Yamuná, eager to assist Krishña. There they beheld him apparently in the power of the serpent-king, encompassed by twining snakes, and making no effort to escape. Nanda, as soon as he set his eyes upon his son, became senseless; and Yaśodá also, when she beheld him, lost all consciousness. The Gopís, overcome with sorrow, wept, and called affectionately, and with convulsive sobs, upon Keśava. “Let us all,” said they, “plunge with Yaśodá into the fearful pool of the serpent-king. We cannot return to Vraja; for what is day, without the sun? what night, without the moon? what is a herd of heifers, without its lord? what is Vraja, without Krishña? Deprived of him, we will go no more to Gokula. The forest will lose its delights; it will be like a lake without water. When this dark lotus leaf complexioned Hari is not present, there is no joy in the maternal dwelling. How strange is this! And as for you, ye cowherds, how, poor beings, will you live amidst the pastures, when you no longer

2 Slapping the upper part of one arm with the hand of the other is a common act of defiance amongst Indian athletes.
 Krishnā tramples on the serpent; behold the brilliant lotus eyes of Hari? Our hearts have been wiled away by the music of his voice. We will not go without Puṇḍarīkākṣha to the folds of Nanda. Even now, though held in the coils of the serpent-king, see, friends, how his face brightens with smiles as we gaze upon him."

When the mighty son of Rohiṇī, Balarāma, heard these exclamations of the Gopīs, and with disdainful glance beheld the cowherds overcome with terror, Nanda gazing fixedly upon the countenance of his son, and Yaśodā unconscious, he spake to Krishnā in his own character: "What is this, O god of gods! the quality of mortal is sufficiently assumed; dost thou not know thyself eternal? Thou art the centre of creation, as the nave is of the spokes of a wheel. A portion of thee have I also been born, as thy senior. The gods, to partake of thy pastimes as man, have all descended under a like disguise; and the goddesses have come down to Gokula to join in thy sports. Thou, eternal, hast last of all appeared below. Wherefore, Krishnā, dost thou regard these divinities, who, as cowherds, are thy friends and kin? these sorrowing females, who also are thy relations? Thou hast put on the character of man; thou hast exhibited the tricks of childhood: now let this fierce snake, though armed with venomed fangs, be subdued (by thy celestial vigour)."

Thus reminded of his real character by Rāma, Krishnā smiled gently, and speedily extricated himself from the coils of the snakes. Laying hold of the middle hood of their chief with both his hands, he bent it down, and set his foot upon the hitherto unbended head, and danced upon it in triumph. Wherever the snake attempted to raise his head, it was again trodden down, and many bruises were inflicted on the hood by the pressure of the toes of Krishnā. Trampled upon by the feet of Krishnā, as they changed position in the dance, the snake fainted, and vomited forth much blood. Beholding the head and neck of their lord thus injured, and the blood flowing from his mouth, the females of the snake-king implored the clemency of Madhusūdana. "Thou art recog-

---

3 The expressions are छुट्टारंगे and छुट्टाराध्यायिने, and Rechaka and Daśāpāda are said to be different dispositions of the feet in dancing; variations of the bharma or piroquette; the latter is the a-plomb or descent. It is also read Daśāpāda-nipāta, the falling of the feet, like that of a club.
nised, O god of gods!" they exclaimed; "thou art the sovereign of all; thou art light supreme, inscrutable; thou art the mighty lord, the portion of that supreme light. The gods themselves are unable worthily to praise thee, the lord self-existent: how then shall females proclaim thy nature? How shall we fully declare him of whom the egg of Brahmá, made up of earth, sky, water, fire, and air, is but a small portion of a part? Holy sages have in vain sought to know thy eternal essence. We bow to that form which is the most subtle of atoms, the largest of the large; to him whose birth is without a creator, whose end knows no destroyer, and who alone is the cause of duration. There is no wrath in thee; for thine is the protection of the world; and hence this chastisement of Kállya. Yet hear us. Women are to be regarded with pity by the virtuous: animals are humanely treated even by fools. Let therefore the author of wisdom have compassion upon this poor creature. Thyself, as an oviparous, hooded snake, art the upholder of the world. Oppressed by thee, he will speedily perish. What is this feeble serpent, compared to thee in whom the universe reposes? Friendship and enmity are felt towards equals and superiors, not for those infinitely beneath us. Then, sovereign of the world, have mercy upon us. This unfortunate snake is about to expire: give us, as a gift of charity, our husband."

When they had thus spoken, the Nága himself, almost exanimate, repeated feebly their solicitations for mercy. "Forgive me," he murmured, "O god of gods! How shall I address thee, who art possessed, through thine own strength and essence, of the eight great faculties, in energy unequalled? Thou art the supreme, the progenitor of the supreme (Brahmá): thou art the supreme spirit, and from thee the supreme proceeds: thou art beyond all finite objects; how can I speak thy praise? How can I declare his greatness, from whom come Brahmá, Rudra, Chandra, Indra, the Maruts, the Aświns, the Vasus, and Ádityas; of whom the whole world is an infinitely small portion, a portion destined to represent his essence; and whose nature, primitive or derived, Brahmá and the immortals do not comprehend? How can I approach him, to whom the gods offer incense and flowers culled from the groves of Nandana; whose incarnate forms the king of the deities ever adores, unconscious of his real person; whom the sages, that have withdrawn their senses from all external objects, worship in thought, and enshrining his image in the purposes of their hearts, present to it the flowers of sanctity 4. I am quite unable, O god of gods, to worship or to hymn thee.
Thy own clemency must alone influence thy mind to shew me compassion.
It is the nature of snakes to be savage, and I am born of their kind:
hence this is my nature, not mine offence. The world is created, as it is destroyed, by thee; and the species, form, and nature of all things in the world are thy work. Even such as thou hast created me in kind, in form, and in nature, such I am, and such are my actions: should I act differently, then indeed should I deserve thy punishment, for so thou hast declared 5. Yet that I have been punished by thee is indeed a blessing; for punishment from thee alone is a favour. Behold I am now without strength, without poison; deprived of both by thee. Spare me my life; I ask no more. Command me what I shall do."

Being thus addressed by Kāliya, Krishṇa replied, "You must not tarry here, nor any where in the stream of the Yamunā; depart immediately, with your family and followers, to the sea; where Garuḍa, the foe of the serpent race, will not harm you, when he sees the impressions of my feet upon your brow." So saying, Hari set the snake-king at liberty, who, bowing reverentially to his victor, departed to the ocean; abandoning, in the sight of all, the lake he had haunted, accompanied by all his females, children, and dependants. When the snake was gone, the Gopas hailed Govinda, as one risen from the dead, and embraced him, and bathed his forehead with tears of joy: others, contemplating the water of the river, now freed from peril, were filled with wonder, and sang the praise of Krishṇa, who is unaffected by works. Thus eminent by his glorious exploits, and eulogized by the Gopas and Gopis, Krishṇa returned to Vraja.

4 Bhāva-pushpas: there are said to be eight such flowers, clemency, self-restraint, tenderness, patience, resignation, devotion,
meditation, and truth.

5 Both in the Vedas and in the institutes of law; where it is enjoined that every one shall discharge the duties of his caste and condition, and any deviation from them merits punishment; as by the texts, विधायते रक्षा; 4 In following prohibited observances, a person is punishable; 5 and सम्मानपार्थिवं च समी कृत्यानापरै दिक्षिणसे: 5 'Who does acts unsuited to his natural disposition, incurs guilt.'
CHAP. VIII.

The demon Dhenuka destroyed by Ráma.

Again, tending upon the herds, Keśava and Ráma wandered through the woods, and on one occasion came to a pleasing grove of palms, where dwelt the fierce demon Dhenuka, feeding upon the flesh of deer. Beholding the trees covered with fruit, and desirous of gathering it, the cowherds called out to the brothers, and said, “See, Ráma; see, Krishńa; in this grove, belonging to the great Dhenuka, the trees are loaded with ripe fruit, the smell of which perfumes the air: we should like to eat some. Will you throw some down?” As soon as the boys had spoken, Sankarshaṇa and Krishńa shook the trees, and brought down the fruit on the ground. Hearing the noise of the falling fruit, the fierce and malignant demon Dhenuka, in the form of an ass, hastened to the spot in a great passion, and began to kick Ráma on the breast with his hinder heels. Ráma, however, seized him by both hind legs, and whirling him round until he expired, tossed his carcass to the top of a palm tree, from the branches of which it struck down abundance of fruit, like rain drops poured upon earth by the wind. The animals that were of kin to Dhenuka came running to his aid; but Krishńa and Ráma treated them in the same manner, until the trees were laden with dead asses, and the ground was strewed with ripe fruit. Henceforward the cattle grazed unobstructed in the palm grove, and cropped the new pasturage, where they had never before ventured.

¹ This exploit is related in the Bhágavata, Hari Vanśa, and other Vaishńava Purāṇas, much in the same strain, but not always in the same place: it more commonly precedes the legend of the discomfiture of Káliya.
CHAP. IX.

Sports of the boys in the forest. Pralamba the Asura comes amongst them: is destroyed by Râma, at the command of Krishná.

WHEN the demon in the form of an ass, and all his tribe, had been destroyed, the grove of palms became the favourite resort of the Gopas and their wives, and the sons of Vasudeva, greatly pleased, repaired to the Bháúdára fig tree. They continued to wander about, shouting and singing, and gathering fruits and flowers from the trees; now driving the cows afar to pasture; now calling them by their names; now carrying the foot-ropes of the kine upon their shoulders; now ornamenting themselves with garlands of forest flowers, they looked like two young bulls when the horns first appear. Attired the one in yellow, and the other in sable garments, they looked like two clouds, one white, and one black, surmounted by the bow of Indra. Sporting mutually with frolics beneficial to the world, they roamed about like two monarchs over all the collected sovereigns of the earth. Assuming human duties, and maintaining the human character, they strayed through the thickets, amusing themselves with sports suited to their mortal species and condition, in swinging on the boughs of trees, or in boxing and wrestling and hurling stones.

Having observed the two lads thus playing about, the Asura Pralamba, seeking to devour them, came amongst the cowherd boys in the shape of one of themselves, and mixed, without being suspected, in their pastimes; for he thought, that, thus disguised, it would not be difficult to find an opportunity to kill, first Krishná, and afterwards the son of Rohiñi. The boys commenced playing at the game of leaping like deer, two and two together. Govinda was matched with Sridáman, and

1 Jumping with both feet at once, as that holds out longest, or comes to a given deer bound, two boys together: the one point first, is the victor, and the van-Balaráma with Pralamba: the other boys were coupled with one another, and went leaping away. Govinda beat his companion, and Balaráma—his; and the boys who were on Kríshná's side were also victorious. Carrying one another, they reached the Bháúdára fig; and from thence those who were victors were conveyed back to the starting-ground by those who were vanquished. It being Pralamba's duty to carry Sankarshána, the latter mounted upon his shoulders, like the moon riding above a dark cloud; and the demon ran off with him, but did not stop: finding himself, however, unable to bear the weight of Balaráma, he enlarged his bulk, and looked like a black cloud in the rainy season. Balaráma beholding him like a scorched mountain, his head crowned with a diadem, and his neck hung round with garlands, having eyes as large as cart wheels, a fearful form, and shaking the earth with his tread, called out, as he was carried away, to his brother, “Krishná, Krishná, I am carried off by some demon, disguised as a cowherd, and huge as a mountain! What shall I do? Tell me, Madhusúdana: the villain runs away with speed!” Krishná opened his mouth, smiling, for he well knew the might of the son of Rohíni, and replied, “Why this subtle pretext of merely mortal nature? thou who art the soul of all the most subtile of subtile things. Remember yourself, the radical cause of the whole world; born before all cause, and all that is alone when the world is destroyed. Dost thou not know that you and I are alike the origin of the world, who have come down to lighten its load? The heavens are thy head; the waters are thy body; earth is thy feet; thy mouth is eternal fire; the moon is thy mind; the wind thy breath; thy arms and hands are the four regions of space. Thou hast, O mighty lord, a thousand heads, a thousand hands and feet and bodies; a thousand Brahmás spring from thee, who art before all, and whom the sages praise in myriads of forms. No one but I knoweth thy divine person. Thy incarnate person is glorified by all the gods. Knowest thou not, that, at the end of all, the universe disappears in thee? that, upheld by thee, this quished is then bound to carry him to the goal, if not already attained, and back again to the starting-post, on his shoulders. The Bhágavata does not specify the game, but mentions that the vanquished carry the victors on their backs.

earth sustains living and inanimate things? and that, in the character of uncreated time, with its divisions of ages, developed from an instant, thou devourest the world? As the waters of the sea, when swallowed up by submarine flame, are recovered by the winds, and thrown, in the form of snow, upon the Himāchala, where coming into contact with the rays of the sun, they re-assume their watery nature; so the world, being devourest by thee at the period of dissolution, becomes of necessity, at the end of every Kalpa, the world again, through thy creative efforts. Thou and I, soul of the universe, are but one and the same cause of the creation of the earth, although, for its protection, we exist in distinct individuals. Calling to memory who thou art, O being of illimitable might, destroy of thyself the demon. Suspending a while your mortal character, do what is right."

Thus reminded by the magnanimous Krishṇa, the powerful Baladeva laughed, and squeezed Pralamba with his knees, striking him at the same time on the head and face with his fists, so as to beat out both his eyes. The demon, vomiting blood from his mouth, and having his brain forced through the skull, fell upon the ground, and expired. The Gopas, beholding Pralamba slain, were astonished, and rejoiced, and cried out, "Well done," and praised Balaráma: and thus commended by his playfellows, and accompanied by Krishña, Bala, after the death of the daitya Pralamba, returned to Gokula.

\[2\] This passage is read and explained differently in different copies. In some it is, \textit{चषम या भाषाँमित्वापि द्विन्द्रस्य विद्ययार्पणं।। रहितम्ये भानुभरो शुचिप्रवाचतन्तुनिनिरीक्षन्य पुनः प्रवेठ।। And this is explained, \textit{वछुप्रशास्त्रयो भवाणो परिवर्त्तेन चर्चो अविनाश चर्चायुप्त चतुर्विद्वानस्य चारुसारयो नृसिंहो विरुद्धो वृद्धावन्य चारुमास्त्वलयं कृत्व चर्चा रहितम्ये अविनाशि हृदेनेन्।।। The water devoured by the fire is thrown by the wind Kaś, made of a solar ray &c., on the Himāchala, where it assumes the form of snow,' and so on. However disfigured by inaccurate views of some of the instruments in operation, the physiology is in the main very correct, and indicates accurate observation of natural phenomena. The waters of the ocean, converted into vapour by solar heat, are raised by the same influence into the air, and thence borne by the winds to the summits of lofty mountain ranges, where they are arrested by a diminished temperature, descend in the form of snow, and again supply the streams that perpetually restore to the sea the treasures of which it is as perpetually plundered.

According to the Hari Vanás the gods praised this proof of Ráma's name of Balaráma.
CHAP. X.

Description of autumn. Krishná dissuades Nanda from worshipping Indra: recommends him and the Gopas to worship cattle and the mountains.

Whilst Keśava and Ráma were sporting thus in Vraja, the rainy season ended, and was succeeded by the season of autumn, when the lotus is full blown. The small Saphari fish, in their watery burrows, were oppressed by the heat, like a man by selfish desires, who is devoted to his family. The peacocks, no longer animated by passion, were silent amidst the woods, like holy saints, who have come to know the unreality of the world. The clouds, of shining whiteness, exhausted of their watery wealth, deserted the atmosphere, like those who have acquired wisdom, and depart from their homes. Evaporated by the rays of the autumnal sun, the lakes were dried up, like the hearts of men when withered by the contact of selfishness. The pellucid waters of the season were suitably embellished by white water-lilies, as are the minds of the pure by the apprehension of truth. Brightly in the starry sky shone the moon with undiminished orb, like the saintly being, who has reached the last stage of bodily existence, in the company of the pious. The rivers and lakes slowly retired from their banks, as the wise by degrees shrink from the selfish attachment that connects them with wife and child. First abandoned by the waters of the lake, the swans again began to congregate, like false ascetics, whose devotions are interrupted, and they are again assailed by innumerable afflictions. The ocean was still and calm, and exhibited no undulations, like the perfect sage, who has completed his course of restraint, and has acquired undisturbed tranquillity of spirit. Every where the waters were as clear and pure as the minds of the wise, who behold Vishńu in all things. The autumnal sky was wholly free from clouds, like the heart of the ascetic, whose cares have been consumed by the fire of devotion. The moon allayed the fervours of the sun, as discrimination alleviates the pain to which egotism gives birth. The clouds of the atmosphere, the muddiness of the earth, the discoloration of the waters, were all removed by autumn, as abstraction detaches the senses from the objects of perception. The exercise of inspiring, suppressing, and expiring the vital air, was as if performed daily by the waters of the lakes (as they were full, and stationary, and then again declined) 1.
NANDA PREPARES TO WORSHIP INDRA.

At this season, when the skies were bright with stars, Krishná, repairing to Vraja, found all the cowherds busily engaged in preparing for a sacrifice to be offered to Indra 2; and going to the elders, he asked them, as if out of curiosity, what festival of Indra it was in which they took so much pleasure. Nanda replied to his question, and said, “Śatakratu or Indra is the sovereign of the clouds and of the waters: sent by him, the former bestow moisture upon the earth, whence springs the grain, by which we and all embodied beings subsist; with which also, and with water, we please the gods: hence too these cows bear calves, and yield milk, and are happy, and well nourished. So when the clouds are seen distended with rain, the earth is neither barren of corn, nor bare of verdure, nor is man distressed by hunger. Indra, the giver of water, having drank the milk of earth by the solar ray, sheds it again upon the earth for the sustenance of all the world. On this account all sovereign princes offer with pleasure sacrifices to Indra at the end of the rains, and so also do we, and so do other people.”

When Krishná heard this speech from Nanda in regard to the worship of Indra, he determined to put the king of the celestials into a

1 A set of very poor quibbles upon the terms of the Práśásyama: or, Purañña, drawing in the breath through one nostril; literally, 'filling.' Kumbhaka, closing the nostrils, and suppressing the breath; keeping it stationary or confined, as it were in a Kumba, or waterpot: and Rechaka, opening the other nostril, and emitting the breath; literally, 'purging' or 'depletion.'

2 No public worship is offered to Indra at present; and the only festival in the Hindu kalender, the Śakradhvajoththa, the erection of a flag in honour of Śakra or Indra, should be held on the twelfth or thirteenth of Bhádra, which is in the very middle of the rainy season; according to the Tithi Tātwā, following the authority of the Kāliká and Bhavishyottara Purāñnas. The Śakradhvajoththa is also a rite to be performed by kings and princes. It may be doubted, therefore, if the text intends any particular or appointed celebration.
passion, and replied, “We, father, are neither cultivators of the soil, nor dealers in merchandise; we are sojourners in forests, and cows are our divinities. There are four branches of knowledge, logical, scriptural, practical, and political. Hear me describe what practical science is. Agriculture, commerce, and tending of cattle; the knowledge of these three professions constitutes practical science. Agriculture is the subsistence of farmers; buying and selling, of traders. Kine are our support. Thus the knowledge of means of support is threefold. The object that is cultivated by any one should be to him as his chief divinity; that should be venerated and worshipped, as it is his benefactor. He who worships the deity of another, and diverts from him the reward that is his due, obtains not a prosperous station either in this world or in the next. Where the land ceases to be cultivated there are bounds assigned, beyond which commences the forest; the forests are bounded by the hills, and so far do our limits extend. We are not shut in with doors, nor confined within walls; we have neither fields nor houses; we wander about happily wherever we list, travelling in our waggon.* The spirits of these mountains, it is said, walk the woods in whatever forms they will, or in their proper persons sport upon their own precipices. If they should be displeased with those who inhabit the forests, then, transformed to lions and beasts of prey, they will kill the offenders. We then are bound to worship the mountains; to offer sacrifices to cattle. What have we to do with Indra? cattle and mountains are our gods. Brahmans offer worship with prayer; cultivators of the earth adore their landmarks; but we who tend our herds in the forests and mountains should worship them and our kine. Let prayer and offerings then be addressed

---

3 Or, Anvikshiki (चार्नीक्षी), the science of inquiring by reasoning, Turka (तुर्का), or logic: Trayī (त्रयी), the three Vedas collectively, or the doctrines they teach: Vārttā (वार्त्ताः), rendered ‘practical,’ is the knowledge of the means of acquiring subsistence (प्रौढः): the fourth is Daśānāsti (दशानास्ति), the science of government, both domestic and foreign.

4 These nomadic habits are entirely lost sight of in the parallel passages of those Purāṇas in which the juvenile life of Krishna is narrated. The text of the Hari Vanā is in most of the other verses precisely the same as that of the Vishnu P., putting however into the mouth of Krishna a long additional eulogy on the season of autumn.
to the mountain Govardhana, and kill a victim in due form. Let the whole station collect their milk without delay, and feed with it the Brahmans and all who may desire to partake of it. When the oblations have been presented, and the Brahmans have been fed, let the Gopas circumambulate the cows, decorated with garlands of autumnal flowers. If the cowherds will attend to these suggestions, they will secure the favour of the mountain, of the cattle, and also mine."

When Nanda and the other Gopas heard these words of Krishnā, their faces expanded with delight, and they said that he had spoken well. "You have judged rightly, child," exclaimed they; "we will do exactly as you have proposed, and offer adoration to the mountain." Accordingly the inhabitants of Vraja worshipped the mountain, presenting to it curds and milk and flesh; and they fed hundreds and thousands of Brahmans, and many other guests, who came to the ceremony, even as Krishnā had enjoined: and when they had made their offerings, they circumambulated the cows and the bulls, that bellowed as loud as roaring clouds. Upon the summit of Govardhana, Krishnā presented himself, saying, "I am the mountain," and partook of much food presented by the Gopas; whilst in his own form as Krishnā he ascended the hill along with the cowherds, and worshipped his other self.5 Having promised them many blessings, the mountain-person of Krishnā vanished; and the ceremony being completed, the cowherds returned to their station.

5 The Hari Vanśa says, "an illusory Krishnā, having become the mountain, ate the flesh that was offered." "सान्तनन्याते साधृशयेन निरिक्षणं विषयं ज‍ुधुखे।" Of course the 'personified' mountain is intended, as appears from several of the ensuing passages; as for instance, he says presently, 'I am satisfied; and then in his divine form he smiled;'; "सृष्टिकीर्तितैत्वम् दुर्योग प्रमहाल व।" The Hari Vanśa affords here, as in so many other places, proofs of its Dakhini origin. It is very copious upon the homage paid to the cattle, and their decoration with garlands and plumes of peacocks' feathers, of which our text takes no notice. But in the south of India there is a very popular festival, that of the Punjab, scarcely known in the north, when cattle are decorated and worshipped; a celebration which has no doubt suggested to the compiler of the Hari Vanśa the details which he describes.
CHAP. XI.

Indra, offended by the loss of his offerings, causes heavy rain to deluge Gokula. Krishna holds up the mountain Govardhana to shelter the cowherds and their cattle.

INDRA, being thus disappointed of his offerings, was exceedingly angry, and thus addressed a cohort of his attendant clouds, called Samvarttaka: "Ho, clouds," he said, "hear my words, and without delay execute what I command. The insensate cowherd Nanda, assisted by his fellows, has withheld the usual offerings to us, relying upon the protection of Krishna. Now, therefore, afflict the cattle, that are their sustenance, and whence their occupation is derived, with rain and wind. Mounted upon my elephant, as vast as a mountain peak, I will give you aid in strengthening the tempest." When Indra ceased, the clouds, obedient to his commands, came down, in a fearful storm of rain and wind, to destroy the cattle. In an instant the earth, the points of the horizon, and the sky, were all blended into one by the heavy and incessant shower. The clouds roared aloud, as if in terror of the lightning's scourge, and poured down uninterrupted torrents. The whole earth was enveloped in impenetrable darkness by the thick and volumed clouds; and above, below, and on every side, the world was water. The cattle, pelted by the storm, shrank cowering into the smallest size, or gave up their breath: some covered their calves with their flanks, and some beheld their young ones carried away by the flood. The calves, trembling in the wind, looked piteously at their mothers, or implored in low moans, as it were, the succour of Krishna. Hari, beholding all Gokula agitated with alarm, cowherds, cowherdesses, and cattle all in a state of consternation, thus reflected: "This is the work of Mahendra, in resentment of the prevention of his sacrifice, and it is incumbent on me to defend this station of herdsmen. I will lift up this spacious mountain from its stony base, and hold it up, as a large umbrella, over the cow-pens." Having thus determined, Krishna immediately plucked up the mountain Govardhana, and held it aloft with one hand in sport, saying to the herdsmen, "Lo the mountain is on high; enter beneath it quickly, and it will shelter you from the storm: here you will be secure and at your ease in places defended from the wind: enter without delay, and fear not that the mountain will fall.”
THE MOUNTAIN HELD UP BY KRISHÑA.

Upon this, all the people, with their herds, and their waggons and goods, and the Gopís, distressed by the rain, repaired to the shelter of the mountain, which Krishña held steadily over their heads; and Krishña, as he supported the mountain, was contemplated by the dwellers of Vraja with joy and wonder; and, as their eyes opened wide with astonishment and pleasure, the Gopas and Gopís sang his praise. For seven days and nights did the vast clouds sent by Indra rain upon the Gokula of Nanda to destroy its inhabitants, but they were protected by the elevation of the mountain; and the slayer of Bala, Indra, being foiled in his purpose, commanded the clouds to cease. The threats of Indra having been fruitless, and the heavens clear, all Gokula came forth from its shelter, and returned to its own abode. Then Krishña, in the sight of the surprised inhabitants of the forests, restored the great mountain Govardhana to its original site.

1 It seems not unlikely that this legend has some reference to the caves or cavern temples in various parts of India. A remarkable representation of it occurs upon the sculptured rocks of Mahabalipur. It is related much to the same purport in the Bhāgavata, &c. Śisupāla, ridiculing the exploit, asserts that Govardhana was nothing more than an ant hill.
CHAP. XII.

Indra comes to Gokula: praises Krishnā, and makes him prince over the cattle.  Krishnā promises to befriend Arjuna.

AFTER Gokula had been saved by the elevation of the mountain, Indra became desireous of beholding Krishnā.  The conqueror of his foes accordingly mounted his vast elephant Airāvata, and came to Govardhāna, where the king of the gods beheld the mighty Dāmodara tending cattle, and assuming the person of a cow-boy, and, although the preserver of the whole world, surrounded by the sons of the herdmens: above his head he saw Garuḍa, the king of birds, invisible to mortals, spreading out his wings to shade the head of Hari.  Alighting from his elephant, and addressing him apart, Śakra, his eyes expanding with pleasure, thus spake to Madhusūdana: “Hear, Krishnā, the reason why I have come hither; why I have approached thee; for thou couldst not otherwise conceive it.  Thou, who art the supporter of all, hast descended upon earth, to relieve her of her burden.  In resentment of my obstructed rites I sent the clouds to deluge Gokula, and they have done this evil deed.  Thou, by raising up the mountain, hast preserved the cattle; and of a verity I am much pleased, O hero, with thy wondrous deed.  The object of the gods is now, methinks, accomplished, since with thy single hand thou hast raised aloft this chief of mountains.  I have now come by desire of the cattle, grateful for their preservation, in order to install you as Upendra; and, as the Indra of the cows, thou shalt be called Govinda.”  Having thus said, Mahendra took a ewer from his elephant

1 Gobhiacha chodita (गोभिच्छ चोदिता); that is, ‘delegated,’ says the commentator, ‘by the cow of plenty, Kāmadhenu, and other celestial kine, inhabitants of Goloka, the heaven of cows?’ but this is evidently unauthorized by the text, as celestial cattle could not be grateful for preservation upon earth; and the notion of Goloka, a heaven of cows and Krishnā, is a modern piece of mysticism, drawn from such sectarian works as the Brahma Vaivartta P. and Hari Vanśa.

2 The purport of Indra’s speech is to explain the meaning of two of Krishnā’s names, Upendra and Govinda.  The commentators on the Amara Kosha agree in Airavata, and with the holy water it contained performed the regal ceremony of aspersion. The cattle, as the rite was celebrating, deluged the earth with their milk.

When Indra had, by direction of the kine, inaugurated Krishña, the husband of Sachi said to him affectionately, “I have thus performed what the cows enjoined me. Now, illustrious being, hear what farther I propose, with a view to facilitate your task. A portion of me has been born as Arjuna, the son of Prithá: let him ever be defended by thee, and he will assist thee in bearing thy burden. He is to be cherished by thee, Madhusúdana, like another self.” To this Krishña replied, “I know thy son, who has been born in the race of Bharata, and I will explain the first, the younger brother of Indra, युधिष्ठिर, स्वर्गवासी नामिता। गृहस्थ हृदय कुष्ठ ज्ञान लीला निर्मल देवस्तः। ‘As thou, Krishña, art appointed, by the cows, Indra superior to me, therefore the deities in heaven shall call thee Upendra.’ The Bhágavata does not introduce the name, though it no doubt alludes to it in making the divine cow Surabhi, who is said to have come from Goloka with Indra, address Krishña, and say, ‘हरि नवयानिश्चितानि जया नेिद्वानि। ‘We, instructed by Brahmá, will crown you as our Indra.’ Accordingly Krishña has the water of the Ganges thrown over him by the elephant of Indra, and Indra, the gods, and sages praise him, and salute him by the appellation of Govinda. The Hari Vaná assigns this to Indra alone, who says, ‘I am only the Indra of the gods; thou hast attained the rank of Indra of the kine, and they shall for ever celebrate thee on earth as Govinda? चारणि लेखो देवानि लोकानामलिखत न गे। गाधियु दृष्टि तो बल्लत्र सोचांचर भुवने भाव न। All this is very different from the sober account of our text, and is undoubtedly of comparatively recent origin.
befriend him as long as I continue upon earth. As long as I am present, invincible Śakra, no one shall be able to subdue Arjuna in fight. When the great demon Kansa has been slain, and Arishta, Keśin, Kuvalayapīḍa, Naraka, and other fierce Daityas, shall have been put to death, there will take place a great war, in which the burden of the earth will be removed. Now therefore depart, and be not anxious on account of thy son; for no foe shall triumph over Arjuna whilst I am present. For his sake I will restore to Kunti all her sons, with Yudhishthira at their head, unharmed, when the Bhárata war is at an end.”

Upon Krishnā's ceasing to speak, he and Indra mutually embraced; and the latter, mounting his elephant Airávata, returned to heaven. Krishnā, with the cattle and the herdsmen, went his way to Vraja, where the wives of the Gopas watched for his approach.
CHAP. XIII.

Krishna praised by the cowherds: his sports with the Gopis: their imitation and love of him. The Ras dance.

After Sakra had departed, the cowherds said to Krishna, whom they had seen holding up Govardhana, “We have been preserved, together with our cattle, from a great peril, by your supporting the mountain above us; but this is very astonishing child’s play, unsuitable to the condition of a herdsman, and all thy actions are those of a god. Tell us what is the meaning of all this. Kastha has been conquered in the lake; Pralamba has been killed; Govardhana has been lifted up: our minds are filled with amazement. Assuredly we repose at the feet of Hari, O thou of unbounded might! for, having witnessed thy power, we cannot believe thee to be a man. Thy affection, Kesava, for our women and children, and for Vrava; the deeds that thou hast wrought, which all the gods would have attempted in vain; thy boyhood, and thy prowess; thy humiliating birth amongst us; are contradictions that fill us with doubt, whenever we think of them. Yet reverence be to thee, whether thou be a god, or a demon, or a Yaksha, or a Gandharba, or whatever we may deem thee; for thou art our friend.” When they had ended, Krishna remained silent for some time, as if hurt and offended, and then replied to them, “Herdsmen, if you are not ashamed of my relationship; if I have merited your praise; what occasion is there for you to engage in any discussion concerning me? If you have any regard for me; if I have deserved your praise; then be satisfied to know that I am your kinsman. I am neither god, nor Yaksha, nor Gandharba, nor Dvana; I have been born your relative, and you must not think differently of me.” Upon receiving this answer, the Gopas held their peace, and went into the woods, leaving Krishna apparently displeased.

But Krishna, observing the clear sky bright with the autumnal moon, and the air perfumed with the fragrance of the wild water-lily, in whose buds the clustering bees were murmuring their songs, felt inclined to join with the Gopis in sport. Accordingly he and Rama commenced singing sweet low strains in various measures, such as the women loved; and they, as soon as they heard the melody, quitted their homes, and hastened to meet the foe of Madhu. One damsel gently sang an accompaniment to his song; another attentively listened to his melody: one calling out upon his name, then shrunk abashed; whilst another, more bold, and instigated by affection, pressed close to his side: one, as she sallied forth, beheld some of the seniors of the family, and dared not venture, contenting herself with meditating on Krishṇa with closed eyes, and entire devotion, by which immediately all acts of merit were effaced by rapture, and all sin was expiated by regret at not beholding him: and others, again, reflecting upon the cause of the world, in the form of the supreme Brahma, obtained by their sighing final emancipation. Thus surrounded by the Gopīs, Krishṇa thought the lovely moonlight night of autumn propitious to the Rāsā dance. Many of the Gopīs imitated the different actions of Krishṇa, and in his absence wandered through Vrindāvan, representing his person. “I am Krishṇa,” cries one; “behold the elegance of my movements.” “I am Krishṇa,” exclaims another; “listen to my song.” “Vile Kālīya, stay! for I am Krishṇa,” is repeated by a third, slapping her arms in defiance. A fourth calls out, “Herdsmen, fear nothing; be steady; the danger of the storm is over, for, lo, I lift up Govardhana for your shelter.” And a fifth proclaims, “Now let the herds graze wherever they will, for I have destroyed Dhenuka.” Thus in various actions of Krishṇa the Gopīs imitated him, whilst away, and beguiled their sorrow by mimicking his sports. Looking down upon the ground, one damsel calls to her friend, as the light down upon her body stands erect with joy, and the lotuses of her eyes expand, “See here are the marks of Krishṇa’s feet, as he has gone alone sportively, and left the impressions of the banner, the thunderbolt, and the goad. What lovely maiden has been his companion, inebriate with

---

1 The Rāsā dance is danced by men and women, holding each other’s hands, and going round in a circle, singing the airs to which they dance. According to Bhaṭṭa, the airs are various both in melody and time, and the number of persons should not exceed sixty-four: चलेकरनिवे शीरसस्तद्यथापनिन्न | चा० छिरूलावाहिते सव नक्षरोऽहं ||

2 The soles of the feet of a deity are passion, as her irregular footmarks testify? Here Dámodara has gathered flowers from on high, for we see alone the impressions of the tips of his feet. Here a nymph has sat down with him, ornamented with flowers, fortunate in having propitiated Vishńu in a prior existence. Having left her in an arrogant mood, because he had offered her flowers, the son of Nanda has gone by this road; for see, unable to follow him with equal steps, his associate has here tripped along upon her toes, and, holding his hand, the damsels has passed, as is evident from the uneven and intermingled footsteps. But the rogue has merely taken her hand, and left her neglected, for here the paces indicate the path of a person in despair. Undoubtedly he promised that he would quickly come again, for here are his own footsteps returning with speed. Here he has entered the thick forest, impervious to the rays of the moon, and his steps can be traced no farther.” Hopeless then of beholding Krishńa, the Gopis returned, and repaired to the banks of the Yamuná, where they sang his songs; and presently they beheld the preserver of the three worlds, with a smiling aspect, hastening towards them: on which, one exclaimed, “Krishńa! Krishńa!” unable to articulate any thing else: another affected to contract her forehead with frowns, as drinking with the bees of her eyes the lotus of the face of Hari: another, closing her eyelids, contemplated internally his form, as if engaged in an act of devotion. Then Mádhava, coming amongst them, conciliated some with soft speeches, some with gentle looks, and some he took by the hand; and the illustrious deity sported with them in the stations of the dance. As each of the Gopis, however, attempted to keep in one place, close to the side of Krishńa, the circle of the dance could not be constructed, and he therefore took each by the hand, and when their eyelids were shut by the effects of such touch, the circle was formed. Then proceeded the dance usually marked by a variety of emblematical figures: this is carried to the greatest extravagance by the Buddhists, the marks on the feet of Gautama being 130: see Trans. R. As. Soc. III. 70. It is a decoration very moderately employed by the Hindus.

\[\text{This is a rather inexplicit statement, but the comment makes it clear. Krishńa, it is said, in order to form the circle, takes each damsels by the hand, and leads her to her place: there she quits her; but the effect of the contact is such, that it deprives her of the power of perception, and}\]

\[\text{6 v}\]
to the music of their clashing bracelets, and songs that celebrated in suitable strain the charms of the autumnal season. Krishna sang the she contentedly takes the hand of her female neighbour, thinking it to be Krishna’s. The Bhagavata is bolder, and asserts that Krishna multiplied himself, and actually stood between each two damsels:

The Rasa dance, formed of a circle graced by the Gopis, was then led off by the lord of magic, Krishna having placed himself in the midst of every two of the nymphs. The Hari Vanâ intimates the same, though not very fully:

The Hari Vanâ intimates the same, though not very fully:

The Hari Vanâ intimates the same, though not very fully:

Then all the nymphs of the cowherds, placing themselves in couples in a row, engaged in pleasant diversion, singing the deeds of Krishna. The Pankti, or row, is said by the commentator to mean here, the Madhala, or ring; and the ‘couples’ to imply that Krishna was between every two. He quotes a verse to this effect from some other Vaishnava work:

Between each two damsels was Madhava, and between each two Madhavas was a nymph; and the son of Devaki played on the flute: for, in fact, Krishna is not only dancing with each, but also by himself in the centre; for this the commentator on the Hari Vanâ cites a passage from the Vedas: Literally, ‘The many-formed (being) assumes (various) bodies. One form stood apart, occupying triple observance.’ Now if the verse be genuine, it probably refers to something that has little to do with Krishna; but it is explained to apply to the Rasâ; the form of Krishna being supposed to be meant, as wholly distinct from the Gopis, and yet being beheld by every one of them, on each side and in front of her. In the meditation upon Krishna, which is engaged in the Brahma Vaivarta, he is to be contemplated in the centre of the Rasa Mandala, in association with his favourite Radha; but the Madala described in that work is not a ring of dancers, but a circle of definite space at Vrindavana, within which Krishna, Radha, and the Gopis divert themselves, not very decorously. This work has probably given the tone to the style in which the annual festival, the Rasa Yatra, is celebrated in various parts of India, in the month of Kartika, upon the sun’s entrance into Libra, by nocturnal dances, and representations of the sports of Krishna. A circular dance of men and women, however, does not form any prominent feature at these entertainments, and it may be doubted if it is ever performed. Some of the earliest labourers in the field of Hindu mythology have thought this circular dance to typify the dance of the planet round the sun (Maurice, Ancient History of Hindus, I. 108. II. 356); but there is no particular number assigned to the performers by any of the Hindu authorities, beyond its limitation to sixty-four. At the Rasa Mandala of the Brahma Vaivarta, Radha is accompanied by thirty-six of her most particular friends amongst the Gopis, but they are each attended by thousands of inferior personages, and none moon of autumn, a mine of gentle radiance; but the nymphs repeated the praises of Krishñá alone. At times, one of them, wearied by the revolving dance, threw her arms, ornamented with tinkling bracelets, round the neck of the destroyer of Madhu: another, skilled in the art of singing his praises, embraced him. The drops of perspiration from the arms of Hari were like fertilizing rain, which produced a crop of down upon the temples of the Gopís. Krishñá sang the strain that was appropriate to the dance. The Gopís repeatedly exclaimed, "Bravo, Krishñá!" to his song. When leading, they followed him; when returning, they encountered him; and, whether he went forwards or backwards, they ever attended on his steps. Whilst frolicking thus with the Gopís, they considered every instant without him a myriad of years; and, prohibited in vain by husbands, fathers, brothers, they went forth at night to sport with Krishñá, the object of their affection. Thus the illimitable being, the benevolent remover of all imperfections, assumed the character of a youth amongst the females of the herdsmen of Vraja; pervading their natures, and that of their lords, by his own essence, all diffusive like the wind: for even as in all creatures the elements of ether, fire, earth, water, and air, are comprehended, so also is he everywhere present, and in all.

of the crowd are left without male multiples of Krishñá. The only mysticism hinted at in that Puráñá, is, that these are all one with Krishñá: the varied vital conditions of one spirit being represented by the Gopís and the illusory manifestations of Krishñá: he himself being supreme unmodified soul.
CHAP. XIV.

Krishṇa kills the demon Arishta, in the form of a bull.

One evening, whilst Krishṇa and the Gopīs were amusing themselves in the dance, the demon Arishta, disguised as a savage bull, came to the spot, after having spread alarm through the station. His colour was that of a cloud charged with rain; he had vast horns, and his eyes were like two fiery suns: as he moved, he ploughed up the ground with his hoofs: his tongue was repeatedly licking his lips; his tail was erect; the sinews of his shoulders were firm, and between them rose a hump of enormous dimensions; his haunches were soiled with ordure, and he was a terror to the herds; his dewlap hung low, and his face was marked with scars from butting against the trees. Terrifying all the kine, the demon who perpetually haunts the forests in the shape of a bull, destroying hermits and ascetics, advanced. Beholding an animal of such a formidable aspect, the herdsmen and their women were exceedingly frightened, and called aloud on Krishṇa, who came to their succour, shouting and slapping his arm in defiance. When the Daitya heard the noise, he turned upon his challenger, and fixing his eyes and pointing his horns at the belly of Keśava, he ran furiously upon the youth. Krishṇa stirred not from his post, but, smiling in sport and derision, awaited the near approach of the bull, when he seized him as an alligator would have done, and held him firmly by the horns, whilst he pressed his sides with his knees. Having thus humbled his pride, and held him captive by his horns, he wrung his throat, as if it had been a piece of wet cloth; and then tearing off one of the horns, he beat the fierce demon with it until he died, vomiting blood from his mouth. Seeing him slain, the herdsmen glorified Krishṇa, as the companies of the celestials of old praised Indra, when he triumphed over the Asura Jambha. ¹

¹ This exploit is related a little more in detail in the Bhāgavata and Hari Vāناس.
CHAP. XV.

Kansa informed by Nárada of the existence of Krishńa and Balaráma: he sends Keśin to destroy them, and Akrúra to bring them to Mathúrā.

AFTER these things had come to pass, Arishta the bull-demon and Dhenuka and Pralamba had been slain, Govardhana had been lifted up, the serpent Kálíya had been subdued, the two trees had been broken, the female fiend Pútana had been killed, and the waggon had been overturned, Nárada went to Kansa, and related to him the whole, beginning with the transference of the child from Devakí to Yaśodá. Hearing this from Nárada, Kansa was highly incensed with Vasudeva, and bitterly reproached him, and all the Yádavas, in an assembly of the tribe. Then reflecting what was to be done, he determined to destroy both Krishńa and Ráma whilst they were yet young, and before they had attained to manly vigour: for which purpose he resolved to invite them from Vraja, under pretext of the solemn rite of the lustration of arms, when he would engage them in a trial of strength with his chief boxers, Cháńúra and Mushtika, by whom they would assuredly be killed. "I will send," he said, "the noble Yadu, Akrúra the son of Swaphalka, to Gokula, to bring them hither: I will order the fierce Keśin, who haunts the woods of Vrindávan, to attack them, and he is of unequalled might, and will surely kill them; or, if they arrive here, my elephant Kuvalayápiña shall trample to death these two cow-boys sons of Vasudeva." Having thus laid his plans to destroy Ráma and Janárddana, the impious Kansa sent for the heroic Akrúra, and said to him, "Lord of liberal gifts, 1 attend to my words, and, out of friendship for me, perform my orders.
Ascend your chariot, and go hence to the station of the herdsman Nanda.
Two vile boys, portions of Víshúu, have been born there, for the express object of effecting my destruction. On the fourteenth lunation I have to celebrate the festival of arms, 2 and I wish them to be brought here by

1 Dánapatí: the epithet refers to Akrúra’s possession of the Syamantaka gem (see
p. 433); although, as here used by Kansa, it is an anachronism, the gem not becoming his until after Krishńa’s maturity.
2 Dhanurmahā (दानुर्महा): the same phrase

6 X
AKRÚRA SENT TO BRING KRISHṆA.

you, to take part in the games, and that the people may see them engage in a boxing match with my two dexterous athletes, Cháńúra and Mush tíka; or haply my elephant Kuvalayápída, driven against them by his rider, shall kill these two iniquitous youngsters, sons of Vasudeva. When they are out of the way, I will put to death Vasudeva himself, the cowherd Nanda, and my foolish father, Ugrasena, and I will seize upon the herds and flocks, and all the possessions, of the rebellious Gopas, who have ever been my foes. Except thou, lord of liberality, all the Yádavas are hostile to me; but I will devise schemes for their extirpation, and I shall then reign over my kingdom, in concert with thee, without any annoyance. Through regard for me, therefore, do thou go as I direct thee; and thou shalt command the cowherds to bring in with speed their supplies of milk and butter and curds."

Being thus instructed, the illustrious Akrúra readily undertook to visit Krishṇa, and, ascending his stately chariot, he went forth from the city of Mathurá.

occurs in the different authorities. In its ordinary acceptance it would imply any military festival. There is one of great celebrity, which, in the south of India, closes the Dasahará, or festival of Durgá, when military exercises are performed, and a field is ravaged, as typical of the opening of a campaign. Worship is paid to military implements. The proper day for this is the Vijaya daśamí, or tenth of the light half of Asvin, falling about the end of September or beginning of October. Trans. Bombay Soc. III. 73; also Amara Kosha, under the word लोह्रिबिक्रम (Lohabhikrama).

Both our text and that of the Bhágavata, however, intimate the celebration of the feast in question on the fourteenth day of the fortnight (in what month is not specified), and an occasional "passage of arms," therefore is all that is intended. The fourteenth day of the light lunation of any month is commonly held appropriate for a holiday, or religious rite. It will be seen in the sequel, that the leading feature of the ceremonial was intended to have been a trial of archery, spoiled by Krishṇa's breaking the bow that was to have been used on the occasion.
CHAP. XVI.

Keśin, in the form of a horse, slain by Krīshṇa: he is praised by Nārada.

Keśin, confiding in his prowess, having received the commands of Kansa, set off to the woods of Vṛndāvana, with the intention of destroying Krīshṇa. He came in the shape of a steed, spurning the earth with his hoofs, scattering the clouds with his mane, and springing in his paces beyond the orbits of the sun and moon. The cowherds and their females, hearing his neighings, were struck with terror, and fled to Govinda for protection, calling upon him to save them. In a voice deep as the roaring of the thundercloud, Krīshṇa replied to them, "Away with these fears of Keśin; is the valour of a hero annihilated by your alarms? What is there to apprehend from one of such little might, whose neighings are his only terrors; a galloping and vicious steed, who is ridden by the strength of the Daityas? Come on, wretch—I am Krīshṇa—and I will knock all thy teeth down thy throat, as the wielder of the trident did to Pūshan 1." Thus defying him to combat, Govinda went to encounter Keśin. The demon ran upon him, with his mouth opened wide; but Krīshṇa enlarging the bulk of his arm, thrust it into his mouth, and wrenched out the teeth, which fell from his jaws like fragments of white clouds. Still the arm of Krīshṇa, in the throat of the demon, continued to enlarge, like a malady increasing from its commencement till it ends in dissolution. From his torn lips the demon vomited foam and blood; his eyes rolled in agony; his joints gave way; he beat the earth with his feet; his body was covered with perspiration; he became incapable of any effort. The formidable demon, having his mouth rent open by the arm of Krīshṇa, fell down, torn asunder like a tree struck by lightning: he lay separated into two portions, each having two legs, half a back, half a tail, one ear, one eye, and one nostril. Krīshṇa stood, unharmed and smiling, after the destruction of the demon, surrounded by the cowherds, who, together with their women, were filled with astonishment at 1 As Viṣṇuḥḍra did to Pūṣā or Pūshan, a form of Sūrya, at the sacrifice of Dakṣa: see p. 67. n. 6.

the death of Keśī, and glorified the amiable god with the lotus eyes. Nārada the Brahman, invisible, seated in a cloud, beheld the fall of Keśī, and delightedly exclaimed, "Well done, lord of the universe, who in thy sports hast destroyed Keśī, the oppressor of the denizens of heaven! Curious to behold this great combat between a man and a horse—such a one as was never before heard of—I have come from heaven. Wonderful are the works that thou hast done, in thy descent upon the earth! they have excited my astonishment; but this, above all, has given me pleasure. Indra and the gods lived in dread of this horse, who tossed his mane, and neighed, and looked down upon the clouds. For this, that thou hast slain the impious Keśī, thou shalt be known in the world by the name of Keśava. Farewell: I will now depart. I shall meet thee again, conqueror of Keśī, in two days more, in conflict with Kansa. When the son of Ugrasena, with his followers, shall have been slain, then, upholders of the earth, will earth’s burdens have been lightened by thee. Many are the battles of the kings that I have to see, in which thou shalt be renowned. I will now depart, Govinda. A great deed, and acceptable to the gods, has been done by thee. I have been much delighted with thee, and now take my leave." When Nārada had gone, Krishnā, not in any way surprised, returned with the Gopas to Gokula; the sole object of the eyes of the women of Vraja.

2 Or Keśī and va, 'who kills,' from vadh or budh, 'to kill' but this is a Paurāṇik etymology, and less satisfactory than the usual grammatical one of Keśa, 'hair,' and va' possessive affix: Krishnā corresponding in this respect to the Apollo Crinitus. It is also derived from the legend of his origin from 'a hair' (see p. 497, n. 23); and again, Keśa is said to purport 'radiance' or 'rays,' whether of the sun or moon or fire; all which are the light of Krishnā: whence he is called Keśava, 'the rayed' or 'radiant.' Mahābhārata, Moksha Dharma.

3 The legend is told by all the other narrators of Krishnā’s juvenile exploits.
CHAP. XVII.

Akrūra's meditations on Krishūa: his arrival at Gokula: his delight at seeing Krishūa and his brother.

AKRŪRA, having set off in his quick travelling car, proceeded to visit Krishūa at the pastures of Nanda; and, as he went along, he congratulated himself on his superior good fortune, in having an opportunity of beholding a descended portion of the deity. "Now," thought he, "has my life borne fruit; my night is followed by the dawn of day; since I shall see the countenance of Vishūu, whose eyes are like the expanded leaf of the lotus. I shall behold that lotus eyed aspect of Vishūu, which, when seen only in imagination, takes away the sins of men. I shall to-day behold that glory of glories, the mouth of Vishūu, whence proceeded the Vedas, and all their dependant sciences. I shall see the sovereign of the world, by whom the world is sustained; who is worshiped as the best of males, as the male of sacrifice in sacrificial rites.
I shall see Keśava, who is without beginning or end; by worshipping whom with a hundred sacrifices, Indra obtained the sovereignty over the gods. That Hari, whose nature is unknown to Brahā, Indra, Rudra, the Āświns, the Vasus, Ādityas, and Maruts, will this day touch my body. The soul of all, the knower of all, he who is all, and is present in all, he who is permanent, undecaying, all-pervading, will converse with me. He, the unborn, who has preserved the world in the various forms of a fish, a tortoise, a boar, a horse, a lion, will this day speak to me.
Now the lord of the earth, who assumes shapes at will, has taken upon him the condition of humanity, to accomplish some object cherished in his heart. That Ananta, who holds the earth upon his crest, and who has descended upon earth for its protection, will this day call me by my

1 The commentator explains this to mean Hayagriva, or Vishūu with the neck and head of a horse; who, it is said in the second book of the Bhāgavata, appeared at the end of a great sacrifice performed by Brahā, and breathed from his nostrils the texts of the Vedas. The fourth Avatāra is always elsewhere said to be the Vāmān, or dwarf.

6 y
name. Glory to that being, whose deceptive adoption of father, son, brother, friend, mother, and relative, the world is unable to penetrate. Glory to him, who is one with true knowledge, who is inscrutable, and through whom, seated in his heart, the Yogi crosses the wide expanse of worldly ignorance and illusion. I bow to him, who, by the performers of holy rites, is called the male of sacrifice (Yajnapurusha); by pious worshippers is termed Vásudeva; and by the cultivators of philosophy, Vishňu. May he in whom cause and effect, and the world itself, is comprehended, be propitious to me, through his truth; for always do I put my trust in that unborn, eternal Hari; by meditation on whom, man becomes the repository of all good things."

His mind thus animated by devout faith, and meditating in this manner, Akrúra proceeded on his road, and arrived at Gokula a little before sunset, at the time of the milking of the cows; and there he saw Krishña amongst the cattle, dark as the leaf of the full blown lotus; his eyes of the same colour, and his breast decorated with the Śrīvatsa mark; long armed, and broad chested; having a high nose, and a lovely countenance, brightened with mirthful smiles; treading firmly on the ground, with feet whose nails were tinted red; clad in yellow garments, and adorned with a garland of forest flowers; having a fresh-gathered creeper in his hand, and a chaplet of white lotus flowers on his head. Akrúra also beheld there Balabhadra, white as a jasmine, a swan, or the moon, and dressed in blue raiment; having large and powerful arms, and a countenance as radiant as a lotus in bloom; like another Kailása mountain, crested with a wreath of clouds.

When Akrúra saw these two youths, his countenance expanded with delight, and the down of his body stood erect with pleasure: for this he thought to be supreme happiness and glory; this, the double manifestation of the divine Vásudeva; this was the twofold gratification of his sight, to behold the creator of the universe: now he hoped that his bodily form would yield fruit, as it would bring him in contact with the person of Krishña; and that the wearer of infinite forms would place his hand on his back; the touch of whose finger alone is sufficient to dispel sin, and to secure imperishable felicity: that hand which launches the fierce irresistible discus, blazing with all the flames of fire, lightning, and the sun, and slaughtering the demon host washes the collyrium from the eyes of their brides: that hand into which Bali poured water, and thence obtained ineffable enjoyments below the earth, and immortality and dominion over the gods for a whole Manwantara, without peril from a foe. "Alas! he will despise me, for my connexion with Kansa, an associate with evil, though not contaminated by it. How vain is his birth, who is shunned by the virtuous? and yet what is there in this world unknown to him who resides in the hearts of all men, who is ever existent, exempt from imperfection, the aggregate of the quality of purity, and identical with true knowledge? With a heart wholly devoted to him, then, I will approach the lord of all lords, the descended portion of Purushottama, of Vishnu, who is without beginning, middle, or end."
CHAP. XVIII.

Grief of the Gopis on the departure of Krshipa and Balarama with Akrura: their leaving Gokula. Akrura bathes in the Yamuna; beholds the divine forms of the two youths, and praises Vishnu.

Thus meditating, the Yadava approached Govinda, and addressed him, and said, “I am Akrura,” and bowed his head down to the feet of Hari; but Krishnia laid upon him his hand, which was marked with the flag, the thunderbolt, and the lotus, and drew him towards him, and affectionately embraced him. Then Kesava and Rama entered into conversation with him, and, having heard from him all that had occurred, were much pleased, and led him to their habitation: there they resumed their discourse, and gave him food to eat, and treated him with proper hospitality. Akrura told them how their father Anakadundubhi, the princess Devaki, and even his own father, Ugrasena, had been insulted by the iniquitous demon Kansa: he also related to them the purpose for which he had been dispatched. When he had told them all these things, the destroyer of Kesan said to him, “I was aware of all that you have told me, lord of liberal gifts: Rama and I will go to-morrow to Mathura along with you. The elders of the cowherds shall accompany us, bearing ample offerings. Rest here to-night, and dismiss all anxiety. Within three nights I will slay Kansa and his adherents.”

Having given orders accordingly to the cowherds, Akrura, with Kesava and Rama, retired to rest, and slept soundly in the dwelling of Nanda. The next morning was bright, and the youths prepared to depart for Mathura with Akrura. The Gopis, seeing them about to set forth, were much afflicted; they wept bitterly, their bracelets were loose upon their arms, and they thus communed together: “If Govinda depart for Mathura, how will he return to Gokula? his ears will there be regaled with the melodious and polished conversation of the women of the city. Accustomed to the language of the graceful females of Mathura, he will never again endure the rustic expressions of the Gopis. Hari, the pride of the station, is carried off, and a fatal blow is inflicted upon us by inexorable destiny. Expressive smiles, soft language, graceful airs, elegant gait, and significant glances, belong to the women of the city. Hari is of rustic breeding, and, captivated by their fascinations, what likelihood is there of his returning to the society of any one amongst us? Keśava, who has mounted the car to go to Mathurā, has been deceived by the cruel, vile, and desperate Akrūra. Does not the unfeeling traitor know the affection that we all here feel for our Hari, the joy of our eyes, that he is taking him away? Unkind that he is, Govinda is departing from us, along with Rāma: haste! let us stop him! Why talk of telling our seniors that we cannot bear his loss? What can they do for us, when we are consumed by the fires of separation? The Gopas, with Nanda at their head, are themselves preparing to depart; no one makes any attempt to detain Govinda. Bright is the morning that succeeds to this night for the women of Mathurā, for the bees of their eyes will feed upon the lotus face of Achyuta. Happy are they who may go hence without impediment, and behold, enraptured, Krishnā on his journey. A great festival will give pleasure to-day to the eyes of the inhabitants of Mathurā, when they see the person of Govinda. What a blissful vision will be seen by the happy women of the city, whose brilliant eyes shall regard, unchecked, the countenance of Krishnā! Alas! the eyes of the Gopās have been deprived of sight by the relentless Brahmā, after he had shewn them this great treasure. In proportion as the affection of Hari for us decays, so do our limbs wither, and the bracelets slip from our arms: and now the cruel Akrūra urges on the horses: all conspire to treat unhappy females with unkindness. Alas! alas! we see now only the dust of his chariot wheels! and now he is far away, for even that dust is no longer to be seen!" Thus lamented by the women, Keśava and Rāma quitted the district of Vraja 1. Travelling in a car drawn by fleet horses, they arrived at noon at the banks of the Yamunā, when Akrūra requested them to halt a little, whilst he performed the

---

1 In the Bhāgavata, Hari Vansā, &c. several adventures of Krishnā, during his residence at Vraja, are recorded, of which our text makes no mention. Of these, the two most popular are Krishnā's taking away the clothes of the Gopās whilst bathing, and his liberating the Gopās from the mouth of Agháaura, disguised as a vast serpent, into which they had entered, thinking it a cavern in a mountain. The omission of these two legends, or of any of the rest, is not much to be regretted.
usual daily ceremonial in the river. Accordingly the intelligent Akrūra bathed, and rinsed his mouth, and then entering the stream, he stood meditating upon the supreme being; but he beheld mentally Balabhadrā, having a thousand hooded heads, a garland of Jasmine flowers, and large red eyes, attended by Vāsuki, Rambha, and other mighty serpents, praised by the Gandharbas, decorated with wild flowers, wearing dark coloured garments, crowned with a chaplet of lotuses, ornamented with brilliant earrings, inebriated, and standing at the bottom of the river in the water. On his lap he also beheld, at his ease, Krishnā, of the complexion of a cloud, with full and coppery eyes, having an elegant form, and four hands, armed with the discus and other weapons, wearing yellow clothes, decorated with many coloured flowers, and appearing like a cloud embellished with streams of lightning and the bow of Indra; his breast was marked with the celestial sign, his arms were radiant with bracelets, a diadem shone on his brow, and he wore a white lotus for his crest: he was attended by Sanandana and other holy sages, who, fixing their eyes upon the tips of their noses, were absorbed in profound meditation.

When Akrūra beheld Balarāma and Krishnā in this situation, he was much amazed, and wondered how they could so quickly have got there from the chariot. He wished to ask them this, but Janárddana deprived him of the faculty of speech at the moment. Ascending then from the water, he repaired to the car, and there he found them both quietly seated in the same human persons as before. Plunging again into the water, there he again beheld them, hymned as before by the Gandharbas, saints, sages, and serpents. Apprehending, therefore, their real character, he thus eulogized the eternal deity, who consists of true knowledge:—

2 The noonday prayer, or Sandhya.
3 By his Dhyāna, or force of meditation, in which it is attempted to bring before the mind's eye some definite form of the object of adoration. In this case Akrūra is compelled to see a form he did not anticipate. The Hari Vana very clumsily sets him to meditate upon the serpent Śeṣa, which spoils the story, intended as that is to exhibit the identity of Balarāma and Krishnā with the supreme.
4 Balarāma was thus visible in his real character of Śeṣa, the chief of serpents, the couch of Vishnū, and supporter of the world.
5 Or rather, he beheld Ghanaśraya, an appellation of Krishnā, who is so called from being as black (śāma) as a cloud (ghana).
AND PRAISES KRISHNA.

"Salutation to thee, who art uniform and manifold, all-pervading, supreme spirit, of inconceivable glory, and who art simple existence. Salutation to thee, O inscrutable, who art truth, and the essence of obligations. Salutation to thee, O lord, whose nature is unknown, who art beyond primeval matter, who existest in five forms, as one with the elements, with the faculties, with matter, with the living soul, with supreme spirit. Shew favour to me, O soul of the universe, essence of all things, perishable or eternal, whether addressed by the designation of Brahmá, Vishnu, Śiva, or the like. I adore thee, O god, whose nature is indescribable, whose purposes are inscrutable, whose name even is unknown; for the attributes of kind or appellation are not applicable to thee, who art that, the supreme Brahma, eternal, unchangeable, uncreated. But as the accomplishment of our objects cannot be attained except through some specific form, thou art termed by us Krishña, Achyuta, Ananta, or Vishú. Thou, unborn divinity, art all the objects of these impersonations; thou art the gods, and all other beings; thou art the whole world; thou art all. Soul of the universe, thou art exempt from change, and there is nothing except thee in all this existence. Thou art Brahmá, Paśupati, Áryaman, Dhátri, and Vidhátri; thou art Indra, air, fire, the regent of the waters, the god of wealth, and judge of the dead; and thou, although but one, presidest over the world with various energies, addressed to various purposes. Thou, identical with the solar ray, createst the universe; all elementary substance is composed of thy qualities; and thy supreme form is denoted by the imperishable term sat (existence). To him who is one with true knowledge, who is and is not perceptible, I bow. Glory be to him, the lord Vásudeva, to Sankarshána, to Pradyumna, and to Aniruddha?"
CHAP. XIX.

Thus the Yádava Akrúra, standing in the river, praised Krishná, and worshipped him with imaginary incense and flowers. Disregarding all other objects, he fixed his whole mind upon the deity; and having continued for a long time in spiritual contemplation, he at last desisted from his abstraction, conceiving he had effected the purposes of soul. Coming up from the water of the Yamuná, he went to the car, and there he beheld Ráma and Krishná seated as before. As his looks denoted surprise, Krishná said to him, "Surely, Akrúra, you have seen some marvel in the stream of the Yamuná, for your eyes are staring as if with astonishment." Akrúra replied, "The marvel that I have seen in the stream of the Yamuná I behold before me, even here, in a bodily shape; for he whom I have encountered in the water, Krishná, is also your wondrous self, of whose illustrious person the whole world is the miraculous development. But enough of this; let us proceed to Mathurá: I am afraid Kansa will be angry at our delay; such is the wretched consequence of eating the bread of another." Thus speaking, he urged on the quick horses, and they arrived after sunset at Mathurá. When they came in sight of the city, Akrúra said to Krishná and Ráma, "You must now journey on foot, whilst I proceed alone in the car; and you must not go to the house of Vasudeva, for the elder has been banished by Kansa on your account."

Akrúra having thus spoken, left them, and entered the city; whilst Ráma and Krishná continued to walk along the royal road. Regarded with pleasure by men and women, they went along sportively, looking like two young elephants. As they roamed about, they saw a washerman colouring clothes, and with smiling countenances they went and threw down some of his fine linen. The washerman was the servant of Kansa, made insolent by his master's favour; and he provoked the two lads with loud and scurrilous abuse, until Krishṇa struck him down, with his head to the ground, and killed him. Then taking the clothes, they went their way, clad in yellow and blue raiment, until they came to a flower-seller's shop. The flower-seller looked at them with astonishment, and wondered who they could be, or whence they could have come. Seeing two youths so lovely, dressed in yellow and blue garments, he imagined them to be divinities descended upon earth. Being addressed by them with mouths budding like lotuses, and asked for some flowers, he placed his hands upon the ground, and touched it with his head, saying, "My lords have shewn me great kindness in coming to my house, fortunate that I am; I will pay them homage." Having thus spoken, the flower-seller, with a smiling aspect, gave them whatever choice flowers they selected, to conciliate their favour. Repeatedly prostrating himself before them, he presented them with flowers, beautiful, fragrant, and fresh. Krishṇa then, being much pleased with him, gave him this blessing; "Fortune, good friend, who depends upon me, shall never forsake you: never shall you suffer loss of vigour, or loss of wealth: as long as time shall last your descendants shall not fail. Having long tasted various delights on earth, you shall finally obtain, by calling me to recollection, a heavenly region, the consequence of my favour. Your heart shall ever be intent on righteousness, and fulness of days shall be the portion of your posterity. Your descendants shall not be subject to natural infirmities, as long as the sun shall endure." Having thus spoken, Krishṇa and Rāma, worshipped by the flower-seller, went forth from his dwelling.¹

¹ These incidents are told, with some unimportant differences, in the other accounts of Krishṇa's youth.
CHAP. XX.

Krishnā and Balarāma meet Kubjā; she is made straight by the former: they proceed to the palace. Krishnā breaks a bow intended for a trial of arms. Kansa's orders to his servants. Public games. Krishnā and his brother enter the arena: the former wrestles with Chānúra, the latter with Muhśika, the king's wrestlers; who are both killed. Krishnā attacks and slays Kansa: he and Balarāma do homage to Vasudeva and Devakī: the former praises Krishnā.

As they proceeded along the high road, they saw coming towards them a young girl, who was crooked, carrying a pot of unguent. Krishnā addressed her sportively, and said, "For whom are you carrying that unguent? tell me, lovely maiden; tell me truly." Spoken as it were through affection, Kubjā, well disposed towards Hari, replied to him also mirthfully, being smitten by his appearance; "Know you not, beloved, that I am the servant of Kansa, and appointed, crooked as I am, to prepare his perfumes. Unguent ground by any other he does not approve of: hence I am enriched through his liberal rewards." Then said Krishnā, "Fair-faced damsel, give us of this unguent, fragrant and fit for kings, as much as we may rub upon our bodies." "Take it," answered Kubjā; and she gave them as much of the unguent as was sufficient for their persons; and they rubbed it on various parts of their faces and bodies1, till they looked like two clouds, one white and one black, decorated by the many-tinted bow of Indra. Then Krishnā, skilled in the curative art, took hold of her, under the chin, with the thumb and two fingers, and lifted up her head, whilst with his feet he pressed down her feet; and in this way he made her straight. When she was thus relieved from her deformity, she was a most beautiful woman; and, filled with gratitude and affection, she took Govinda by the garment, and invited him to her house. Promising to come at some 1 They had their bodies smeared in the style called Bhaktichheda (भक्तिच्हेद) that is, with the separating or distinguishing (chheda) marks of Vaishnava devotion (bhakti); certain streaks on the forehead, nose, cheeks, breast, and arms, which denote a follower of Vishnu. See As. Res. XVI. 33.

---

other time, Krishña smilingly dismissed her, and then laughed aloud on beholding the countenance of Baladeva.\

Dressed in blue and yellow garments, and anointed with fragrant unguents, Keśava and Ráma proceeded to the hall of arms, which was hung round with garlands. Inquiring of the warders which bow he was to try, and being directed to it, he took it, and bent it; but drawing it with violence, he snapped it in two, and all Mathurá resounded with the noise which its fracture occasioned. Abused by the warders for breaking the bow, Krishña and Ráma retorted, and defied them, and left the hall.

When Kansa knew that Akrúra had returned, and heard that the bow had been broken, he thus said to Cháňúra and Mushtika, his boxers: "Two youths, cowherd boys, have arrived; you must kill them both, in a trial of strength, in my presence; for they practise against my life. I shall be well pleased if you kill them in the match, and will give you whatever you wish; not else. These two foes of mine must be killed by you fairly or unfairly. The kingdom shall be ours in common, when they have perished." Having given them these orders, he sent next for his elephant driver, and desired him to station his great elephant Kuvalayápída, who was as vast as a cloud charged with rain, near the gate of the arena, and drive him upon the two boys when they should attempt to enter. When Kansa had issued these commands, and ascertained that the platforms were all ready for the spectators, he awaited the rising of the sun, unconscious of impending death.

In the morning the citizens assembled on the platforms set apart for them, and the princes, with the ministers and courtiers, occupied the royal seats. Near the centre of the circle judges of the games were stationed by Kansa, whilst he himself sat apart close by upon a lofty throne. Separate platforms were erected for the ladies of the palace, for the courtesans, and for the wives of the citizens. Nanda and the

---

3 The story is similarly told in the Bhágavata, &c.
2 The bending or breaking of a bow is a favourite incident in Hindu heroic poetry, borrowed, no doubt, from the Rámáyána, where, however, it has an object; here it is quite gratuitous.
4 The Bhágavata enters into even fewer cowherds had places appropriated to them, at the end of which sat Akrūra and Vasudeva. Amongst the wives of the citizens appeared particulars than our text of the place set apart for the games. The Hari Vānśa gives a much more detailed description, which is in some respects curious. The want of any technical glossary, and the general manner in which technical terms are explained in the ordinary dictionaries, render it difficult to understand exactly what is intended, and any translation of the passages must be defective. The French version, however, probably represents a much more splendid and theatrical scene than the text authorizes, and may therefore admit of correction. The general plan is nothing more than an enclosed space, surrounded by temporary structures of timber or bambus, open or enclosed, and decorated with hangings and garlands. It may be doubted if the details described by the compiler of the Hari Vānśa were very familiar even to him; for his description is not always very consistent or precise. Of two commentators, one evidently knows nothing of what he attempts to explain; but with the assistance of the other the passages may be thus, though not always confidently, rendered:

"The king, Kansa, meditating on these things, went forth from his palace to the place which had been prepared for the sight of the ceremonial, to inspect the scaffolds which had been constructed. He found the place close set with the several platforms of the different public bodies, strongly put together, and decorated with roofed pavilions of various sizes, supported by columns, and divided into commodious chambers. The edifice was extensive, well arranged, secured by strong rafters, spacious and lofty, and commodious and secure. Stairs led to the different galleries. Chairs of state were placed in various parts of it. The avenues that conducted to it were narrow. It was covered with temporary stages and sheds, and was capable of sustaining the weight of a multitude.

"Having seen the place of the festival thus adorned, Kansa gave orders, and said, 'To-morrow let the platforms and terraces and pavilions be decorated with pictures and garlands and flag and images, and let them be scented with fragrant odours, and covered over with awnings. Let there be ample heaps of dry, pounded cow-dung provided on the ground, and suitable refreshment chambers be covered over, and decorated with bells and ornamented arches. Let large water-jars be securely fixed in order, capable of holding a copious supply, and provided with golden drinking-cups. Let apartments be prepared, and various kinds of beverage, in appropriate vessels, be ready. Let judges of the games be invited, and corporations with their chiefs. Let orders be issued to the wrestlers, and notice be given to the spectators; and let platforms for their accommodation be fitted up in the place of assembly.'

When the meeting takes place, the site of the games is thus described: "Upon the following day the amphitheatre was filled by the citizens, anxious to behold the games. The place of assembly was supported by octagonal painted pillars," Devakí, mourning for her son, whose lovely face she longed to behold even in the hour of his destruction. When the musical instruments fitted up with terraces and doors and bolts, with windows circular or crescent; shaped, and accommodated with seats with cushions, and it shone like the ocean whilst large clouds hang upon it, with spacious, substantial pavilions, fitted up for the sight of the combat; open to the front, but screened with beautiful and fine curtains, crowned with festoons of flowers, and glistering with radiance like autumnal clouds. The pavilions of the different companies and corporations, vast as mountains, were decorated with banners, bearing upon them the implements and emblems of the several crafts. The chambers of the inhabitants of the inner apartments shone near at hand, bright with gold and painting and net-work of gems: they were richly decorated with precious stones, were enclosed below with costly hangings, and ornamented above with spires and banners, and looked like mountains spreading their wings in the sky; while the rays of light reflected from the valuable jewels were blended with the waving of white chowries, and the musical tinkling of female ornaments. The separate pavilions of the courtesans were graced by lovely women, attired in the most splendid dresses, and emulated the radiance of the cars of the gods. In the place of assembly there were excellent seats, couches made of gold, and hangings of various colours, intermixed with bunches of flowers: and there were golden vases of water, and handsome places for refreshment, filled with fruits of various kinds, and cooling juices, and sherbets fit for drinking. And there were many other stages and platforms, constructed of strong timber, and hangings by hundreds and thousands were displayed: and upon the tops of the houses, chambers fitted up with delicate jalousies, through which the women might behold the sports, appeared like swans flying through the air.

"In front stood the pavilion of Kanasa, surpassing all the rest in splendour, looking like Mount Meru in radiance; its sides, its columns, being covered with burnished gold; fastened with coloured cords; and every way worthy the presence of a king."

In justification of the rendering of the above, an explanation of the technical terms, taken either from dictionaries or from the commentators, may be subjoined. (1) Kanasa went to the Prekahága (प्रेक्षागार), literally 'house of seeing;' but it is evident, from its interior being visible to spectators on the tops of the houses, as subsequently mentioned, that it was not a theatre, or covered edifice. If a building at all, it was merely a sort of stockade. One commentator calls it, 'a place made for seeing the sacrifice;' वनस्पःप्रेक्षागारं कर्णे शालाय। (2) Manchánáma avalokaka (मन्चाताम अवलोकका). The Mancha is commonly understood to signify a raised platform, with a floor and a roof, ascended by a ladder: see Dictionary. (3) Mancha-váta (मन्चावात). Váta is either 'site' or 'inclosure,' and is used here without much affecting the sense of Mancha. The compound is explained by the commentators, 'prepared places' (रष्ट्रंनामका), or 'the sites of the platforms' (रष्ट्रंनामका). (4) The Shrni (श्रीनिनी), asso-sounded, Cháñára sprang forth, and the people cried, "Alas!" and Mushtika slapped his arms in defiance. Covered with must and blood... from the elephant, whom, when goaded upon them by his driver, they had slain, and armed with his tusks, Balabhadra and Jauárdana confidently entered the arena, like two lions amidst a herd of deer. Exclamations of pity arose from all the spectators, along with expressions of astonishment. "This then," said the people, "is Krishná! this is Balabhadra! This is he by whom the fierce night-walker Pútaná was slain; by whom the waggon was overturned, and the two Arjuna trees implies 'making.' (17) Manchávása; 'in the Samája,' or 'assembly.' (18) Mahá-ranga (महारंग) 'the great place of the performance.' Ranga is 'acting' or 'representation;' also the place or site of it. (19) All the copies consulted, except one, offer an irregularity of construction, which, although defended by the commentators, is a license scarcely allowable. The epithets of the first verse are all in the plural number; they then occur in the singular, to agree with the only substantive in the description, Samájavása. According to the commentaries, the plural term Manchá (मंचा) understood is the substantive to the epithets of the first stanza, and Samájavása the singular to those of the other verses. This awkwardness is however avoided by the reading of an old and very good copy, which puts it all in the singular; as, समाजसमस्थता सवधनार्यार्यांचा सं समाजसमस्थता सवधनार्यार्यांचा सं. (20) The expression is Chárañja, literally 'foot;' explained by the commentator, Stambha, 'post' or 'piller.' (21) The reading of most of the copies is Sáyanottama (स्यायोत्तम), which may be taken as the sense of Talottama, 'couches or benches with cushions.' (22) Manchágaráns (मंचागरांते), 'temporary houses.' (23) Or 'fronting to the east' (पूर्व तोरंते). (24) Nirnuktá (निर्नुक्ता): explained by the commentator to mean 'fine threads,' 'network,' or 'gauze,' through which persons, females especially, may see without being seen. (25) लक्षणवर्ण लक्षणवर्ण: पतञ्जालिन:। (26) 'With ridges and projections' (लक्षणवर्ण लक्षणवर्ण). The commentator explains this, 'with flags on the top of them (लक्षण लक्षण स्थित हैं). (27) This appears to be intended for an epithet of the women, although Astarára is not usually applied to dress: वातसस्तां मन्त्रिता वातसां समस्तार्यम:। (28) कलारसर्वनन्दीक चारस्यां: पन्न योगिना:। Phala, of course, is 'fruit.' Avadána is explained in lexicons, 'what is eaten to excite thirst:' one comment gives it, 'what may be sucked,' as tamarinds, and the like. Chángéri is explained, 'fluids for drinking, made with sorrel, or acid fruits;' that is, sherbets. (29) वल्लभार्यका or वल्लभार्यिका is an epithet of the Prekáshá-गांव, or look-out house of the women (वल्लभार्यिका), situated on the tops of their houses, according to the commentators; गुरुगेहरी गुरु गुरु गुरु गुरु गुरु गुरु: An arrangement very compatible with the form of Indian houses, which have flat roofs, commonly enclosed by a trellis work, or jalouse of masonry. It is observable, that in the Vishnu Puráña, and in the Mahábhárata, on various public occasions, the women take their places on the platforms, or in the pavilions, without curtains or screens.
felled! This is the boy who trampled and danced on the serpent Káliya; who upheld the mountain Govardhána for seven nights; who killed, as if in play, the iniquitous Arish'ta, Dhenuka, and Keśin! This whom we see is Achyuta! This is he who has been foretold, by the wise, skilled in the sense of the Puráñas, as Gopála, who shall exalt the depressed Yádava race! This is a portion of the all-existing, all-generating Víshńu, descended upon earth, who will assuredly lighten her load!" Thus did the citizens describe Ráma and Krishña, as soon as they appeared; whilst the breast of Devakí glowed with maternal affection; and Vasudeva, forgetting his infirmities, felt himself young again, on beholding the countenances of his sons as a season of rejoicing. The women of the palace, and the wives of the citizens, wide opened their eyes, and gazed intently upon Krishña. "Look, friends," said they to their companions; "look at the face of Krishña; his eyes are reddened by his conflict with the elephant, and the drops of perspiration stand upon his cheeks, out-vicing a full blown lotus in autumn, studded with glittering dew. Avail yourself now of the faculty of vision. Observe his breast, the seat of splendour, marked with the mystic sign; and his arms, menacing destruction to his foes. Do you not notice Balabhadrá, dressed in a blue garment; his countenance as fair as the jasmine, as the moon, as the fibres of the lotus stem? See how he gently smiles at the gestures of Mushtika and Chánúra, as they spring up. And now behold Hari advance to encounter Chánúra. What! are there no elders, judges of the field? How can the delicate form of Hari, only yet in the dawn of adolescence, be regarded as a match for the vast and adamantine bulk of the great demon? Two youths, of light and elegant persons, are in the arena, to oppose athletic fiends, headed by the cruel Chánúra. This is a great sin in the judges of the games, for the umpires to suffer a contest between boys and strong men."

As thus the women of the city conversed with one another, Hari, having tightened his girdle, danced in the ring, shaking the ground on which he trod. Balabhadrá also danced, slapping his arms in defiance. Where the ground was firm, the invincible Krishña contended foot to foot with Chánúra. The practised demon Mushtika was opposed by Balabhadra. Mutually entwining, and pushing, and pulling, and beating each other with fists, arms, and elbows, pressing each other with their knees, interlacing their arms, kicking with their feet, pressing with their whole weight upon one another, fought Hari and Chańúra. Desperate was the struggle, though without weapons, and one for life and death, to the great gratification of the spectators. In proportion as the contest continued, so Chańúra was gradually losing something of his original vigour, and the wreath upon his head trembled from his fury and distress; whilst the world-comprehending Krishńa wrestled with him as if but in sport. Beholding Chańúra losing, and Krishńa gaining strength, Kansa, furious with rage, commanded the music to cease. As soon as the drums and trumpets were silenced, a numerous band of heavenly instruments was heard in the sky, and the gods invisibly exclaimed, “Victory to Govinda! Kēśava, kill the demon Chańúra!” Madhusūdana having for a long time dallied with his adversary, at last lifted him up, and whirled him round, with the intention of putting an end to him. Having whirled Chańúra round a hundred times, until his breath was expended in the air, Krishńa dashed him on the ground with such violence as to smash his body into a hundred fragments, and strewn the earth with a hundred pools of gory mire. Whilst this took place, the mighty Baladeva was engaged in the same manner with the demon bruiser Mushśika. Striking him on the head with his fists, and on the breast with his knees, he stretched him on the ground, and pummelled him there till he was dead. Again, Krishṇa encountered the royal bruiser Tomalaka, and felled him to the earth with a blow of his left hand. When the other athletes saw Chāṇūra, Mushtika, and Tomalaka killed, they fled from the field; and Krishṇa and Sankarshana danced victorious on the arena, dragging along with them by force the cowherds of their own age. Kansa, his eyes reddening with wrath, called aloud to the surrounding people, “Drive those two cow-boys out of the assembly: seize the villain Nanda, and secure him with chains of iron: put Vasudeva to death with tortures intolerable to his years: and lay hands upon the cattle, and whatever else belongs to those cowherds who are the associates of Krishṇa.”

6 Krishńa contended with Chańúra, ‘who through distress and anger shook the flowers of his crest.’ The two last terms are explained, ‘the flower of the wreath on his head.’

Upon hearing these orders, the destroyer of Madhu laughed at Kansa, and, springing up to the place where he was seated, laid hold of him by the hair of his head, and struck his tiara to the ground: then casting him down upon the earth, Govinda threw himself upon him. Crushed by the weight of the upholder of the universe, the son of Ugrasena, Kansa the king, gave up the ghost. Krishṇa then dragged the dead body, by the hair of the head, into the centre of the arena, and a deep furrow was made by the vast and heavy carcass of Kansa, when it was dragged along the ground by Krishṇa, as if a torrent of water had run through it. Seeing Kansa thus treated, his brother Sumalīn came to his succour; but he was encountered, and easily killed, by Balabhadra. Then arose a general cry of grief from the surrounding circle, as they beheld the king of Mathurā thus slain, and treated with such contumely, by Krishṇa. Krishṇa, accompanied by Balabhadra, embraced the feet of Vasudeva and of Devaki; but Vasudeva raised him up; and he and Devaki recalling to recollection what he had said to them at his birth, they bowed to Janardana, and the former thus addressed him: “Have compassion upon mortals, O god, benefactor and lord of deities: it is by thy favour to us two that thou hast become the (present) upholder of the 7 Et latus medium salces didicit arenam.

1 The yielding sand being furrowed into a ditch or a water-course, by the dead bodies being dragged over it. The text is, वाणिज्यिः परिज्ञात तेन युक्तम्। कुञ्जा दंडयात देवेन

वेनेन्द्र सहायः॥ world. That, for the punishment of the rebellious, thou hast descended upon earth in my house, having been propitiated by my prayers, sanctifies our race. Thou art the heart of all creatures; thou abidest in all creatures; and all that has been, or will be, emanates from thee, O universal spirit! Thou, Achyuta, who comprehendest all the gods, art eternally worshipped with sacrifices: thou art sacrifice itself, and the offerer of sacrifices. The affection that inspires my heart and the heart of Devaki towards thee, as if thou wast our child, is indeed but error, and a great delusion. How shall the tongue of a mortal such as I am call the creator of all things, who is without beginning or end, son? Is it consistent that the lord of the world, from whom the world proceeds, should be born of me, except through illusion? How should he, in whom all fixed and moveable things are contained, be conceived in the womb and born of a mortal being? Have compassion therefore indeed, O supreme lord, and in thy descended portions protect the universe. Thou art no son of mine. This whole world, from Brahmá to a tree, thou art. Therefore dost thou, who art one with the supreme, beguile us? Blinded by delusion, I thought thee my son; and for thee, who art beyond all fear, I dreaded the anger of Kansa, and therefore did I take thee in my terror to Gokula, where thou hast grown up; but I no longer claim thee as mine own. Thou, Vishńu, the sovereign lord of all, whose actions Rudra, the Maruts, the Aświns, Indra, and the gods, cannot equal, although they behold them; thou who hast come amongst us for the benefit of the world, art recognised, and delusion is no more."
CHAP. XXI.

Krishna encourages his parents; places Ugrasena on the throne; becomes the pupil of Sāndipani, whose son he recovers from the sea: he kills the marine demon Panchajana, and makes a horn of his shell.

HAVING permitted to Devakī and Vasudeva an interval of true knowledge, through the contemplation of his actions, Hari again spread the delusions of his power over them and the tribe of Yadu. He said to them, “Mother; venerable father; you have both been long observed by Sankarshana and myself with sorrow, and in fear of Kansa. He whose time passes not in respect to his father and mother, is a vile being, who descends in vain from virtuous parents. The lives of those produce good fruit, who reverence their parents, their spiritual guides, the Brahmans, and the gods. Pardon therefore, father, the impropriety of which we may have been culpable, in resenting without your orders, to which we acknowledge that we are subject, the oppression we suffered from the power and violence of Kansa.” Thus speaking, they offered homage to the elders of the Yadu tribe in order, and then in a suitable manner paid their respects to the citizens. The wives of Kansa, and those of his father, then surrounded the body of the king, lying on the ground, and bewailed his fate in deep affliction. Hari in various ways expressed his regret for what had chanced, and endeavoured to console them, his own eyes being suffused with tears. The foe of Madhu then liberated Ugrasena from confinement, and placed him on the throne, which the death of his son had left vacant. The chief of the Yādavas, being crowned, performed the funeral rites of Kansa, and of the rest of the slain. When the ceremony was over, and Ugrasena had resumed his royal seat, Krishna addressed him, and said, “Sovereign lord, command boldly what else is to be done. The curse of Yayati has pronounced our race unworthy of dominion¹; but with me, for your servant, you may issue your orders to the gods. How should kings disobey them?”

¹ The curse pronounced on the elder sons of Yayati, on their refusing to take upon them their father’s infirmities. See p. 414.
Thus having spoken, the human Keśava summoned mentally the deity of the wind, who came upon the instant, and said to him, "Go, Vāyu, to Indra, and desire him to lay aside his pomp, and resign to Ugrasena his splendid hall Sudharman: tell him that Krishña commands him to send the royal hall, the unrivalled gem of princely courts, for the assemblage of the race of Yadu." Accordingly Vāyu went, and delivered the message to the husband of Śachi, who immediately gave up to him the hall Sudharman, and Vāyu conveyed it to the Yādavaš, the chiefs of whom thenceforth possessed this celestial court, emblazoned with jewels, and defended by the arm of Govinda. The two excellent Yadu youths, versed in all knowledge, and possessed of all wisdom, then submitted to instruction, as the disciples of teachers. Accordingly they repaired to Sándipani—who, though born in Kāśi, resided at Avanti—to study the science of arms, and, becoming his pupils, were obedient and attentive to their master, exhibiting an example to all men of the observance of instituted rules. In the course of sixty-four days they had gone through the elements of military science, with the treatises on the use of arms, and directions for the mystic incantations, which secure the aid of supernatural weapons. Sándipani, astonished at such proficiency, and knowing that it exceeded human faculties, imagined that the sun and moon had become his scholars. When they had acquired all that he could teach, they said to him, "Now say what present shall be given to you, as the preceptor's fee." The prudent Sándipani, perceiving that they were endowed with more than mortal powers, requested them to give him his dead son, drowned in the sea of Prabhāsa. Taking up their arms, they marched against the ocean; but the all-comprehending sea said to them, "I have not killed the son of Sándipani; a demon

*They read through the Dhanur-veda, which treats of military matters; with the Rahasya, 'the mystical part;' and the Sangraha, 'collection' or 'compendium,' said to be here the Astra-prayoga, 'the employment of weapons.'

1 Prabhāsa is a place of pilgrimage in the west of India, on the coast of Guzerat, near the temple of Somanath, and town of Pattan Somanath. It is also known by the name of Soma-tīrtha; Soma, or the moon, having been here cured of the consumption brought upon him by the imprecation of Daksha, his father-in-law. Mahābhārata, Śalya P., vol. III. p. 249.
named Panchajana, who lives in the form of a conch shell, seized the boy: he is still under my waters. On hearing this, Krishná plunged into the sea; and having slain the vile Panchajana, he took the conch shell, which was formed of his bones (and bore it as his horn), the sound of which fills the demon hosts with dismay, animates the vigour of the gods, and annihilates unrighteousness. The heroes also recovered the boy from the pains of death, and restored him in his former person to his father. Ráma and Janárddana then returned to Mathurá, which was well presided over by Ugrasena, and abounded in a happy population both of men and women.

4 The incidents of the two last chapters are related in the Bhágavata and Hari Vansá, often in the words of the text, but with many embellishments and additions, especially in the latter. The Brahma Vaivartta, on the other hand, makes still shorter work of these occurrences than our text.
CHAP. XXII.

Jarásandha besieges Mathurá; is defeated, but repeatedly renewa the attack.

Parásara.—The mighty Kansa had married the two daughters of Jarásandha, one named Asti, the other Prápti. Jarásandha was king of Magadhá, and a very powerful prince; who, when he heard that Krishńa had killed his son-in-law, was much incensed, and, collecting a large force, marched against Mathurá, determined to put the Yádavas and Krishńa to the sword. Accordingly he invested the city with three and twenty numerous divisions of his forces. Ráma and Janárddana sallied from the town with a slender, but resolute force, and fought bravely with the armies of Magadhá. The two youthful leaders prudently resolved to have recourse to their ancient weapons, and accordingly the bow of Hari, with two quivers filled with exhaustless arrows, and the mace called Kaumodaki, and the ploughshare of Balabhadra, as well as the club Saunanda, descended at a wish from heaven. Armed with these weapons, they speedily discomfited the king of Magadhá and his hosts, and reentered the city in triumph.

Although the wicked king of Magadhá, Jarásandha, was defeated, yet Krishńa knew that whilst he escaped alive he was not subdued; and in fact he soon returned with a mighty force, and was again forced by Ráma and Krishńa to fly. Eighteen times did the haughty prince of Magadhá renew his attack upon the Yádavas, headed by Krishńa; and was as often defeated and put to the rout by them, with very inferior numbers. That the Yádavas were not overpowered by their foes, was owing to the present might of the portion of the discus-armed Vishúu.

1 See page 456.

2 With twenty-three Akshouhinia, each consisting of 109,300 infantry, 65,510 horse, 21,870 chariots, and as many elephanta. The Hari Vaná enumerates, as the allies or tributaries of Jarásandha, a number of princes from various parts of India, but this is a gratuitous embellishment.

3 The Bhágavata and Hari Vaná say ‘seventeen times.’ The latter indulges in a prolix description of the first encounter; nothing of which occurs in the Bhágavata, any more than in our text.
It was the pastime of the lord of the universe, in his capacity of man, to launch various weapons against his enemies; for what effort of power to annihilate his foes could be necessary to him, whose fiat creates and destroys the world? but as subjecting himself to human customs, he formed alliances with the brave, and engaged in hostilities with the base. He had recourse to the four devices of policy, or negotiation, presents, sowing dissension, and chastisement; and sometimes even betook himself to flight. Thus imitating the conduct of human beings, the lord of the world pursued at will his sports.
CHAP. XXIII.

Birth of Kálayavana: he advances against Mathurá. Krishná builds Dwáráká, and sends thither the Yádava tribe: he leads Kálayavana into the cave of Muchukunda: the latter awakes, consumes the Yavana king, and praises Krishná.

Parásara.—Syála having called Gárgya the Brahman, whilst at the cow-pens, impotent, in an assembly of the Yádavas, they all laughed; at which he was highly offended, and repaired to the shores of the western sea, where he engaged in arduous penance to obtain a son, who should be a terror to the tribe of Yadu. Propitiating Mahádeva, and living upon iron sand for twelve years, the deity at last was pleased with him, and gave him the desired boon. The king of the Yavanás, who was childless, became the friend of Gárgya; and the latter begot a son by his wife, who was as black as a bee, and was thence called Kálayavana. The Yavana king having placed his son, whose breast was as hard as the point of the thunderbolt, upon the throne, retired to the woods. Inflated with conceit of his prowess, Kálayavana demanded of Nárada who were the most mighty heroes on earth. To which the sage answered, “The Yádavas.” Accordingly Kálayavana assembled many myriads of Mlechchhas and barbarians, and with a vast armament of 1 This legend of the origin of Kálayavana is given also by the Hari Vanás. The Bhágavata, like our text, comes at once to the siege of Mathurá by this chief; but the Hari Vanás suspends the story, for more than thirty chapters, to narrate an origin of the Yádavas, and sundry adventures of Krishná and Ráma to the south-west. Most of these have no other authority, and are no doubt inventions of the Dakhini compiler; and the others are misplaced.

2 So the Bhágavata describes him as leading a host of Mlechchhas, or barbarians, against Krishná; but in the Mahábhárata, Sabhá Parvan, vol. I. p. 330, where Krishná describes the power of Jarásandha, he admits that he and the Yádavas fled from Mathurá to the west, through fear of that king, but no account is given of any siege of Mathurá by Kálayavana. The only indication of such a person is the mention that Bhagadatta, the Yavana king, who rules over Muru and Naraka in the west and south, is one of his most attached feudatories. This king is in various other places called king of Prágýotish, as he is in a subsequent passage of the same book, Sabhá P., p. 374; and this name is always applied to the elephants, cavalry, chariots, and foot, advanced impatiently against Mathurá and the Yádavas; wearying every day the animal that carried him, but insensible of fatigue himself.

When Krishná knew of his approach, he reflected that if the Yádavas encountered the Yavana, they would be so much weakened by the conflict, that they would then be overcome by the king of Magadhá; that their force was much reduced by the war with Magadhá, whilst that of Kályávana was unbroken; and that the enemy might be therefore victorious. Thus the Yádavas were exposed to a double danger. He resolved therefore to construct a citadel for the Yadu tribe, that should not be easily taken; one that even women might defend, and in which therefore the heroes of the house of Vrishni should be secure; one in which the male combatants of the Yádavas should dread no peril, though he himself should be drunk or careless, asleep or abroad. Thus reflecting, Krishná solicited a space of twelve furlongs from the ocean, and there he built the city of Dwáráká, defended by high ramparts, and beautified with gardens and reservoirs of water, crowded with houses and buildings, and splendid as the capital of Indra, Amaravatí. Thither Janárddana conducted the inhabitants of Mathurá, and then awaited at that city the approach of Kályávana.

When the hostile army encamped round Mathurá, Krishná unarmed went forth, and beheld the Yavana king. Kályávana, the strong-armed, recognizing Vásudeva, pursued him; him whom the thoughts of perfect ascetics cannot overtake. Thus pursued, Krishná entered a large cavern, where Muchukunda, the king of men, was asleep. The rash Yavana entering the cave, and beholding a man lying asleep there, concluded it the west of Assam. His subjects are, however, still Yavanas and Mlechchhás, and he presents horses, caps set with jewels, and swords with ivory hilts; articles scarcely to be found in Assam, which cannot well be the seat of his sovereignty. It seems most likely therefore that the story may have originated in some knowledge of the power and position of the Greek-Bactrian princes, or their Scythian successors, although in the latter compilations it has been mixed up with allusions to the first Mohammedan aggressions. See As. Res. V. 506. and XV. 100.

a According to the Mahábhárata, he only enlarged and fortified the ancient city of Kuśasthāli, founded by Raivata. Sabhá P.: see also p. 336 of our text.
must be Kṛṣṇa, and kicked him; at which Muchukunda awoke, and casting on him an angry glance, the Yavana was instantly consumed, and reduced to ashes. For in a battle between the gods and demons, Muchukunda had formerly contributed to the defeat of the latter; and, being overcome with sleep, he solicited of the gods as a boon that he should enjoy a long repose. “Sleep long and soundly,” said the gods; “and whoever disturbe you shall be instantly burnt to ashes by fire emanating from your body.”

Having burnt up the iniquitous Yavana, and beholding the foe of Madhu, Muchukunda asked him who he was. “I am born,” he replied, “in the lunar race, in the tribe of Yadu, and am the son of Vasudeva.” Muchukunda, recollecting the prophecy of old Garga, fell down before the lord of all, Hari, saying, “Thou art known, supreme lord, to be a portion of Viṣṇu; for it was said of old by Garga, that at the end of the twenty-eighth Dwāpara age Hari would be born in the family of Yadu. Thou art he, without doubt, the benefactor of mankind; for thy glory I am unable to endure. Thy words are of deeper tone than the muttering of the rain cloud; and earth sinks down beneath the pressure of thy feet. As in the battle between the gods and demons the Asuras were unable to sustain my lustre, so even am I incapable of bearing thy radiance. Thou alone art the refuge of every living being who has lighted on the world. Do thou, who art the alleviator of all distress, shew favour upon me, and remove from me all that is evil. Thou art the oceans, the mountains, the rivers, the forests: thou art earth, sky, air, water, and fire: thou art mind, intelligence, the unevolved principle, the vital airs, the lord of life—the soul; all that is beyond the soul; the all-pervading; exempt from the vicissitudes of birth; devoid of sensible

4 The name of Muchukunda, as one of the sons of Maṇḍhāṣṭrī, occurs p. 365; but no further notice is taken of him. The Bhāgavata specifies his being the son of that king, and relates the same story of his long sleep as the text. The same occurs in the Hari Vanā. The general character of the legends in this chapter is that of reference to something familiar, rather than its narration. In the Hari Vanā the opposite extreme is observable, and there the legends are as prolix as here they are concise. The Bhāgavata follows a middle course; but it seems unlikely that in either of the three we have the original fables.
properties, sound and the like; undecaying, illimitable, imperishable, subject neither to increase nor diminution: thou art that which is Brahma, without beginning or end. From thee the immortals, the progenitors, the Yakshas, Gandharbus, and Kinnaras, the Siddhas, the nymphs of heaven, men, animals, birds, deer, reptiles, and all the vegetable world, proceed; and all that has been, or will be, or is now, moveable or fixed. All that is amorphous or has form, all that is subtile, gross, stable, or moveable, thou art, O creator of the world; and beside thee there is not any thing. O lord, I have been whirled round in the circle of worldly existence for ever, and have suffered the three classes of affliction, and there is no rest whatever. I have mistaken pains for pleasures, like sultry vapours for a pool of water; and their enjoyment has yielded me nothing but sorrow. The earth, dominion, forces, treasures, friends, children, wife, dependants, all the objects of sense, have I possessed, imagining them to be sources of happiness; but I found that in their changeable nature, O lord, they were nothing but vexation. The gods themselves, though high in heaven, were in need of my alliance. Where then is everlasting repose? Who without adoring thee, who art the origin of all worlds, shall attain, O supreme deity, that rest which endures for ever? Beguiled by thy delusions, and ignorant of thy nature, men, after suffering the various penalties of birth, death, and infirmity, behold the countenance of the king of ghosts, and suffer in hell dreadful tortures, the reward of their own deeds. Addicted to sensual objects, through thy delusions I revolve in the whirlpool of selfishness and pride; and hence I come to thee, as my final refuge, who art the lord deserving of all homage, than whom there is no other asylum; my mind afflicted with repentance for my trust in the world, and desiring the fulness of felicity, emancipation from all existence.”
CHAP. XXIV.

Muchukunda goes to perform penance. Krishná takes the army and treasures of Kálayávana, and repairs with them to Dwáráká. Balaráma visits Vraja: inquiries of its inhabitants after Krishná.

Thus praised by the wise Muchukunda, the sovereign of all things, the eternal lord, Hari, said to him, "Go to whatever celestial regions you wish, lord of men, possessed of might irresistible, honoured by my favour. When you have fully enjoyed all heavenly pleasures, you shall be born in a distinguished family, retaining the recollection of your former births; and you shall finally obtain emancipation." Having heard this promise, and prostrated himself before Achyuta, the lord of the world, Muchukunda, went forth from the cave, and beholding men of diminutive stature, now first knew that the Kali age had arrived. The king therefore departed to Gandhamádana, the shrine of Naranáráyaña, to perform penance.

Krishná having by this stratagem destroyed his enemy, returned to Mathurá, and took captive his army, rich in horses, elephants and cars, which he conducted to Dwáráká, and delivered to Ugrasena, and the Yadu race was relieved from all fear of invasion. Baladeva, when hostilities had entirely ceased, being desirous of seeing his kinsmen, went to Nanda's cow-pens, and there again conversed with the herdsmen and their females, with affection and respect. By some, the elders, he was embraced; others, the juniors, he embraced; and with those of his own age, male or female, he talked and laughed. The cowherds made many kind speeches to Halayudha; but some of the Gopis spoke to him with the affectation of anger, or with feelings of jealousy, as they inquired after the loves of Krishná with the women of Mathurá. "Is all well with the fickle and inconstant Krishná?" said they: "Does the volatile swain, the friend of an instant, amuse the women of the city by laughing at our rustic efforts (to please him)? Does he ever think of us, singing in chorus to his songs? Will he not come here once again to see his mother? But why talk of these things? it is a different tale to tell for him without us, and for us without him. Father, mother, brother, husband, kin, what have we not abandoned for his sake? but he is a monument of ingratitude. Yet tell us, does not Krishña talk of coming here? Falsehood is never, O Krishña, to be uttered by thee. Verily this is Dāmodara, this is Govinda, who has given up his heart to the damsels of the city, who has no longer any regard for us, but looks upon us with disdain.” So saying, the Gopis, whose minds were fixed on Krishña, addressed Rāma in his place, calling him Dāmodara and Govinda, and laughed and were merry; and Rāma consoled them by communicating to them agreeable, modest, affectionate, and gentle messages from Krishña. With the cowherds he talked mirthfully, as he had been wont to do, and rambled along with them over the lands of Vraja.

1 This visit of Balaráma to Vraja is subsequent to the establishment of the place by the Hari Vansá anterior to the Yaḍus at Dwáraká. fall of Mathurá; by the Bhágavata, long CHAP. XXV.

Balaráma finds wine in the hollow of a tree; becomes inebriated; commands the Yamuná to come to him, and on her refusal drugs her out of her course: Lakshmi gives him ornaments and a dress: he returns to Dwáráká, and marries Revatí.

WHILST the mighty Śesha¹, the upholder of the globe, was thus engaged in wandering amidst the forests with the herdsman, in the disguise of a mortal—having rendered great services to earth, and still considering what more was to be achieved—Varuṇa, in order to provide for his recreation, said to his wife Váruṇí (the goddess of wine), “Thou, Mádirá, art ever acceptable to the powerful Ananta; go therefore, auspici-cious and kind goddess, and promote his enjoyments.” Obeying these commands, Váruṇí went and established herself in the hollow of a Kadamba tree in the woods of Vrindávana. Baladeva, roaming about, came there, and smelling the pleasant fragrance of liquor, resumed his ancient passion for strong drink. The holder of the ploughshare observing the vinous drops distilling from the Kadamba tree, was much delighted, and gathered and quaffed them² along with the herdsman and the Gopás, whilst those who were skilful with voice and lute celebrated him in their songs. Being inebriated with the wine, and the drops of perspiration standing like pearls upon his limbs, he called out, not knowing what he said, “Come hither, Yamuná river, I want to bathe.” The river, disregarding the words of a drunken man, came not at his bidding: on which

¹ The great serpent, of whom Balaráma is an incarnation.

² There is no vinous exudation from the Kadamba tree (Naucea Kadamba), but its flowers are said to yield a spirit by distillation; whence Kádambari is one of the synonyms of wine, or spirituous liquor.
The grammarians, however, also derive the word from some legend, stating it to be so called because it was produced from the hollow of a Kadamba tree on the Gomantha mountain: गोमणधर्मः प्रयोजेत धाता। The Hari Vanás, which alone makes the Gomantha mountain the scene of an exploit of Krishná and Ráma, makes no mention of this origin of wine; and the Bhágavata merely says that Váruṇí took up her abode in the hollow of a tree.
There must be some other authority therefore for this story.
Rāma in a rage took up his ploughshare, which he plunged into her bank, and dragged her to him, calling out, "Will you not come, you jade? will you not come? Now go where you please (if you can)." Thus saying, he compelled the dark river to quit its ordinary course, and follow him whithersoever he wandered through the wood. Assuming a mortal figure, the Yamunā, with distracted looks, approached Balabhadrā, and entreated him to pardon her, and let her go: but he replied, "I will drag you with my ploughshare in a thousand directions, since you contemn my prowess and strength." At last, however, appeased by her reiterated prayers, he let her go, after she had watered all the country. When he had bathed, the goddess of beauty, Lakshmī, came and gave him a beautiful lotus to place in one ear, and an earring for the other; a fresh necklace of lotus flowers, sent by Varuṇā; and garments of a dark blue colour, as costly as the wealth of the ocean: and thus decorated with a lotus in one ear, a ring in the other, dressed in blue garments, and wearing a garland, Balarāma appeared united with loveliness. Thus decorated, Rāma sported two months in Vraja, and then returned to Dwārakā, where he married Revatī, the daughter of king Raivata, by whom he had two sons, Nishatha and Ulmuka.

3 The Bhāgavata and Hari Vaná repeat this story; the latter very imperfectly; the former adds, that the Yamunā is still to be seen following the course along which she was dragged by Balarāma. The legend probably alludes to the construction of canals from the Jumna, for the purposes of irrigation; and the works of the Moḥammedans in this way, which are well known, were no doubt preceded by similar canals dug by order of Hindu princes.

4 See page 439.
CHAP. XXVI.

Krishna carries off Rukmini: the princes who come to rescue her repulsed by Balarama. Rukmin overthrown, but spared by Krishna, founds Bhogakasa. Pradyumna born of Rukmini.

Bhishmaka was king of Vidarbha, residing at Kundina. He had a son named Rukmin, and a beautiful daughter termed Rukmini. Krishna fell in love with the latter, and solicited her in marriage; but her brother who hated Krishna, would not assent to the espousals. At the suggestion of Jarasandha, and with the concurrence of his son, the powerful sovereign Bhishmaka affianced Rukmini to Siuupala. In order to celebrate the nuptials, Jarasandha and other princes, the friends of Siuupala, assembled in the capital of Vidarbha; and Krishna, attended by Balabhadra and many other Yadavas, also went to Kundina to witness the wedding. When there, Hari contrived, on the eve of the nuptials, to carry off the princess, leaving Rama and his kinsmen to sustain the weight of his enemies. Pauindraka, the illustrious Dantavakra, Viduratha, Siuupala, Jarasandha, Salya, and other kings, indignant at the insult, exerted themselves to kill Krishna, but were repelled by Balarama and the Yadavas. Rukmin, vowing that he would never enter Kundina again until he had slain Kesava in fight, pursued and overtook him. In the combat that ensued, Krishna destroyed with his discus, as if in sport, the host of Rukmin, with all its horse, and elephants, and foot, and chariots, and overthrew him, and hurled him on the ground, and would have put him to death, but was withheld by the entreaties of Rukmini. “He is my only brother,” she exclaimed, “and must not be slain by 1 Vidarbha is the country of Berar, and the name remains in the present city of Beder: the capital however, Kundinapur, is commonly identified with a place called Kundapur, about forty miles north-east of Amaravati (in Berar).

2 When she had gone forth from the city to worship Ambikā: Bhāgavata. Indrani, the wife of Indra: Hari Vasā. Our text tells the circumstance more concisely than the others.

70 thee: restrain your wrath, O divine lord, and give me my brother in charity.” Thus addressed by her, Krishú, whom no acts affect, spared Rukmín; and he (in pursuance of his vow) founded the city Bhojá-katā, and ever afterwards dwelt therein. After the defeat of Rukmin, Krishú married Rukmini in due form, having first made her his own by the Rákhasha ritual. She bore him the gallant Pradyumna, a portion of the deity of love. The demon Sambara carried him off, but he slew the demon.

3 After depriving him of his eyebrows and hair. In the Bhágavata, Balaráma also interferes in favour of Rukmin, and reproves Krishú for disfiguring him.

4 Of course this was somewhere in the neighbourhood of Kundina or Vídhráha, and is usually supposed to be situated on the Narmadá.

5 That is, by violence: thus Manu;
“The seizure of a maiden by force, whilst she weeps and calls for assistance, after hers friends and kinsmen and friends have been slain in battle, or wounded, and their houses broken open, is the marriage called Rákahasa.” III. 33. According to the Bhá-gavata, Rukmini sends to invite Krishú to carry her off, and instructs him how to proceed.
CHAP. XXVII.

Pradyumna stolen by Sambara; thrown into the sea, and swallowed by a fish; found by Māyādevī: he kills Sambara, marries Māyādevī, and returns with her to Dwārakā. Joy of Rukmini and Krishnā.

Maitreyā.—How, Muni, happened it that the hero Pradyumna was carried away by Sambara? and in what manner was the mighty Sambara killed by Pradyumna?

Parāśāra.—When Pradyumna was but six days old, he was stolen from the lying-in chamber by Sambara, terrible as death; for the demon foreknew that Pradyumna, if he lived, would be his destroyer. Taking away the boy, Sambara cast him into the ocean, swarming with monsters, into a whirlpool of roaring waves, the haunt of the huge creatures of the deep. A large fish swallowed the child, but he died not, and was born anew from its belly: for that fish, with others, was caught by the fishermen, and delivered by them to the great Asura Sambara. His wife Māyādevī, the mistress of his household, superintended the operations of the cooks, and saw, when the fish was cut open, a beautiful child, looking like a new shoot of the blighted tree of love. Whilst wondering who this should be, and how he could have got into the belly of the fish, Nárada came to satisfy her curiosity, and said to the graceful dame, “This is the son of him by whom the whole world is created and destroyed, the son of Viṣhūu, who was stolen by Sambara from the lying-in chamber, and tossed by him into the sea, where he was swallowed by the fish. He is now in thy power; do thou, beautiful woman, tenderly rear this jewel of mankind.” Thus counselled by Nárada, Māyādevī took charge of the boy, and carefully reared him from childhood, being fascinated by the beauty of his person. Her affection became still more impassioned when he was decorated with the bloom of adolescence. The gracefully-moving Māyāvatī then, fixing her heart and eyes upon the high-minded Pradyumna, gave him, whom she regarded as herself, all her magic (and illusion) powers.

1 The Bhāgavata tells the story in the same manner, but the Hari Vanāsā omits the part of the fish.

Observing these marks of passionate affection, the son of Krishṇa said to the lotus-eyed Māyādēvī, “Why do you indulge in feelings so unbecoming the character of a mother?” To which she replied, “Thou art not a son of mine; thou art the son of Vishū, whom Kāla Sambara carried away, and threw into the sea: thou wast swallowed by a fish, but wast rescued by me from its belly. Thy fondest mother, O beloved, is still weeping for thee.” When the valiant Pradyumna heard this, he was filled with wrath, and defied Sambara to battle. In the conflict that ensued, the son of Mādhava slew the whole host of Sambara. Seven times he foiled the delusions of the enchanter, and making himself master of the eighth, turned it against Sambara, and killed him. By the same faculty he ascended into the air, and proceeded to his father’s house, where he alighted, along with Māyāvatī, in the inner apartments. When the women beheld Pradyumna, they thought it was Krishṇa himself. Rukminī, her eyes dimmed with tears, spoke tenderly to him, and said, “Happy is she who has a son like this, in the bloom of youth. Such would be the age of my son Pradyumna, if he were alive. Who is the fortunate mother adorned by thee? and yet from thy appearance, and from the affection I feel for thee, thou art assuredly the son of Hari.”

At this moment Krishṇa, accompanied by Nārada, arrived; and the latter said to the delighted Rukminī, “This is thine own son, who has come hither after killing Sambara, by whom, when an infant, he was stolen from the lying-in chamber. This is the virtuous Māyāvatī, his wife, and not the wife of Sambara. Hear the reason. When Manmatha, the deity of love, had perished, the goddess of beauty, desirous to secure 5 When he was reduced to ashes by a fiery glance from Śiva, in resentment of his inflaming him with passion for Umā. This legend is a favourite with the Śaiva Purāṇas, and is told in the Linga and Kālikā, also in the Padma P. and Kāśi Khaṇḍa of the Skānda P. They do not say much about his resuscitation however; Śiva, in pity of Rati’s grief, restoring him only to a bodiless existence as Ananga, whose place is to be in the hearts of men. The Linga adds, that when Vishū, in consequence of the curse of Bhrigu, shall be born as the son of Vasudeva, Kāma shall be born as one of his sons.

his revival, assumed a delusive form, and by her charms fascinated the demon Sambara, and exhibited herself to him in various illusory enjoyments. This thy son is the descended Káma; and this is the goddess Ratí, his wife. There is no occasion for any uncertainty: this is thy daughter-in-law.” Then Rukmini was glad, and Keśava also; the whole city resounded with exclamations of joy, and all the people of Dwáraká were surprised at Rukmini’s recovering a son who had so long been lost.

3 The daughter of Daksha, but not specified (p. 54): she was born from his per-enumerated amongst those formerly spespiration, according to the Káliká P.
CHAP. XXVIII.

Wives of Krishúa. Pradyumna has Aniruddha; nuptials of the latter. Balaráma beat at dice, becomes incensed, and slays Rukmínī and others.

Rukmínī bare to Krishúa these other sons, Chárudeshúa, Sudeshúa, Chárudeha, Sushena, Chárugupta, Bhadracháru, Cháruvinda, Sucháru, and the very mighty Chárú; also one daughter, Chárumati. Krishúa had seven other beautiful wives, Kálindí, Mitravindá, the virtuous Nág-najítí, the queen Jambavati; Rohíńi, of beautiful form; the amiable and excellent daughter of the king of Madra, Mádri; Satyabhámá, the daughter of Satrújít; and Lakshmana, of lovely smiles 1. Besides these, he had sixteen thousand other wives 2.

1 The number specified, however, both in this place and in c. 32, is nine, instead of eight. The commentator endeavours to explain the difference by identifying Rohíńi with Jambavati; but in the notices of Krishúa’s posterity, both in this work and in the Bhágavata, she is distinct from Jambavati. She seems, however, to be an addition to the more usually specified eight, of whose several marriages the Bhágavata gives the best account. In addition to the three first, respecting whom particulars are found in all, Kálindí, or the Yamuna, is the daughter of the sun, whom Krishúa meets on one of his visits to Indraprastha, and who claims him as the reward of her penance. His next wife, Mitravindá, is the daughter of his maternal aunt, Rájádhídeví (p. 437), and sister of Vinda and Anuvinda, kings of Avantí; she chooses him at her Swayambar. The Hari Vansá calls her Saudattá, daughter of Sivi; and she is subsequently termed Saivyá by our text. Nágnajítí or Satyá, the next wife, was the daughter of Nagnajit, king of Kausala, and was the prize of Krishúa’s overcoming seven fierce bulls, whom no other hero had encountered with success. Bhadrá, princess of Kekaya, also Krishúa’s cousin, the daughter of Srutakirti (p. 437), was his next; and his eighth wife was Mádri, the daughter of the king of Madra; named, according to the Bhágavata, Lakshmana; and to the Hari V., Saubhíma; distinguishing, as does our text, clearly Lakshmana from Mádri, and like it having no satisfactory equivalent for Bhadrá. The Hari Vansá does not name Rohíńi, but specifies other names, as Vrihatí, &c. In the life of Krishúa, taken from the Bhágavata through a Persian translation, published by Mau- rice, there is a curious instance of the barbarous distortion of Sanscrit names by the joint labours of the English and Per- sian translators; the wives of Krishúa are written, Rokemenee (Rukmínī), Seteebah- vaní (Satyabhámá), Jamoomette (Jambavati), Kalenderee (Kálindí), Lachmeena (Lakshmana), Soeta (Satyá?), Bhedravatee (Bhadra), Mihrbenda (Mitravindá).

2 These, according to the Mahábhárata,
THE WEDDING OF ANIRUDDHA.

The heroic Pradyumna was chosen for her lord, at her public choice of a husband, by the daughter of Rukmin; and he had by her the powerful and gallant prince Aniruddha, who was fierce in fight, an ocean of prowess, and the tamer of his foes. Keśava demanded in marriage for him the granddaughter of Rukmin; and although the latter was inimical to Krishña, he betrothed the maiden (who was his son’s daughter) to the son of his own daughter (her cousin Aniruddha). Upon the occasion of the nuptials Ráma and other Yádavas attended Krishña to Bhojakata, the city of Rukmin. After the wedding had been solemnized, several of the kings, headed by him of Kalinga, said to Rukmin, “This wielder of the ploughshare is ignorant of the dice, which may be converted into his misfortune: why may we not contend with him, and beat him, in play?”

The potent Rukmin replied to them, and said, “So let it be:” and he engaged Balaráma at a game of dice in the palace. Balaráma soon lost to Rukmin a thousand Nishkas: he then staked and lost another thousand; and then pledged ten thousand, which Rukmin, who was well skilled in gambling, also won. At this the king of Kalinga laughed aloud, and the weak and exulting Rukmin grinned, and said, “Baladeva is losing, for he knows nothing of the game; although, blinded by a vain passion for play, he thinks he understands the dice.” Halayudha, galled by the broad laughter of the Kalinga prince, and the contemptuous speech of Rukmin, was exceedingly angry, and, overcome with passion, increased his stake to ten millions of Nishkas. Rukmin accepted the challenge, and therefore threw the dice. Baladeva won, and cried aloud, “The stake is mine.” But Rukmin called out as loudly, that he was the winner. “Tell no lies, Bala,” said he: “the stake is yours; that is true; but I did not agree to it: although this be won by you, yet still I am the winner.” A deep voice was then heard in the sky, inflaming still more the anger of the high-spirited Baladeva, saying, “Bala has rightly won the whole sum, and Rukmin speaks falsely: although he did not accept the pledge in words, he did so by his acts (having cast the dice).” Balaráma thus excited, his eyes red with rage, started up, and struck Rukmin with the board on which the game was played, and killed him. Taking hold of the trembling king of Kalinga, he knocked out the teeth which he had shewn when he laughed. Laying hold of a golden column, he dragged it from its place, and used it as a weapon to kill those princes who had taken part with his adversaries. Upon which the whole circle, crying out with terror, took to flight, and escaped from the wrath of Baladeva. When Krishúa heard that Rukmin had been killed by his brother, he made no remark, being afraid of Rukminí on the one hand, and of Bala on the other; but taking with him the newly wedded Aniruddha, and the Yádava tribe, he returned to Dwáráká.

Adi P., were Apsarasas, or nymhs. In the Dána Dharma they become Krishña’s wives through a boon given him by Umá.

3 The Nishka is a weight of gold, but according to different authorities of very different amount. The commentator here terms it a weight of four Suvarás, each about 175 grains troy.

The Bhágavata and Hari Váná, which both tell this story, agree in the death of Rukmín; but in the Mahábhárata he appears in the war, on the side of the Pánidavas. The occurrence is a not very favourable picture of courtly manners; but scenes of violence have never been infrequent at the courts of Rajput princes.

CHAP. XXIX.

Indra comes to Dwáракá, and reports to Krishná the tyranny of Naraka. Krishná goes to his city, and puts him to death. Earth gives the earrings of Adítí to Krishná, and praises him. He liberates the princesses made captive by Naraka, sends them to Dwáракá, and goes to Swarga with Satyabhámá.

ŚAKRA, the lord of the three worlds, came mounted on his fierce elephant Airávata to visit Śauri (Krishná) at Dwáракá. Having entered the city, and been welcomed by Hari, he related to the hero the deeds of the demon Naraka. "By thee, Madhusúdana, lord of the gods," said Indra, "in a mortal condition, all sufferings have been soothed. Arishta, Dhenuka, Chánúra, Mushtika, Kesín, who sought to injure helpless man, have all been slain by thee. Kansa, Kuvalayápiña, the child-destroying Putaná, have been killed by thee; and so have other oppressors of the world. By thy valour and wisdom the three worlds have been preserved, and the gods, obtaining their share of the sacrifices offered by the devout, enjoy satisfaction. But now hear the occasion on which I have come to thee, and which thou art able to remedy. The son of the earth, called Naraka, who rules over the city of Prágjyotisha, inflicts a great injury upon all creatures. Carrying off the maidens of gods, saints, demons, and kings, he shuts them up in his own palace. He has taken away the umbrella of Varúna, impermeable to water, the jewel mountain crest of Mandara, and the celestial nectar-dropping earrings of my mother Adítí; and he now demands my elephant Airávata. I have thus explained to you, Govinda, the tyranny of the Asura; you can best determine how it is to be prevented."

Having heard this account, the divine Hari gently smiled, and, rising from his throne, took Indra by the hand: then wishing for the eater of 1 By Víshúu, as the Varáha Avatára; but found and adopted by Janaka. Káliká P.

2 In the centre of the country of Kámarúpa, inhabited by Kirátas; the site of the shrines of Dévi, as Díkkaravásiní and Kámkhyá. Káliká P.
the serpents, Garuḍa immediately appeared; upon whom his master, having first seated Satyabhāmā upon his back, ascended, and flew to Prāgjayotisha. Indra mounted his elephant, and, in the sight of the inhabitants of Dwārakā, went to the abode of the gods.

The environs of Prāgjayotisha were defended by nooses, constructed by the demon Muru, the edges of which were as sharp as razors; but Hari, throwing his discus Sudarśana amongst them, cut them to pieces. Then Muru started up, but Keśava slew him, and burnt his seven thousand sons, like moths, with the flame of the edge of his discus. Having slain Muru, Hayagriva, and Panchajana, the wise Hari rapidly reached the city of Prāgjayotisha: there a fierce conflict took place with the troops of Naraka, in which Govinda destroyed thousands of demons; and when Naraka came into the field, showering upon the deity all sorts of weapons, the wielder of the discus, and annihilator of the demon tribe, cut him in two with his celestial missile. Naraka being slain, Earth, bearing the two earrings of Aditi, approached the lord of the world, and said, “When, O lord, I was upheld by thee in the form of a boar, thy contact then engendered this my son. He whom thou gavest me has now been killed by thee: take therefore these two earrings, and cherish his progeny. Thou, lord, whose aspect is ever gracious, hast come to this sphere, in a portion of thyself, to lighten my burden. Thou art the eternal creator, preserver, and destroyer of the universe; the origin of all worlds, and one with the universe: what praise can be worthily offered to thee? Thou art the pervader, and that which is pervaded; the act, the agent, and the effect; the universal spirit of all beings: what praise can be worthily offered to thee? Thou art the abstract soul, the sentient and the living soul of all beings, the imperishable: but since it is not possible to praise thee worthily, then why should the hopeless attempt proceed? Have compassion, O universal soul, and forgive the sins which Naraka has committed. Verily it is for the sanctification of thy son that he has been killed by thee.” The lord, who is the substance of all creatures, having replied to the earth, “Even so,” proceeded to redeem the various gems from the dwelling of Naraka. In the apartments of the women he found sixteen thousand and one hundred damselfs\textsuperscript{3}: he also beheld in the palace six thousand large elephants, each having four tusks; twenty-one lakhs of horses of Kámboja and other excellent breeds: these Govinda dispatched to Dwáráká, in charge of the servants of Naraka. The umbrella of Varúśa, the jewel mountain, which he also recovered, he placed upon Garuḍa; and mounting him himself, and taking Satyabhámá with him, he set off to the heaven of the gods, to restore the earrings of Aditi\textsuperscript{4}.

\textsuperscript{3} These were captive princesses, according to the Bhágavata; Apsarasas, or celestial nymphs, according to the Kálıká P.; and these upon their rescue by Krishña became his wives.

\textsuperscript{4} The legend of Naraka is related in more detail in the Bhágavata and Hari Vanás, but is still more fully narrated in the Kálıká Upa-puráña. It may be considered as one of the various intimations that occur in the Puránás of hostilities between the worshippers of Víshnú and Śíva; Naraka being in an especial degree favoured by the latter.
CHAP. XXX.

Krishná restores her earrings to Aditi, and is praised by her: he visits the gardens of Indra, and at the desire of Satyabháma carries off the Párijáta tree. Sachí excites Indra to its rescue. Conflict between the gods and Krishná, who defeats them. Satyabháma derides them. They praise Krishná.

GARÚDA, laden with the umbrella of Varúna and the jewel mountain, and bearing Hrishikesá on his back to the court of Indra, went lightly, as if in sport, along. When they arrived at the portals of Swarga, Hari blew his shell; on which the gods advanced to meet him, bearing respectful offerings. Having received the homage of the divinities, Krishná went to the palace of the mother of the gods, whose turrets resembled white clouds; and on beholding Aditi, paid his respects to her, along with Śakra; and, presenting to her own earrings, informed her of the destruction of the demon Naraka. The mother of the world, well pleased, then fixed her whole thoughts upon Hari, the creator, and thus pronounced his praise: "Glory to thee, O god with the lotus eyes, who removest all fear from those that worship thee. Thou art the eternal, universal, and living soul; the origin of all beings; the instigator of the mental faculty, and faculties of sense; one with the three qualities; beyond the three qualities; exempt from contraries; pure; existing in the hearts of all; void of colour, extension, and every transient modification; unaffected by the vicissitudes of birth or death, sleep or waking. Thou art evening, night, and day; earth, sky, air, water, and fire; mind, intellect, and individuality. Thou art the agent of creation, duration, and dissolution; the master over the agent; in thy forms which are called Brahmá, Vishnú, and Śiva. Thou art gods, Yakshas, Daityas, Rákshasas, Siddhas, Punnagas, Kúshmándás, Piśáchas, Gandharbas, men, animals, deer, elephants, reptiles, trees, shrubs, creepers, climbers, and grasses; all things, large, middling, small, immense, or minute: thou art all bodies whatsoever, composed of aggregated atoms. This thy illusion beguiles all who are ignorant of thy true nature, the fools who imagine soul to be in that which is not spirit. The notions that "I am—this is mine," which influence mankind, are but the delusions of the mother of the world, originating in thy active agency. Those men who, attentive to their duties, diligently worship thee, traverse all this illusion, and obtain spiritual freedom. Brahmá and all the gods, men and animals, are alike invested by the thick darkness of fascination, in the gulf of the illusions of Vishńu. That men, who having worshipped thee, should seek the gratification of their desires, and their own preservation, this, O lord, is also thy delusion. It is the sport of thy fascinations that induces men to glorify thee, to obtain thereby the continuance of their race, or the annihilation of their enemies, instead of eternal liberation. It is the fault of the impure acts of the unrighteous (to proffer such idle requests to one able to confer much more important benefits), like asking for a rag to cover one’s nakedness from the tree that bestows whatever is solicited. Be propitious then, imperishable author of all the error that deceives the world; and dispel, O lord of all creatures, the conceit of knowledge, which proceeds from ignorance. Glory to thee, grasper of the discus, wielder of the bow, brandisher of the mace, holder of the shell; for such do I behold thee in thy perceptible form: nor do I know that form of thine, which is beyond perception! Have compassion on me, supreme god.”

Vishńu, thus hymned by Aditi, smiled, and said to the mother of the gods, “Mother goddess, do thou shew favour unto me, and grant me thy blessing.” “So be it,” replied Aditi, “ever as thou wilt; and whilst thou dwellest amongst mortals, the first of men, thou shalt be invincible by gods or demons.” Then Satyabháma, accompanied by the queen of Indra, addressed Aditi respectfully, and solicited her benedictions: and Aditi in reply said to her, “Fair-browed dame, thou shalt never suffer decay, nor loss of beauty: thou shalt be the asylum of all loveliness, dame of faultless shape.” With the assent of Aditi, Indra then respectfully saluted Janárdhana in all due form, and conducted him and Satyabháma through Nandana and other pleasant gardens of the gods; where Kesava, the destroyer of Kesí, saw the Párijata tree, the favourite of Sáchi, which was produced when the ocean was churned for ambrosia: the bark was of gold, and it was embellished with young sprouting leaves of a copper colour, and fruit-stalks bearing numerous clusters of fragrant fruit.
When Satyabhāmā noticed this tree, she said to her beloved lord, Govinda, "Why should not this divine tree be transported to Dwārakā? If what you say is true, and I am really dear to you, then let this tree be taken away from hence, and planted in the gardens of my dwelling. You have often said to me, 'Neither Jāmbavatī nor Rukminī is so dear to me, Satyā, as you are.' If you have spoken the truth, and not mere flattery, then let this Pārijāta tree be the ornament of my mansion. I long to shine amidst my fellow queens, wearing the flowers of this tree in the braids of my hair."

Thus solicited by Satyabhāmā, Hari smiled upon her, and taking the Pārijāta plant, put it upon Garuḍa. The keepers of the garden remonstrated, and said, "This Pārijāta tree belongs to Śachī, the queen of the sovereign of the gods: it is not proper, Govinda, for you to remove it. At the time when the ocean was churned for the beverage of immortality, this tree was produced, for the purpose of providing Śachī with flowery ornaments. You cannot be suffered to depart with it. It is through ignorance that this is sought for by any one, as it is the especial property of her on whose countenance the king of the gods delights to look; and who shall go away with impunity, who attempts to carry it off? Assuredly the king of the gods will punish this audacity; for his hand launches the thunderbolt, and the immortals attend upon his steps. Forbear then, Krishṇa, nor provoke the hostility of all the gods. The wise will not commence actions that can be productive only of unpleasant consequences." Satyabhāmā, on hearing these words, was exceedingly offended, and said, "What right has Śachī—what has Indra—to the Pārijāta tree? it was produced at the churning of the ocean as the common property of all worlds. Wherefore, gods, should Indra alone possess it? In the same manner, guardians of the grove, as nectar, as the moon, as the goddess Śrī herself, so the Pārijāta tree is the common property of all the world: and since Śachī, confiding in the strength of her husband's arm, would keep it to herself, away with submission to her: Satyā takes away the tree. Go quickly, and let Paulomī be told what I have said: repeat to her this contemptuous message from Satyabhāmā; 'If you are the beloved wife of your lord, if your husband is obedient to your authority, let him prevent my husband from carrying off this tree. I know your husband Śakra; I know the sovereign of the divinities; and I, who am a mortal, take this Pārijāta tree away from you."

Accordingly the warders of the garden went and reported to Śachi the message of Satyabhāmā. Śachi appealed to her husband, and excited the king of the gods to resent this affront: and Indra accordingly, attended by the army of the celestials, marched to attack Hari, in defence of the Pārijāta tree. The gods were armed with clubs, swords, maces, and darts; and Indra wielded the thunderbolt. As soon as Govinda saw the king of the gods advancing against him on his elephant, attended by the immortals, he blew his shell so that the sound filled all the regions, and he showered smilingly myriads of arrows upon his assailants. Beholding the air in all directions overspread with his darts, the celestials in return hurled innumerable missiles; but every one of these the destroyer of Madhu, and lord of all worlds, cut playfully into a thousand pieces with his shafts. The devourer of serpents, Garuda, laid hold of the noose of the sovereign of the waters, and tore it to fragments with his beak, as if it had been a little snake. The son of Devakī threw his mace at the club of Yama, and cast it broken upon the ground: he cut in bits the litter of the lord of wealth with his discus: a glance of his eye eclipsed the radiance of the sun: he severed Agni into a hundred parts with his arrows, and scattered the Vasus through the realms of space: with his discus he cut off the points of the tridents of the Rudras, and cast themselves upon the earth: and with the shafts shot from his bow he dispersed the Sādhyas, Viśwas, Maruts, and Gandharbas, like fleeces of cotton from the pods of the Simel tree, through the sky. Garuda also diligently plied his beak and wings and nails, and bit and bruised and scratched the deities who opposed his lord.

Then the king of the gods and the foe of Madhu encountered and overwhelmed each other with countless shafts, like rain-drops falling from two heavy clouds. Garuda in the conflict engaged with Airávata, and Janárddana was opposed to all the deities. When all the other weapons had been cut to pieces, Indra stood armed with his thunderbolt, and Krishná with the discus Sudarsána. Beholding them thus prepared for fight, all the people of the three spheres exclaimed, "Alas! alas!"
Indra launched his bolt, but in vain, for Hari caught and arrested it: he forbore, however, to hurl his discus, and only called out to Indra to stay. Satyabhámá seeing Indra disarmed, and his elephant disabled by Garuḍa, and the deity himself about to retreat, said to him, "King of the triple sphere, it ill becomes the husband of Śachí to run away. Ornamented with Párijátá garlands, she will approach you. Of what use is the sovereignty of heaven, embellished with the Párijátá tree, no longer beholding Śachí meet you with affection as of yore? Nay, Śakra, fly not; you must not suffer shame: here, take the Párijátá tree; let the gods be no longer annoyed. Śachí, inflated with pride of her husband, has not welcomed me to her dwelling with respectful presents. As a woman, I am light of purpose, and am anxious for my husband's fame; therefore have I instigated, Śakra, this contest with you. But I do not want the Párijátá tree, nor do I wish to take that which is another's property. Śachí is proud of her beauty. What woman is not proud of her husband?" Thus spoken to by Satyabhámá, the king of the gods turned back, and said to her, "Desist, wrathful dame, from afflicting your friend by further reproaches. I am not ashamed of being vanquished by him who is the author of the creation, preservation, and destruction of the world; who is the substance of all things; in whom, without beginning or middle, the universe is comprised; and from whom, and by whom, identical with all things, it proceeds, and will cease to be. What disgrace is it, O goddess, to any one to be discomfited by him who is the cause of creation, continuance, and dissolution? His form is the parent of all worlds, though infinitely subtle, and known to those only by whom all that may be known is known. Who is able to overcome the unborn, unconstituted, eternal lord, who has willed to become a mortal for the good of the world!"

1 The Bhágavata merely says, "Incited by his wife, Krishná took away the Párijátá tree, having subdued the gods, and planted it in the garden of Satyabhámá. The Hari V. makes a long story of it, and tells it with some variations, especially in the commencement; Satyabhámá's desire for the Párijátá tree having been excited by Nárada's presenting a flower from it to Krishná's other spouse, Rukmíńi."
CHAP. XXXI.

Krishna, with Indra's consent, takes the Párijáta tree to Dwáraká; marries the princesses rescued from Naraka.

KEśAVA, being thus eulogized by the king of the gods, smiled, and spake gravely to him in reply. "Thou art Indra," said he, "the king of the celestials: we are but mortals, O lord of the world: thou must pardon therefore the offence that I have committed. Let this Párijáta tree be taken to its appropriate situation. I removed it in compliance with the words of Satyá. Receive back also this your thunderbolt, cast at me; for this is your proper weapon, the destroyer of your foes." Indra answered and said, "Thou beguilest us, O lord, in calling thyself a mortal; but we know thee to be the lord, although not endowed with subtlety of discernment. Thou art that thou art, engaged in the active preservation of the earth; thou extractest the thorns implanted in her bosom, destroyer of the demon race. Let this Párijáta tree be transferred to Dwáraká, and it shall remain upon earth as long as thou abidest in the world of mortals." Hari, having assented to the proposal of Indra, returned to earth, hymned by attendant sages, saints, and quiristers of heaven.

When Krishna arrived over Dwáraká, he blew his shell, and delighted all the inhabitants with the sound. Then alighting from Garuḍa, he proceeded with Satyabhámá to her garden, and there planted the great Párijáta tree, the smell of which perfumed the earth for three furlongs, and an approach to which enabled every one to recollect the events of a prior existence; so that, on beholding their faces in that tree, all the Yádavas contemplated themselves in their (original) celestial forms. Then Krishna took possession of the wealth, elephants, horses, and women, which he had recovered from Naraka, and which had been brought to Dwáraká by the servants of the demon; and at an auspicious season he espoused all the maidens whom Naraka had carried off from their friends; at one and the same moment he received the hands of all of them, according to the ritual, in separate mansions. Sixteen thousand and one hundred was the number of the maidens, and into so many different forms did the foe of Madhu multiply himself; so that every one of the damsels thought that he had wedded her in his single person; and the creator of the world, Hari, the assumer of universal shape, abode severally in the dwelling of each of these his wives.
CHAP. XXXII.

Children of Krishña. Ushá, the daughter of Báña, sees Aniruddha in a dream, and becomes enamoured of him.

PARÁŚARA.—I have enumerated to you Pradyumna and the other sons of Rukmini. Satyabhámá bore Bhánu and Bhairika. The sons of Rohiñá were Díptimat, Támrakshí, and others. The powerful Sámba and other sons were born of Jámbavatí. Bhadravinda and other valiant youths were the sons of Nágnajítí. Saivyá (or Mitravindá) had several sons, of whom Sangrámajit was the chief. Vrika and others were begotten by Hari on Mádri. Lakshmaná had Gátravat and others; and Sruta and others were the sons of Kálindí. Krishña had sons also by his other wives, in all one hundred and eighty thousand. The eldest of the whole was Pradyumna, the son of Rukmini: his son was Aniruddha, from whom Vraja was born: his mother was Ushá, the daughter of Báña, and grand-daughter of Bali, whom Aniruddha won in war. On that occasion a fierce battle took place between Hari and Sánkara, in which the thousand arms of Báña were lopped away by the discus of the former.

MAITREYA.—How happened it, venerable Brahman, that a contest on account of Ushá arose between Siva and Krishña? and in what manner did Hari cut off the thousand arms of Báña? This, illustrious sir, thou art able to narrate.

PARÁŚARA.—Ushá, the daughter of Báña, having seen Párvatí sporting with her lord, Sámbhu, was inspired with a wish for similar dalliance. The beautiful Gaurí, who knows the hearts of all, said to Ushá, “Do not grieve; you shall have a husband.” “But when will this be?” thought Ushá to herself, “or who will be my lord?” On which Párvatí continued; “He who shall appear to you, princess, in a dream on the twelfth lunation of the light half of Vaisákha, he will be your husband.”

1 The Bhágavata says, each of his eight queens had ten sons, and gives the ten names of each set, with one or two exceptions.
Accordingly, as the goddess had foretold, on that lunar day a youth appeared to Ushá in a dream, of whose person she became enamoured. When she woke, and no longer perceived him, she was overcome with sorrow, and, unrestrained by modesty, demanded of her companion whither he had gone. The companion and friend of the princess was Chitralekhá, the daughter of Kubbáná, the minister of Bána. "Of whom do you speak?" inquired she of Ushá. But the princess, recollecting herself, was ashamed, and remained silent. At length, however, Chitralekhá conciliated her confidence, and she related to her what had passed, and what the goddess had foretold; and she requested her friend to devise some means of uniting her with the person whom she had beheld in her dream.

Chitralekhá then delineated the most eminent gods, demons, spirits, and mortals, and shewed them to Ushá. Putting aside the portraits of gods, spirits, snake-gods, and demons, the princess selected those of mortals, and amongst them the heroes of the races of Andhaka and Vrishní. When she came to the likenesses of Krishńa and Ráma, she was confused with shame; from the portrait of Pradyumna she modestly averted her eyes; but the moment she beheld the picture of his son, the object of her passion, her eyes wide expanded, and all her bashfulness was discarded. "This is he! this is he!" said she to Chitralekhá; and her friend, who was endowed with magic power, bade her be of good cheer, and set off through the air to Dwáraká.
CHAP. XXXIII.

Báña solicits Siva for war: finds Aniruddha in the palace, and makes him prisoner. Krishna, Balarama, and Pradyumna come to his rescue. Siva and Skanda aid Báña: the former is disabled; the latter put to flight. Báña encounters Krishna, who cuts off all his arms, and is about to put him to death. Siva intercedes, and Krishna spares his life. Vishnu and Siva are the same.

Before this took place, Báña had been engaged in the adoration of the three-eyed god, and had thus prayed to him: "I am humiliated, O lord, by the possession of a thousand arms in a state of peace; let some hostilities ensue, in which I may derive some advantage from their possession. Without war, what is the use of these arms? they are but a burden to me." Sankara replied, "When thy peacock banner shall be broken, thou shalt have war, the delight of the evil spirits that feast on the flesh of man." Báña, pleased by this promise, proffered his thanks to Sambhu, and returned to his palace, where he found his standard broken; at which his joy was increased.

At that time the nymph Chitralakha returned from Dwarakā, and by the exercise of her magic power brought Aniruddha along with her. The guards of the inner apartments discovering him there with Ushā, reported it to the king who immediately sent a body of his followers to seize the prince; but the valiant youth, taking up an iron club, slew his assailants: on which Báña mounted his car, advanced against him, and endeavoured to put him to death. Finding, however, that Aniruddha was not to be subdued by prowess, he followed the counsel of his minister, and brought his magical faculties into the conflict, by which he succeeded in capturing the Yadu prince, and binding him in serpent bonds.

When Aniruddha was missed from Dwāravatī, and the Yādavas were inquiring of one another whither he had gone, Nārada came to them, and told them that he was the prisoner of Báña, having been conveyed by a female, possessed of magic faculties, to Soṇitapura. When they heard

---

1 The synonyms of Soṇitapura in the Trikāṇḍa Sesha are Devikota, Bálapur, Kādavaram, and Ushavāna. The first is usually considered to be the modern Devicotta in the Carnatic, which is commonly believed to be the scene of Báña's defeat. The name, however, occurs in other parts of India; in the Dekhin, on this, they were satisfied; for they had imagined he had been taken away by the gods (in reprisal for the Pārijāt tree). Krishṇa therefore immediately summoned Garuḍa, who came with a wish; and mounting upon him, along with Bala and Pradyumna, he set off for the city of Bāṇa. On their approach to the city they were opposed by the spirits who attend on Rudra, but these were soon destroyed by Hari, and he and his companions reached the vicinity of the town. Here mighty Fever, an emanation from Mahēśvara, having three feet and three heads\(^1\), fought desperately with Vishū in defence of Bāṇa. Baladeva, upon whom his ashes were scattered, was seized with burning heat, and his eyelids trembled: but he obtained relief by clinging to the body of Krishṇa. Contending thus with the divine holder of the bow, the Fever emanating from Śiva was quickly expelled from the person of Krishṇa by Fever which he himself engendered. Brahmā beholding the impersonated malady bewildered by the beating inflicted by the arms of the deity, entreated the latter to desist; and the foe of Madhu refrained, and absorbed into himself the fever he had created. The rival Fever then departed, saying to Krishṇa, "Those men who call to memory the combat between us shall be ever exempt from febrile disease."

Next Vishū overcame and demolished the five fires\(^2\), and with perfect ease annihilated the army of the Dānavas. Then the son of Bali (Bāṇa), the banks of the Godāvarī, according to Wilford the capital of Munja (As. Res. IX. 199); and in Asam, near Gwalpāra, as the city of the Daityas. As. Res. XIV. 443. Hamilton notices the remains of a city so called in Dinajpur. In the Kālikā P., Bāṇa is described as the friend, and apparently neighbour, of Naraka, king of Pragjyotish or Asam.

\( ^1 \) Alluding to the three stages of febrile paroxysms, or to the recurrence of tertian ague. A contest with this enemy, in the course of military operations, is an allegory which the British armies in India too often illustrate.

\( ^2 \) The Ahamiya, Gārhapatya, Dakshini, Sabhya, and Avasathyā, are the five fires; of which the three first have a religious, and the other two a secular character. The first is a fire prepared for oblations at an occasional sacrifice: the second is the household fire, to be perpetually maintained: the third is a sacrificial fire, in the centre of the other two, and placed to the south: the Sabhya is a fire lighted to warm a party: and the Avasathyā the common domestic or culinary fire. Manu, III. 100, 185, and Kulūka Bhatia's explanation.
with the whole of the Daitya host, assisted by Śankara and Kártikeya, fought with Śauri. A fierce combat took place between Hari and Śankara; all the regions shook, scorched by their flaming weapons, and the celestials felt assured that the end of the universe was at hand. Govinda, with the weapon of yawning, set Śankara a-gape; and then the demons and the demigods attendant upon Śiva were destroyed on every side; for Hara, overcome with incessant gaping, sat down in his car, and was unable longer to contend with Krishná, whom no acts affect. The deity of war, Kártikeya, wounded in the arm by Garuḍa, struck by the weapons of Pradyumna, and disarmed by the shout of Hari, took to flight. Báña, when he saw Śankara disabled, the Daityas destroyed, Guha fled, and Śiva's followers slain, advanced on his vast car, the horses of which were harnessed by Nandiśa, to encounter Krishná and his associates Bala and Pradyumna. The valiant Balabhadra, attacking the host of Báña, wounded them in many ways with his arrows, and put them to a shameful rout; and their sovereign beheld them dragged about by Ráma with his ploughshare, or beaten by him with his club, or pierced by Krishná with his arrows: he therefore attacked Krishná, and a fight took place between them: they cast at each other fiery shafts, that pierced through their armour; but Krishná intercepted with his arrows those of Báña, and cut them to pieces. Báña nevertheless wounded Keśava, and the wielder of the discus wounded Báña; and both desirous of victory, and seeking enraged the death of his antagonist, hurled various missiles at each other. When an infinite number of arrows had been cut to pieces, and the weapons began to be exhausted, Krishná resolved to put Báña to death. The destroyer of the demon host therefore took up his discus Sudarśana, blazing with the radiance of a hundred suns. As he was in the act of casting it, the mystical goddess Kotaví, the magic lore of the demons, stood naked before him 4. Seeing her before him, Krishná, with unclosed eyes, cast 4 Kotaví (कोतवि) is said to be an eighth portion of Rudráśi, and the tutelary goddess of the Daityas, composed of invocations (वन्यम्). The Hari V. calls her also Lambá, and intimates her being the mother of Báña, and as identical with Durgá. The word in the lexicons designates a naked woman, and is thence applicable to Durgá, in some of her forms.

Śiva intercedes for Bāña.

Sudarśana, to cut off the arms of Bāña. The discus, dreaded in its flight by the whole of the weapons of the demons, lopped off successively the numerous arms of the Asura. Beholding Krishṇa with the discus again in his hand, and preparing to launch it once more, for the total demolition of Bāña, the foe of Tripura (Śiva) respectfully addressed him. The husband of Umā, seeing the blood streaming from the dismembered arms of Bāña, approached Govinda, to solicit a suspension of hostilities, and said to him, "Krishṇa, Krishṇa, lord of the world, I know thee, first of spirits, the supreme lord, infinite felicity, without beginning or end, and beyond all things. This sport of universal being, in which thou takest the persons of god, animals, and men, is a subordinate attribute of thy energy. Be propitious therefore, O lord, unto me. I have given Bāña assurance of safety; do not thou falsify that which I have spoken. He has grown old in devotion to me; let him not incur thy displeasure. The Dāitya has received a boon from me, and therefore I deplore thy wrath."

When he had concluded, Govinda, dismissing his resentment against the Asura, looked graciously on the lord of Umā, the wielder of the trident, and said to him, "Since you, Śāṅkara, have given a boon unto Bāña, let him live: from respect to your promises, my discus is arrested: the assurance of safety granted by you is granted also by me. You are fit to apprehend that you are not distinct from me. That which I am, thou art; and that also is this world, with its gods, demons, and mankind. Men contemplate distinctions, because they are stupified by ignorance." So saying, Krishṇa went to the place where the son of Pradyumna was confined. The snakes that bound him were destroyed, being blasted by the breath of Garuḍa: and Krishṇa, placing him, along with his wife, upon the celestial bird, returned with Pradyumna and Rāma to Dwārakā.

There can be little doubt that this legend describes a serious struggle between the Śaivas and Vaishāivas, in which the latter, according to their own report, were victorious; and the Śaivas, although they attempt to make out a sort of compromise between Rudra and Krishṇa, are obliged to admit his having the worst of the conflict, and his inability to protect his votary. The Bhāgavata tells the story much as the text. The Hari V. amplifies even more than usual, the narrative occupying nearly seventy pages of the French translation. The legend is to be found to the same purport, but in various degrees of detail, in the Agni P., Kūrma P., Padma P. (Uttara Khaṇḍa), Vāmana P., and Brahma Vaivarta P. (Krishṇa Janma Khaṇḍa).
CHAP. XXXIV.

Pauúdraka, a Vásudeva, assumes the insignia and style of Krishná, supported by the king of Káśi. Krishná marches against, and destroys them. The son of the king sends a magical being against Krishná: destroyed by his discus, which also sets Benares on fire, and consumes it and its inhabitants.

MAITREYA.—Of a truth the divine Sauri, having assumed a mortal body, performed great achievements in his easy victories over Sakra and Siva, and all their attendant divinities. I am now desirous to hear from you, illustrious sage, what other mighty exploit the humiliator of the prowess of the celestials performed.

PARÁSARA.—Hear, excellent Brahman, with reverent attention, an account of the burning of Varánaśi by Krishná, in the course of his relieving the burdens of the earth.

There was a Vásudeva who was called Pauúdraka¹, and who, though not the Vásudeva, was flattered by ignorant people as the descended deity, until he fancied himself to be the Vásudeva² who had come down upon earth. Losing all recollection of his real character, he assumed the emblems of Vishnú, and sent an ambassador to the magnanimous Krishná with this message; “Relinquish, thou foolish fellow, the discus; lay aside all my insignia, my name, and the character of Vásudeva; and come and do me homage; and I will vouchsafe thee means of subsistence.” At which Janárddana laughed, and replied, “Go, messenger, back to Pauúdraka, and say to him from me, ‘I will dispatch to thee my emblem the discus without fail. Thou wilt rightly apprehend my meaning, and consider what is to be done; for I shall come to thy city, bringing the discus with me, and shall undoubtedly consign it to thee. If thou wilt command me to come, I will immediately obey, and be with thee to-morrow; there shall be no delay: and, having sought thy asylum, I will so provide, O king, that I shall never more have any thing to dread from thee." So saying, he dismissed the ambassador to report these words to his sovereign; and summoning Garuđa, mounted him, and set off for the city of Pauńdraka.

¹ From being, the commentator says, king of Púlīdrá. The Bhágavata calls him chief of the Kárdasías; the Padma, king of Káśí; but the Bhágavata, as well as our text, makes the king of Káśí his friend and ally.

² According to the Padma P., he propitiates Siva, and obtains from him the insignia which constitute a Vásudeva. The different authorities for this legend all use the term Vásudeva in the sense of a title.

When the king of Kāśi heard of the preparations of Keśava, he sent his army (to the aid of Pauńdraka), himself bringing up the rear; and with the force of the king of Kāśi, and his own troops, Pauńdraka, the false Vāsudeva, marched to meet Krishńa. Hari beheld him afar off, standing in his car, holding a discus, a club, a mace, a scimitar, and a lotus, in his hands; ornamented with a garland of flowers; bearing a bow; and having his standard made of gold: he had also the Śrīvatsa mark delineated on his breast; he was dressed in yellow garments, and decorated with earrings and a tiara. When the god whose standard is Garuđa beheld him, he laughed with a deep laugh, and engaged in conflict with the hostile host of cavalry and elephants, fighting with swords, scimitars, maces, tridents, spears, and bows. Showering upon the enemy the shafts from his Śäranga bow, and hurling at them his mace and discus, he quickly destroyed both the army of Pauńdraka and that of the king of Kāśi. He then said to the former, who was foolishly wearing his emblems, "Pauńdraka, you desired me by your envoy to resign to you all my insignia. I now deliver them to you. Here is a The Hari V. and Padma P. send Pauńdraka to Dwáráká. According to the latter, Nárada incites Pauńdraka to the aggression, telling him he cannot be a Vāsudeva till he has overcome Krishńa: he goes, and is killed. The former work, as usual, enters into particulars of its own invention. Krishńa is absent on a visit to Śiva at Kailáśa, and during his absence Pauńdraka, assisted by Ekalavya, king of the Nishádas, makes a night attack upon Dwáráká. They are resisted by the Vās-davas under Śátyasíki and Balaráma; by the former of whom Pauńdraka is repeatedly overthrown, and all but slain: he requires so much killing, however, that he is likely to obtain the victory, when Krishńa comes to the aid of his kinsmen, and after a protracted encounter, described in language employed a hundred times before, kills his competitor. The whole of the sections called the Kailáśa Yáträ, or Krishńa’s journey to Kailáśa, must have been wanting in the copy used by M. Langlois, as they are not included in his translation. The chapters of the Hari V. according to his enumeration of them are 261: my copy has 316.

my discus; here I give up my mace; and here is Garuḍa, let him mount upon thy standard.” Thus speaking, he let fly the discus and the mace, by which Pauṇḍraka was cut to pieces, and cast on the ground; whilst the Garuḍa on his banner was demolished by the Garuḍa of Vishnu. The people, beholding this sight, exclaimed, “Alas! alas!” but the valiant king of Kāśi, adhering to the imposture of his friend, continued the conflict, till Śauri decapitated him with his arrows, shooting his head into the city of Kāśi, to the marvel of all the inhabitants. Having thus slain Pauṇḍraka and the king of Kāśi, with all their followers, Śauri returned to Dwārakā, where he lived in the enjoyment of heavenly delights.

When the inhabitants of Kāśi saw the head of their king shot into their city, they were much astonished, and wondered how it could have happened, and by whom the deed could have been done. Having ascertained that the king had been killed by Krishṇa, the son of the monarch of Kāśi⁴, together with the priest of the family, propitiated Śankara; and that deity, well pleased to be adored in the sacred place Avimukta, desired the prince to demand a boon: on which he prayed, and said, “O lord, mighty god, through thy favour let thy mystic spirit arise to destroy Krishṇa, the murderer of my father.” “It shall be so,” answered Śankara; and from out of the southern fire upsprang a vast and formidable female⁵, like flame out of fire, blazing with ruddy light, and with fiery radiance streaming amidst her hair. Angrily she called upon Krishṇa, and departed to Dwārakā; where the people, beholding her, were struck with dismay, and fled for protection to Madhusūdana, the refuge of all worlds. The wielder of the discus knowing that the fiend had been produced by the son of the king of Kāśi, through his adoration of the deity whose emblem is a bull, and being engaged in sportive amusements, and playing at dice, said to the discus, “Kill this fierce creature, whose tresses are of plaited flame.” Accordingly Sudarsana, the discus

⁴ The Bhāgavata names him Sudakshinā; the Padma, Daśādūpāni.
⁵ A personified Krīyā, a magical creation. The Padma has the same. The Bhāgavata makes the product of the sacrificial fire a male, and sends him to Dwārakā, accompanied by a host of Bhūtas, Śiva’s attendant goblins.
of Vishňu, immediately attacked the fiend, fearfully enwreathed with fire, and wearing tresses of plaits of flame. Terrified at the might of Sudaršana, the creation of Mahešvara awaited not his attack, but fled with speed, pursued by him with equal velocity, until she reached Varānāśī, repelled by the superior might of the discus of Vishňu.

The army of Kāśi, and the host of the demigods attendant upon Śiva, armed with all kinds of weapons, then sallied out to oppose the discus; but, skilled in the use of arms, he consumed the whole of the forces by his radiance, and then set fire to the city, in which the magic power of Śiva had concealed herself. Thus was Varānāśī burnt, with all its princes and their followers, its inhabitants, elephants, horses, and men, treasures and granaries, houses, palaces, and markets. The whole of a city, that was inaccessible to the gods, was thus wrapped in flames by the discus of Hari, and was totally destroyed. The discus then, with unmitigated wrath, and blazing fiercely, and far from satisfied with the accomplishment of so easy a task, returned to the hand of Vishňu.

According to the Bhágavata, the magical being himself destroys Sudakshiňa and his priest; but Sudaršana consumes the people and the city. The Padma ascribes the destruction of the king and all his city to the discus. The Hari V. closes its narrative with the death of Pauśaraka, and makes no mention of the destruction of Benares. The circumstance is alluded to in a preceding section (s. 159) by Nárada, when detailing the exploits of Krisňa.

In this legend, again, we have a contest between the followers of Vishňu and Śiva intimated, as, besides the assistance given by the latter to Pauśaraka, Benares—Varānāśī or Atimukta—has been from all time, as it is at present, the high place of the Śaiva worship. There is also an indication of a Vaishňava schism, in the competition between Pauśaraka and Krishńa for the title of Viśuđeva, and the insignia of his divinity.
CHAP. XXXV.

Śamba carries off the daughter of Duryodhana, but is taken prisoner. Balaráma comes to Hastinápur, and demands his liberation; it is refused: in his wrath he drags the city towards him, to throw it into the river. The Kuru chiefs give up Śamba and his wife.

Maitreya.—I have a great desire to hear, excellent Brahman, some further account of the exploits of Balaráma. You have related to me his dragging the Yamuná, and other mighty deeds, but you can tell me, venerable sir, some other of his acts.

Parásara.—Attend, Maitreya, to the achievements performed by Ráma, who is the eternal, illimitable Śesha, the upholder of the earth. At the choice of a husband by the daughter of Duryodhana, the princess was carried off by the hero Śamba, the son of Jámbavatí. Being pursued by Duryodhana, Karña, Bhishma, Droña, and other celebrated chiefs, who were incensed at his audacity, he was defeated, and taken prisoner. When the Yádavas heard of the occurrence, their wrath was kindled against Duryodhana and his associates, and they prepared to take up arms against them; but Baladeva, in accents interrupted by the effects of ebriety, forbade them, and said, “I will go alone to the sons of Kuru; they will liberate Śamba at my request.” Accordingly he went to the elephant-styled city (Hastinápur), but took up his abode in a grove without the town, which he did not enter. When Duryodhana and the rest heard that he had arrived there, they sent him a cow, a present of fruits and flowers, and water. Bala received the offering in the customary form, and said to the Kauravas, “Ugrasena commands you to set Śamba at liberty.” When Duryodhana, Karña, Bhishma, Droña, and the others, heard this, they were very angry; and Báhlika and other friends of the Kauravas, who looked upon the Yadu race as not entitled to regal dignity, said to the wielder of the club, “What is this, Balabhadrá, that thou hast uttered? What Yádava shall give orders to the chiefs of the family of Kuru? If Ugrasena issues his mandates to the Kauravas, then we must take away the white umbrella that he has usurped, and which is fit only for kings. Depart therefore, Balaráma; you are entitled to our respect; but Śámba has been guilty of improper conduct, and we will not liberate him either at Ugrasena’s commands or yours. The homage that is due to us, their superiors, by the Kukkura and Andhaka tribes, may not be paid by them; but who ever heard of a command issued by a servant to his master? Elevation to an equal seat has rendered you arrogant. We have committed a great mistake in neglecting, through our friendship for you, the policy (that teaches the danger of treating the abject with deference). Our sending you to-day a respectful present was an intimation of (personal) regard, which it was neither fit for our race to have proffered, nor for your’s to have expected.”

Having thus spoken, the Kuru chiefs, unanimously refusing to set the son of Hari at large, immediately returned into the city. Bala, rolling about with intoxication, and the wrath which their contemptuous language had excited, struck the ground furiously with his heel, so that it burst to pieces with a loud sound that reverberated through the regions of space. His eyes reddened with rage, and his brow was curved with frowns, as he exclaimed, “What arrogance is this, in such vile and pithless creatures! The sovereignty of the Kauravas, as well as our own, is the work of fate, whose decree it also is that they now disrespect or disobey the commands of Ugrasena. Indra may of right give his orders to the gods; and Ugrasena exercises equal authority with the lord of Śachi. Fie upon the pride that boasts a throne, the leavings of a hundred mortals! Is not he the sovereign of the earth, the wives of whose servants adorn themselves with the blossoms of the Párijáta tree? Ugrasena shall be the undisputed king of kings; for I will not return to his capital until I have rid the world wholly of the sons of Kuru. I will destroy Karña, Duryodhana, Droña, Bhíshma, Bálika, Duhsásana, Bhúrisravas, Somadatta, Śalya, Bhíma, Arjuna, Yúdhishthira, the twins, and all the other vile descendants of Kuru, with their horses, elephants, and chariots. I will rescue the hero Śámba from captivity, and carry him, along with his wife, to Dwáráká, where I shall again behold Ugrasena and the rest of my kin. Or, authorized by the king of the gods to remove the burdens of the earth, I will take this capital of the Kauravas, with all the sons of Kuru, and cast the city of the elephant into the Bhágirathí."

So saying, the wielder of the club, Baladeva, his eyes red with rage, plunged the blade of his ploughshare downwards, beneath the ramparts of the city, and drew them towards him. When the Kauravas beheld Hastinápurá tottering, they were much alarmed, and called loudly on Ráma, saying, "Ráma, Ráma! hold, hold! suppress your wrath! have mercy upon us! Here is Śámba, and his wife also, delivered up to thee. Forgive our sins, committed in ignorance of thy wondrous power." Accordingly, issuing hurriedly from the city, the Kauravas delivered Śámba and his bride to the mighty Balaráma, who, bowing to Bhishma, Drońa, and Kripa, who addressed him in conciliatory language, said, "I am satisfied;" and so desisted. The city bears the marks of the shock it received, even to the present day—such was the might of Ráma—proving both his strength and prowess. The Kauravas then offering homage to Śámba and to Bala, dismissed the former with his wife and a bridal portion 1.

1 This adventure is related in the Bhágavata, and very briefly noticed in the Hari Vanásá; but I have not found any mention of it in the Mahábharata. It may have been suggested originally by Hastinápurá having sustained some injury either from an earthquake or from the encroachments of the river, which, as is recorded, compelled the removal of the capital to Kausámbí (p. 461).
CHAP. XXXVI.

The Asura Dwivida, in the form of an ape, destroyed by Balaráma.

HEAR also, Maitreya, another exploit performed by the mighty Balaráma. The great Asura, the foe of the friends of the gods, Naraka, had a friend of exceeding prowess in the monkey named Dwivida, who was animated by implacable hostility against the deities, and vowed to revenge on the whole of them the destruction of Naraka by Krishná, at the instigation of the king of the celestials, by preventing sacrifices, and effecting the annihilation of the mortal sphere. Blinded by ignorance, he accordingly interrupted all religious rites, subverted all righteous observances, and occasioned the death of living beings: he set fire to the forests, to villages, and to towns: sometimes he overwhelmed cities and hamlets with falling rocks; or lifting up mountains in the waters, he cast them into the ocean: then taking his place amidst the deep, he agitated the waves, until the foaming sea rose above its confines, and swept away the villages and cities situated upon its shores. Dwivida also, who could assume what shape he would, enlarged his bulk to an immense size, and rolling and tumbling and trampling amidst the corn fields, he crushed and spoiled the harvests. The whole world, disordered by this iniquitous monkey, was deprived of sacred study and religious rites, and was greatly afflicted.

On one occasion Haláyudha was drinking in the groves of Raivata, along with the illustrious Revatí and other beautiful females; and the distinguished Yadu, in whose praises songs were sung, and who was preeminent amidst graceful and sportive women, resembled Kuvera, the god of riches, in his palace. Whilst thus engaged, the monkey Dwivida came there, and stealing the ploughshare and the club of Baladeva, grinned at and mocked him, and laughed at the women, and threw over and broke the cups filled with wine. Balaráma, becoming angry at this, threatened the monkey; but the latter disregarded his menaces, and made a chattering noise: on which Bala, starting up, seized his club in wrath; and the monkey laid hold of a large rock, which he hurled at the hero. Bala casting his club at it, as it neared him, broke it into a thousand fragments, which, together with the club, fell upon the ground. Beholding the club prostrate, the monkey sprang over it, and struck the Yádava violently on the breast with his paws. Bala replied with a blow of his fist upon the forehead of Dwivida, which felled him, vomiting blood, and lifeless, to the earth. The crest of the mountain on which he fell was splintered into a hundred pieces by the weight of his body, as if the thunderer had shivered it with his thunderbolt. The gods threw down a shower of flowers upon Ráma, and approached him, and praised him for the glorious feat he had performed. "Well has the world been freed," said they, "by thy prowess, O hero, of this vile ape, who was the ally of the enemy of the gods." Then they and their attendant spirits returned well pleased to heaven. Many such inimitable deeds were wrought by the illustrious Baladeva, the impersonation of Śesha, the supporter of the earth.

1 This exploit of Balaráma is also similarly, but more vulgarly, related in the Bhágavata. It is simply said in the Hari Vanśa, and erroneously, that Meśiśa and Dwivida were conquered by Kriishńa.
CHAP. XXXVII.

Destruction of the Yádavas. Sámba and others deceive and ridicule the Rishis. The former bears an iron pestle: it is broken, and thrown into the sea. The Yádavas go to Prabháśa by desire of Krishná: they quarrel and fight, and all perish. The great serpent Śeṣha issues from the mouth of Ráma. Krishná is shot by a hunter, and again becomes one with universal spirit.

In this manner did Krishná, assisted by Baladeva, destroy demons and iniquitous monarchs, for the good of the earth; and along with Phálguna¹ also did he relieve earth of her load, by the death of innumerable hosts. Having thus lightened the burdens of the earth, and slain many unrighteous princes, he exterminated, by the pretext of an imprecation denounced by Brahmans, his own Yádava race. Then quitting Dwárraká, and relinquishing his mortal being, the self-born reentered, with all his emanations, his own sphere of Vishnú.

Maitréya.—Tell me how Janárdana effected the destruction of his own race under the plea of Brahmical imprecation, and in what manner he relinquished his mortal body².

Parásara.—At the holy place Piśáráka ³, Viswámitra, Kańwa, and the great sage Nárada, were observed by some boys of the Yadu tribe. Giddy with youth, and influenced by predestined results, they dressed and adorned Sámba, the son of Jámavati, as a damsels, and conducting her to the sages, they addressed them with the usual marks of reverence, and said, "What child will this female, the wife of Babhrú, who is ¹ A name of Arjuna, the great friend of Krishná, to whom the latter served as charioteer in the war between the Páṇḍus and Kurus.

² With Baláráma, Pradýunma, Aniruddha, and the rest.
³ The legend of the destruction of the Yádava race, and the death of Krishná, appears probably in its earliest extant form in the Mauśala Parva of the Mahábhárata. It forms the narrative portion of the eleventh book of the Bhágavata, having been previously briefly adverted to in the first and third books; and it is summarily told in the Uttara Khańḍa of the Padma P.
⁴ The village of Piśáráka, still held in veneration, is situated in Guzerat, about twenty miles from the north-west extremity of the Peninsula. Hamilton, II. 664.
HOLY MEN MOCKED BY YÁDAVA YOUTHS.

607

anxious to have a son, give birth to!” The sages, who were possessed of divine wisdom, were very angry to find themselves thus tricked by the boys, and said, “She will bring forth a club, that shall crush the whole of the Yádava race.” The boys, thus spoken to by the sages, went and related all that had occurred to Ugrasena; and, as foretold, a club was produced from the belly of Śámba. Ugrasena had the club, which was of iron, ground to dust, and thrown into the sea; but the particles of dust there became rushes. There was one part of the iron club which was like the blade of a lance, and which the Andhakas could not break; this, when thrown into the sea, was swallowed by a fish; the fish was caught, the iron spike was extracted from its belly, and was taken by a hunter named Jará. The all-wise and glorious Madhusúdana did not think fit to counteract what had been predetermined by fate.

Then there came to Kéśava, when he was private and alone, a messenger from the gods, who addressed him with reverence, and said, “I am sent to you, O lord, by the deities, and do thou hear what Indra, together with the Viśvas, Maruts, Ádityas, Sádhyas, and Rudras, respectfully represents. “More than a hundred years have elapsed since thou, in favour to the gods, hast descended upon earth, for the purpose of relieving it of its load. The demons have been slain, and the burden of earth has been removed: now let the immortals once again behold their monarch in heaven. A period exceeding a century has passed: now, if 5 The term is Eraká (एरका), which is explained in some medical lexicons, “a kind of grass.” The commentator also calls it a kind of grass: and in the text of the Mahábhárata the term subsequently used, and as synonymous with it, is Tríría (त्रिरू), “grass.” The Mahábhárata, when describing the affray which follows, mentions that the grass or rushes, on being plucked by Kríshña and the Yádavas, turn to clubs. The text, and that of the Bhágvata, here say, that the powdered particles, floating on the sea, became rushes; or the latter may imply, that they fastened upon grass or weeds. The commentator, however, explains that the particles of iron being borne to land, they were so transformed. The Mahábhárata says nothing of the piece which could not be pounded, and this seems to be an embellishment either of our text or the Bhágavata. The Mahábhárata, however, adds another precaution, which the two others have left unnoticed. Ugrasena causes a proclamation to be made, that none of the inhabitants of Dwáraká shall thenceforth drink wine, on pain of being impaled alive: and the people for some time observe the prohibition.

it be thy pleasure, return to Swarga. This is the solicitation of the celestials. But should such not be thy will, then remain here as long as it may be desirable to thy dependants. To this Krishná replied, "All that thou hast said I am well aware of. The destruction of the Yádavas by me has commenced. The burdens of the earth are not removed until the Yádavas are extirpated. I will effect this also in my descent, and quickly; for it shall come to pass in seven nights. When I have restored the land of Dwáráká to the ocean, and annihilated the race of Yadu, I will proceed to the mansions of the immortals. Apprise the gods, that, having abandoned my human body, and accompanied by Sankarshaña, I will then return to them. The tyrants that oppressed the earth, Jarásandha and the rest, have been killed; and a youth, even of the race of Yadu, is, no less than they, an incumbrance. When therefore I have taken away this great weight upon earth, I will return to protect the sphere of the celestials. Say this to them." The messenger of the gods, having received this reply, bowed, and took his heavenly course to the king of the gods.

The mighty Krishná now beheld signs and portents both in earth and heaven, prognosticating, day and night, the ruin of Dwáráká.

6 Nothing of this kind occurs in the Mahábhárata; our text therefore offers an embellishment. The Bhágavata, again, improves upon the text; for, not content with a messenger, it makes Brahmá with the Prajápati, Siva with the Bhútas, Indra with the other divinities, all come in person; indicating evidently a later date, as plainly as the addition of the text shews it to be subsequent to the date of the legend in the Mahábhárata.

7 The Mahábhárata, which delights in describing portents and signs, does not fail to detail them here. A dreadful figure, death personified, haunts every house, coming and going no one knows how, and being invulnerable to the weapons by which he is assailed. Strong hurricanes blow; large rats multiply, and infest the roads and houses, and attack persons in their sleep; Sáríkás, or starlings, utter inauspicious screams in their cages; storks imitate the hooting of owls, and goats the howling of jackals; cows bring forth foals, and camels mules; food, in the moment of being eaten, is filled with worms; fire burns with discoloured flames; and at sunset and sunrise the air is traversed by headless and hideous spirits. There is more to the same effect, which neither our text nor the Bhágavata has ventured to detail. The whole passage has been published in Maurice's Ancient History of Hindustan, II. 463; translated apparently
THE YÁDAVAS GO TO PRABHÁSA.

Shewing these to the Yádavas, he said, “See; behold these fearful phenomena: let us hasten to Prabhása, to avert these omens.” When he had thus spoken to the eminent Yádava, the illustrious Uddhava saluted and said to him, “Tell me, O lord, what it is proper that I should do, for it seems to me that thou wilt destroy all this race: the signs that are manifest declare nothing less than the annihilation of the tribe.” Then Krishna replied to him, “Do you go by a celestial route, which my favour shall provide you, to the holy place Badarikárama, in the Gándhamádána mountain, the shrine of Naranáráyaña; and on that spot, sanctified by them, thou, by meditating on me, shalt obtain perfection through my favour. When the race of Yadu shall have perished, I shall proceed to heaven; and the ocean shall inundate Dwáraká, when I have quitted it.” Accordingly Uddhava, thus instructed by Kesáva, saluted him with veneration, and departed to the shrine of Naranáráyaña

Then the Yádavas ascended their rapid cars, and drove to Prabhása, along with Krishna, Ráma, and the rest of their chiefs. They bathed there, and, excited by Vásudeva, the Kukkurás and Andhakás indulged in liquor. As they drank, the destructive flame of dissenion was kindled amongst them by mutual collision, and fed with the fuel of abuse. Infuriated by the divine influence, they fell upon one another with missile weapons, and when those were expended, they had recourse to the rushes growing nigh. The rushes in their hands became like thun-derbolts, and they struck one another with them fatal blows. Pradyumna, Śāmba, Krita-varman, Sātyaki, Aniruddha, Pritu, Viprithu, Chāruvarman, Cháraka, Akrúra, and many others, struck one another with the rushes, which had assumed the hardness of thunderbolts. Kesāva interposed to prevent them, but they thought that he was taking part with each severally, and continued the conflict. Krishnā then enraged took up a handful of rushes to destroy them, and the rushes became a club of iron, and with this he slew many of the murderous Yādavas; whilst others, fighting fiercely, put an end to one another. The chariot of the holder of the discus, named Jaitra, was quickly carried off by the swift steeds, and swept away by the sea, in the sight of Dáruka the charioteer. The discus, the club, the bow, the quiver, the shell, and the sword of Kesāva, having circumambulated their lord, flew along the path of the sun. In a short time there was not a single Yādava left alive, except the mighty Krishnā and Dáruka. Going towards Rāma, who 11 The Bhāgavata, like the text, adverts only in this general manner to the conflict; but the Mahābhārata gives the particulars. Yuyudhāna reproaches Krita-varman with having aided Aswatthāman in his night attack on the Pāśūda camp, and killing warriors in their sleep. Pradyumna joins in the abuse. Krita-varman retorts. Krishnā looks at him angrily. Sātyaki repeats the story of the Syamantaka gem, by which he accuses Kripa-varman of being an accomplice in the murder of Satrajit (p. 428). Satyabhāmā, the daughter of the latter, then mixes in the quarrel, and incites Krishnā to avenge her; but Sātyaki anticipates him, and murders Krita-varman. Saineya and the Bhojas attack Sātyaki; the Andhakas defend him; and the affray becomes general. Krishnā attempts to part the combatants, until Pradyumna is killed; and then taking up a handful of rushes, which become an iron club, he kills indiscriminately all that come in his way. The conflict continues until the greater part of the combatants have fallen, including all Krishnā’s sons, and he then in wrath sweeps off all the survivors, except Babhrū and Dáruka, with his discus.

12 The Mahābhārata, as observed at the end of the last note, adds Babhrū, but it presently gets rid of him. Krishnā sends him to take care of the old people, the women, and children, in Dwārakā, whilst Dáruka goes to bring Arjuna to their aid: but as he goes along, overcome with grief for the loss of his kindred, and approaching separation from Krishnā, he is killed by a club that is cast from a snare or trap set by a hunter. Krishnā then goes to Dwārakā, and desires Vasudeva to await the coming of Arjuna; after which he returns to Rāma, and sees the phenomenon described in the text; the serpent being Sēsha, of whom Balarāma was the incarnation. The Bhāgavata does not mention this incident, was sitting at the root of a tree, they beheld a large serpent coming out of his mouth. Having issued from his mouth, the mighty snake proceeded towards the ocean, hymned by saints and by other great serpents. Bringing an offering of respect, Ocean came to meet him; and then the majestic being, adored by attendant snakes, entered into the waters of the deep. Beholding the departure of the spirit of Balabhadra, Kesava said to Dáruka, “All this is to be related by you to Vasudeva and Ugrasena. Go and inform them of the departure of Balabhadra, and the destruction of the Yádavas; also that I shall engage in religious meditation, and quit this body. Apprise Áhuka and all the inhabitants of Dwáракá, that the sea will inundate the town: be ready therefore in expectation of the coming of Arjuna, and when he quits Dwáракá, no longer abide there, but go whithersoever that descendant of Kuru shall repair. Do you also go to the son of Kunti, and tell him, that it is my request that he will grant what protection he can to all my family. Then depart with Arjuna and all the people of Dwáraváti, and let Vajra be installed sovereign over the tribe of Yádu.”

Dáruka, being thus instructed, prostrated himself again and again before Krishña, and walked round him repeatedly, and then departed as he had been desired; and having conducted Arjuna to Dwáraváti, the intelligent servant of Krishña established Vajra as king. The divine Govinda then, having concentrated in himself that supreme spirit which is one with Vásudeva, was identified with all beings. Respecting the words of the Brahman, the imprecation of Durvásas, the illustrious merely observing that Ráma, by the power of Yoga, returned into himself; that is, into Višhiú.

13 The women, the elders, and the children, amongst whom, as we shall presently see, was Vajra, the son of Aniruddha, who was established as chief of the Yádavas at Indraprastha, and who therefore escaped the destruction which overwhelmed their kinmen, the Višhiús, Kukkurás, and Andhakas, of Dwáракá. This was a fortunate reservation for the tribes which in various parts of Hindustan, both on the Ganges and in the Dakhin, profess to derive their origin from the Yádavas.

14 The process is explained by the commentator: ‘By the force of Dhyán, or abstraction, Krishña satisfies himself that he is Brahma (प्रेष्यायासभिर तयास), or universal spirit; and is next convinced that he is therefore all things (सर्पेरुभासश्च), by which his individuality ceases.’

15 The story is told in the Mahábhárata. Durvásas was on one occasion hospitably Krishña sat engaged in thought, resting his foot upon his knee. Then came there a hunter, named Jará, whose arrow was tipped with a blade made of the piece of iron of the club, which had not been reduced to powder; and beholding from a distance the foot of Krishña, he mistook it for part of a deer, and shooting his arrow, lodged it in the sole. Approaching his mark, he saw the four-armed king, and, falling at his feet, repeatedly besought his forgiveness, exclaiming, “I have done this deed unwittingly, thinking I was aiming at a deer! Have pity upon me, who am consumed by my crime; for thou art able to consume me!” Bhagavat replied, “Fear not thou in the least. Go, hunter, through my favour, to heaven, the abode of the gods.” As soon as he had thus spoken, a celestial car appeared, and the hunter, ascending it, forthwith proceeded to heaven. Then the illustrious Krishña, having united himself with his own pure, spiritual, inexhaustible, inconceivable, unborn, undecaying, imperishable, and universal spirit, which is one with Vášudeva, abandoned his mortal body and the condition of the threefold qualities.

entertained by Krishña, but the latter omitted to wipe away the fragments of the meal which had fallen on the foot of the irascible sage, who thereupon foretold that Krishña should be killed as in the text.

16 This is an allegorical personage, however, for Jará signifies ‘infirmity,’ ‘old age,’ ‘decay.’

17 The Bhágavata explains how this part of the foot became exposed. Krishña had assumed one of the postures in which abstraction is practised: he had laid his left leg across his right thigh, by which the sole of the foot was turned outwards.

18 He became Nirguña, ‘devoid of all qualities.’
CHAP. XXXVIII.

Arjuna comes to Dwára-ká, and burns the dead, and takes away the surviving inhabitants. Commencement of the Kali age. Shepherds and thieves attack Arjuna, and carry off the women and wealth. Arjuna regrets the loss of his prowess to Vyása; who consoles him, and tells him the story of Aśhávakra’s cursing the Aspara-sa. Arjuna and his brothers place Parikshíti on the throne, and go to the forests. End of the fifth book.

ARJUNA having found the bodies of Krishná and of Ráma, performed for them, and the rest of the slain, the obsequial rites. The eight queens of Krishná, who have been named, with Rukminí at their head, embraced the body of Hari, and entered the funeral fire. Revátí, also, embracing the corpse of Ráma, entered the blazing pile, which was cool to her, happy in contact with her lord. Hearing these events, Ugrasena and Anakadundubhi, with Devaki and Rohini, committed themselves to the flames. The last ceremonies were performed for all these by Arjuna, who then made all the people leave the city, and took Vajra with him. The son of Kunti conducted the thousands of the wives of Krishná, with Vajra, and all the people, from Dwára-ká, with tenderness and care, and travelled slowly away. The Sudhárman palace and the Párijátá tree, which had been brought to earth by Krishná, both proceeded to heaven; and on the same day that Hari departed from the earth the powerful dark-bodied Kali age descended. The ocean rose, and submerged the whole of Dwára-ká, except alone the dwelling of the deity of the race of Yadu. The sea has not yet been able to wash that temple away, and there Kéśava constantly abides, even in the present day. Whoever visits that holy shrine, the place where Krishná pursued his sports, is liberated from all his sins.

1 The Mahá-bháráta takes the wives of Krishná first to Indraprasthá, and there Rukminí and four others burn; but Satyabhámá and others become ascetics, going to perform Tapasya in the forest.

2 It is merely said in the Mahá-bháráta that Vasudeva expired; on which four of his wives burnt themselves.

3 The Kali age commenced from the death of Krishná, according to the usual notions; but it is commonly supposed to commence a little later, or with the reign of Parikshíti.

4 The Bhágaváta agrees with the text in
The son of Prithá, Arjuna, halted the people he had brought from Dwáráká in the Panchanada country, in a rich and fertile spot; but the desires of the robbers (of the neighbourhood) were excited, when they observed so many widowed females, also such great riches, in the possession of Arjuna alone. Inflamed by their cupidity, they assembled the villainous Ábhirás, and said to them, “Here is this Arjuna, immensely rich, and having numerous women, whose husbands have been slain, passing confidently amongst us; a disgrace to all brave men. His pride is raised by the death of Bhíshma, Drońa, Jayadratha, Karna, and others, whom he has slain: he does not know the prowess of simple villagers. Up, up; take your long thick staves: this stupid fellow despises us. Why should we not lift up our arms?” So saying, they rushed, armed with cudgels and clods of earth, upon the people, who were without their lord. Arjuna encountered them, and said to them in derision. “Retire, wretches, ignorant of what is right, unless ye are desirous of dying.” But they disregarded his menaces, and seized his treasures and his women, the wives of Viswáksena. Thereupon Arjuna began to brace his heavenly bow Gándiva, irresistible in battle; but it was in vain; for, excepting the temple of Dwáráká, and asserting that it still remains, in direct contradiction of the Mahábhárata, which declares that the sea did not spare any part whatever. It is clear, therefore, that when the latter was compiled the temple was not standing, and that it was erected between the date of the compilation and that of the two Puráñas. The present shrine, which is held in great repute, stands at the extremity of the peninsula of Guzerat. It is still an object of pilgrimage; it was so in the reign of Akbar (Ayn Akbari); and has been so, no doubt, from a remote period. The image formerly worshipped there was carried off 600 years ago, and this was most probably subsequent to the date of both the Puráñas; for the idol was a form of Krishná, called Raúa chor, a popular divinity, unknown in the Pauránik pantheon. Another image was substituted in place of that which was taken away. Notwithstanding the testimony of our text, and that of the Bhágavata, the originality of the temple is disputed, and a place thirty miles south from Purbandar is said to be the spot where Dwáráká was swallowed up by the ocean. Hamilton, from Macmurdo, &c. I. 662.

5 ‘The country of the five rivers,’ the Panjab: rather an out of the way route from Dwáráká to Dehli.

6 Abhirás mean ‘herds,’ and they are afterwards called by Arjuna, Gopálas, ‘herdsmen.’ The pastoral tribes of the west of India, and particularly those of Afghanistan, almost always combine the character of freebooter with that of shepherd.
in spite of all his efforts to tighten it, it continued flaccid: neither could he call to recollection the incantations of the superhuman weapons. Losing all patience, he launched, as best he might, his shafts upon the enemy; but those shot from Gándiva merely scratched the skin. The arrows given him by Agni to carry certain destruction now were themselves destroyed, and were fatal to Arjuna in his contest with herdsmen. He endeavoured to recall the might of Krishñá; animated by which, his numerous arrows had overthrown mighty kings; but he tried in vain, for now they were put aside by the peasants, or they flew at random, wide of their aim. His arrows being expended, he beat the banditti with the horn of his bow; but they only laughed at his blows: and the barbarians, in the sight of Arjuna, carried off all the women of the Vrishní and Andhaka tribes, and went their way.

Then Jishñú was sorely distressed, and lamented bitterly, exclaiming, Alas! alas! I am deserted by my lord!” and he wept: and in that instant the bow and heavenly arms, his car and steeds, perished entirely, like a donation to an unlearned Brahman. “Resistless,” said he, “are the decrees of fate, by whom feebleness has been inflicted upon me, deprived of my illustrious friend, and victory given to the base. These two arms are mine; mine is this fist; this is my place; I am Arjuna: but without that righteous aid all these are pitless. The valour of Arjuna, the strength of Bhíma, was all his work; and without him I am overcome by peasants: it cannot be from any other cause.” So saying, Arjuna went to the city of Mathurá, and there installed the Yádava prince, Vájra, as its king. There he beheld Vyása, who was living in a wood, and he approached the sage, and saluted him respectfully. The Muni surveyed him for some time, as he lay prostrate at his feet, and said to him, “How is it that I see you thus shorn of your lustre? Have you been guilty of illicit intercourse with women, or of the death of a Brahman? or have you suffered some grievous disappointment? that you are so dejected. Have your prayers for progeny, or other good gifts, proved fruitless? or have you indulged improper passions? that your lustre is so dim. Or are you one that devours the meal he has given to the Brahmans? Say, Arjuna, have you seized upon the substance of the poor? Has the wind of a winnowing basket lighted upon you? or has an evil eye gazed upon you, Arjuna? that you look thus miserable. Have you been touched by the water of a finger-nail? or has the water of a water-jar sprinkled you? or, what is most probably the case, have you been beaten by your inferiors in battle?"

? The principal wives of Krishñá, however, according to the Mahábhárata, escaped. The occurrence is described there much in the same way, but more briefly. It is not detailed in the Bhágavata.

Arjuna, having sighed deeply, related to Vyása all the circumstances of his discomfiture, and continued; "Hari, who was our strength, our might, our heroism, our prowess, our prosperity, our brightness, has left us, and departed. Deprived of him, our friend, illustrious, and ever kindly speaking, we have become as feeble as if made of straw. Purna-shottama, who was the living vigour of my weapons, my arrows and my bow, is gone. As long as we looked upon him, fortune, fame, wealth, dignity never abandoned us: but Govinda is gone from amongst us. That Krishña has quitted earth, through whose power Bhishma, Drośa, the king of Anga, Duryodhana, and the rest, were consumed. Not I alone, but Earth, has grown old, miserable, and lustreless, in the absence of the holder of the discus. Krishña, through devotion to whom Bhishma and other mighty men perished like moths in the flame of my valour, is gone; and I am now overcome by cowherds. The bow Gán-diva, that was famed throughout the three worlds, has been foiled, since he has departed, by the sticks of peasants: the myriads of women over whom I was lord have been carried off from me by thieves, armed but with cudgels: the whole household of Krishña, O Krishña, has been forcibly carried away by peasants, who with their staves have put my strength to shame. That I am shorn of my lustre I do not marvel: it is wonderful that I live. Surely, grandsire, I alone am so shameless as to survive the stain of indignity inflicted by the vile."

Vyása replied to Arjuna, and said, "Think no more, my son, of your disgrace: it does not become you to grieve. Know that time subjects all beings to similar vicissitude. Time effects the production and dissolution of all creatures. All that exists is founded on time. Know this, Arjuna, and retain your fortitude. Rivers, seas, mountains, the whole earth, gods, men, animals, trees, insects, are all created, and all will be destroyed, by time. Knowing that all that is, is the effect of time, be tranquillized. These mighty works of Krishnā, whatever they have been, have been performed to relieve earth of its burdens: for this he has come down. Earth, oppressed by her load, has had recourse to the assembly of the immortals; and Janārdana, who is one with time, has descended on that account. This object has been now accomplished: all the kings of the earth are slain; the race of Vrishńi and Andhaka is destroyed: no more remained for him to accomplish. Therefore has the lord departed whither he pleased, his ends being all fulfilled. At the period of creation the god of gods creates; in that of duration he preserves; and at the end of all he is mighty to annihilate. Now all is done. Therefore, Arjuna, be not afflicted by thy defeat: the prowess of mortals is the gift of time. Bhīṣma, Karṇa, and other kings, have been slain by thee alone; this was the work of time: and why, therefore, should not thy discomfiture, by those less than thou art, occur? In like manner as through thy devotion to Vīshṇu these were overthrown by thee, so at last has thy defeat by miserable thieves been wrought by time. That divinity, assuming various bodies, preserves the world; and in the end the lord of creatures destroys it. In the birth of thy fortunes Janārdana was thy friend; in their decline, thy enemies have been favoured by Keśava. Who would have believed that thou shouldst slay all the descendants of Kuru, and kindred of Gangā? Who would have believed that peasants should triumph over thee? Be assured, son of Prithi, that it is but the sport of the universal Hari that the Kauravas have been destroyed by thee, and that thou hast been defeated by herdsmen. With respect to the women whom thou lamentest, and who have been carried off by the thieves, hear from me an ancient story, which will explain why this has happened.

A name of Vyása.

"In former times a Brahman, named Ashtāvakra, was pursuing his 9 The story of Ashtāvakra is related in the Mahābhārata. He was the son of Kahora, who neglecting his wife, was rebuked for it by his yet unborn son. The religious penances, standing in water, and meditating on the eternal spirit, for many years. In consequence of the overthrow of the Asuras, there was a great festival on the summit of Meru: on their way to which, Rambhá, Tilottamá, and hundreds and thousands of beautiful nymphs, saw the ascetic Ashtávakra, and they praised and hymned him for his devotions. They bowed down before him, and eulogized him, as he was immersed up to his throat in water, his hair twisted in a braid. So they sang in honour of him whatever they thought would be most agreeable to that most eminent of Brahmans. Ashtávakra at last said to them, 'I am well pleased with you, illustrious damsels; whatever you wish for, ask of me, and I will give it you, however difficult it may be of attainment.' Then all those nymphs, Rambhá, Tilottamá, and others, recorded in the Vedas, replied, 'It is enough for us that thou art pleased; what need we aught else, venerable Brahman?' But some amongst them said, 'If, exalted sir, you are indeed pleased with us, then grant us a husband, the best of men, and sovereign of the Brahmans.' 'So be it,' replied Ashtávakra, and thereupon came up from the waters. When the nymphs beheld him coming out of the water, and saw that he was very ugly, and crooked in eight places, they could not restrain their merriment, but laughed aloud. The Muni was very angry, and cursed them, and said, 'Since you have been so impertinent as to laugh at my deformity, I denounce upon you this imprecation: through the grace I have shewn unto you, you shall obtain the first of males for your husband; but in consequence of my curse, you shall afterwards fall into the hands of thieves.' When the nymphs heard this uttered by the Muni, they endeavoured to appease him; and they so far succeeded, that he announced to them they should finally return to the sphere of the gods. It is in consequence, then, of the curse of the Muni Ashtávakra that these females, who were at first the wives of Keśava, have now fallen into the hands of the barbarians; and there is no occasion, Arjuna, for you to regret it in the least. All this destruction has been effected by the lord father angrily cursed him, that he should be born bent in every part; and he was accordingly brought forth crooked (vakra) in eight limbs (ashta). He became nevertheless a celebrated sage. See also Hindu Theatre, I. 293, note.

of all; and your end is also nigh at hand, since he has withdrawn from you strength, splendour, valour, and preeminence. Death is the doom of every one who is born: fall is the end of exaltation: union terminates in separation: and growth tends but to decay. Knowing all this, wise men are susceptible of neither grief nor joy; and those who learn their ways are even as they are (equally free from pleasure or pain). Do you therefore, most excellent prince, understand this truth, and, along with your brothers, relinquish every thing, and repair to the holy forest. Go now, and say from me to Yudhishtira, that he to-morrow, with his brethren, tread the path of heroes."

Thus instructed by Vyāsa, Arjuna went and related to the other sons of Prithá all that he had seen, had experienced, and had heard. When he had communicated to them the message of Vyāsa, the sons of Páṇdu placed Parikshit on the throne, and went to the forest.

I have thus narrated to you, Maitreya, in detail, the actions of Vásudeva, when he was born in the race of Yadu.
VISHṆU PURĀṆA.

BOOK VI.

CHAP. I.

Of the dissolution of the world: the four ages: the decline of all things, and deterioration of mankind, in the Kali age.

MAITREYA.—You have narrated to me, illustrious sage, the creation of the world, the genealogies of the patriarchs, the duration of the Manvantaras, and the dynasties of princes, in detail. I am now desirous to hear from you an account of the dissolution of the world, the season of total destruction, and that which occurs at the expiration of a Kalpa.

PArÁSARA.—Hear from me, Maitreya, exactly the circumstances of the end of all things, and the dissolution that occurs either at the expiration of a Kalpa, or that which takes place at the close of the life of Brahmá. A month of mortals is a day and night of the progenitors: a year of mortals is a day and night of the gods. Twice a thousand aggregates of the four ages is a day and night of Brahmá. The four ages are the Krita, Treta, Dwápara, and Kali; comprehending together twelve thousand years of the gods. There are infinite successions of these four ages, of a similar description; the first of which is always called the Krita, and the last the Kali. In the first, the Krita, is that age which is created by Brahmá; in the last, which is the Kali age, a dissolution of the world occurs.

1 Two kinds of great or universal dissolution are here intimated: one occurring at the end of a Kalpa, or day of Brahmá, to which the term Upasahhriti is applied in the text, and Atyantika laya by the commentator; and the other taking place at the end of the life of Brahmá, which is termed a great or elemental dissolution: Mahá pralaya and Prákrita pralaya.

2 These measures of time are more fully detailed in the first book: see p. 22.

7 t Maitreya.—Venerable sir, you are able to give me a description of the nature of the Kali age, in which four-footed virtue\(^3\) suffers total extinction.

Parâśara.—Hear, Maitreya, an account of the nature of the Kali age, respecting which you have inquired, and which is now close at hand.

The observance of caste, order, and institutes will not prevail in the Kali age, nor will that of the ceremonial enjoined by the Sáma, Rík, and Yajur Vedas. Marriages in this age will not be conformable to the ritual, nor will the rules that connect the spiritual preceptor and his disciple be in force. The laws that regulate the conduct of husband and wife will be disregarded, and oblations to the gods with fire no longer be offered. In whatever family he may be born, a powerful and rich man will be held entitled to espouse maidens of every tribe. A regenerate man will be initiated in any way whatever, and such acts of penance as may be performed will be unattended by any results\(^4\). Every text will be scripture that people choose to think so\(^5\); all gods will be gods to them that worship them; and all orders of life will be common alike to all persons. In the Kali age, fasting, austerity, liberality, practised according to the pleasure of those by whom they are observed, will constitute righteousness. Pride of wealth will be inspired by very insignificant possessions. Pride of beauty will be prompted by (no other personal charm than fine) hair. Gold, jewels, diamonds, clothes, will all have perished, and then hair will be the only ornament with which women can decorate themselves. Wives will desert their husbands, when they lose their property; and they only who are wealthy will be considered by women as their lords. He who gives away much money will be the master of men; and family descent will no longer be a title

\(^3\) This is an allusion to a popular notion, originating probably with Manu:
"In the Krita age the genius of truth and right stands firm on his four feet; but in the following ages he is deprived successively of one foot," &c. I. 81, 82.

\(^4\) 'Such an act is just what it is;' या वै नव प्राचीनस्वार्थसिमा कली मि that is, it may be attended by inconvenience to the individdual, but is utterly inefficacious for the expiation of sin.

\(^5\) Whether it is conformable or contradictory to the Vedas and the law. The passage may be rendered also, 'The doctrine or dogma of any one soever will be scripture.'
of supremacy. Accumulated treasures will be expended on (ostentatious) dwellings. The minds of men will be wholly occupied in acquiring wealth; and wealth will be spent solely on selfish gratifications. Women will follow their inclinations, and be ever fond of pleasure. Men will fix their desires upon riches, even though dishonestly acquired. No man will part with the smallest fraction of the smallest coin, though entreated by a friend. Men of all degrees will conceal themselves to be equal with Brahmans. Cows will be held in esteem only as they supply milk. The people will be almost always in dread of dearth, and apprehensive of scarcity; and will hence ever be watching the appearances of the sky: they will all live, like anchorites, upon leaves and roots and fruit, and put a period to their lives through fear of famine and want. In truth there will never be abundance in the Kali age, and men will never enjoy pleasure and happiness. They will take their food without previous ablution, and without worshipping fire, gods, or guests, or offering obsequial libations to their progenitors. The women will be fickle, short of stature, glutinous: they will have many children, and little means: scratching their heads with both hands, they will pay no attention to the commands of their husbands or parents: they will be selfish, abject, and sullennly: they will be scolds and liars: they will be indecent and immoral in their conduct, and will ever attach themselves to dissolute men. Youths, although disregarding the rules of studentship, will study the Vedas. Householders will neither sacrifice nor practise becoming liberality. Anchorites will subsist upon food accepted from rustics; and mendicants will be influenced by regard for friends and associates. Princes, instead of protecting, will plunder their subjects; and, under the pretext of levying customs, will rob merchants of their property. In 6 He will not part with the half of the half of half a Pana; that is, with ten Cowries; a Pana being equal to eighty Cowries, or small shells. Five Pañas are equal to one An, or the sixteenth of a Rupee; and, at two shillings the Rupee, ten Cowries are equal to about one-seventh of a farthing.

7 They will be valued for their individual use only, not from any notion of their generic sanctity.

8 The Bhágavata has, "Religious students will be regardless of vows and purification; householders will beg, not give alms; anchorites will dwell in villages; and mendicants will be desirous of riches."
the Kali age every one who has cars and elephants and steeds will be a Rájá: every one who is feeble will be a slave. Vaiśyas will abandon agriculture and commerce, and gain a livelihood by servitude or the exercise of mechanical arts. Śúdras, seeking a subsistence by begging, and assuming the outward marks of religious mendicants, will become the impure followers of impious and heretical doctrines.

Oppressed by famine and taxation, men will desert their native lands, and go to those countries which are fit for coarser grains. The path of the Vedas being obliterated, and men having deviated into heresy, iniquity will flourish, and the duration of life will therefore decrease. In consequence of horrible penances not enjoined by scripture, and of the vices of the rulers, children will die in their infancy. Women will bear children at the age of five, six, or seven years; and men beget them when they are eight, nine, or ten. A man will be grey when he is twelve; and no one will exceed twenty years of life. Men will possess little sense, vigour, or virtue, and will therefore perish in a very brief period. In proportion as heresy extends, so, Maitreya, shall the progress of the Kali age be estimated by the wise. In proportion as the number of the pious, who adhere to the lessons of the Vedas, diminishes—as the efforts of individuals who cultivate virtue relax—as the first of males becomes no longer the object of sacrifices—as respect for the teachers of the Vedas declines—and as regard is acknowledged for the dissemina-

9 That is, princes and warriors will be so no longer by virtue of their birth and caste.

10 Most of the mendicant orders admit members without distinction of caste; but probably Buddhists especially are here intended. The Bhágavata repeatedly alludes to the diffusion of heretical doctrines and practices, the substitution of outward signs and marks for devotion, and the abandonment of the worship of Vishnú. The Śaiva mendicant orders are probably those especially in view. The same probably are intended by our text in the subsequent allusion to unauthorized austerities, and sectarian marks.

11 'Gavedhuka (Coix barbata) and other bad sorts of grain;' गवेदकु हुका चार्मादोवां श्रादिका एकाद : Another reading is, गोवान्तु चार्मादोवां। 'Countries growing wheat, barley, and the like.' But to place wheat and barley amongst inferior grains, and to rank them lower than rice, is a classification that could have occurred to a native of Bengal alone.

12 The Váyu says three and twenty; the Bhágavata, from twenty to thirty.
tors of heresy—so may wise men note the augmented influence of the Kali age.

In the Kali age, Maitreya, men, corrupted by unbelievers, will refrain from adoring Vishnu, the lord of sacrifice, the creator and lord of all; and will say, "Of what authority are the Vedas? what are gods or Brahmins? what need is there of purification with water?" Then will the clouds yield scanty rain: then will the corn be light in ear, and the grain will be poor, and of little sap: garments will be mostly made of the fibres of the San: the principal of trees will be the Sami: the prevailing caste will be the Sudra: millet will be the more common grain: the milk in use will be chiefly that of goats: unguents will be made of Ushra grass. The mother and father-in-law will be venerated in place of parents; and a man's friends will be his brother-in-law, or one who has a wanton wife. Men will say, "Who has a father? who has a mother? each one is born according to his deeds:" and therefore they will look upon a wife's or husband's parents as their own. Endowed with little sense, men, subject to all the infirmities of mind, speech, and body, will daily commit sins; and every thing that is calculated to afflict beings, vicious, impure, and wretched, will be generated in the Kali age. Then shall some places follow a separate duty, devoid of holy study, oblations to fire, and invocations of the gods. Then, in the 12 The complaints of the prevalence of heterodox doctrines, and neglect of the practices of the Vedas, which recur in the Bhagavata and our text, indicate a period of change in the condition of the Hindu religion, which it would be important to verify. If reference is made to Buddhism, to which in some respects the allusions especially apply, it would probably denote a period not long subsequent to the Christian era; but it is more likely to be of a later date, or in the eighth and ninth centuries, when Sankara is said to have reformed a variety of corrupt practices, and given rise to others. See As. Res. vol. XVI. p. 12.

14 Crotalaria juncea.

15 The silk cotton, Bombax heptaphylla.

16 The expression Kwachil-loka (क्वचील लोक), 'a certain place,' is explained by the commentator, Kikafa, &c. (कक्षाफङ्गी); confirming the inference that Buddhism is especially aimed at in the previous passages; for Kikafa, or south Behar, is the scene of Sakya's earliest and most successful labours.

17 Several of the Puranas contain allusions to the degeneracy of the Kali age, MERITS OF THE KALI AGE.

Kali age, shall a man acquire by a trifling exertion as much eminence in virtue as is the result of arduous penance in the Krita age, or age of purity 18.

but none afford more copious details. The description in the Bhāgavata is much shorter; that of the Vāyu is much the same, and employs many of the same verses and illustrations.

18 This might be suspected of being said ironically, referring to what had been just observed of places where a religion prevailed that required neither study nor sacrifice. The commentator, however, understands it literally, and asserts that allusion is here made to the Vaishnava faith, in which devotion to Vishnu or Krishnā, and the mere repetition of his name, are equally efficacious in the Kali age with the penances and sacrifices of the preceding ages: therefore he concludes the Kali, by this one property, is the best of all the ages: साधनाशेषं मुखिद्व वाला वाज्येऽपि: चाभेलये।

This interpretation is confirmed by the following chapter.
CHAP. II.

Redeeming properties of the Kali age. Devotion to Vīshṇu sufficient to salvation in that age for all castes and persons.

Upon this subject, Maitreya, you shall hear what the wise Vyāsā has related, as it is communicated truly by me.

It was once a matter of dispute amongst the sages, at what season the least moral merit obtained the greatest reward, and by whom it was most easily displayed. In order to terminate the discussion, they went to Veda Vyāsā to remove their doubts. They found the illustrious Muni, my son, half immersed in the water of the Ganges; and awaiting the close of his ablutions, the sages remained on the banks of the sacred stream, under shelter of a grove of trees. As my son plunged down into the water, and again rose up from it, the Munis heard him exclaim, “Excellent, excellent, is the Kali age!” Again he dived, and again rising, said in their hearing, “Well done, well done Śúdra; thou art happy!” Again he sank down, and as he once more emerged they heard him say, “Well done, well done, women; they are happy! who are more fortunate than they?” After this, my son finished his bathing, and the sages met him as he approached to welcome them. After he had given them seats, and they had proffered their respects, the son of Satyavatí said to them, “On what account have you come to me?” They replied, “We came to you to consult you on a subject on which we entertain some doubt; but that may be at present suspended: explain to us something else. We heard you say, ‘Excellent is the Kali age! Well done, Śúdra! Well done, women!’ Now we are desirous to know why this was said, why you called them repeatedly, happy. Tell us the meaning of it, if it be not a mystery. We will then propose to you the question that occupies our thoughts.”

Being thus addressed by the Munis, Vyāsā smiled, and said to them, “Hear, excellent sages, why I uttered the words ‘Well done, well done.’ The fruit of penance, of continence, of silent prayer, and the like, practised in the Krita age for ten years, in the Treta for one year, in the Dwápara for a month, is obtained in the Kali age in a day and night: therefore did I exclaim, ‘Excellent, excellent, is the Kali age!’ That reward which a man obtains in the Krita by abstract meditation, in the Treta by sacrifice, in the Dwápara by adoration, he receives in the Kali by merely reciting the name of Keśava. In the Kali age a man displays the most exalted virtue by very little exertion; therefore, pious sages, who know what virtue is, I was pleased with the Kali age. Formerly the Vedas were to be acquired by the twice-born through the diligent observance of self-denial; and it was their duty to celebrate sacrifices conformably to the ritual. Then idle prayers, idle feasts, and fruitless ceremonies, were practised but to mislead the twice-born; for although observed by them devoutly, yet, in consequence of some irregularity in their celebration, sin was incurred in all their works, and what they ate, or what they drank, did not effect the fulfilment of their desires. In all their objects the twice-born enjoyed no independence, and they attained their respective spheres only with exceeding pain. The Śúdra, on the contrary, more fortunate than they, reaches his assigned station by rendering them service, and performing merely the sacrifice of preparing food, in which no rules determine what may or may not be eaten, what may or may not be drunk. Therefore, most excellent sages, is the Śúdra fortunate.

"Riches are accumulated by men in modes not incompatible with their peculiar duties, and they are then to be bestowed upon the worthy, and expended in constant sacrifice. There is great trouble in their acquisition; great care in their preservation; great distress from the want of them; and great grief for their loss. Thus, eminent Brahmans, through these and other sources of anxiety, men attain their allotted spheres of Prajápati and the rest only by exceeding labour and suffering. This is not the case with women: a woman has only to honour her husband, in act, thought, and speech, to reach the same region to which he is elevated; and she thus accomplishes her object without any great exertion. This was the purport of my exclamation, 'Well done!' the third time. I have thus related to you what you asked. Now demand the question you came to put to me, in any way you please, and I will make you a distinct reply."

The Munis then said to Vyáśa, "The question we intended to have asked you has been already answered by you in your reply to our subsequent inquiry." On hearing which, Krishña Dwarpāyana laughed, and said to the holy persons who had come to see him, whose eyes were wide open with astonishment, "I perceived, with the eye of divine knowledge, the question you intended to ask, and in allusion to it I uttered the expressions, 'Well done, well done.' In truth, in the Kali age duty is discharged with very little trouble by mortals, whose faults are all washed away by the water of their individual merits; by Śúdras, through diligent attendance only upon the twice-born; and by women, through the slight effort of obedience to their husbands. Therefore, Brahmans, did I thrice express my admiration of their happiness; for in the Krita and other ages great were the toils of the regenerate to perform their duty. I waited not for your inquiry, but replied at once to the question you purposed to ask. Now, ye who know what virtue is, what else do you wish me to tell you?"

The Munis then saluted and praised Vyāsa, and, being freed by him from uncertainty, departed as they came. To you also, excellent Maitreya, have I imparted this secret, this one great virtue of the otherwise vicious Kali age. The dissolution of the world, and the aggregation of the elements, I will now describe to you.

1 The illustration of the efficacy of devotion to Vishńu given in this chapter is peculiar to this Puráṇa, but the doctrine is common to it and the Bhágavata. It is repeatedly inculcated in that work. The parallel passage in the twelfth book is the following. "Purushottama, abiding in the hearts of men, takes away all the sins of the Kali age, produced by place or property. Bhágaván, abiding in the heart, and heard, repeated, read of, worshipped, or honoured, dissipates the ills of men for ten thousand births. As fire, entering into the substance of gold, purifies it from the alloy with which it is debased in the mine, so Vishńu, united with the devotee, is the refiner from all that is evil. By learning, penance, suppression of breath, friendship, pilgrimage, acretion, mortification, gifts, prayer, the soul attains not that exceeding purity which it derives from the presence of Vishńu. Therefore, with all your soul, O king, hold Keśáva ever present in your heart. Let one about to die be most careful in this; for so he goes to supreme felicity. Let the name of the supreme god, Vishńu, be repeated diligently by all in their last moments; for he who desires liberation shall attain it by the frequent repetition of the name of Krishña. Final felicity is derived in the Krita age from holy study; in the Treta, from religious rites. In the Dwápara it is attained by pious services; but in the Kali age it is secured by repeating the name of Hari." Similar doctrines are taught in the Gītā, and other Vaishnava works. See As. Res. vol. XVI. p. 116.
CHAP. III.

Three different kinds of dissolution. Duration of a Parárdha. The Clepsydra, or vessel for measuring time. The dissolution that occurs at the end of a day of Brahmá.

The dissolution of existing beings is of three kinds, incidental, elemental, and absolute. The incidental is that which relates to Brahmá, and occurs at the end of a Kalpa; the elemental is that which takes place after two Parárdhhas: the absolute is final liberation from existence.

Maitreya.—Tell me, excellent master, what is the enumeration of a Parárdha, the expiration of two of which is the period of elemental dissolution.

Parására.—A Parárdha, Maitreya, is that number which occurs in the eighteenth place of figures, enumerated according to the rule of decimal notation. At the end of twice that period elemental dissolution

1 The first is called Naimittaka, 'occasional' or 'incidental,' or Bráhmya, as occasioned by the intervals of Brahmá’s days; the destruction of creatures, though not of the substance of the world, occurring during his night. The general resolution of the elements into their primitive source, or Prakriti, is the Prákritika destruction, and occurs at the end of Brahmá's life. The third, the absolute or final, Atántika, is individual annihilation; Moksha, exemption for ever from future existence. The Bhágavata here notices the fourth kind, of which mention occurred in a preceding passage (p. 56), Nitya or constant dissolution; explaining it to be the imperceptible change that all things suffer in the various stages of growth and decay, life and death. The various conditions of beings subject to change are occasioned by that constant dissolution of life which is rapidly produced by the resistless stream of time, taking every thing perpetually away.

The Váyu describes but three kinds of Pralaya, omitting the Nitya.

2 Maitreya has a rather indifferent memory (see p. 22); but the periods specified in the two places do not agree. In the first book two Parárdhhas, as equal to one hundred years of Brahmá, are 311.040.000.000.000 years of mortals.

3 Counting according to this mode of enumeration, a Parárdha is represented by 100.000.000.000.000. The Váyu Puráña has a term for each of these decimal values. Daśá (१०), 10; Satam (१००), 100; Sahasam (१०००), 1000; Ayutam (१००००), 10,000; Niyutam (१०००००), 100,000; Prayutam (१००००००), 1,000,000; Arvudam (१०००००००), 10,000,000; Nyuvudam (१००००००००), 100,000,000; occurs, when all the discrete products of nature are withdrawn into their indiscrete source. The shortest period of time is a Mātrā, which is equal to the twinkling of the human eye. Fifteen Mātrās make a Kāshthā; thirty Kāshthās, one Kalā; fifteen Kalās, one Nāḍikā. A Nāḍikā is ascertained by a measure of water, with a vessel made of twelve Palas and a half of copper, in the bottom of which there is to be a hole made with a tube of gold, of the weight of four Māshas, and four inches long 4.
According to the Māgadha measure, the vessel should hold a Prastha (or sixteen Palas) of water. Two of these Nāḍikās make one Muhūrtta; thirty of which are one day and night. Thirty such periods form a month; twelve months make a year, or a day and night of the gods; and three hundred and sixty such days constitute a year of the celestials. An aggregate of four ages contains twelve thousand divine years; and a thousand periods of four ages complete a day of Brāhma. This period is also termed a Kalpa, during which fourteen Manus preside; and at the end of it occurs the incidental or Brāhma dissolution. The nature of this dissolution is very fearful: hear me describe it, as well as that which takes place at the elemental dissolution, which I will also relate to you.

At the end of a thousand periods of four ages the earth is for the most part exhausted. A total dearth then ensues, which lasts a hundred

100,000,000; Vrindam (वृंदम्), 100,000,000; Param (परम), 10,000,000,000; Kharvam
(क्षरवम्), 100,000,000,000; Nikharvam (निक्षरवम्), 100,000,000,000,000; Sankham (संकः)
10,000,000,000,000; Padmam (पद्मम्), 10,000,000,000,000,000; Samudram (समुद्रम्)
1,000,000,000,000,000; Madhyamam (मध्यमम्), 10,000,000,000,000,000,000; Parārdham (परार्धम्)
1,000,000,000,000,000,000,000. In the first book the Parārdham, as the half of Brāhma's life, is but 155-520,000,000,000, fifteen instead of eighteen places of figures.

4 The description of the Clepsydra is very brief, and wanting in precision. One of the commentaries is more explicit: 'A vessel made of twelve Palas and a half of copper, and holding a Prastha, Māgadha measure, of water, broad at top, and having at bottom a tube of gold of four Māshas weight, four fingers long, is placed in water, and the time in which the vessel is filled by the hole in the bottom is called a Nāḍika: 'साधनस्य स्पष्टिन्यायं मात्रिक्षणम् शिराकविश्व अर्थात् चुरुमुक्कुकुकुलकाम् यण्डायते।' The term Sālākā generally means a needle or stake, but it must here denote a pipe. The common measure of the Nāḍī is a thin shallow brass cup, with a small hole in the bottom.
It is placed on the surface of water, in a large vessel, where nothing can disturb it, and where the water gradually fills the cup, and sinks it. As. Res. vol. V. p. 87.
years; and, in consequence of the failure of food, all beings become languid and exanimate, and at last entirely perish. The eternal Viṣhṇu then assumes the character of Rudra, the destroyer, and descends to reunite all his creatures with himself. He enters into the seven rays of the sun, drinks up all the waters of the globe, and causes all moisture whatever, in living bodies or in the soil, to evaporate; thus drying up the whole earth. The seas, the rivers, the mountain torrents, and springs, are all exhaled; and so are all the waters of Pātāla, the regions below the earth. Thus fed, through his intervention, with abundant moisture, the seven solar rays dilate to seven suns, whose radiance glows above, below, and on every side, and sets the three worlds and Pātāla on fire. The three worlds, consumed by these suns, become rugged and deformed throughout the whole extent of their mountains, rivers, and seas; and the earth, bare of verdure, and destitute of moisture, alone remains, resembling in appearance the back of a tortoise. The destroyer of all things, Hari, in the form of Rudra, who is the flame of time, becomes the scorching breath of the serpent Śesha, and thereby reduces Pātāla to ashes. The great fire, when it has burnt all the divisions of Pātāla, proceeds to the earth, and consumes it also. A vast whirlpool of eddying flame then spreads to the region of the atmosphere, and the sphere of the gods, and wraps them in ruin. The three spheres shew like a frying-pan amidst the surrounding flames, that prey upon all moveable or stationary things. The inhabitants of the two upper spheres, having discharged their functions, and being annoyed by the heat, remove to the sphere above, or Maharloka. When that becomes heated, its tenants, who after the full period of their stay are desirous of ascending to higher regions, depart for the Janaloka.

3 See p. 276, n. 3.
6 These also have their several appellations: the commentator quotes the Vedas as the authority: "Arāga, Bhrāja, Pātāla, Patanga, Swamābhāk, Jyotishmat, and Sa-vībhāsa.
7 The passage may also be understood, "Those go to Janaloka who are desirous of obtaining Brahma, or final liberation, through the ten stages of perfection—devotion, penance, truth, &c." In the Vāyu Purāṇa more details are specified. Those sainted mortals who have diligently worshipped Viṣhṇu, and are distinguished for piety, abide, at the time of dissolution, in Maharloka, with the Pitris, the Manus, Janárddana, in the person of Rudra, having consumed the whole world, breathes forth heavy clouds; and those called Samvaritta, resembling vast elephants in bulk, overspread the sky, roaring, and darting lightnings. Some are as black as the blue lotus; some are white as the water-lily; some are dusky, like smoke; and some are yellow; some are of a dun colour, like that of an ass; some like ashes sprinkled on the forehead; some are deep blue, as the lapis lazuli; some azure, like the sapphire; some are white, as the conch or the jasmine; and some are black, as collyrium; some are of bright red, like the ladybird; some are of the fierceness of red arsenic; and some are like the wing of the painted jay. Such are these massy clouds in hue: in form some resemble towns, some mountains, some are like houses and hovels, and some are like columns. Mighty in size, and loud in thunder, they fill all space. Showering down torrents of water, these clouds quench the dreadful fires which involve the three worlds, and then they rain uninterruptedly for a hundred years, and deluge the whole world. Pouring down in drops as large as dice, these rains overspread the earth, and fill the middle region, and inundate heaven. The world is now enveloped in darkness, and all things, animate or inanimate, having perished, the clouds continue to pour down their waters for more than a hundred years.

the seven Rishis, the various orders of celestial spirits, and the gods. These, when the heat of the flames that destroy the world reaches to Maharloka, repair to Janaloka in their subtle forms, destined to become reembodied, in similar capacities as their former, when the world is renewed, at the beginning of the succeeding Kalpa. This continues throughout the life of Brahmá; at the expiration of his life all are destroyed; but those who have then attained a residence in the Brahmaloka, by having identified themselves in spirit with the supreme, are finally resolved into the sole-existing Brahma.
CHAP. IV.

Continuation of the account of the first kind of dissolution. Of the second kind, or elemental dissolution; of all being resolved into primary spirit.

When the waters have reached the region of the seven Rishis, and the whole of the three worlds is one ocean, they stop. The breath of Vishúu becomes a strong wind, which blows for more than a hundred years, until all the clouds are dispersed. The wind is then reabsorbed, and he of whom all things are made, the lord by whom all things exist, he who is inconceivable, without beginning of the universe, reposes, sleeping upon Śesha, in the midst of the deep. The creator, Hari, sleeps upon the ocean, in the form of Brahmá—glorified by Sanaka and the saints who had gone to the Janaloka, and contemplated by the holy inhabitants of Brahma-loka, anxious for final liberation—involved in mystic slumber, the celestial personification of his own illusions, and meditating on his own ineffable spirit, which is called Vásudeva. This, Maitreya, is the dissolution termed incidental, because Hari, in the form of Brahmá, sleeps there, as its incidental cause.

When the universal spirit wakes, the world revives; when he closes his eyes, all things fall upon the bed of mystic slumber. In like manner as a thousand great ages constitute a day of Brahmá, so his night consists of the same period; during which the world is submerged by a vast ocean. Awaking at the end of his night, the unborn, Vishúu, in the character of Brahmá, creates the universe anew, in the manner formerly related to you.¹

I have thus described to you the intermediate dissolution of the world, occurring at the end of every Kalpa. I will now, Maitreya, describe to you elemental dissolution. When by dearth and fire all the worlds and Pátálas are withered up, and the modifications of Mahat and other products of nature are by the will of Krishña destroyed, the progress of

¹ The Naimittika Pralaya is described Paráñas, to the same effect, and very comin the Váyu, Bhágavata, Kúrma, and other monly in precisely the same words.
ELEMENTS SEVERALLY DISAPPEAR.

Elemental dissolution is begun. Then, first, the waters swallow up the property of earth, which is the rudiment of smell; and earth, deprived of its property, proceeds to destruction. Devoid of the rudiment of odour, the earth becomes one with water. The waters then being much augmented, roaring, and rushing along, fill up all space, whether agitated or still. When the universe is thus pervaded by the waves of the watery element, its rudimental flavour is licked up by the element of fire, and, in consequence of the destruction of their rudiments, the waters themselves are destroyed. Deprived of the essential rudiment of flavour, they become one with fire, and the universe is therefore entirely filled with flame, which drinks up the water on every side, and gradually over-spreads the whole of the world. While space is enveloped in flame, above, below, and all around, the element of wind seizes upon the rudimental property, or form, which is the cause of light; and that being withdrawn, all becomes of the nature of air. The rudiment of form being destroyed, and fire deprived of its rudiment, air extinguishes fire, and spreads resistlessly over space, which is deprived of light when fire merges into air. Air then, accompanied by sound, which is the source of ether, extends every where throughout the ten regions of space, until ether seizes upon contact, its rudimental property; by the loss of which, air is destroyed, and ether remains unmodified: devoid of form, flavour, touch, and smell, it exists unembodied and vast, and pervades the whole of space. Ether, whose characteristic property and rudiment is sound, exists alone, occupying all the vacuity of space. But then the radical element egotism devours sound, and all the elements and faculties are at once merged into their original. This primary element is consciousness, combined with the property of darkness, and is itself swallowed up by Mahat, whose characteristic property is intelligence; and earth and Mahat are the inner and outer boundaries of the universe. In this manner, as in the creation were the seven forms of nature (Prakriti), reckoned from Mahat to earth, so, at the time of elemental dissolution, these seven successively reenter into each other. The egg of Brahmá is dissolved in the waters that surround it, with its seven zones, seven oceans, seven regions, and their mountains. The investiture of water is drunk up by fire: the stratum of fire is absorbed by that of air: air blends itself with ether: the primary element of egotism devours the ether, and is itself taken up by intellect, which, along with all these, is seized upon by nature (Prakriti). Equilibrium of the three properties, without excess or deficiency, is called nature (Prakriti), origin (Hetu), the chief principle (Pradhaṇa), cause (Kāraṇa), supreme (Param). This Prakriti is essentially the same, whether discrete or indiscrete; only that which is discrete is finally lost or absorbed in the indiscrete. Spirit also, which is one, pure, imperishable, eternal, all-pervading, is a portion of that supreme spirit which is all things. That spirit which is other than (embodied) spirit, in which there are no attributes of name, species, or the like—which is one with all wisdom, and is to be understood as sole existence—that is Brahma, infinite glory, supreme spirit, supreme power, Vishṇu, all that is; from whence the perfect sage returns no more. Nature (Prakriti), which I have described to you as being essentially both discrete and indiscrete, and spirit (which is united with body), both resolve into supreme spirit. Supreme spirit is the upholder of all things, and the ruler of all things, and is glorified in the Vedas and in the Vedanta by the name of Vishṇu.

Works, as enjoined by the Vedas, are of two kinds, active (Pravṛtta) and quiescent (Nivṛtta); by both of which the universal person is worshipped by mankind. He, the lord of sacrifice, the male of sacrifice, the most excellent male, is worshipped by men in the active mode by rites enjoined in the Riks, Yajurs, and Sāma Vedas. The soul of wisdom, the person of wisdom, Vishṇu, the giver of emancipation, is worshipped by sages in the quiescent form, through meditative devotion. The exhaustless Vishṇu is whatever thing that is designated by long, short, or prolated syllables, or that which is without a name. He is that which is discrete, and that which is indiscrete: he is exhaustless spirit, supreme spirit, universal spirit, Hari, the wearer of universal forms. Nature, whether discrete or indiscrete, is absorbed into him, and (detached) spirit also merges into the all-diffusive and unobstructed spirit.
The period of two Parárdhas, as I have described it to you, Maitreya, is called a day of that potent Vishńu; and whilst the products of nature are merged into their source, nature into spirit, and that into the supreme, that period is termed his night, and is of equal duration with his day. But, in fact, to that eternal supreme spirit there is neither day nor night, and these distinctions are only figuratively applied to the almighty. I have thus explained to you the nature of elemental dissolution, and will now expound to you which is final.

* The Bhágavata notices the Prákrita pralaya much more briefly, and it is omitted in the Váyu.
CHAP. V.

The third kind of dissolution, or final liberation from existence. Evils of worldly life. Sufferings in infancy, manhood, old age. Pains of hell. Imperfect felicity of heaven. Exemption from birth desirable by the wise. The nature of spirit or god. Meaning of the terms Bhagavat and Vasudeva.

The wise man having investigated the three kinds of worldly pain, or mental and bodily affliction and the like, and having acquired true wisdom, and detachment from human objects, obtains final dissolution. The first of the three pains, or Adhyātmika, is of two kinds, bodily and mental. Bodily pain is of many kinds, as you shall hear. Affections of the head, catarrh, fever, cholic, fistula, spleen, hemorrhoids, intumescence, sickness, ophthalmia, dysentery, leprosy, and many other diseases, constitute bodily affliction. Mental sufferings are love, anger, fear, hate, covetousness, stupefaction, despair, sorrow, malice, disdain, jealousy, envy, and many other passions which are engendered in the mind. These and various other afflictions, mental or corporeal, are comprised under the class of worldly sufferings, which is called Adhyātmika (natural and inseparable). That pain to which, excellent Brahman, the term Adhibhautika (natural, but incidental) is applied, is every kind of evil which is inflicted (from without) upon men by beasts, birds, men, goblins, snakes, fiends, or reptiles; and the pain that is termed Adhidaivika (or superhuman) is the work of cold, heat, wind, rain, lightning, and other (atmospherical phenomena). Affliction, Maitreya, is multiplied in thousands of shapes in the progress of conception, birth, decay, disease, death, and hell. The tender (and subtile) animal exists in the embryo, surrounded by abundant filth, floating in water, and distorted in its back, neck, and bones; enduring severe pain even in the course of its development, as disordered by the acid, acrid, bitter, pungent, and saline articles of its mother’s food; incapable of extending or contracting its limbs; reposing amidst the slime of ordure and urine; every way incommoded; unable to breathe; endowed with consciousness, and calling to memory many hundred previous births. Thus exists the embryo in profound affliction, bound to the world by its former works.

1 The three kinds of affliction, inseparable, incidental, and superhuman, are fully described in the commentary on the first verse of the Sānkhya Kārikā, p. 8, in a similar strain as that which is adopted in the text.

When the child is about to be born, its face is besmeared by excrement, urine, blood, mucus, and semen; its attachment to the uterus is ruptured by the Prájápati wind; it is turned head downwards, and violently expelled from the womb by the powerful and painful winds of parturition; and the infant losing for a time all sensation, when brought in contact with the external air, is immediately deprived of its intellectual knowledge. Thus born, the child is tortured in every limb, as if pierced with thorns, or cut to pieces with a saw, and falls from its fetid lodgment, as from a sore, like a crawling thing upon the earth. Unable to feel itself, unable to turn itself, it is dependent upon the will of others for being bathed and nourished. Laid upon a dirty bed, it is bitten by insects and mosquitos, and has not power to drive them away. Many are the pangs attending birth, and many are those which succeed to birth; and many are the sufferings which are inflicted by elemental and superhuman agency in the state of childhood. Enveloped by the gloom of ignorance, and internally bewildered, man knows not whence he is, who he is, whither he goeth, nor what is his nature; by what bonds he he is bound; what is cause, and what is not cause; what is to be done, and what is to be left undone; what is to be said, and what is to be kept silent; what is righteousness, what is iniquity; in what it consists, or how; what is right, what is wrong; what is virtue, what is vice. Thus man, like a brute beast, addicted only to animal gratifications, suffers the pain that ignorance occasions. Ignorance, darkness, inactivity, influence those devoid of knowledge, so that pious works are neglected; but hell is the consequence of neglect of religious acts, according to the great sages, and the ignorant therefore suffer affliction both in this world and in the next.

When old age arrives, the body is infirm; the limbs are relaxed; the face is emaciate and shrivelled; the skin is wrinkled, and scantily covers the veins and sinews; the eye discerns not afar off, and the pupil gazes on vacuity; the nostrils are stuffed with hair; the trunk trembles as it moves; the bones appear beneath the surface; the back is bowed, and the joints are bent; the digestive fire is extinct, and there is little appetite and little vigour; walking, rising, sleeping, sitting, are all painful efforts; the ear is dull; the eye is dim; the mouth is disgusting with dribbling saliva; the senses no longer are obedient to the will; and as death approaches, the things that are perceived even are immediately forgotten. The utterance of a single sentence is fatiguing, and wake-fulness is perpetuated by difficult breathing, coughing, and painful exhaustion. The old man is lifted up by somebody else; he is clothed by somebody else; he is an object of contempt to his servants, his children, and his wife. Incapable of cleanliness, of amusement, or food, or desire, he is laughed at by his dependants, and disregarded by his kin; and dwelling on the exploits of his youth, as on the actions of a past life, he sighs deeply, and is sorely distressed. Such are some of the pains which old age is condemned to suffer. I will now describe to you the agonies of death.

The neck droops; the feet and hands are relaxed; the body trembles; the man is repeatedly exhausted, subdued, and visited with interrupted knowledge; the principle of selfishness afflicts him, and he thinks what will become of my wealth, my lands, my children, my wife, my servants, my house? the joints of his limbs are tortured with severe pains, as if cut by a saw, or as if they were pierced by the sharp arrows of the destroyer; he rolls his eyes, and tosses about his hands and feet; his lips and palate are parched and dry, and his throat, obstructed by foul humours and deranged vital airs, emits a rattling sound; he is afflicted with burning heat, and with thirst, and with hunger; and he at last passes away, tortured by the servants of the judge of the dead, to undergo a renewal of his sufferings in another body. These are the agonies which men have to endure when they die. I will now describe to you the tortures which they suffer in hell.

Men are bound, when they die, by the servants of the king of Tartarus with cords, and beaten with sticks, and have then to encounter the fierce aspect of Yama, and the horrors of their terrible route. In the PAINS OF HELL.

641
different hells there are various intolerable tortures with burning sand, fire, machines, and weapons; some are severed with saws, some roasted in forges, some are chopped with axes, some buried in the ground, some are mounted on stakes, some cast to wild beasts to be devoured, some are gnawed by vultures, some torn by tigers, some are boiled in oil, some rolled in caustic slime, some are precipitated from great heights, some tossed upwards by engines. The number of punishments inflicted in hell, which are the consequences of sin, is infinite.

But not in hell alone do the souls of the deceased undergo pain: there is no cessation even in heaven; for its temporary inhabitant is ever tormented with the prospect of descending again to earth. Again is he liable to conception and to birth; he is merged again into the embryo, and repairs to it when about to be born; then he dies, as soon as born, or in infancy, or in youth, or in manhood, or in old age. Death, sooner or later, is inevitable. As long as he lives he is immersed in manifold afflictions, like the seed of the cotton amidst the down that is to be spun into thread. In acquiring, losing, and preserving wealth there are many griefs; and so there are in the misfortunes of our friends. Whatever is produced that is most acceptable to man, that, Maitreya, becomes a seed whence springs the tree of sorrow. Wife, children, servants, house, lands, riches, contribute much more to the misery than to the happiness of mankind. Where could man, scorched by the fires of the sun of this world, look for felicity, were it not for the shade afforded by the tree of emancipation? Attainment of the divine being is considered by the wise as the remedy of the threefold class of ills that beset the different stages of life, conception, birth, and decay, as characterized by that only happiness which effaces all other kinds of felicity, however abundant, and as being absolute and final.

It should therefore be the assiduous endeavour of wise men to attain unto god. The means of such attainment are said, great Muni, to be

1 Some further particulars of the different hells, and the punishments inflicted in them, have been given before: see p. 207.
2 All this is conformable to the Śāṅkhya doctrines in particular, although the same spirit pervades all Hindu metaphysics.
3 Tasmāt Tat prāptaye yatna kartavya
4 8 a knowledge and works. Knowledge is of two kinds, that which is derived from scripture, and that which is derived from reflection. Brahma that is the word is composed of scripture; Brahma that is supreme is produced of reflection. Ignorance is utter darkness, in which knowledge, obtained through any sense (as that of hearing), shines like a lamp; but the knowledge that is derived from reflection breaks upon the obscurity like the sun. What has been said by Manu, when appealing to the meaning of the Vedas with respect to this subject, I will repeat to you. There are two (forms of) spirit (or god), the spirit which is the word, and the spirit which is supreme. He who is thoroughly imbued with the word of god obtains supreme spirit. The Atharva Veda also states that there are two kinds of knowledge; by the one, which is the supreme, god is attained; the other is that which consists of the Rich and other Vedas. That which is imperceptible, undecaying, inconceivable, unborn, inexhaustible, indescribable; which has neither form, nor hand, nor feet; which is almighty, omnipresent, eternal; the cause of all things, and without cause; permeating all, itself unpenetrated, and from which all things proceed; that is the object which the wise behold, that is Brahma, that is the supreme state, that is the subject of contemplation to those who desire liberation, that is the thing spoken of by the Vedas, the infinitely subtle, supreme condition of Vishnu. That essence of the panûtairnâmih (सुमात्र समाचे नमः: कैलेष: परितैनेनै). The expression Tat prâptaye, 'for the obtaining of that,' refers to the phrase immediately preceding, Bhagavat-prâpti, 'obtaining of,' or 'attaining to, Bhagavat,' the lord.

5 Brahma is of two kinds; Sabda-Brahma, spirit or god to be attained through the word, that is, the Vedas and the duties they prescribe; and Para-Brahma, spirit or god to be attained through reflection, by which the difference between soul and matter is ascertained.

6 This seems intended as a quotation from Manu, but it has not been found in the code; it is ते महाय वेदि ये यज्ञमय परम यस. अब एकार्य ब्रह्मात: वर्ते प्राणविवाहायति। The commentator quotes other passages from the Vedas of a similar tendency, intimating, however, the necessity of performing acts prior to attaining knowledge; as, ये कस्मीष: ये तरे यान हु यस्य नासिक: 'The decoction (preparatory process) being digested by rites, thereafter knowledge is the supreme resource.' चरित केवल नन्द तीयति विश्वालेंगामिनी। 'Having crossed the gulp of death by ignorance (ceremonial acts), man obtains immortality by (holy) knowledge.'
supreme is defined by the term Bhagavat: the word Bhagavat is the denomination of that primeval and eternal god: and he who fully understands the meaning of that expression, is possessed of holy wisdom, the sum and substance of the three Vedas. The word Bhagavat is a convenient form to be used in the adoration of that supreme being, to whom no term is applicable; and therefore Bhagavat expresses that supreme spirit, which is individual, almighty, and the cause of causes of all things. The letter Bh implies the cherisher and supporter of the universe. By ga is understood the leader, impeller, or creator. The disyllable Bhaga indicates the six properties, dominion, might, glory, splendour, wisdom, and dispassion. The purport of the letter va is that elemental spirit in which all beings exist, and which exists in all beings. And thus this great word Bhagavan is the name of Vásudeva, who is one with the supreme Brahma, and of no one else. This word therefore, which is the general denomination of an adorable object, is not used in reference to the supreme in a general, but a special signification. When applied to any other (thing or person) it is used in its customary or general import. In the latter case it may purport one who knows the origin and end and revolutions of beings, and what is wisdom, what ignorance. In the former it denotes wisdom, energy, power, dominion, might, glory, without end, and without defect.

The term Vásudeva means that all beings abide in that supreme being, and that he abides in all beings, as was formerly explained by Keśidhwaja to Khásidikya, called Janaka, when he inquired of him an explanation of the name of the immortal, Vásudeva. He said, "He 8 According to the comment, allusion is here made to the twelve syllable Mantra, or mystic formula addressed to Vishnu: "Om Bhagavate Vásudeváya nama, 'Om salutation to Bhagavat Vásudeva,' the repetition of which, by those devoted (bhakta) to Vishnu, is the easy mode of securing their liberation." The mysticism is, however, no doubt older than the worship of Vishnu; and the term Bhagavat is defined in the text according to the interpretation of the Vedas.

---

9 The commentator says these interpretations are from the Nirukta, the glossary of the Vedas. The more etymological derivation of the term is, Bhaga, 'power,' 'authority;' and vat possessive affix.

10 From the root Vas (वस्), 'abiding,' 'dwelling.' See p. 1 and 9.
dwelleth internally in all beings, and all things dwell in him; and thence the lord Vásudeva is the creator and preserver of the world. He, though one with all beings, is beyond and separate from material nature (Prakriti), from its products, from properties, from imperfections: he is beyond all investing substance: he is universal soul; all the interstices of the universe are filled up by him: he is one with all good qualities; and all created beings are endowed with but a small portion of his individuality. Assuming at will various forms, he bestows benefits on the whole world, which was his work. Glory, might, dominion, wisdom, energy, power, and other attributes, are collected in him. Supreme of the supreme, in whom no imperfections abide, lord over finite and infinite, god in individuals and universals, visible and invisible, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, almighty. The wisdom, perfect, pure, supreme, undefiled, and one only, by which he is conceived, contemplated, and known, that is wisdom; all else is ignorance."
CHAP. VI.

Means of attaining liberation. Anecdotes of Khándikya and Keśidhwaja. The former instructs the latter how to atone for permitting the death of a cow. Keśidhwaja offers him a requital, and he desires to be instructed in spiritual knowledge.

He, Purushottama, is also known by holy study and devout meditation; and either, as the cause of attaining him, is entitled Brahma. From study let a man proceed to meditation, and from meditation to study; by perfection in both supreme spirit becomes manifest. Study is one eye wherewith to behold it, and meditation is the other: he who is one with Brahma sees not with the eye of flesh.

MAITREYA.—Reverend teacher, I am desirous of being informed what is meant by the term meditation (Yoga), by understanding which I may behold the supreme being, the upholder of the universe.

PARÁŚARA.—I will repeat to you, Maitreya, the explanation formerly given by Keśidhwaja to the magnanimous Khándikya, also called Janaka.

MAITREYA.—Tell me first, Brahma, who Khándikya was, and who was Keśidhwaja; and how it happened that a conversation relating to the practice of Yoga occurred between them.

PARÁŚARA.—There was Janaka, named Dharmadhwaja, who had two sons, Amitadhwaja and Kritadhwaja; and the latter was a king ever intent upon existent supreme spirit: his son was the celebrated Keśidhwaja. The son of Amitadhwaja was Janaka, called Khándikya.

1 Both study of the Vedas (Swádhya) and abstraction (Yoga) are to be practised: when a man is weary of one, he may apply to the other. The Yoga, however, limits the practical part to silent prayer. भन्त च याज्ञवल्क्य च याज्ञवल्क्याः पुष्प बोधेऽ। ‘Weared of meditation, let him pray insubduibly: weary of prayer, let him repeat meditation.’ अनन्तार्थसौ अचान्तार्थसौ परसंग्राम मातमालसोऽवैः ‘By the union of prayer and meditation let him behold soul in himself.’

2 No such names occur amongst the Maithila kings of the Vishnu Puráṇa (see p. 390); but, as there noticed (note 6), the Bhágavata inserts them. Janaka is used as a title. Kritadhwaja, in some of the copies, is read Ritadhwaja.
Kháñdíkya was diligent in the way of works, and was renowned on earth for religious rites. Keśidhwaja, on the other hand, was endowed with spiritual knowledge. These two were engaged in hostilities, and Kháñdíkya was driven from his principality by Keśidhwaja. Expelled from his dominions, he wandered with a few followers, his priest and his counsellors, amidst woods and mountains, where, destitute of true wisdom, he performed many sacrifices, expecting thereby to obtain divine truth, and to escape from death by ignorance.

Once whilst the best of those who are skilled in devotion, Keśidhwaja, was engaged in devout exercises, a fierce tiger slew his milch cow in the lonely forest. When the Rájá heard that the cow had been killed, he asked the ministering priests what form of penance would expiate the crime. They replied that they did not know, and referred him to Kašeru. Kašeru, when the Rájá consulted him, told him that he knew not, but that Šunaka would be able to tell him. Accordingly the Rájá went to Šunaka; but he replied, “I am as unable, great king, to answer your question as Kašeru has been; and there is no one now upon earth who can give you the information except your enemy Kháñdíkya, whom you have conquered.”

Upon receiving this answer, Keśidwaja said, “I will go, then, and pay a visit to my foe: if he kill me, no matter, for then I shall obtain the reward that attends being killed in a holy cause: if, on the contrary, he tell me what penance to perform, then my sacrifice will be unimpaired in efficacy.” Accordingly he ascended his car, having clothed himself in the deer skin (of the religious student), and went to the forest where the wise Kháñdíkya resided. When Kháñdíkya beheld him approach, his eyes reddened with rage, and he took up his bow, and said to him, “You have armed yourself with the deer skin to accomplish my

---

3 The performance of rites as a means of salvation is called ignorance in the Vedas (see p. 642, n. 7). Works are recommended as introductory to the acquirement of knowledge: it is ignorance to consider them as finite.

4 Tasya-dhenum (सत्येधेनु). One copy has Homa-dhenu, ‘cow of sacrifice;’ another, Dharma-dhenu, ‘cow of righteousness.’ The commentator explains the terms as importing the same thing, a cow yielding milk for holy purposes, or for the butter which is poured in oblations upon the sacrificial fire.
destruction, imagining that in such an attire you will be safe from me; but, fool, the deer, upon whose backs this skin is seen, are slain by you and me with sharp arrows: so will I slay you; you shall not go free whilst I am living. You are an unprincipled felon, who have robbed me of my kingdom, and are deserving of death.” To this Kesídhwaja answered, “I have come hither, Khándikya, to ask you to solve my doubts, and not with any hostile intention: lay aside therefore both your arrow and your anger.” Thus spoken to, Khándikya retired a while with his counsellors and his priest, and consulted with them what course to pursue. They strongly urged him to slay Kesídhwaja, who was now in his power, and by whose death he would again become the monarch of the whole earth. Khándikya replied to them, “It is no doubt true that by such an act I should become the monarch of the whole earth: he, however, would thereby conquer the world to come; whilst the earth would be mine. Now if I do not kill him, I shall subdue the next world, and leave him this earth. It seems to me that this world is not of more value than the next; for the subjugation of the next world endures for ever; the conquest over this is but for a brief season. I will therefore not kill him, but tell him what he wishes to know.”

Returning then to Kesídhwaja, Khándikya desired him to propose his question, which he promised to answer; and Kesídhwaja related to him what had happened, the death of the cow, and demanded to know what penance he should perform. Khándikya, in reply, explained to him fully the expiation that was suited to the occasion; and Kesídhwaja then, with his permission, returned to the place of sacrifice, and regularly fulfilled every necessary act. Having completed the ceremony, with its supplementary rites, Kesídhwaja accomplished all his objects: but he then reflected thus: “The priests whom I invited to attend have all been duly honoured; all those who had any request to make have been gratified by compliance with their desires; all that is proper for this world has been effected by me: why then should my mind feel as if my duty had been unfulfilled?” So meditating, he remembered that he had not presented to Khándikya the gift that it is becoming to offer to a spiritual preceptor, and, mounting his chariot, he immediately set off to the thick forest where that sage abode. Khá́ndikya, upon his reappearance, assumed his weapons to kill him; but Keśìdhwaja exclaimed, "Forbear, venerable sage. I am not here to injure you, Khá́ndikya: dismiss your wrath, and know that I have come hither to offer you that remuneration which is due to you as my instructor. Through your lessons I have fully completed my sacrifice, and I am therefore desirous to give you a gift. Demand what it shall be."

Khá́ndikya having once more communed with his counsellors, told them the purpose of his rival's visit, and asked them what he should demand. His friends recommended him to require his whole kingdom back again, as kingdoms are obtained by prudent men without conflicting hosts. The reflecting king Khá́ndikya laughed, and replied to them, "Why should a person such as I be desirous of a temporary earthly kingdom? Of a truth you are able counsellors in the concerns of this life, but of those of the life to come you are assuredly ignorant." So speaking, he went back to Keśìdhwaja, and said to him, "Is it true that you wish to make me a gift, as to your preceptor?" "Indeed I do," answered Keśìdhwaja. "Then," rejoined Khá́ndikya, "as it is known that you are learned in the spiritual learning that teaches the doctrine of the soul, if you will communicate that knowledge to me, you will have discharged your debt to your instructor. Declare to me what acts are efficacious for the alleviation of human affliction."
CHAP. VII.

Kesidhwaja describes the nature of ignorance, and the benefits of the Yoga, or contemplative devotion. Of the novice and the adept in the performance of the Yoga. How it is performed. The first stage, proficiency in acts of restraint and moral duty: the second, particular mode of sitting: the third, Pranayama, modes of breathing: the fourth, Pratyahara, restraint of thought: the fifth, apprehension of spirit: the sixth, retention of the idea. Meditation on the individual and universal forms of Vihiiu. Acquisition of knowledge. Final liberation.

"But," said Kesidhwaja, "why have you not asked of me my kingdom, now free from all annoyance? what else except dominion is acceptable to the warrior race?" "I will tell you," replied Khandidya, "why I did not make such a demand, nor require that territory which is an object of ignorant ambition. It is the duty of the warrior to protect his subjects in peace, and to kill in fight the enemies of his sway. It is no fault that you should have taken my kingdom from one who was unable to defend it, to whom it was a bondage, and who was thus freed from the incumbence of ignorance. My desire of dominion originated in my being born to possess it: the ambition of others, which proceeds from human frailties, is not compatible with virtue. To solicit gifts is not the duty of a prince and warrior: and for these reasons I have not asked for your kingdom, nor made a demand which ignorance alone would have suggested. Those only who are destitute of knowledge, whose minds are engrossed by selfishness, who are intoxicated with the inebriating beverage of self-sufficiency, desire kingdoms; not such as I am."

When king Kesidhwaja heard these words, he was much pleased, and exclaimed, "It is well spoken!" Then addressing Khandidya affectionately, he said, "Listen to my words. Through desire of escaping death by the ignorance of works I exercise the regal power, celebrate various sacrifices, and enjoy pleasures subservient of purity. Fortunate is it for you that your mind has attached itself to the dominion of discrimination. Pride of your race! now listen to the real nature of ignorance. The (erroneous) notion that self consists in what is not self, and the opinion that property consists in what is not one's own, constitute the double seed of the tree of ignorance. The ill-judging embodied being, bewildered by the darkness of fascination, situated in a body composed of the five elements, loudly asserts, 'This is I:' but who would ascribe spiritual individuality to a body in which soul is distinct from the ether, air, fire, water, and earth (of which that body is composed)? What man of understanding assigns to disembodied spirit corporeal fruition, or lands, houses, and the like, that it should say, 'These are mine?' What wise man entertains the idea of property in sons or grandsons begotten of the body after the spirit has abandoned it? Man performs all acts for the purpose of bodily fruition, and the consequence of such acts is another body; so that their result is nothing but confinement to bodily existence. In the same manner as a mansion of clay is plastered with clay and water, so the body, which is of earth, is perpetuated by earth and water (or by eating and drinking). The body, consisting of the five elements, is nourished by substances equally composed of those elements: but since this is the case, what is there in this life that man should be proud of? Travelling the path of the world for many thousands of births, man attains only the weariness of bewilderment, and is smothered by the dust of imagination. When that dust is washed away by the bland water of real knowledge, then the weariness of bewilderment sustained by the wayfarer through repeated births is removed. When that weariness is relieved, the internal man is at peace, and he obtains that supreme felicity which is unequalled and undisturbed. This soul is (of its own nature) pure, and composed of happiness and wisdom. The properties of pain, ignorance, and impurity, are those of nature (Prakriti), ot of soul. There is no affinity between fire and water, but when the latter is placed over the former in a caldron it bubbles and boils, and

1 The text is somewhat obscure, but it is in some degree cleared up by the next illustration. No one would think of applying the property of self—the idea of possession or personality—to soul, separated from body; but the objection is equally applicable to soul in the body; for whilst there it is as distinct in its nature from the materials of body as if it was disembodied, and quite as incapable of individual personal fruition.
exhibits the properties of fire. In like manner, when soul is associated with Prakriti it is vitiated by egotism and the rest, and assumes the qualities of grosser nature, although essentially distinct from them, and incorruptible. Such is the seed of ignorance, as I have explained it to you. There is but one cure of worldly sorrows, the practice of devotion; no other is known."

"Then," said Kháḍikya, "do you, who are the chief of those versed in contemplative devotion, explain to me what that is; for in the race of the descendants of Nimi you are best acquainted with the sacred writings in which it is taught." "Hear," replied Keśidhwa, "the account of the nature of contemplative devotion, which I impart to you, and by perfection in which the sage attains resolution into Brahma, and never suffers birth again. The mind of man is the cause both of his bondage and his liberation: its addiction to the objects of sense is the means of his bondage; its separation from objects of sense is the means of his freedom. The sage who is capable of discriminative knowledge must therefore restrain his mind from all the objects of sense, and therewith meditate upon the supreme being, who is one with spirit, in order to attain liberation; for that supreme spirit attracts to itself him who mediates upon it, and who is of the same nature, as the loadstone attracts the iron by the virtue which is common to itself and to its products."

That is, in the race of princes of Mithilā.

The term Yoga (स्वत), which is that used in the text, in its literal acceptation signifies 'union,' 'junction,' from हन्त 'to join;' in a spiritual sense it denotes 'union of separated with universal soul;' and with some latitude of expression it comes to signify the means by which such union is effected. In the Bhagavad Gītā it is variously applied, but ordinarily denotes the performance of religious ceremonies as a duty, and not for interested purposes. Thus Krishṇa says to Arjuna, योगस्त कर्ममति यस्मि सात्तव धर्मविविः सम्पन्न योगस्त रमण रमणेऽति. "Engaging in Yoga, perform rites, Dhananjaya, being indifferent to success or failure: such indifference is called Yoga." II. v. 48. It is elsewhere defined, 'exemption from the contact of pain'; हयमचोलयम निविष्टोयं योगस्त विविः; VI. v. 23. The word has been accordingly rendered 'devotion' by Wilkins, and 'devotio' by Schlegel, in their translations of the Gītā. In this place, however, it is used in a less general sense, and signifies, as is subsequently explained, reunion with spirit through the exercises necessary to perfect abstraction as they are taught and practised by the followers of Patanjali.

This illustration is however only to a Contemplative devotion is the union with Brahma, effected by that condition of mind which has attained perfection through those exercises which complete the control of self: and he whose contemplative devotion is characterized by the property of such absolute perfection, is in truth a sage, expectant of final liberation from the world.

"The sage, or Yogi, when first applying himself to contemplative devotion is called the novice or practitioner (Yoga yuj); when he has attained spiritual union he is termed the adept, or he whose meditations are accomplished. Should the thoughts of the former be unvitiated by any obstructing imperfection, he will obtain freedom, after practising devotion through several lives. The latter speedily obtains liberation in that existence (in which he reaches perfection), all his acts being consumed by the fire of contemplative devotion. The sage who would bring his mind into a fit state for the performance of devout contemplative extent, explanatory of the nature of Yoga; for though the loadstone and iron unite, by virtue of a community of kind, yet the union that takes place is only that of contiguity, Samyoga (समयोग), not that of identification or unity, Tadaikyam (तद्विक्य). Some further explanation therefore is required.

5 The first stage is the Atma prayatna, the practice of moral and religious restraint, Yama, Niyama, &c. When the novice is perfect in these, then he is fit to attain the perfectibility of an adept, through the especial practices which treatises on the Yoga prescribe. When the mind has attained the state which can alone be attained through them, then the union with Brahma, which is the consequence, is called Yoga; ज्ञानमययस्वरूपामिष्टमाय ज्ञानंिति. The Atma prayatna is defined to be that which has Yama, &c. for its object, ज्ञानमयीर्षयम् च. The next phrase, हस्तापेभं, is explained हस्तिपनां तद्यथा, and "the union with Brahma, which is the consequence, is called Yoga; ज्ञानमययस्वरूपामिष्टमाय ज्ञानंिति." A text of Yajñavalkya is quoted to this effect: ज्ञानं योगायमर्चिष्ठं सथायायात् तु: संयोगो योग चुदाको ग्रीवाताप्राप्तामनो:।

6 Vinishpannasamādi is the expression of the text, which can scarcely be regarded as an appellative. The commentator terms the adept Brahmajñāni, 'He who knows Brahma.'

7 After three lives, according to the Vāyu Sanhitā, as quoted in the comment.
tion must be devoid of desire, and observe invariably continence, compassion, truth, honesty, and disinterestedness: he must fix his mind intently on the supreme Brahma, practising holy study, purification, contentment, penance, and self-control. These virtues, respectively termed the five acts of restraint (Yama), and five of obligation (Niyama), bestow excellent rewards when practised for the sake of reward, and eternal liberation when they are not prompted by desire (of transient benefits). Endowed with these merits, the sage self-restrained should sit in one of the modes termed Bhadrásana, &c., and engage in contemplation. Bringing his vital airs, called Práha, under subjection, by frequent repetition, is thence called Práňáyáma, which is as it were a seed with a seed. In this the breath of expiration and that of inspiration are alternately obstructed, constituting the act twofold; and the suppression of both modes of breathing produces a third. The exercise of the Yogi, whilst endeavou ring to bring before his thoughts the gross form of the eternal, is denominated Álambana. He is then to perform the Pratyáhára, which consists in restraining his organs of sense from susceptibility to outward impressions, and directing them entirely to mental perceptions. By these means the entire subjugation of the unsteady senses is effected; and if they are not controlled, the sage will not accomplish his devotions. When by the Práňáyáma the vital airs

---

8 There are various postures in which the Yogi is directed to sit when he engages in meditation. In the Bhadrásana he is directed to cross his legs underneath him, and to lay hold of his feet on each side with his hands.

9 ध्रीणो च चिन्तन रूपम् : It is itself figuratively the seed of the fruit, which is meditation; but it is to be accompanied with what is also technically called Bija, or seed, inaudible repetition of certain prayers, and meditation on the visible form of the deity, termed likewise Álambana, and presently mentioned.

10 Práňáyáma is performed by three modifications of breathing: the first act is expiration, which is performed through the right nostril, whilst the left is closed with the fingers of the right hand; this is called Rechaka: the thumb is then placed upon the right nostril, and the fingers raised from the left, through which breath is inhaled; this is called Púraka: in the third act both nostrils are closed, and breathing suspended; this is Kumbhaka: and a succession of these operations is the practice of Práňáyáma.

11 Álambana is the silent repetition of prayer.
are restrained, and the senses are subjugated by the Pratyáhára, then the sage will be able to keep his mind steady in its perfect asylum.”

Kháññikya then said to Keśidhwaja, “Illustrious sage, inform me what is that perfect asylum of the mind, resting on which it destroys all the products of (human) infirmity.” To this, Keśidhwaja replied, “The asylum of mind is spirit (Brahma), which of its own nature is twofold, as being with or without form; and each of these is supreme and secondary. Apprehension of spirit, again, is threefold. I will explain the different kinds to you: they are, that which is called Brahma, that which is named from works, and that which comprehends both. That mental apprehension which consists of Brahma is one; that which is formed of works is another; and that which comprehends both is the third: so that mental apprehension (of the object or asylum of the thoughts) is threefold. Sanandana and other (perfect sages) were endowed with apprehension of the nature of Brahma. The gods and others, whether animate or inanimate, are possessed of that which regards acts. The apprehension that comprehends both works and spirit exists in Hirañyagarbha and others, who are possessed of contemplative knowledge of their own nature, and who also exercise certain active functions, as creation and the rest. Until all acts, which are the causes of notions of individuality, are discontinued, spirit is one thing, and the universe is another, to those who contemplate objects as distinct and various; but that is called true knowledge, or knowledge of Brahma, which recognises no distinctions, which contemplates only simple existence, which is

\[12\] वातीयतः अयुक्तं वन्यं धिष्यं व सत्सन्मानं।

The Brahma that is without form (Amúrta) may be Para or Apara. Supreme formless spirit is without attributes of any kind. Secondary formless spirit is invested with the attributes of power, glory, truth, perfection. Spirit embodied, or with form in his highest state, is, according to our text, Vishúu and his manifestations. Spirit in an inferior or secondary series of bodily forms is Brahmá and all other living beings.

\[13\] The term is Bhávaná, defined to be, ‘function to be engendered by knowledge;’ भावना विद्यामानं शास्त्रोऽभेदाय भावना यथा भावना. It is also termed Bháva-bhávaná, ‘apprehension of the being, the existence, or substantiality, of the object; the thing contemplated.’ अभिधेयं भाव भावति भावभावितम्. Here it implies in particular the formation of a fixed idea by the Yogi of the object of his contemplations.
KINDS OF ENERGIES.

undeniable by words, and is to be discovered solely in one's own spirit. That is the supreme, unborn, imperishable form of Vishnú, who is without (sensible) form, and is characterised as a condition of the supreme soul, which is variously modified from the condition of universal form. But this condition cannot be contemplated by sages in their (early) devotions, and they must therefore direct their minds to the gross form of Hari, which is of universal perceptibility. They must meditate upon him as Hirañyagarbha, as the glorious Vásava, as Prajápati, as the winds, the Vasus, the Rudras, the suns, stars, planets, Gandharbas, Yakshas, Daityas, all the gods and their progenitors, men, animals, mountains, oceans, rivers, trees, all beings, and all sources of beings, all modifications whatever of nature and its products, whether sentient or unconscious, one-footed, two-footed, or many-footed; all these are the sensible form of Hari, to be apprehended by the three kinds of apprehension. All this universal world, this world of moving and stationary beings, is pervaded by the energy of Vishnú, who is of the nature of the supreme Brahma. This energy is either supreme, or, when it is that of conscious embodied spirit, it is secondary. Ignorance, or that which is denominated from works, is a third energy; by which the omnipresent energy of embodied spirit is ever excited, and whence it suffers all the pains of repeated worldly existence. Obscured by that energy (of ignorance or illusion), the energy that is denominated from embodied spirit is characterised by different degrees of perfection in all created beings. In things without life it exists in a very small degree: it is more in things that have life, but are (without motion): in insects it is still more abundant, and still more in birds; it is more in wild animals, and in domestic animals the faculty is still greater: men have more of this (spiritual) faculty than animals, and thence arises their authority over 14 The term used throughout is Sakti (प्रकृति), 'power,' 'ability,' 'energy.' By the first kind, or Parás, is understood knowledge able to appreciate abstract truth, or the nature of universal soul; by the second, ability to understand the nature of embodied soul; and by the third, inability to discern one's own nature, and reliance on moral or ceremonial merit. These different kinds are called energies, because they are the energies or faculties of the supreme spirit, or, according to the Vaishnavas, of Vishnú, accompanying soul in all its various conditions of existence.

them: the faculty exists in an ascending degree in Nágas, Gandharbas, Yakshas, gods, Śakra, Prajápati, and Hiraṇyagarbha: and is above all predominant in that male (Vishńu) of whom all these various creatures are but the diversified forms, penetrated universally by his energy, as all-pervading as the ether.

"The second\textsuperscript{15} state of him who is called Vishńu, and which is to be meditated upon by the (advanced) sage, is that imperceptible, shapeless form of Brahma, which is called by the wise, 'That which is\textsuperscript{16},' and in which all the before described energies reside. Thence proceeds the form of the universal form, the other great form of Hari, which is the origin of those manifested forms (or incarnations) that are endowed with every kind of energy, and which, whether the forms of gods, animals, or men, are assumed by him (Hari) in his sport. This active interposition of the undefinable god, all-comprehending and irresistible, is for the purpose of benefiting the world, and is not the necessary consequence of works. This form of the universal form is to be meditated upon by the sage for the object of purification, as it destroys all sin. In the same manner as fire, blazing in the wind, burns dry grass, so Vishńu, seated in the heart, consumes the sins of the sage; and therefore let him resolutely effect the fixation of his mind upon that receptacle of all the three energies (Vishńu), for that is the operation of the mind which is called perfect Dhāranā\textsuperscript{17}: and thus the perfect asylum of individual as well as universal spirit, that which is beyond the three modes of apprehension, is attained, for the eternal emancipation of the sage. The minds of other beings, which are not fixed upon that asylum, are altogether impure, and are all the gods and the rest, who spring from acts. The retention or apprehension by the mind of that visible form of Vishńu, without regard to subsidiary forms, is thence called Dhāranā; and I will describe to you the perceptible form of Hari, which no mental retention

\textsuperscript{15} The first, which has been intended to be described in the foregoing passages, was the universal, visible form of Vishńu; the second is his formless or imperceptible condition.

\textsuperscript{16} Sat (सत्), 'what is being.'

\textsuperscript{17} Retention, or holding of the image or idea formed in the mind by contemplation: from Dhri (ध्र), 'to hold,' literally or figuratively.
will manifest, except in a mind that is fit to become the receptacle of the idea. The meditating sage must think (he beholds internally the figure) of Vishnú, as having a pleased and lovely countenance, with eyes like the leaf of the lotus, smooth cheeks, and a broad and brilliant forehead; ears of equal size, the lobes of which are decorated with splendid pendants; a painted neck, and a broad breast, on which shines the Srivatsa mark; a belly falling in graceful folds, with a deep-seated navel; eight long arms, or else four; and firm and well-knit thighs and legs, with well-formed feet and toes. Let him, with well-governed thoughts, contemplate, as long as he can persevere in unremitting attention, Hari as clad in a yellow robe, wearing a rich diadem on his head, and brilliant armlets and bracelets on his arms, and bearing in his hands the bow, the shell, the mace, the sword, the discus, the rosary, the lotus, and the arrow. When this image never departs from his mind, whether he be going or standing, or be engaged in any other voluntary act, then he may believe his retention to be perfect. The sage may then meditate upon the form of Vishnú without his arms, as the shell, mace, discus, and bow; and as placid, and bearing only his rosary. When the idea of this image is firmly retained, then he may meditate on Vishnú without his diadem, bracelets, or other ornaments. He may next contemplate him as having but one single limb, and may then fix his whole thoughts upon the body to which the limbs belong. This process of forming a lively image in the mind, exclusive of all other objects, constitutes Dhyāna, or meditation, which is perfected by six stages: and when an accurate knowledge of self, free from all distinction, is attained by this mental meditation, that is termed Samādhi.

18 The explanation of Dāraṇā given in the text is rendered unnecessarily perplexed by the double doctrine here taught, and the attempt to combine the abstractions of Yoga theism with the sectarian worship of Vishnú.

19 The two last implements are from the comment; the text specifies only six.

20 They are, 1. Yama &c., acts of restraint and obligation; 2. Asana, sitting in particular postures; 3. Prāṇāyāma, modes of breathing; 4. Pratyāhāra, exclusion of all external ideas; 5. Bhāvanā, apprehension of internal ideas; 6. Dāraṇā, fixation or retention of those ideas.

21 The result of the Dhyāna or Samādhi is the absence of all idea of individuality, when the meditator, the meditation, and "(When the Yogi has accomplished this stage, he acquires) discriminative knowledge, which is the means of enabling living soul, when all the three kinds of apprehension are destroyed, to attain the attainable supreme Brahma. Embodied spirit is the user of the instrument, which instrument is true knowledge; and by it that (identification) of the former (with Brahma) is attained. Liberation, which is the object to be effected, being accomplished, discriminative knowledge ceases. When endowed with the apprehension of the nature of the object of inquiry, then, there is no difference between it (individual and) supreme spirit: difference is the consequence of the absence of (true) knowledge. When that ignorance which is the cause of the difference between individual and universal spirit is destroyed finally and for ever, who shall ever make that distinction between them which does not exist? Thus have I, Khaṇḍikya, in reply to your question, explained to you what is meant by contemplative devotion, both fully and summarily. What else do you wish to hear?"

Khaṇḍikya replied to Keśidhwaja, and said, "The explanation which you have given me of the real nature of contemplative devotion has fulfilled all my wishes, and removed all impurity from my mind. The expression 'mine,' which I have been accustomed to use, is untruth, and the thing or object meditated upon, are all considered to be but one. According to the text of Patanjali: 'Restraint of the body, retention of the mind, and meditation, which thence is exclusively confined to one object, is Dhyāna: the idea of identification with the object of such meditation, so as if devoid of individual nature, is Samādhi.'

The expressions of the text are somewhat obscure, nor does the commentator make them much more intelligible, until he cuts the matter short by stating the meaning to be, that 'discriminative knowledge enables the living spirit to attain Brahma.'

The text is very elliptical and obscure. Having stated that embodied spirit (Kṣetrajna) is the Karuṇi, the possessor or user of the Karana, which is knowledge, it adds, "literally, 'by that, of that, that,' i.e. Tat, 'that which is'; and Brahma, or supreme spirit, is the attainment of that spirit which abides in body by that instrument, or discriminative knowledge, of which it has become possessed through perfect meditation.

The text is very elliptical and obscure. Having stated that embodied spirit (Kṣetrajna) is the Karuṇi, the possessor or user of the Karana, which is knowledge, it adds, "literally, 'by that, of that, that,' i.e. Tat, 'that which is'; and Brahma, or supreme spirit, is the attainment of that spirit which abides in body by that instrument, or discriminative knowledge, of which it has become possessed through perfect meditation."
cannot be otherwise declared by those who know what is to be known. The words 'I' and 'mine' constitute ignorance; but practice is influenced by ignorance. Supreme truth cannot be defined, for it is not to be explained by words. Depart therefore, Keśidhwaja; you have done all that is necessary for my real happiness, in teaching me contemplative devotion, the inexhaustible bestower of liberation from existence."

Accordingly king Keśidhwaja, after receiving suitable homage from Khánódikya, returned to his city. Khánódikya, having nominated his son Rájá, retired to the woods to accomplish his devotions, his whole mind being intent upon Govinda: there his entire thoughts being engrossed upon one only object, and being purified by practices of restraint, self-control, and the rest, he obtained absorption into the pure and perfect spirit which is termed Vishńu. Keśidhwaja also, in order to attain liberation, became averse from his own perishable works, and lived amidst objects of sense (without regarding them), and instituted religious rites without expecting therefrom any advantages to himself. Thus by pure and auspicious fruition, being cleansed from all sin, he also obtained that perfection which assuages all affliction for ever.

24 The commentator, in order to explain how Khánódikya should have given what he did not possess, states that it is to be understood that Keśidhwaja relinquished to him the kingdom; or the term Rájá may denote merely, master of, or acquainted with, mystic prayers, or Mantras: यह दए राजां नामाल्पितं युक्तं।
CHAP. VIII.

I HAVE now explained to you, Maitreya, the third kind of worldly dissolution, or that which is absolute and final, which is, liberation and resolution into eternal spirit. I have related to you primary and secondary creation, the families of the patriarchs, the periods of the Manwantaras, and the genealogical histories (of the kings). I have repeated to you, in short, who were desirous of hearing it, the imperishable Vaishāvā Purāṇa, which is destructive of all sins, the most excellent of all holy writings, and the means of attaining the great end of man. If there is any thing else you wish to hear, propose your question, and I will answer it.

Maitreya.—Holy teacher, you have indeed related to me all that I wished to know, and I have listened to it with pious attention. I have nothing further to inquire. The doubts inseparable from the mind of man have all been resolved by you, and through your instructions I am acquainted with the origin, duration, and end of all things; with Vishū in his collective fourfold form; his three energies; and with the three modes of apprehending the object of contemplation. Of all this have I acquired a knowledge through your favour, and nothing else is worthy to be known, when it is once understood that Vishū and this world are not mutually distinct. Great Muni. I have obtained through your kindness all I desired, the dissipation of my doubts, since you have instructed me

1 The term is Brahmānī laya (ब्रह्माणी लय), which means, 'a melting away,' 'a dissolution' or 'fusion,' from the root Li (ली), 'to liquefy,' 'to melt,' 'to dissolve.'

2 Or with Vishū in the four modifications described in the first section, spirit,

3 Or Sakti, noticed in the last chapter, p. 655.

4 Or Bhaṇās, also described in the preceding section, p. 654.
in the duties of the several tribes, and in other obligations; the nature of active life, and discontinuance of action; and the derivation of all that exists from works. There is nothing else, venerable Brahman, that I have to inquire of you; and forgive me if your answers to my questions have imposed upon you any fatigue. Pardon me the trouble that I have given you, through that amiable quality of the virtuous which makes no distinction between a disciple and a child.

Parásara.—I have related to you this Puráña, which is equal to the Vedas in sanctity, and by hearing which all faults and sins whatever are expiated. In this have been described to you the primary and secondary creation, the families of the patriarchs, the Manwantaras, the regal dynasties; the gods, Daityas, Gandharbas, serpents, Rákshasas, Yakshas, Vidyádhara, Siddhas, and heavenly nymphs; Munis endowed with spiritual wisdom, and practisers of devotion; the distinctions of the four castes, and the actions of the most eminent amongst men; holy places on the earth, holy rivers and oceans, sacred mountains, and legends of the truly wise; the duties of the different tribes, and the observances enjoined by the Vedas. By hearing this, all sins are at once obliterated. In this also the glorious Hari has been revealed, the cause of the creation, preservation, and destruction of the world; the soul of all things, and himself all things: by the repetition of whose name man is undoubtedly liberated from all sins, which fly like wolves that are frightened by a lion. The repetition of his name with devout faith is the best remover of all sins, destroying them as fire purifies the metal from the dross. The stain of the Kali age, which ensures to men sharp punishments in hell, is at once effaced by a single invocation of Hari. He who is all that is, the whole egg of Brahmá, with Hirañyagarbha, Indra, Rudra, the Ádityas, the Aswins, the winds, the Kinnaras, the Vasus, the Sádhyas, Viswadevas, the celestial gods, the Yakshas, serpents, Rákshasas, the Siddhas, Daityas, Gandharbas, Dánavas, nymphs, the stars, asterisms, planets, the seven Rishis, the regents and superintendents of the quarters, men, Brahmans and the rest, animals tame and wild, insects, birds, ghosts and goblins, trees, mountains, woods, rivers, oceans, the subterrene legions, the divisions of the earth, and all perceptible objects—he who is all things, who knoweth all things, who is the form of all things, being without form himself, and of whom whatever is, from mount Meru to an atom, all consists—he, the glorious Vishńu, the destroyer of all sin—is described in this Puráña. By hearing this Puráña an equal recompense is obtained to that which is derived from the performance of an Aśwamedha sacrifice, or from fasting at the holy places Prayága, Pushkara, Kurukshtera, or Arbuda. Hearing this Puráña but once is as efficacious as the offering of oblations in a perpetual fire for a year. The man who with well-governed passions bathes at Mathurá on the twelfth day of the month Jyeshtha, and beholds (the image of) Hari, obtains a great recompense; so does he who with mind fixed upon Keśava attentively recites this Puráña. The man who bathes in the waters of the Yamuná on the twelfth lunation of the light fortnight of the month in which the moon is in the mansion Jyeshtá, and who fasts and worships Achyuta in the city of Mathurá, receives the reward of an uninterrupted Aśwamedha. Beholding the degree of prosperity enjoyed by others of eminence, through the merits of their descendants, a man’s paternal ancestors, his parents and their parents, exclaim, “Whosoever of our descendants, having bathed in the Yamuná and fasted, will worship Govinda in Mathurá, in the light fortnight of Jyeshtá, will secure for us eminent exaltation; for we shall be elevated by the merits of our posterity!” A man of good extraction will present obsequial cakes to his fortunate ancestors in the Yamuná, having worshipped Janárddana in the light fortnight of Jyeshtá. But the same degree of merit that a man reaps from adoring Janárddana at that season with a devoted heart, and from bathing in the Yamuná, and effecting the liberation of his progenitors by offering to them on such an occasion obsequial cakes, he derives also from hearing with equal devotion a section of this Puráña. This Puráña is the best of all preservatives for those who are afraid of worldly exist-

---

5 This month is also called Jyeshtha-múla, which the commentator explains to mean, the month, of which the root or cause (Múla) of being so called is the moon’s being full in the constellation Jyeshtá: but it may be so termed, perhaps, from the lunar asterism Múla, which is next to Jyeshtá, falling also within the moon’s passage through the same month.
ence, a certain alleviation of the sufferings of men, and remover of all imperfections.

This Purāṇa, originally composed by the Rishi (Nārāyaṇa), was communicated by Brahmā to Ribhu; he related it to Priyavrata, by whom it was imparted to Bhāguri. Bhāguri recited it to Tamasitra, and he to Dadīcha, who gave it to Śāraswata. From the last Bhrigu received it, who imparted it to Purukutas, and he taught it to Narmadā. The goddess delivered it to Dhirarāṣṭra the Nāga king, and to Purāṇa of the same race, by whom it was repeated to their monarch Vāsuki. Vāsuki communicated it to Vatsa, and he to Aṣvatara, from whom it successively proceeded to Kambala and Elapatra. When the Muni Vedaśīrās descended to Pātāla, he there received the whole Purāṇa from these Nāgas, and communicated it to Pramati. Pramati consigned it to the wise Jātukarṇa, and he taught it to many other holy persons. Through the blessing of Vāśishtha it came to my knowledge, and I have now, Maitreyya, faithfully imparted it to you. You will teach it, at the end of the Kali age, to Šamīka. Whoever hears this great mystery, which removes the contamination of the Kali, shall be freed from all his sins. He who hears this every day acquires himself of his daily obligations to ancestors, gods, and men. The great and rarely attainable merit that a man acquires by the gift of a brown cow, he derives from hearing ten chapters of this Purāṇa. He who hears the entire Purāṇa, contemplating in his mind Achyuta, who is all things, and of whom all things are made; who is the stay of the whole world, the receptacle of spirit; who is knowledge, and that which is to be known; who is without beginning or end, and the benefactor of the gods—obtains assuredly the reward that attends the uninterrupted celebration of the Aśwamedha rite. He who reads and retains with faith this Purāṇa, 6 This name is also read Tambaśitra.

---

One copy has Tava-mitrāya, 'to thy friend,' as if it was an epithet of Dadhīcha; but the construction of the verse requires a proper name. 'Bhāguri gave it to Tambaśitra, and he to Dadhīchi.' भागुपरव्याचरसिंह विक्रम मृदुलाभव व मोक्षानां।
7 A different series of narrators has been specified in the first book, p. 9.
8 This seems to be an injudicious interpolation; it is not in all the copies.
in the beginning, middle, and end of which is described the glorious Achyuta, the lord of the universe in every stage, the master of all that is stationary or moveable, composed of spiritual knowledge, acquires such purity as exists not in any world, the eternal state of perfection, which is Hari. The man who fixes his mind on Vishnu goes not to hell: he who meditates upon him regards heavenly enjoyment only as an impediment: and he whose mind and soul are penetrated by him thinks little of the world of Brahma; for when present in the minds of those whose intellects are free from soil, he confers upon them eternal freedom. What marvel therefore is it that the sins of one who repeats the name of Achyuta should be wiped away? Should not that Hari be heard of, whom those devoted to acts worship with sacrifices continually as the god of sacrifice; whom those devoted to meditation contemplate as primary and secondary, composed of spirit; by obtaining whom man is not born, nor nourished, nor subjected to death; who is all that is, and that is not (or both cause and effect); who, as the progenitors, receives the libations made to them; who, as the gods, accepts the offerings addressed to them; the glorious being who is without beginning or end; whose name is both Swaha and Swadha; who is the abode of all spiritual power; in whom the limits of finite things cannot be measured; and who, when he enters the ear, destroys all sin?

I adore him, that first of gods, Purushottama, who is without end and without beginning, without growth, without decay, without death; who is substance that knows not change. I adore that ever inexhaustible spirit, who assumed sensible qualities; who, though one, became many; who, though pure, became as if impure, by appearing in many and various shapes; who is endowed with divine wisdom, and is the author of the preservation of all creatures. I adore him, who is the one conjoined essence and object of both meditative wisdom and active virtue;

9 The words or prayers employed in presenting oblations with fire.

10 The text has, वलिमयत्र भावविष्क को मानसं निर्विविष्क गणयित्वं मानसं मानसं मानसं म्. Manna commonly means 'pride,' but here it seems most approwho is watchful in providing for human enjoyments; who is one with the three qualities; who, without undergoing change, is the cause of the evolution of the world; who exists of his own essence, ever exempt from decay. I constantly adore him, who is entitled heaven, air, fire, water, earth, and ether; who is the bestower of all the objects which give gratification to the senses; who benefits mankind with the instruments of fruition; who is perceptible, who is subtile, who is imperceptible. May that unborn, eternal Hari, whose form is manifold, and whose essence is composed of both nature and spirit, bestow upon all mankind that blessed state which knows neither birth nor decay!
INDEX

The Roman numerals refer to the Preface, the Arabic figures to the Work.
Abbreviations.—s. for son, d. for daughter, w. for wife, k. for king.

ABHAYA, s. of Dharma, p. 55, n. 13.
Abbhit, a Yādava chief, 436.
Abhimag, an Agni, 83.
Abhimanyu, s. of Chakrashva, 98. s. of Arjuna, 459, n. 5. 460.
Abhineśa, 'dread of suffering,' 34, n. 2.
Abhiras, a people, 189, 195, 481. a race of kings, 474, 475, n. 64.
Abhikashas, a people, 191.
Abhumajasas, a class of deities, 262.
Abhyuddhâvā, a prince, 386.
Abiria, country of the Abhiras, 105, n. 154.
Achāras, observances of caste and order, 291. of a householder, 300.
Acyutya, 'the imperishable,' a name of Vishāu, 8, n. 5.
Abhuta, Indra of the ninth Manvantara, 168.
Adi, supreme spirit,' 93, n. 5.
Achirâvâ, a prince, 446.
Adhivāya (Adhirāya), a country, 188.
Adhośiras, a hell, 207. sins punished in, 208.
Adhvâya, a river, 185.
Adhvaryu, reader of prayers, 276.
Adi, the Brahma Purāṇa, xvi. a minor Purāṇa, 11.
Adina, a prince, 412.
Aditi, d. of Daksha, w. of Kaśyapa, 122, 348. receives the earrings produced at the churning of the ocean, 78, n. 8. receives them from Śrīkṣaṇa, and praises him, 534.
Aditya, 'the sun,' gives the Śyamantaka gem to Sūratāj, 425.
Adityas, twelve, the sons of Aditi: their names, 122. present in the sun's car in each month, 234, n. 2.
Adrāyanti, w. of Śakti, mother of Parāśara, 4, n. 12.
Adhyas, a class of deities, 263.
Affliction, three kinds of, 638. how to be overcome, 641.
Agada, a branch of medicine, 407, n. 11.
Agastya, s. of Pulastya, 83, n. 5. an asterism, 226.
Agni, a Purāṇa, 284.
Agni, deity of fire, s. of Angiras, 83. k. of the Purāṇa, 153, n. 1. a star, 241.
Agni Purāṇas, one of the Tāmāsa class, xii. description of, xxi. named, 284.
Agnibhū, son of Prīyavrata and Kāmśī, 162.
adopts a religious life, ibid.
Agnihrtra, s. of Prīyavrata and Kāmśī, 162. k. of Jambu-dvīpa, ibid.
Agnihotra, 'burnt offerings,' 275, n. 1.
Agnimāthara, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277.
Agnimitra, a Suna prince, 471.
Agnishouma, s. of Chakrashva, 98. kind of sacrifice produced from Brahmā, 42.
Agnishwātta, a class of Purāṇa, 84, n. 10. 239, n. 3.
Agnivṛchas, a teacher of the Purāṇa, 283.
Agnīvarṇa, a prince, 384, n. 15. 387.
Agrahāya, a month, 225, n. 19.
Ahayā, d. of Bahwaśa, w. of Gautama, 454.
Ahamāyati, s. of Śrīkṣaṇa, 447.
Ahamā, 'egotism,' product of Mahat, 15. meaning of the term, ibid. n. 2. threefold condition, 16, n. 24. invested by Intellec: produces Aksā or 'ether,' 16.
Ahar, 'day,' a form of Brahmā, 40.
Akbheta, a city, 187, n. 20. 454, n. 49.
Akhunā, a prince, 386.
Akhunā, a prince, 402.
Ahuvbhadra, a Rudra, 121.
Ahukas, s. of Punvarasu, a Yādava chief, 436.
Ahukas, d. of Punvarasu, 436.
Air or wind, the element, 16. deity of; presides over the skin, 17, n. 28.
Airāvata, elephant produced from the ocean, taken by Indra, 78, n. 8. k. of elephants, 153.
Airāvata, a serpent, 149, n. 16. k. of serpents, 153.
Airāvata, north portion of the planetary sphere, 236, n. 21.
Airāvata, a division of the lunar mansions, 236, n. 21.
INDEX.

Aja, a Rudra, 121, n. 17. a prince, 383.
Ajagava, the bow of Mahśe, 101.
Ajākṣapād, a Rudra, 121.
Ajaka, a prince, 399.
Ajānī, s. of Hastin, 452.
Ajātashatru, s. of Vidimśā, 406.
Ajavibhi, a division of the lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Ajina, s. of Harihara, 106.
Ajita, a form of Viśvā, 464.
Ajitas, a class of deities, 123, n. 20.
Ajyapās, a class of Pitr, 84, n. 10. 321, n. 1.
Aitra or 'ether;' produced from the rudiment of sound; produces that of touch, 16. and n. 25.
Akhyanak, the Purāṇas, 150, n. 10.
Akrūravās, a teacher of Purāṇas, 283.
Akrodhāna, a prince, 457.
Akrūra, s. of Swapāhalka, 435. receives the Syama, a jewel, 439. entrusts it with it by Krishna, 434. sent by Kansa to Vindivāna, 536. praises Viśvā, 447. takes Krishna and Rāma to Mathura, 548.
Ākūti, daughter of Swāyambhūva Manu, 53. married to Ruchi; their children, 54.
Ākūtī, w. of Chakshush, 99, n. 1.
Alakananda, a river, 170. born by Śiva, 239.
Alambana, 'silent prayer,' 653.
Alarka, s. of Pratārādana, 408.
Alandaya, a people, 193.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
Anā, a ray of the sun, 237.
INDEX.

Antrasišā, a river, 184.

Anu, s. of Yayāti, 413. k. of the north, 415. his descendants, 444.

Asa, two Paramänas, 3, n. 3.

Anupraha, a secondary creation, 37. n. 11.

Anuha, s. of Vībhṛṣa, 452.

Anuḥśāna, s. of Hirāyāskāśīpū, 124.

Anumati, d. of Angirā, 53. first day of moon's wane, 225.

Anupavitās, a people, 189.

Anurṣāha, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.

Anuratha, a prince, 423.

Anusha, a river, 183.

Anuśakti, metre from Brahman, 43.

Anukāka, 'works,' or 'supplementary rites,' 159, n. 10.

Anuvatasara, fourth cyclic year, 224.

Anuvindas, s. of Jayasena, 437.

Apa, 'water, the element; produced from the rudiment of taste, and produces that of smell, 16, and n. 25. 'waters' called Nārā, 28, n. 2.

Apa, a Vasa, 120.

Aparachi, d. of Paunrasana, 82, n. 2.

Aparajita, a Rudra, 121.

Aparakāsā, a people, 187.

Aparakuntas, a people, 187.

Aparinasim, a name of Purusā or 'spirit,' 13, n. 10.

Aparantās, a people, 189.

Aparavallabhas, a people, 193.

Aparitas, a people, 189, n. 60.

Aparasitais, s. of Uttānasapāda, 86, n. 1.

Apatas, a name of Vaśisyātha, 52, n. 5. 417, n. 11.

Apravāsā, a people, 188.

Aposūrtis, s. of Atri, 83, n. 4.

Vārānaspatyas, ib. n. 7.

Aparātitha, s. of Kantinsā, 449.

Apratīśāna, a hell, 407.

Apatrāvasās, 'vīma,' born from Brahman, 42.

Apatra from the ocean, 76. daughters of Kaśyapa and Muni, 150. children of Vych;
two classes and fourteen ganas of, 150, n. 21.

cursed by Ashtāvakra, 618.

Aptṛyamāra, a people, Brahman, 42.

Ara, a sun, 632, n. 6.

Aradat, a prince, 443.

Arātra, a prince, 443, n. 1. a people, ib.

Arbudas (Abu), a mountain, 180, n. 3.

Arbudas, a people, 177, and n. 6.

Arich, w. of Kriśāwa, 123, n. 26.

Arirdhatu, a Rudra, 121, n. 17.

Ardrā, a prince, 561.

Ardrā, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.

Ardrakā, a prince, 471.

Ardh, k. of the south, converted by Rishabha,
164, n. 7.

Ardhata, or Jainas, their doctrines, 339.

Arimerdrug, s. of Swaghalka, 435.

Arīpu, s. of Yadu, 416, n. 2.

Ariha, s. of Vaivasvata, 348, n. 4. a demon killed by Kaśyapa, 536.

Ariha, d. of Daksha, w. of Kaśyapa, 122.

Ariha, a prince, 473.

Ariha, a Prajapati, 50, n. 2. married to four daughters of Daksha, 119. a name of Kaśyapa, 123, n. 23. a prince, 390.

Arihva, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278, n. 12.

Arone, s. of Kritavirya, 417.

Arihva, s. of Pāśu, 437. 450. takes Kaśyapa's family from Dwārakā, 613. plundered by shepherds, 615. conveyed by Vṛṣa, 616.

Arihva-tree, trees, overturned by Kaśyapa, 509.

Arshabba, a division of the lunar mansions, 226,

n. 21.

Atha, s. of Dharmā, 55, n. 13.

Atha, sāstra, 'science of government,' 284.

Athaka, s. of Kaśyapa and Vinaśa, 149.

Arundhati, d. of Kardana, w. of Vaśisyātha, 55,

n. 12. d. of Daksha, w. of Dharmā, 119.

Aruni, teacher of the Yajur-veda, 279, n. 1.

Arvinda, a lake, 169.

Arvākotātas, creation of mankind, 36, n. 7.

Arvarīvat, s. of Pulaha, 83. a Rishi, 261.

Arvavasu, a solar ray, 236, n. 3.

Āryaman, an Adivya, 123.

Assāmanjas, s. of Sagara, 377.

Āsana, mode of sitting, 653.

Asanga, a prince, 435.

Ashātha, a month, 225, n. 19.

Ashātha, a constellation: see Purusātha and Utarātha, 226, n. 21.

Ashavakra cures the Apsarasas, 617.

Aṣi, a rivulet, 184.

Asikni, d. of Vīra, w. of Daksha, 117. a river, 183.

Aṣima-kriṣṇā, a prince, 461.

Aṣiprāvāsa, a hell, 407. sins punished in, 209.

Aṣleṣā, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.

Aṣmaka, s. of Saudara, 382.

Aṣṭīd, 'selfishness,' 34, n. 2.

Aṣopa, k. of Meghadāta, patron of Buddhism, 469, n. 23.

Aṣṭakavardhanaddana, s. of Vinduśā, 469.

Aṣrama or 'orders,' 594.

Aṣratta or Aṣrutavāsa, s. of Duttināt, 82, n. 1.

Aṣṭi, w. of Kana, 563.

Aṣṭas, proceeded from Brahman, 40.

Aṣṭāvas (Aṣmaka), a people, 188.

Aṣṭāvāsana, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278, n. 13.

Aṣṭavānumedha, sacrifice of a horse, 375, n. 1. celebrated by Sagara, 378.

Aṣṭavānumedhadasa, a prince, 461.

Aṣṭavāna, s. of Aṣrutava, 368, n. 2.

Aṣṭiva, a month, 225, n. 19.

8 I
INDEX.

Arvina, a lunar asterism, 226, n. 21.
Arwina, sons of the sun, 266.
Atala, a division of Pâtaâla, 204.
Âravya, teacher of the white Yajush, 281, n. 5.
Atharva-veda (personified), s. of Anûrâ, 123, n. 25.
Antimâra, a prince, 447, n. 9.
Âtrikâra sacrifice, from Brahmas, 42.
Âtrikâra, s. of Chalabhuaha, 98.
Âtishâ, s. of Kuâsa, 386.
Âtrisâkârâs, a people, 180.
Âtms, name of Vishhû, s. 2, n. 2.
Âtri, a Prajapati, 49. married Anasuyâ, 54. father of Soma, 592.
Âtreyas, a people, 196.
Âudras, a people, 193.
Âurva, a sage, teaches Sagara, 290. his birth, ib. n. 1 and 373.
Âuttama (Âuittami), third Manu, 261. his sons, ib.
Âvandi, a river, 185, n. 80.
Âvanits, a people, 187.
Âvantyas, a branch of the Hasmaya tribe, 418, n. 20.
Âvarâsa, investment of elements by rudiments successively, 16, n. 25.
Âvarttana, an island, 175, n. 3.
Âvasthânas, divisions of the sun's course, 226, n. 21.
Âvatârâs, alluded to in the Vedas, ii, of Vishhû, xiii. of Sûra, ib. of Vishhû as the Varâha, 29, as a tortoise, 75, as Nrisinha, 145, as Râma, 384, as Kríshhâ, 403, as a fish, li.
Âvichi, a hell, 207.
Âvidyâ, 'ignorance,' 34, n. 2.
Âvishhû, a prince, 352.
Âvayya, a name of Purusha or 'spirit,' 13, n. 19.
Âyana, period of six months; day and night of the gods, 23.
Âyastâyaksa, texts of the Yajur-veda, 281.
Âyati, v. of Dâsâri, 82, d. of Meru, 85, n. 11.
Âyo, s. of Nabhâsa, 413.
Âyomukha, a Dânava, 147.
Âyur-veda, medical science, 284.
Âyus, s. of Pururâvas, 398. his sons, 406.
Âyushmat, s. of Sanhitâ, 127. of Prahlâda, ib. n. 1.
Âyusâmanta, s. of Utsânapâda, 86, n. 1.
Âyutajit, s. of Bhajâmsâna, 429.
Âyutâswa, a prince, 379.
Âyutâyus, a prince of the Kuru race, 457, of Magadhâ, 465.
B.
Babru, teacher of the Atharva-veda, 283. s. of Romapâda, 422. s. of Dvârarâdhâ, 424. s. of Druhyu, 443.
Babhruvâhan, s. of Arjuna, 460.
Badh, imperfection of twenty-eight sorts, 35, n. 3.
Badhâs, a people, 192.
Bâlikas, a people, 189, n. 56.
Bâhial (Bâhilli), see Bâshilai, 277, n. 6.
Bâhiikas, s. of Pratihâ, 457.
Bâhilika, a people, 189, n. 19.
Bâhila kings, 478.
Bahu (Bahuks), a prince, 373.
Bâhubbâdhas, a people, 192.
Bâhuda, a river, 181, n. 6.
Bâhipavaya, s. of Sûdyumna, 447.
Bâhula, a Prajapati, 50, n. 2.
Bâhula, a prince, 386, n. 19.
Bâhula, a river, 183.
Bâhuläwâ, a prince, 391.
Bâhuputra, a Prajapati, 50, n. 2. married two daughters of Dukhâ, 119. their children (the lightnings), 123, n. 24.
Bâhuvatâs, a prince, 453.
Bâhurâs, a Rudra, 121.
Bâhuva, s. of Padugala, 454.
Bâhyas, a people, 185, n. 4.
Bâjjarâna, a branch of medicine, 407, n. 11.
Bâlalabha: see Bâlalâma.
Bâlâhaka, a serpent, 149, n. 16.
Bâlakîllâs, pigmy sages, sixty thousand in number, sons of Krtâ, 83. attend the sun, 234.
Bâlârâma, s. of Vaishvâra, 458. Avatâra of Sesa, 546. brought up by Nanda, 506. kills Dhënuka, 517. kills Pralamba, 520. kills Mushika, 528. goes to Vrindavan, 560. compels the Yama to attend him, 572. kills Rukmin, 580. rescues Sûmba, 585. kills Dwirida, 605. married to Revati, 439. their sons, ib. offended with Krishna, 430. resumes the form of Sesha, 611.
Bâli, s. of Virochana, 147. sovereign of Pâtaâla, 205, n. 3. Indra of the eighth Mauwantara, 267, s. of Sutapâs, 444.
Bâliâi, offerings of food, 304.
Bâlivâhini, a river, 185, n. 80.
Bâsâ, s. of Bâli, 147. worships Sûra, 593. confines Aniruddha, ib. fights with Kríshâ, 595. is defeated, 596.
Bandhumat, a prince, 533.
Banga, s. of Bâli, 444.
Bânjulâ, a river, 185, n. 80.
Bâreñâs, a people, 192.
Bâhikali (Bâhikâla), teacher of a Sanhitâ of the Rig-veda, 277. a different teacher, ib. n. 7. ditto, 278.
Bathing, rules of, 303.
Bâudhâs, origin of, 339.
Bâudhâyanas, followers of a branch of the white Yajush, 281, n. 5.
Bâudhyas, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277.
Bênarès, burnt by the discus of Kríshâ, 600.
Bhaga, an Aditya, 132.
INDEX

Bhagavat, meaning of, 643.
Bhagavata, a prince, 471.
Bhagavata, a Purâna, 284. analysis of, xxiv. authenticity of discussed, xxviii.
Bhagiratha, a prince, brings Ganges from heaven, 379.
Bhagirath, a name of the Ganges, 379.
Bhadra, w. of Vasudeva, 439.
Bhadra, a river, 170.
Bhadra, a month, 225. n. 19.
Bhadrabahu, s. of Vasudeva, 439.
Bhadhrachitra, s. of Krishna, 578.
Bhadrachuna, s. of Vasudeva, 439.
Bhadrakâshi, sprung from Devi, 68.
Bhadraratha, a prince, 445.
Bhadreadasa, mode of sitting, 653.
Bhadrasena, s. of Mahishmati, 417. s. of Vasudeva, 439.
Bhadradra, s. of Agnirharma, 162. k. of the countries east of Meru, 163. s. of Vasudeva, 439.
Bhadradra, a Varsha or country, 169.
Bhadradvinda, s. of Krishna, 591.
Bharika, s. of Krishna, 591.
Bhajamuna, s. of Andhaka, 435. 436. n. 11. s. of Satvata, 424.
Bhadjina, s. of Satwata, 424.
Bhadandi, s. of Nahhaga, 353.
Bhallada, a prince, 453. n. 5.
Bhallada, a prince, 453.
Bhânu, s. of Krishna, 591.
Bhânti, d. of Daksâha, w. of Kaśyapa, 119.
Bhânum (sun), sons of Bhânu, 120.
Bhânumata, a prince, 390.
Bhândaratha, s. of Chandragiri, 386. n. 19. s. of Vriharadâsa, 463.
Bhârâdrâja, s. of Vrihaspati, given to Bharata, 449. a Vyasa, 273. a teacher of the Vedas, 278. n. 11.
Bhârâdrâjas, a people, 196.
Bhârâdrâja, a river, 183.
Bhârâni, a lunar asterism, 226. n. 21.
Bhârata, s. of Rishabha, 163. legend of, 243. born as a deer; as a Brahman, 245. instructs the king of Sauvira in true wisdom, 247. obtains liberation, 258. s. of Dushyanta, 449.
adopts Bharâdrâja, ib. s. of Daksâraha, 384.
conquers the Gandharbas, 385. s. of Vîshîbotra, 418. a sage, teacher of musical science, 284.
Bhârata varsha, or India, divisions of, 165. description of, 174. land of works, 178.
Bhârata: see Mahâbharata.
Bhûrga, a prince, 409.
Bhûrgas, a people, 190. and n. 74.
Bhûrgabhumi, a prince, 409.
Bhûrgavas, a people, 190.

Bhâra, d. of Kaśyapa, parent of kites, 148.
Bhuma, 'Mars,' his car and horses, 240.
Bhautya, tenth Manu, 268. n. 8. fourteenth Manu, 269. his sons, ib. s. of Kavi, ib. n. 11.
Bhava, Siva, the husband of Sati, 54. s. of Umâ, 59. a Rudra, 58. 121. n. 17. s. of Pratiharâ, 165. s. of Vidarsha, 436.
Bhavâda, synonyme of Mahât, 13. n. 32.
Bhâvatâ, 'apprehension,' threefold, 554.
Bhavannasya, s. of Vidyatâ, 450.
Bhavishya, a Purâna, 284. analysis of, xxxix.
Bhavishyottara Purâna, notice of, xx.
Bhavya, s. of Priyavrata, 162. k. of Síkâ-dwîpa, ib. his sons, 190. s. of Dhrava, 98.
Bhavya, a class of deities, 263.
Bhaya, 'fear,' s. of Anrita, 56.
Bhaya, a prince, 447.
Bhikku, 'mendicant,' duties of, 295.
Bhima, a Rudra, 58. 120. n. 17. s. of Amáravana, 398. s. of Pâñdhu, 437. 459. his sons, ib.
Bhimâ, a river, 183.
Bhimaratha, s. of Ketumâta, 407. s. of Vikriti, 422.
Bhimarath, a river, 176. the Beennah, n. 5.
Bhimasena, s. of Parâshurâma, 457. 461. see Bhima.
Bhishmâ, s. of Sûntâ, 459.
Bhishma, k. of Vidarbha, 573.
Bhîna, a people, 177. n. 6.
Bhuvanâtmika, city of Vaiśvikas in Râgradâla, 205. n. 2.
Bhojagata, founded by Rukmin, 574.
Bhojas, a people, 186. a branch of the Haiyâs, 418. n. 20. descendants of Mahâbhôja, 424.
Bhrís, a sun, 632. n. 6.
Bhrâj, a class of deities, 260.
Bhrâmâ, d. of Sûntâ, w. of Dhrava, 98. n. 1.
Bhrigu, a Prajâpati, 49. married Khyati, 54. their children, 59. teacher of military science, 284.
Bhrigushastra, a prince, 354. n. 30.
Bhumimitra, a Kâdva prince, 471.
Bhûri, s. of Bahlâka, 450.
Bhûrâsras, s. of Bahlâka, 459.
Bhûrâsras, the earth, its extent, 212.
Bhûta, s. of Vasudeva, 439.
Bhûrâd, elementary Abhâkâra, the origin of the elements, 16. n. 24.
Bhûtas, evil spirits, proceed from Brahmas, 41 children of Krodhâ, 150. n. 18.
Bhûrâsanâpâ, s. of Hiraýyâshaka, 147.
Bhûtâma, name of Vishnu, 2. n. 2.
Bhûruvidyâ, branch of medicine, 407. n. 11.
Bhûtâs, a name of Vishuâ, 20. n. 35.
Bhûti, a goddess, w. of Kavi, 269. n. 11. a sage, s. of Angira, ib.
Bhûvâna, a Rudra, 121. n. 17.
Bhûvâraham, extent of, 212.
Bodha, s. of Dharma, 55.
Bodhusa, a mountain, 180. n. 3.
Bodhas, a people, 185. n. 4.
INDEX.

Brahma, the supreme being and the Vedas, typified by Om, 1. one with Vishnú, 2. abstract spirit, 2. n. 3. possessed of properties and origin of creation, 21. two states of, 157. meaning of, 273. with or without form, 654. n. 12.

Brahmá, same as Vishnú in his character of creator, 19. length of his life, 22. his various creations, 34. four castes proceed from him, 44. his mind-born sons, 49. parent of the Rudras, 58. same as Mahat, 14. n. 22. first teacher of the Vishesh Puráña, 3. n. 3. praises Vishnú, 494.

Brahmá, a Puráña, 283. analysis of, xvi.

Brahmabihúta, condition of Brahmá, 155.

Brahmabodhí, a river, 184.

Brahmacárí, religious student, duties of, 304.

Brahmadatta, s. of Anhima, 458.

Brahma-loka, highest heaven, 48. n. 10. 212, n. 3.

Brahmamedhí, a river, 184.

Brahmac, reader of the Atharva-veda, 276.

Brahmás, from the mouth of Brahmá, 44. duties of, 201. Göttras of, 405. n. 35. early settlement of in India, lxxv.

Brahmásásta, a Puráña, 284. parts of, liv.

Brahmá, a river, 184.

Brahmarśi, Brahman saints, 284. n. 8.

Brahmas, or Brahmarśis, nine, 49.

Brahmá sávarí, tenth Manu, 268. his sons, ib. s. of Brahmá, ib. n. 8.

Brahma-vaiśvánta, a Puráña, 284. analysis of, xli.

Brahma-yajña, sacred study, 294. n. 8.

Buddhi, 'understanding'; synonyme of Mahat, 15. n. 22. d. of Daśaka, w. of Dharmá, 54.

Budhá, s. of Mahádeva, 59. s. of Soma, 350.

Bull (of Siva), progeny of Surábhi, 150. n. 19. liberated at Sríddhá, 333.

C.

Castes, four, created by Brahmá, 44. original state, 45. divided by occupations, 47. n. 9. instituted by different princes, 406. 409. 444. duties of, 491.

Cathési, Kathakáryas, 105. n. 152.

Ceremonies, at birth, &c. 297.

Cádáyás, descendents of Chédi, 423.

Cháitra, a month, 225. n. 19.

Chátra, a forest, 169.

Chakrás, a prince, 473.

Chakras, a mountain, 180. n. 3.

Chakras, a people, 188.

Chákravarti, an emperor, meaning of, 101. n. 5.

Chákshu, a river, 170.

Chákshu, a prince, 453.

Chákshupa, a prince, 352.

Chákhsha, s. of Ripu, 98.

Chákhsha, a Manu, s. of Chákhsha, 98. sixth Manu, 268. his sons, ib. his birth, ib. n. 17. a prince, s. of Anu, 444.

Chákhshasa, a class of deities, 260.

Champa, founder of Champa-puri, 445.

Champé, a city founded by Champa, 445.

Chandás, a river, 185. n. 80.

Chandana, s. of Dhundhumá, 165.

Chádraváloka, a prince, 306. n. 19.

Chádará, killed by Krishna, 557.

Charaké, teacher of the Yajur-veda, 280. n. 4.

Charaka, pupils of Vaisámpayana, 280. of Chára, ib. n. 4.

Chariot, of the sun, 217. of the moon, 238. of Mercury and Venus, 239. of Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Rahu, and Ketu, 240.

Charitró, s. of Kértimats, 83. n. 3.

Charumadhásalás, a people, 189.

Charvan váti, a river, the Chambal, 182.

Cháru, s. of Krishna, 578.

Cháru-gupta, s. of Krishna, 578.

Charudéha, s. of Krishna, 578.

Charu-déha, s. of Krishna, 578.

Cháru-sattmí, d. of Krishna, 578.

Cháru-vinda, s. of Krishna, 578.

Chátakas, pupils of Vaisámpayana, 280. n. 4.

Chátruranga, a prince, 445.

Cháturmanyas, four monthly rítas, 275. n. 1.

Chédi, s. of Káitáké, 423.

Chédyas, a people, 186.

Chhala, a prince, 386.

Chhandéhas, the Vasus and similar divinities, 123. n. 27.

Chándás, an Anga of the Vedas, 284.

Chárya, w. of the sun, 266. d. of Víswakarmá, ib. n. 1.

Chikita, practice of physic, 407. n. 11.

Chines, a barbarous race, 379. n. 18. Chinese, 194. n. 145.

Chítí, synonyme of Mahat, 15. n. 32.

Chitrabhá, a river, 182.

Chitrágupta, registrar of Yama, 207. n. 3.

Chítrá, a prince, 435.

Chitrakíttha, s. of Yásáštha, 83. n. 8.

Chitrakótha, a mountain, 180. n. 3.

Chitrakútá, a river, 185. n. 80.

Chitrakélaké, friend of Usáh, 592.

Chitrángada, s. of Súkraman, 459.
INDEX. 673

Chitraratha, k. of the Gandharbas, 153, n. 1.
  s. of Rushadr, 420, s. of Dharmaratha, 445.
  s. of Ushna, 461.
Chitrarathé, a river, 184.
Chitrarathé, a river, 184.
Chitraré, a river, 184.
Chitrapala, a river, 184.
Cholasa, a people, 193.
Chronology, system of, 22. of the kings of the Kali age, 484.
Chulaka or Chulaké, a river, 182.
Chunum, a prince, 373.
Chyavana, a sage, 354. s. of Mitryu, 454. s. of Subotra, 455.
Cleanliness, rules of, 300.
Clepsydra, water clock, described, 631.
Clouds, how formed, 230. classes of, 231, n. 3.
  the shell of the universe, ib.
Colebrooke, notices of the Vedas, 1. of the Purá-nás, v. of the Sáswatá Brahmanas and language, 157.
Colonization of India, 12v.
Cosmogony of the Hindus, 10. analogies with ancient, 19, note.
Creation, accounts of, 11. 34-39. (primary).
  mode of, 13. course of, 14. various kinds of, 36. (secondary), periods of, 27. kinds of, 35.
  of mankind, 36. of properties, 37. a property of Brahma, 21. function of Vishnu as Brahma, 19, &c.
D.
Dadhicha, a sage, reprobates Daksha, 63.
Dadhivardharbas, a people, 183, n. 141.
Dáhas, a people, 192, n. 100.
Dahaná, a Rudra, 121, n. 17.
Dháragni, a name of Agastyá, 83, n. 5.
Dáityas, eldest sons of Káyapa by Diti, 124.
  n. 28. defeated by the gods, 77. obtain the sovereignty of the earth, 126. overcome the gods, 335. fall into heresy, and are subdued, 338. oppress the earth, 403.
Daksha, a Prájápati, 49. born from Brahmá's thumb, 50. n. 2. 348. marries Prašádá; their twenty-four daughters, 54. his sacrifice, 61.
  spoiled by Viráshadra, 65. propitiates Siva, 69. s. of the Prachetássá, 115. his daughters,
  ib. 117. chief of the patriarchs, 153.
Daksha-sávaráñi, ninth Manu, 268. his sons, ib.
  s. of Daksha, ib. n. 8.
Dakshidá, d. of Ruchi, married to Yajne, 54, n. 9.
Dala, a prince, 380.
Dáliki, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278, n. 10.
Dama, a prince, 353.
Démálenas, a people, 193, n. 101.
Damhá, 'hypocrisy,' s. of Adharmá, 55, n. 14.
Dánavas, enemies of the gods, 72. children of Danu, 147.
Dádda, s. of Dharmá, 55. s. of Iksháwáká, 359.
  killed by Suyumuna, 351, n. 7.
Dáḍí, a measure of time, sixty Vikálas, 23, n. 3.
Dáḍáka, a forest, 351, n. 7.
Dánshtríñas, sharp-toothed animals, progeny of Krodhavarú, 140, n. 17.
Dántavaktra, s. of Vridhhasarman, 437.
Danu, d. of Daksha, w. of Káyapa, 122.
Daradas, a people, 195.
Darpa, s. of Dharma, 55.
Darákas, a people, 197.
Darśapurdamásá, half-monthly sacrifice, 275,
  n. 1.
Dárúka, sent by Krishná to Arjuna, 611.
Darúka, a hell, 207. sins punished in, 208.
Darvan, s. of Uaima, 444.
Darvas, a people, 192.
Dárví, a country, 191.
Dáśá, name for a Súdra, 298.
Daśamálikas, a people, 194.
Daśapárávás, a people, 192, n. 93.
Daśarathá, s. of Mulaka, 383. s. of Ajas, and father of Ráma, ib. s. of Navarathá, 422. s. of Suyásás, 470.
Daśargá, a prince, 422.
Daśárusas, a people, 186. 187. 192.
Daśártá, a river, 185, n. 80.
Daśá, a river, 184.
Daśávidarbas, a people, 193.
Dattátreya, s. of Atri, 83.
Dáttoli or Agásta, s. of Pulásta, 83. a Ráshi, 251.
Daughter of Daksha, twenty-four, married to Dharma and the patriarchs, 24. fifty, 115.
  sixty, married to Dharma, Káyapa, Soma, &c.
  110.
Day (and night) of mortals; of the gods, 23. of Brahmá, 25. of a Manu, 26, n. 9. division and length of, 233.
Days, of the moon, held sacred by the Vaish-nóvás, 145, n. 3.
Dáyá, 'clemency,' w. of Dharma, 55, n. 12.
Deités, thirty-three, 123, n. 27.
Devabhágá, s. of Sútra, 436.
Devabhúti, a prince, 471.
Devadarás, teacher of the Atharvá-veda, 282.
Devagéti, or Dèogur, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Devasdúti, d. of Sváyambhóra Manu, 54, n. 7.
Devaka, s. of Atuhka, 436. s. of Yudhishtíra, 459.
Devaki, d. of Devaka, w. of Vasudéva, 436. mother of Krishná, 502.
Devakulí, d. of Purúshálúsá, 82, n. 2.
Devadúta, a range of mountains, 171.
Devála, s. of the Vásu Pratýahá, 120. a sage, s.
  of Káśi, 123, n. 26.
Devakalástra, a prince, 422.
Devamihásha, s. of Vríchá, 425, n. 8. s. of Hrida, 436.
Devamitra, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277, n. 7.
Devánaka, a prince, 380.

81
INDEX

Derekg, s. of Pratipa, 457. becomes an ascetic and an apostate, 458. still living, 487.
Devarakshita, s. of Deraka, 435. another prince, k. of the sea-coast, 480.
Devarakshita, d. of Deraka, 436.
Devākṣita, s. of Suketu, 390. s. of Visvamitra, 404. s. of Karambhi, 432.
Devarshia, divine sage, 284. n. 8.
Deva-savarthi, thirteenth Manu, 268. n. 8.
Devasraus, a. of Sūrvum, 436.
Devavat, s. of Akṛūra, 435. s. of Devaka, 436.
Devavṛddhi, s. of Satvata, 424.
Devavitthi, a prince, 457.
Devā-yajna, 'burnt-offerings,' 294. n. 3.
Devykama, d. of Utanasa, w. of Yayāti, 413. story of, ib. n. 3.
Devī, w. of Sīva, 64.
Devī-bhāgava, said to be the genuine Bhāgava, xxx. notice of, livi.
Devīk, a river, 182. the Deva or Goggra, n. 12.
Devikota, a city, 593. n. 1.
Devotion of contemplation, 651.
Dhanaka, a prince, 417.
Dhananjaya, a serpent, s. of Kadru, 149. a Vyāsa, 373.
Dhanakya, s. of Purūrava, 398. n. 1.
Dhanesu, a prince, 447.
Dhanishṭha, a lunar mansion, 226. n. 21.
Dhanur-veda, military science, 284.
Dhanvantari, produced from the ocean, 76. s. of Dhīraghatamas, 406. teacher of medical science, 284. 407.
Dhāranā, fixation of thought, 656.
Dhārakati, d. of the Pitris, 84. w. of Meru, ib. n. 11.
Dhārabhik, s. of Ajātashatru, 467.
Dhārma, a Prājapati, and s. of Brahmā, 49. n. 2. marries thirteen daughters of Daksha, 54. their children, 55. n. 13. marries ten daughters of Daksha, 115. 119. their posterity, 120. s. of Gandhāra, 443. s. of Svṛtak, 465.
Dhārma, 'law,' 284.
Dharmadriśa, s. of Śvapalkha, 435.
Dharmadhvaja, k. of Mhitā, 645.
Dharmaketu, a prince, 409.
Dharmana, a prince, 455.
Dharmanetra, s. of Hāihāya, 416.
Dharmānāya, a city, 390. n. 9.
Dharmaratha, a prince, 445.
Dharmā-vārāndrī, eleventh Manu, 268. his sons, ib. s. of Dharmana, ib. n. 8.
Dhārinī, a race of Kantāriyās, 358.
Dhāsū (Dhāsū), s. of Bhrigu, 59.
Dhātuki, s. of Savana, 200. division of Pushkaradwipa, ib.
Dhātri, s. of Vishṭu and Lakṣmī, married to Ayati, 82.
Dīva, a Vāsu, 120.
Dhenuka killed by Balarāma, 517.

Dhenukā, w. of Kṛttimata, 83. n. 3.
Dhī, w. of Manyu, 59. n. 4.
Dhīmat, w. of Viśā, 105. s. of Purūravas, 398.
Dhīshā, w. of Hāvīrī, 106. w. of Kṛṣṇa, 123. n. 26.
Dhīḍhanemi, a prince, 453.
Dhīḍhāsā, s. of Dhundhumā, 362.
Dhīśa, a. of Vairavasas, 348. his sons, 358.
Dhīśṣṭhāyunna, s. of Drupada, 455.
Dhīśṣṭhāketau, s. of Satyadhrī, 390. s. of Sukumāra, 409. s. of Dhīśṣṭhāyunna, 455.
Dhīśṣṭhāsarmman, s. of Svāpalkha, 435.
Dhīta, a prince, 443.
Dhītamati, a river, 184.
Dhītardhātrī, a serpent, 149. n. 16. a king, s. of Vichitṝavṛya's widow by Vyāsa, 459.
Dhītardhātrī, d. of Kaṭya, 149. n. 13.
Dhirtavati, a river, 183. and n. 38.
Dhirtavata, a. of Rudra, 59. n. 4. a prince, 446.
Dhīti, 'steadiness,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharmas, 54. w. of a Rudra, 59. n. 4.
Dhīti, s. of Vītihavya, 351. s. of Babhrī, 422. s. of Vījaya, 446.
Dhītimata, s. of Kṛttimata, 83. n. 3. s. of Yāvisnava, 453.
Dhīruva, s. of Utanapāda and Sūrṣū, his story, 86. worship Vishū, 88. performs penance, 90. Vishū elevates him to the sphere of the north pole, 96. name of a Vāsu, 120. s. of Rājīnu, 448.
Dhīruva, the polar star, where situated, 228. his revolutions, 230. 240.
Dhīruvaśandira, a prince, 387.
Dhūmaka, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 123. n. 26. s. of Trinavindu, 353. n. 25.
Dhūmaka, s. of Prihu, 106. n. 1.
Dhūmāra, s. of Vāsī, 354.
Dhūndhū, a demon, 361.
Dhūnandira, name of Kuvalasāya, 361.
Dhūnandhara, a people, 187.
Dhūṣūlyaka, a river, 185. n. 39.
Dhūṣatapā, a river, 182.
Dhūti, an Adīti, 122.
Dhyāna, 'meditation,' 657.
Dhīkha, w. of Ugrā, 59. w. of Vāmadeva, ib. n. 4.
Dīlpa, s. of Annuṣṭu, 379. name of Khaṭwanga, 383. s. of Rīkaha, 457.
Dīptimata, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 591.
Dhīrghābhu, a prince, 383.
Dhīrghatamas, s. of Kāśīrā, 406. s. of Utasāya, 444. n. 12.
Dī, 'space,' presides over the ear, 17. n. 28.
Dīs, a river, 182.
Dīs, w. of Bhīma, a Rudra, 59.
Dīsā, s. of Vairavasas, 348. n. 4.
Dīsā, of four kinds, 50. 630. 634.
Dītī, d. of Daksha, w. of Kaṭya, 123. mother of the Daityas, 123. of the Mātrūtas, 151.
INDEX.

675

Divakara, a prince, 463.
Divartha, a prince, 445.
Divaspati, Indra of the thirteenth Manvantara, 269.
Divijata, S. of Pururavas, 398, n. 1.
Divinities presiding over the senses, 17, n. 28.
classes of, 123, of the different Manvantaras, 260.
Divoddasa, S. of Bhimaratha, k. of Káfi, 407, expelled from Benares, ib. n. 13, 410, n. 17, S. of Bahvaváva, 454.
Divya, S. of Satwata, 454.
Doshá, w. of Kalpa, 98, n. 1.
Dragons, children of Suraas, 149.
Dravati, a Vyása, 273.
Drávira, a people, 192.
Drishñadhanush, a prince, 452.
Drishñasaena, a prince, 465.
Drishñahyaya, S. of Pururavas, 398, n. 1.
Drishñadhavati, a river, the Cagar, 181, and n. 7, mother of Prasenajit, 363, n. 18.
Dróta, father of Aswatattikarna, 454, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Droțakas, a people, 196.
Drumá, a river, 185, n. 80.
Drupada, S. of Priyanta, 453.
Drurya, S. of Yayáki, 413, k. of the west, 415, his descendants, 443.
Duhuttama, S. of Dhrirasrthra, 459.
Dukha, 'pain,' son of Naraka, 56.
Dudrana, S. of Bhrashteranya, 407, n. 12, 417.
Durga, a strong hold, 46, n. 6.
Durgá, her exploits alluded to, 499, worshipped at Pitarthaána, ib. n. 26.
Durgá, a river, 183, 184.
Durgalá, a people, 190.
Durgá Mákátiyana, account of Durga's exploits, xxviii.
Durgama, S. of Vasudeva, 439.
Durgama, S. of Vasudéva, 439, xxix.
Durgama, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Durmada, S. of Vasudeva, 439.
Durmrita, a prince, 478, n. 67.
Durmukha, a serpent, 149, n. 16.
Durvásas, a sage, S. of Atri, 70, n. 1, 83.
Duryamana, a prince, 443.
Duryodhana, S. of Dhrirasrthra, 459.
Duskyanta, S. of Aníla, 448.
Duties of castes and orders, 291.
Dwajyuyatvaaniketan, a people, 193.
Dwápara, third Yuga or 'age,' its duration, 23, n. 4.
Dwarká, built by Krishna, 566, submerged by the sea, 613.
Dwesa, 'hatred,' one of the five afflictions, 34, n. 2.
Dwimmaha, S. of Hastin, 452.
Dwimórdádan, S. of Kásiyapa, 147.
Dwipas, 'island continents,' seven principal, 166, their kings, divisions, inhabitants, 80, 197, et seq.
Dwivida, a monkey, killed by Balaráma, 605.
Dynasties of the sun, 348, of the moon, 358, of future kings, 461.
Dyuna, S. of Vásiñtha, 84, n. 8.
Dyutinab, S. of Priyavrata, k. of Kraunca-dwipá, 162, his sons, 199, S. of Práda, 82, S. of Pááfu, ib. n. 1.

E.
Earth, the element, 16, the world, raised by the Varáha, 30, subdued by Prithu, 103, milked by various beings, 104, description of, 166, supported by Śeṣa, 206, destruction of, 531.
the goddess, dialogue with Višnu as the Varáha, 29, song of, 457, oppressed by the Daityas, applies to Brahmá, 453, mother of Naraka, propitiates Kríshna, 584.
Earrings, produced from the ocean, given to Aditi, 78, n. restored by Kríshna to her, 584.
Egg of the world, how formed, 18, common symbol amongst the ancients, 18, n. 30, abode of Višnu as Brahmá; how composed; invested by the principles of creation, 19.
Eka, synonyme of Mahat, 15, n. 22.
Ekachákra, a Dánava, 147.
Ekapágukas, a people, 187.
Ekavínasa, hymns from Brahmá, 42.
Ekodhátha-áradhá, rules of, 316.
Ekápattra, S. of Kadru, 149.
Elements, evolution of from primary matter, 14, subtle rudiments, how produced, 16, gross or sensible; number and production, ib. successive investment and participation of properties, ib. n. 25, disposition of, 214, successive resolution of into their origin, 625.
Ellas, notice of the Vedas, i.
Ely, the element, 16, see Áksásá.

F.
Fa-hian, travels in India, 354, n. 25.
Fever, contends with Kríshna, 594.
Fire, the element, same as light (see Tejas), 16, the deity: see Agni.
Fires, original, forty-nine in number, 84, made threefold by Pururávas, 397.
Food, rules for taking, distributing, &c. 306, offered at Śraddhas, 315.

G.
Gabhástinat, a division of Bháratavarsha, 175, a division of Páála, 204.
Gachchhas, a people, 192, n. 95.
Gada, S. of Vasudeva, 439.
Gádi, S. of Kuśánátha, 599, S. of Kuśika or Kuśánátha, ib. n. 10.
Gahvaras, a people, 196, n. 159.
Gajavartí, a division of the lunar mansions, 226, n. 1.
Gálava, teacher of the white Yajush, 281, n. 5.
Ganesa, public, celebrated by Kanna, 551, and n. 4.
Gandaki, a river, 182. the Gandak, ib. n. 16.
Gandhamadana, a mountain south of Meru, 168.
a forest, 169, a mountain ridge from the foot of Meru, ib. name of Ketumiska-varsha, 171, n. 13, one of the seven ranges of Bhurata, 180.
Gandhamadana, s. of Swapdhalna, 435.
Gandhara, a prince, 443, a people, lb. n. 2.
Gandhara, s. of people, 171.
Gandharwana, a division of Bhurata-varsha, 175.
Gandharwala, heaven of Śúdrás, 48, n. 10.
Gandharwala, musical science, 284.
Gandhari, d. of Surabhi, parent of horses, 150, n. 19.
Gandhinicol, d. of Kaśyapa, 431.
Gandhásaka, s. of Sóra, 437.
Gánina Upa-puráśa, notice of, lvi.
Gangá, d. of Himávatí, 85, n. 11. d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 119, n. 12.
Gangá, the river Gangá, her descent from heaven, 170, divides into four rivers, ib. into seven, 171, n. 12. river of Bhurata, 180. proceeds from Vishnu’s toe, 228. sanctity of, 239. brought down on earth by Bhagiratha, 379.
Gangáswára, a place, 62.
Gara, s. of Udánam, 444.
Gardhaba, a race of kings, 474-475, n. 64.
Garga, a sage, learnt astronomy from Sáh, 206.
Garga, a prince, 409, n. 15.
Gargya, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278. a Brahman, the father of Kaśyapa, 505.
Gargyas, descendants of Garga, s. of Bhuvanamanya; become Brahmana, 451.
Guru, king of birds, s. of Kaśyapa, and Vinata, 149.
Guruvá, a Purúśa, 284. analysis of, lvi.
Gati, w. of Pulaka, 55, n. 12.
Gátra, s. of Vasištha, 83.
Gátrnavá, s. of Kaśyapa, 501.
Gauri, w. of Siva, 60, w. of Virjás, 82, n. 2.
w. of Yuvanásáwa, changed to the Bhúdá river, 362, n. 18. d. of Antinara, 448, n. 9.
Gauri, a river, 185.
Gautama, s. of Prajápati, 49, n. 2. a Rishi, 264.
husband of Aháya, 445.
Gávya, ‘fresh’ or ‘produce’; of kine offered to the Pitris, 332.
Gávya, s. of Harihórásí, 106. s. of Naka, 165.
s. of Sudhíyanna, 350.
Gávya, metre from Brahmá, 42. verse of the Vedas, 222, n. 13.
Ghatásanikáya, a people, 193.
Ghatótáká, s. of Bhúma, 459, n. 5. 460.
Ghoratá, ‘terror,’ a property of sensible objects, 17, n. 27.
Ghoshá, s. of Lamba, 120.
Ghoshava, a prince, 471.
Ghiratá, a divine nymph, 150, n. 31.
Ghiratráprithá, s. of Priyávaráta, 162, n. 2.
Ghirátyu, a prince, 447.
Ghiratamada, s. of Subotra, 406.
Giri, a prince, 435.
Girigávará, a people, 196.
Girirája, a city in Magádha, 399, n. 9.
Gobadha, s. of Yáhni, 442.
Goghnatas, a people, 187.
Goddávari, a river, 176.
Gods, proceeds from Brahmá, 40. overcome by the demons, 72. churn the ocean, 74. classes of; children of Dharma, 120, of Kaśyapa, 125.
Gobamuka, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Goháka, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277, n. 8.
Go-loka, heaven of Kríshna, 48, n. 10. 214, n. 3.
Gománta, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Gomántas, a people, 187, n. 29.
Gománti, a river, 182, in Oude, n. 16.
Gomastiputra, 473.
Gopas, inhabitants of Gokula, 506, go to Vin-dávana, 509. associates of Kríshna in his sports, 511, &c.
Gopalakáshas, a people, 192.
Goparásabha, a people, 187.
Gopás, wives of the Gopas, their sports with Kríshna, 531, their grief at his departure, 544.
Gowallá, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277.
Gotama, a Víśá, 273.
Gotras, families of Kaśyapa, 405, n. 23.
Gova, a country, 187, n. 34.
Govardhána, a mountain, 180, n. 3, worshipped by the Gopas, 535, lifted up by Kríshna, 537.
Govinda, a name of Kríshna, 528, n. 2.
Govíthá, a division of the lunar mansions, 226, n. 31.
Grná, excellent, 46. sacrificial, 47.
Gáné, attendants of the sun, 234, n. 2.
Greeks, called Yavanas or Yonas, 194, n. 144.
Gridhríká, d. of Kaśyapa, parent of vultures, 148.
Grihashtra, ‘householder, duties of, 294. fixed duties, 300. miscellaneous duties, 310.
Guhas, kings of Kalinga, 480.
Gunás, qualities of goodness, foulness, and darkness, 34, n. 1.
Gupta, name for a Vási, 298.
Guptas, a race of kings, 475, coins of, 480, n. 70.
INDEX.

H.

Haimava, a prince of the Yādava race, 416.

Haimavata, a tribe, conquer Bāhu, 373. conquered by Sagar, 374. five divisions of, 418, n. 20.

Seythian origin of, ib. invade Kāli, 410, n. 17.

Hair, how worn by ancient nations, 375, n. 17.

Hairukha, a class of heretics, 345.

Hāla, a prince, 473.

Hansa, a mountain, 169.

Hara, a Rudra, 121.

Hari, name of Vishnū, 7, n. 1, &c. see Vishnū.

Hari or Hari-varṇa, a country, 168.

Harikēla, a solar ray, 326, n. 3.

Haris, a class of deities, 132, n. 20, 262.

Harīśchandra, a prince, s. of Triśanku, 372. raised to heaven, ib. n. 9.

Harīśvarā, a river, 183.

Harita, a prince, s. of Yuvāṇāśva, 369, s. of Rohitāśva, 373, s. of Pārvatī, 420, k. of Vīdēha, 421, n. 13.

Harītas, a class of deities, 468.

Harītas, sons of Harīta; Brahmāns, 369, n. 3.

Harīśvava, s. of Sudūrmanna, 350, n. 6.

Harī-vans, notice of, viii.

Harivarsa, s. of Agnidasra, 162, k. of Nishadha, 163, a country, 168.

Harsha, s. of Rama, 53.

Harśavardhana, a prince, 413.

Harīsaka, s. of Bṛthu, 106, n. 1.

Haryāṅga, a prince, 445.

Haryāśva, s. of Dridhāśva, 362, s. of Prihāśa-āśva, 371, s. of Drishetakutu, 390, s. of Chaksha, 453.

Haryāśva, sons of Daksha, 117.

Haryatma, a Vṛṣas, 273.

Hastā, a lunar mansion, 216, n. 21.

Hastin, s. of Subhota, 451.

Hastinapur, invaded by Hastin, 452, washed away by the Ganges, 401. undermined by Ba-larāna, 602.

Hastisomā, a river, 182.

Havirdbhi, w. of Pulasya, 55, n. 12, 83, n. 5.

Havirdbha, s. of Astrādhi, 106.

Havīshmantas, a class of Pītra, 321, n. 1.

Havya, s. of Atri, 83, n. 4.

Havyavāhana, s. of Suchi, 84, n. 9.

Hayā, a Yādava prince, 416.

Hayāsīra, d. of Vrīhataprvan, 147, d. of Vaiśāana, and w. of Kṛṣṇa, ib. n. 7.

Hema, a prince, 444.

Hemā, a river, 183.

Hemachandra, k. of Vaiśāli, 354.

Hemakēśa, range of mountains, 167.

Heretics, sects of, 47, Jains, Buddhās, &c. 338, sin of conversing with, 345.

Hermit, duties of, 295.

Hetā, a Rākhasa, 233.

Himavat, k. of mountains, 153, n. 1, snowy range, 167.

Hindus, origin and first settlements of in India, 15x.

Hirāmaya, a country, 168.

Hirāvatī, s. of Agnīdha, 162, k. of Sveta-dvipa, 163.

Hirāvatī, a river, 183.

Hiraṇyaivarha, name of Brahmā, 7, n. 1.

Hiraṇyakaśipū, s. of Kāsyapa and Ditī, 123, k. of the Dāiyas, 124. his power, 126. enmity to Vishnu, 127. put to death by him as Narasinha, 145, n. 2.

Hiraṇyākṣa, s. of Kāsyapa and Ditī, 123.

Hiraṇyānāka, teacher of the Śāma-veda, 282, a prince, pupil of Jaimini, 386.

Hiraṇyaretas, s. of Priyavrata, 162, n. 2.

Hiraṇyakarman, a Lokapāla, s. of Marichi, 83, s. of Pānja, regent of the north, 153, 226.

Hūśa, s. of Hiraṇyakaśipū, 124.

Huddhi, a river, 171, n. 12.

Horses of Indra and of the sun produced at the churning of the ocean, 78, n. 3.

Horses of the sun, 218. of the moon, 238. of Mercury and Venus, 239. of Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Rahu, and Ketu, 240. of Kirṣṭha's car, 459.

Hospitality, duties of, 305.

Householder, duties of, 294, 300, 310.

Hotri, reciter of hymns, 276.

Hravvarman, a prince, 390.

Hrī, 'modesty,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 55, n. 12.

Hrida, a Yādava prince, 426.

Hrīshīkeśa, name of Vishnū, 2. lord of the senses, 2, n. 2.

Hūśa, a people, 177. and n. 6, 194.

Hūitas, god of fire, 72.

Hylozoism, of Cudworth, 53, n. 8.

Hymn, to Vishnū, by Earth, 29. by Brahmā and the gods, 72. to Śrī, by Indra, 78. to Vishnū, by Dhruva, 93. by the Prachetasas, 108. by Prabhāda, 141. by Brahmā, 494. to Kirṣṭha, by Kāliya, 515. by Akūra, 547. by Aditi, 585.

Hypostases, three of Vishnū; a similar triad known to the ancients, 7, n. 1.

I.

Ignorance, fivefold; origin of beings, 34. nature and cause of, 649.

Idā, d. of Daksha, w. of Kāsyapa, 122.

Idhunadhweja, s. of Priyavrata, 162, n. 2.

Idvataara, third cyclic year, 224.

Ijka, a people, 191.

Ijya 'oblation,' from Brahmā, 43, n. 21.

Ikhula, a river, 185, n. 8o.

Ikhulā (Ikhudā), a river, 182, n. 15.

Ikhumālā (Ikhumālinā), a river, 182, n. 15.

Ikhuvāka, s. of Vairavasata, 348. his sons, 359.
INDEX

Jayasena, a, of Adina, 412. a, of Sārvabhauma, 457.
Jhajhara, a, of Hiranyākṣa, 147.
Jililkas, a people, 192.
Jindita, a prince, 423.
Jyotirmāna, ‘wisdom,’ epithets of according to the Yoga, 156, n. 6.
Jyotirakṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotirākṣita, a, of Brahmā, 40, n. 15.
Jyotiśa, a month, 225, n. 19.
Jyotiśa or Akaṃkṣi, produced from the ocean, 78, n. a lunar mansion, 236, n. 21.
Jyotisthita, a river, 183.
Jyotish, ‘astronomy,’ an Anga of the Vedas, 284.
Jyotishmat, a, of Priyavrata, k. of Sāka-dvīpa,
162. his sons, 195. a sun, 632.
Jyotisthita, ‘dawn,’ a form of Brahmā, 40.

K.
K. (or Prajāpati), presides over the generative organs, 19, n. 28.
Kabandha, teacher of the Atharva-veda, 282.
Kachchhas (Kacchchhis), a people, 190, n. 68.
Kadamba, a tree on Mandara, 168. yields a spirituous extract, 571.
Kadru, d. of Daksha, w. of Kasyapa, 122. mother of the serpents, 149.
Kalika, d. of Sivi, 444.
Kalikasa, sons of Dhṛṣṭaketu, 437.
Kalilaka Yavanasa, a race of kings, 477.
Kalāśa, a mountain, 172.
Kalāśa, s. of Vedāntha, 422.
Kajinghas, a people, 156, n. 163.
Kākānikhas, a, people, 187, n. 22.
Kākas, a, people, 193, n. 142.
Kākarvartha, a, prince, 466.
Kābhas, a, people, 190.
Kabahaya, a, prince, 447.
Kabubha, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Kākud, d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 119.
Kākudinim, name of Raivata, 355.
Kakutatha, s. of Sādā, 391. s. of Bhagiratha,
384, n. 15.
Kāla, d. of Kardama, w. of Vrācchika, 55, n. 12.
Kāla, a period of thirty Kāshīthas, 32, n. 3. a digit of the moon, 359, n. 2.
Kāla, ‘time,’ a form of Viṣṇu, 9. cause of the world, ib. n. 12. connecting matter and spirit, 12.
Kāla, a Rudra, 59, n. 4. s. of the Vaisu Dhrūva, 120.
Kāla, d. of Daksha, w. of Kasyapa, 123, n. 19.
Kālanjara, a mountain, 160.
Kālajāhikas, a people, 189.
Kālakas, a class of Dānavas, 148, n. 9.
Kālakanyakas, a class of Dānavas, 148.
Kālakayas, a class of Dānavas, 148, n. 9.
Kālānātika, s. of Hiranyākṣa, 147, n. 3. s. of Viprachiti, 148.
Kālānara, a prince, 444.
Kālāpa, a village, 387.
Kālasutra, a, hell, 207.
Kālayaukas, a people, 189, n. 59.
Kālavas, a, people, 193.
Kālāyani, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278.
Kālayavas, s. of Gargya, 565. k. of the Yavanasa, ib. invades Mathurā, 566. destroyed by Muchukunda, 567.
Kali, last Yuga or ‘age,’ its duration, 23, n. 4.
kings of, 461. commencement of, 486. vices of,
486. 522. advantages of, 627.
Kālikā, d. of Vasivānaras, w. of Kasyapa, 148.
Kālikā, Upa-purāṇa, notice of, lit.
Kalina, s. of Bali, 444.
Kaliningas, a people, 177, and n. 6. 185, n. 3. 197.
198.
Kālindī, w. of Kṛishna, 578.
Kāliya, a serpent, 149, n. 16. conquered by Kṛishna, 514. banished to the sea, 516.
Kalkalas, a people, 193.
Kalki Avatāra of Viṣṇu in the Kali age, 484.
Kalmāshapāda, a prince; also Saudasas, q. v., 380,
n. 11. 382. s. of Raghu, 384, n. 15.
Kalpa, s. of Dhrūva, 98, n. 1.
Kalpa, ‘period of time,’ calculation of, 24, n. 6.
day of Brahmā; past or Pārmā; present or Vārṣa, 25. Kalpas infinite, 25, n. 9. life of Brahmā, 25, n. 9. minor Kalpas, ib. duration of, 270. 651.
Kalpa, an Anga of the Vedas, 284.
Kalpas of the Atharva-veda, 283.
Kāma, s. of Brahmā, 50, n. 2. s. of Dharma, 55.
s. of Sahishna, 85, n. 6.
Kāmadeva, lord of the Āpsarasas, 153, n. 1.
Kāmagamas, a class of deities, 268.
Kāmākshi, a form of Durgā, lit.
Kamakhyā, a form of Durgā, lit.
Kāmarūpa, a country, 176. 177, n. 6. seat of pilgrimage, lit.
Kambala, s. of Kadrū, 149.
Kambalavahis, s. of Andhaka, 435.
Kambojas, a people, 194. conquered by Sāgaras, 374. Cauromgees, ib. n. 15.
Kampana, a river, 183.
Kāmpīliya, s. of Haryāṣa, 454.
Kāmpīliya, a city, 187, n. 20. 453. 454, n. 49.
Kānyā, d. of Kardama, 83, n. 6. w. of Priya-vrata, 162.
Kanakas, a people, 481.
Kanakhalas, a village, 61, n. 2.
Kānchana, s. of Bhūma, 398.
Kāṅdu, a sage, his story, 110.
Kanishthas, a class of deities, 269.
Kanka, s. of Ugrasena, 436.
Kānki, d. of Ugrasena, 436.
INDEX.

Kansa, s. of Ugrasena, 436. warned of his death, 493. destroys the children of Vasudeva, 498. sends demons to find and destroy Krishná, 504. sends Akrúra to bring Krishná to Mathurá, 537. holds public games, 531. killed by Krishná, 558.
Kané, d. of Ugrasena, 436.
Kausavatí, d. of Ugrasena, 436.
Kántikas, a people, 193.
Kásha, teacher of the white Yajush, 281. s. of Apráritinátha, 448. s. of Ajanidhá, 452.
Káshá, dynasty of, 471.
Kásháyánas, a race of Brahmanas, 448.
Kanyákágúnás, a people, 191.
Kápidáni, a Rudra, 121.
Kápañdán, a Rudra, 121.
Kápi, a prince, became a Brahman, 451.
Kápi, a river, 183.
Kápila, a sage, destroys the sons of Sagará, 378. a Dánava, 147. a serpent, 149. n. 16. a mountain, 169.
Kápi, a river, 183.
Kápiáráma, hermitage of Kápila, 379.
Kápiáswáma, s. of Dhúndhumára, 362.
Kápijinálas, a river, 183.
Kápotáromána, s. of Vrishá, 435.
Karabánjikas, a people, 196.
Kárakas, a people, 193.
Kárámihiti, a prince, 432.
Káránadváma, s. of Káhanertráma, 352. s. of Tráma, 442.
Karátas, a people, 193.
Kátpary, a river, 184.
Kárdama, a Prájápati, 49. n. 2. marries Devahúti, 54. n. 7. their posterity, ib. s. of Pálahá, 83. n. 6.
Kárashakas, a people, 192.
Kárishá, a river, 182.
Kárita, a people, 188.
Kárrkobita, a serpent, s. of Rádhu, 149.
Kármas, s. of Pálahá, 83.
Kármasrásha, s. of Pálahá, 83. n. 6.
Kará, s. of Práthá, 437. founded by Adháradhá, 446.
Karáprávarána, a people, 187. n. 22.
Karárákakas, a people, 192.
Karákás, a people, 192. n. 113.
Kártiká, a month, 225. n. 19.
Kártikéya, s. of the Kártikés, 120.
Kárttavárya, s. of Kárttavárya, carries off the cow of Jamadagni, 402. takes Rávana prisoner, 417. killed by Pársuáma, 403. 417.
Kárundhaka, s. of Súra, 436.
Kárushá or Kárusa, s. of Vaivásvata, 348. his sons, 351.
Kárushas, a people, 177. and n. 6. 186. n. 13.
Káša, s. of Subhátra, 406.
Kásrenáta, a division of Bhára-vaña, 175.
Káshi, kings of, 406.
Kášikólaša, a people, 186.
Káśirája, s. of Káśa, 406.
Káshi, a people, 187.
Kášírás, a people, 191. 195.
Káśná, d. of Dáksha, w. of Káśyána, 122. n. 19.
Kášná, fifteen twinklings of the eye, 22. eighteen, 22. n. 3. five Káshás, ib.
Káśá, a prince, 452.
Káśyána, a Prájápati, 50. n. 2. marries the daughters of Dáksha, 119. their progeny, 122. a star, 241.
Káśyána, s. of Pauráramása, 82. n. 2.
Káthájava, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278.
Kaukundakas, a people, 193. n. 116.
Kaukútakas, a people, 193.
Kauvára, kind of creation, 38. n. 13.
Kauvárasibhára, a branch of medicine, 407. n. 11.
Kaukákanas, a people, 193.
Kaúravas, a people, 192.
Kauurmáa, a Puráña, 284. see Kúrma.
Kauvaná, a city, 399. n. 9.
Kauvalya, a prince, 386. n. 26.
Kauvárvati, a name of Maitreya, 3. n. 10.
Kauvájas, a people, 187.
Kauváka, s. of Vasudeva, 439.
Kauvákás, descendant of Vársámitra, 405. Gotras or 'tribes' of, ib. n. 23.
Kauvák, a river, 182. the Kesá, ib. n. 16. formerly Satyavatí, 400. n. 13.
Kauvasthá, a gem produced from the ocean; worn by Vishrú, 78. n.
Kauvília, destroyer of the Nandás, 408.
Kávéri, a river, 182. the Céveri, ib. n. 24.
Kávi, s. of Chákshushá, 98. s. of Priyavrata, 163. n. 2. s. of Uruksúhá, 451. n. 22.
Kauvyas, a class of Púršás, 239. n. 3. a race of Brahmanas, 451. n. 22.
Kauvyánshána, s. of Púrākara, 84. n. 9.
Kekayas, a people, 189.
Kénava, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278. n. 10.
Keralá, a country, 188. Keralás, a people, 192.
Késhinwája, s. of Kritídhwája, 645. teaches Káshí-dváka the Yoga, 649.
Késín, killed by Krishná, 559.
Késín, w. of Vársámas, 83. n. 5. w. of Sagará, 377.
Keta, s. of Sihihú, 148. n. 10. his car and horses, 340.
Ketumála, s. of Aguídrá, 162. k. of Gandhamádana, 163.
Ketumála, a Vārsha or 'country', 169.
Ketumá, a Lokapála, s. of Rajás, regent of the west, 84. n. 8. 153. 226. s. of Dhanwantári, 407.
Kévára, a country, 188. n. 39. a prince, 553.
Khadás or 'portions' of Bhára-vaña, 175. portions of the Padma Puráña, xviii. of the Skanda, xiv.
INDEX.

Kritaratha, a prince, 390.
Kritivarman, s. of Dhanaka, 417. s. of Hridika, 436.
Kritavira, a prince, 417.
Kritajna, a prince, 417.
Krit, s. of Bahulasva, 391. s. of Nahusha, 413. a teacher of the Sama-veda, 282.
Kritiras, a prince, 390.
Kritik, a lunar mansion, 224. 226. n. 21.
Kritiwi, w. of Anura, 452.
Kritiy, a river, 182.
Kriy, 'devotion,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 54. w. of Kratu, 55. n. 12. a magical being, 599.
Krodha, s. of Brahmana, 50. n. 2. s. of Mritya, 56. s. of Lobha and Nikritos, ib. n. 14.
Krodhavasa, d. of Daksha, w. of Kasyapa, 122.
Kroshira, s. of Yadu, 416. his sons, 420.
Kshana, thirty Kaka, 22. n. 3. three Nimeshas, ib.
Kshanam, 'patience,' d. of Daksha, w. of Pulaha, 54.
Kshatradharmaka, a prince, 412.
Kshatrujas, a prince, 466.
Kshatraviruddha, s. of Ayus, 465. his descendants, ib. other descendants, 412.
Kshatriyakshatra, a prince, 435.
Kshema, s. of Dharma, 55.
Kshemadhavan, a prince, 386.
Kshemadharmaka, a prince, 466.
Kshemaka, last of the race of Puru, 452.
Kshemari, a prince, 390.
Kshema, s. of Ugrasvaday, 453. s. of Suchi, 465.
Kshetrajna, 'embodied spirit,' a form of Viisha, 14. n. 21.
Kshudra, s. of Prasenajit, 464.
Kubja made straight by Krishna, 550.
Kuchira, a river, 183.
Kubhu, d. of Angira, 52. a river, 185. n. 80. last day of the moon's wane, 235.
Kukura, s. of Andhaka, 435.
Kukkuraksa, a people, 193.
Kukkurungakrsa, a people, 193. n. 120.
Kukhali, d. of Priyavrata, 161.
Kukura, a people, 187.
Kuladhyaya (Kuladhyya), a country, 188.
Kulaparvatas, mountain ranges in central India, 174.
Kulatthas, a people, 194.
Kulindas, a people, 193.
Kulindaspatyaksa, a people, 192.
Kulota, a people, 191. n. 86.
Kuma, a Prajapati, 50. n. 2. s. of the Vasu, Agni, 120.
Kumra, a river, 176.
Kumarka, a division of Bharta-varsha, 175. n. 3.
Kumbhaka, suspension of breath, 623.
Kumbhakarshas, s. of Vasvavas, 83. n. 5.
Kumudha, a minor Dwipa, 175. n. 3. a mountain, 168. n. 6.
Kumulid, teacher of the Atharva-veda, 283.
Kumudvat, a river, 185. n. 80.
Kundaka, s. of Kshudraka, 454.
Kundak, a river, 183.
Kundinapur, capital of Vardbha, 473.
Kunt, a prince, 390.
Kuntalaka, a people, 185. 190. 192.
Kundabhaka, a people, 193.
Kunt, s. of Dharmatra, 416. s. of Kratha, 422.
Kunti (Prithi), d. of Sar, 437. adopted by Kuntibhoja, and married to Padma, ib. her sons, ib. and 459.
Kuntibhoja, adopts Priyadarsi, 437.
Kuntikas, a people, 192. n. 114.
Kunti, a people, 187.
Kupataya, a people, 194. n. 148.
Kurari, a mountain, 169.
Kurma Puruda, 284. analysis of, xilix.
Kuru, s. of Agnidhra, 162. k. of the country between the Sweta and Sringavam mountains, 163. s. of Samvara, 455.
Kurus, a people of Bharata, 176. 177. n. 6. 185.
Kuruvardhaka, a people, 192.
Kuruvatya, a prince, 423.
Kusa, 'sacrificial' grass, 106. n. 3. name of a Dwipa, 166. people, mountains, rivers of, 199.
Kusa, s. of Bama, 385. k. of Kusasthali, 386. n. 17. s. of Valakasha, 399.
Kusachira, a river, 183.
Kusadhara, a river, 183.
Kusadhvaja, k. of Kali, 390. s. of Sankasa, ib. n. 5.
Kusagira, s. of Vrindhara, 455.
Kusales, a people, 190.
Kusu, a people, s. of Kusa, 390. founder of Kusambi, ib. n. 9.
Kusamba, a prince, 399.
Kusandha, a people, 185. n. 7.
Kusasthali, a city, 355. also Dwarka, 356.
Kusavindus, a people, 192.
Kusha, teacher of the Sama-veda, 383.
Kushamahdas, a class of divinities, 90.
Kusha, a prince, 399. n. 9.
Kushaka, a mountain, 180. n. 3.
Kushasha, a mountain, 180. n. 3.
Kuthumi, teacher of the Sama-veda, 282.
Kusaparantasa, a people, 190.
Kulayadwa, s. of Vrindaswa, 361. a name of Pratardsana, 402.
Kuvera, s. of Visvasa, 83. n. 5. lord of wealth, and k. of the Yakshas, 153. n. 1.
L.
Laghu, a measure of time, fifteen Ksastha, 22. n. 3.
Lalaka, 'modesty,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 54.
INDEX.

Lakshmaná, s. of Dáśaratha, 384.
Lakshmaná, w. of Kriśhna, 578.
Lakshámi, 'prosperity,' d. of Dáksha, w. of Dharma, 54. 119, n. 12. d. of Dháru, 59, n. 81. wife and counterpart of Vlshá, 60. born from the ocean, and taken by Vlshá, 76. hymned by Indra, 78.
Lálábáksa, a hell, 207. sins punished in, 208.
Lambé, d. of Dáksha, w. of Dharma, 119.
Lambodara, a prince, 478.
Land, measures of, 45, n. 6.
Lángala, a people, 152, n. 97.
Lángalí, teacher of the Sáma-veda, 283.
Lángalíni, a river, 185, n. 80.
Lángó, translator of the Hari-vána, lix.
Lánika, an island, 175, n. 3.
Lauhitá, a river, 184. the Brahmaputra, ib. n. 75.
Lava, a. of Ráma, 385. k. of Srásastí, 386, n. 17.
Lava, a measure of time, three Vedás, 23, n. 3.
Lavá, an Aśura, 383. a hell, 207. crimes punished in, 208.
Lekas, a class of deities, 263.
Leśa, s. of Subotra, 406.
Libations, bow offered, 302.
Liberation, when effected, 658.
Light, or fire, the elements, 16. see Tejas.
Lingá Puráña, 284. analysis of, xiii.
Lobha, s. of Brahmá, 50. 212. a. of Dharma, 55. s. of Adharmá; married to Níkítí; their progeny, 56, n. 14.
Lobhatári or Lobháti, a river, 182.
Lobhita, a class of deities, 268.
Lokákáshi, teacher of the Sáma-veda, 283.
Lokáloka, mountain, 202.
Lokapálas, four, 153. 230. eight, 169, n. 10.
Lokas, 'worlds' or 'spheres,' 48, n. 10. described, 212.
Lomahárana, name of Súta, 276.
M.
Macrobius teaches God the limit of the universe, 315, n. 9.
Máda, s. of Brahmá, 50, n. 2.
Mádyanti, w. of Saudása, 381.
Mádhava, a month, 225.
Mádhvana, a tribe, descendants of Mádhu the son of Vrisha, 418.
Mádhuvana, a month, 225.
Mádhvá, s. of Kárta vasvárya, 417. s. of Vrisha, 418. s. of Devakástra, 422. an Asura, killed by Sárugrha, 385.
Mádhumattá, a people, 191.
Mádhuvána, site of Márthu, 90.
Mádhuváni, a river, 183.
Mádhváchara, date of, x.
Mádhvádina, s. of Kálpá, 58, n. 1.
Mádhvádina, teacher of the white Yajush, 281, n. 5.
Mádri, w. of Vásudeva, 439.
Madra, s. of Sivi, 444.
Madra, a river, 185, n. 80.
Madrabhujínas, a people, 187.
Madras, a people, 177. and n. 6.
Mádreyas, a people, 183.
Mádrí, w. of Pádú, 437. 459. w. of Kriśhna, 578.
Magadha, a country; kings of, 456.
Magadhá, 'bard,' origin of, 102.
Maghdás, a people, 177. and n. 6, 188.
Maghá, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Magha, a month, 225, n. 19.
Mahábhádara, a lake, 159.
Mahábhárata, a heroic poem, composed by Vyása, 275, lviii.
Mahábhícjaa, s. of Búswata, 424.
Mahádeva, a Rudra, 58.
Mahádevita, a prince, 350.
Mahágyáni, a river, 184.
Mahájávalí, a hell, 207. crimes punished in, 208.
Mahámanas, a prince, 444.
Mahánámani, a prince, 444.
Mahámohá, 'extreme illusion;' kind of ignorance, 34, n. 2.
Mahán, a Rudra, 59, n. 4.
Mahásháma, s. of Hinayardsáka, 147.
Maháshána, a river, 185, n. 80.
Maháárandi, s. of Nandivardháná, 467.
Maháshilá, a serpent, 149, n. 16.
Maháshánti, s. of Dhámit, 165.
Maháyádána, a serpent, s. of Kádrú, 149. a king, s. of Mahááná, 467.
Maháyágá, a river, 183, n. 54.
Maháyáprushá, name of Vláshi, 2. 'supreme spirit,' ib. n. 2.
Mahárákshá, a country, 188, n. 38.
Mahá-ákára, heaven of celestialis, 48, n. 10. site of, 213. remains at a Prajáya, 632.
Maháromán, a prince, 350.
Maháswat, a prince, 387.
Mahást, 'intellect,' first product of Prajána, 14. synonyms and definitions, 14, n. 32. threefold: 'origin of Ahánkára, 15.
Mahátala, a division of Páála, 204.
Maháváchi, a hall, 207, n. 2.
Mahávára, s. of Priyávátra, 163, n. 3. son of Sa-vana, 200.
Mahávára, a division of Pusákha-dwípa, 200.
Maháváryá, s. of Vrbhadúktha, 390. s. of Bha-vanamánu, 450.
Maháváshubha, equinoctial period, 225.
Mahá-vedánas, five, 204, n. 3.
Maháyuga, aggregate of four ages, 24, n. 4.
Mahádrona, a range of mountains, 174, a star, 241.
Mahádri, a river, 183.
Mahásávara produces Virábhádara, 65. sends him to disturb Dáksha's sacrifice, 66.
Máheya, a people, 190.
Máhí, a river, 185, n. 80.
Mahikás (Mahihaas), a people, 188.
INDEX.

Mabinasa, a Rudra, 59, n. 4.
Mahishakas, a people, 189, n. 54. 192.
Mahishmati, a prince of the Yavu race, 416.
Mahishmati, a city, 189, n. 54.
Mahid, a river, 182.
Mahodaya, a city; same as Kanoj, 399, n. 9.
Mahopam, a river, 183.
Mahyatarama, a people, 190.
Mainaka, s. of Himavat, 85, n. 11. a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Maitreya, disciple of Parshara, to whom the Yavu Purana is related in reply to his inquiries, 3. a Rishi; s. of Kusharava; one of the interlocutors of the Bhagavata, 3, n. 10. s. of Mitrau, 454, n. 53.
Maitreya, a tribe of Brahmanas from Mitrau, 454, n. 53.
Maitri, friend of Daksaha, w. of Dharma, 45, n. 12.
Makand, a city, 187, n. 20. 454, n. 49.
Makari, a river, 183.
Maladas, a people, 190, n. 70.
Malajas, a people, 190.
Malas, a people, 185. and n. 5.
Malavas, a people, 193.
Malavartis, a people, 185, n. 5.
Malavas, a people, 177. and n. 6, 193.
Malaya, a chain of mountains, 174.
Malayas, a people, 188.
Malina, s. of Tana, 448, n. 12.
Malas, a people, 188.
Mallarshtra, a country, 188.
Malavas, a people, 193.
Malyavan, a mountain at the base of Meru, 169.
Manasa, mind, synonyme of Mahat, 14, n. 22.
Manasa, a form of Vishnu, 265.
Manasa, a lake, 169.
Manasottara mountain, 200. cities of the gods on, 218.
Manasawini, w. of Mrikaasha, 83, n. 1.
Manasu, s. of Mahanta, 165, n. 1. of Pravira, 447.
Manavarajas, a people, 190.
Mansa, a platform, 553. note.
Mandagi, a river, 185, n. 80.
Mandakira, an island, 175, n. 3.
Moffakshas, a people, 187, 193, n. 132.
Mandakin, a river, 184.
Mandavshini, a river, 184.
Mandheas, enemies of the sun, 223.
Mandhi, a prince, s. of Yuvanaswa, 365.
Moffakeya, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277.
Mangala, 'Marr,' s. of Svarna, 50.
Mangala-pratsha, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Mati, a serpent, 149, n. 16.
Manibhima, a king, 480.
Maning, a river, 184.
Manjik, a river, 184.
Manojas, s. of the Rudra Idana, 59, s. of the Vasu Anila, 120. Indra of the sixth Manwantara, 263.
Manu, a sage presiding over a Manwantara, 23.
computation of time of, 26, note. of the first period, 51. of the second, 360. third, 261.
fourth and fifth, 262. sixth, 263. seventh, 264.
eighth, 267. ninth to the twelfth, 268. thirteenth and fourteenth, 269. sons of each, 261.
&c.
Manu, a Rudra, 59, n. 4. s. of Krista, 123.
Manvantara, nature and duration of, 24, n. 6.
Indras, Manus, &c. of, 259.
Maricha, s. of Sunda, 147, n. 1.
Marichi, a Prajapati, 49. marries Sambhuti, 54.
his posterity, 82, n. 2.
Marichigarbas, a class of deities, 268.
Maha, d. of Kau and Pramloch, 113. her former life, 114. married to the Prachetana, 115.
Maraaksha, s. of Mrikaasha.
Maraaksha Purana, named, 284. analysis of, xxiii.
Marriage, directions for, 208. modes of, 299.
Marshti, s. of Stera, 439.
Martham, s. of Stera, 439.
Marutikavatas, princes of Mrittikavati, 424.
Maru, s. of Sighra, 387. still living, ib. s. of Sighra, 384, n. 15. s. of Hayaswa, 390.
Marubhamas, a people, 189, n. 63.
Marudeva, a prince, 463.
Marut-loka, heaven of the winds and Vaisya, 48.
n. 10.
Maruta or 'winds,' forty-nine, the children of Diti, 152. sons of Marutwati, 120. give Bhrandwiya to Bharata, 449, n. 13.
Marutta, s. of Arisht, 353. his magnificence
553. s. of Karandham, 442.
Marutwati, d. of Daksaha, w. of Dharma, 119.
Mathur, a holy city, founded by Satrughna, 90.
conquered by him, 385.
Mati, 'understanding,' synonyme of Mahat, 14.
n. 22.
Matinara, s. of Riksha, 447, n. 1.
Matkusa, a river, 185, n. 80.
Mataya, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277, n. 8.
Mataya, a minor Dwipa, 175, n. 3.
Mataya Purusa, notice of, 284. analysis of, li.
Matyas, a people, 185, n. 6, 186, n. 12.
Maudga, teacher of the Sama-veda, 282.
Maudgalyas, a class of Brahmanas, 454.
Mausas, a race of kings, 475, n. 64.
Mauyvas, a tribe of Gandharvas, 370.
Mauyvas, kings of Magadha, 468.
Mays, a Danyva, 148, n. 11.
Mai, personified active will of the Creator, 21.
Mayadevi, finds and marries Pradyumna, 578.
formerly Rati, 577.
INDEX

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Measures of time, 22. of land, 45. n. 6.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medha, s. of Priyavrata, 162.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medhiā, 'intelligence,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 44.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medhiā, s. of Priyavrata, 162. k. of Plakshadwipa, ib. his sons, 197. s. of Kaśvā, 444. 452.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medhikra, a prince, 462.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medicine, branches and teachers of, 407. n. 11.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meghaśwati, a prince, 472.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mekalā, a Rishi, father of Narmadā, 186, n. 18.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mekalā, the Narmadā, 186, n. 18.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mekalās, a people, 186.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Men proceeded from Brahmā, 40.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Menā, d. of the Pitrīs, 84. d. of Meru, w. of Himavat, 85. n. 11.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Menā (Senā), a river, 183.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Menākśa, a divine nymph, 150. n. 21.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mendicants, duties of, 295.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meru, w. of Nābhi, 163.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meru, mountain in the centre of Jambu-dwipa, 166. its dimensions and form, 167. and n. 2. mountain-ridges, cities of the gods, 169. rivers, 170. situation, 171. boundaries, 172.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Merubhītatas, a people, 189.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meru-mandara mountain, south of Meru, 168, n. 6.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Meru-sāvarūsa, the ninth to the twelfth Manu, 268, n. 8.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mināśā, 'theology,' 284.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minarathā, a prince, 390.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mind, an organ of sense, 18.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mirakēśi, a nymph, 150. n. 21.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mithi, a prince, s. of Nimi, 389. father of Janaka, ib n. 3.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mithilā, a country, 389. n. 3.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mitra, an Aditya, 123. presides over the organs of excretion, 17. n. 28. s. of Vasiṣṭhā, 83. n. 8.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mitrasana, s. of Sudās, a prince, 380.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mitraśrīdātā, w. of Krīṣhṇa, 578.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mitraya, a teacher of the Purāṇas, 283. s. of Divodāsa, 454.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mleccha, degraded Kṣatriyas, 375. people of the west and south of India, 376, n. 19. 443. n. 4. subjects of Turavau, ib. n. 5. people of the north, 443. kings of, 477. 482. n. 76.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mōha, 'stupendition,' a property of sensible objects, 17. n. 27. a kind of ignorance, 34. n. 2.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mōha, s. of Brahmā, 50. n. 2.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motheism of the Purāṇas, 19. n. 33.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mountha, four kinds, 223. n. 16.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moon, produced from the ocean, 76. chariot and horses of, &amp;c. 237. source of ambrosia, ib.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mot, of the Phenicians; analogy of with Mahat, q. v., 13. n. 19.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mountains, boundary of the earth, 167. of Meru, 169. 171. of Bhārata-varsha, 174. of the different Dwipas, 197, et seq.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mountainneens, tribes of, 101. n. 1.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrigavīthi, a division of the lunar mansions, 226. n. 21.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrīdhu, a prince, 462.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrīdum, a prince, 435.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrīgārīra, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrīgıyādhā, a Rudra, 121.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrīkaṇḍā, s. of Vidhātrī and Niryatī, 82.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrītikārātī, a city, 424.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mrītyu, 'death,' s. of Brahmā, 50. n. 2. s. of Bhaya; his children, 56. s. of Kali, 56. n. 14. a Rudra, 121. n. 17. a Vyāsa, 272.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muchukunda, s. of Māndhātrī, 363. destroys Kālayavana, 567. praises Krīṣṇa, 567. goes to Gandhasādana, 569.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mudā, s. of Dharma, 55. n. 12.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mudgula, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277. a prince, s. of Haryāśa, 454.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muhītā, a river, 183. n. 16.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūhūrta, a measure of time, thirty Kālās, 22. twelve Kahanas; thirty Kālās and one-tenth; two Nārīkās, 23. n. 3.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūhūrthā, d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 119.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūkā, s. of Upasunda, 147. n. 1.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūkhyas, a class of deities, 267.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mukminatā, a river, 184.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mukunda, a mountain, 169.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūlā, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūlāka, a prince; also Nārīkāvachā, 383.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mummies, prepared by the Hindus, 388. n. 2.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muddās, a race of kings, 474-475, n. 64.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muni, an sage, 4. &amp;c.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muni, d. of Daksha, w. of Kaśyapa, 122.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Munjakesā, a teacher of the Atharva-veda, 283.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mura, slain by Krīṣṇa, 582.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūrti, 'form,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 55. n. 12.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murundas, a race of kings, 475. n. 64.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Musala, 'a club,' born of Śamba for the destruction of the Yādavas, 657.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūxakas, a people, 193. 193.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mūxikas, a people, 192.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mushīka killed by Balarāma, 557. N.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabha, s. of Vipraḥchītī, 148.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabāga, s. of Vairavasas, 348, n. 4. 358.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabāga, s. of Nediśāṭa, 351. becomes a Vaiṣṇa, 352. s. of Nabāga, 358. s. of Sruṭa, 379. s. of Yaṭā, 384, n. 15.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabāgaṇedīṣṭa, s. of Vairavasas, 348, n. 4.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabhās, a month, 225.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabhās, s. of Nala, 386.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabhāswatī, w. of Antardhaṇa, 106, n. 7.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabhāsya, a month, 225.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nabhī, s. of Agūḍhīra, 162. k. of Hima, ib.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nāgā, a mountain-branch of Meru, 169. mountains in India, 180, n. 3.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nāga, a serpent, s. of Kadrū, 149.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nāga-dwipa, a division of Bhārata-varsha, 175. 8 M</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX

Nagara, a city, 46, n. 6.
Nágas, ‘snake-gods,’ children of Kadru, 149.
larassed by the Gandharvas, 370.
Nágas, kings of Pādmapāti, 479.
Nágavíthi, d. of Váñi, 120.
Nágavíthi, division of the lunar mansions, 226, n. 21.
Nágara, a naked ascetic, 333.
Nágnajití, w. of Krishña, 578.
Náhuśa, s. of Ambarsāha, 354, n. 15. s. of Ayus, 466. his descendant, 415. legend of, ib. n. 1.
Nágahus, a serpent, 140, n. 16.
Nájana, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278, n. 10.
Nágamayí, s. of Kumára, 120.
Nájakarṇikhas, a people, 187.
Nájiritis, a people, 190.
Nájishadha princes, 480, n. 73.
Nájakatra-yoginis, stars of the twenty-seven lunar mansions; daughters of Dakhsha; wives of Chandrav, 123, n. 22.
Nákta, s. of Pritvá, 165.
Nákulí, s. of Páddhu, 437, 459.
Nála, a prince, s. of Náishadha, 386. s. of Yudá, 416.
Náli, a river, 184.
Nálikánakas, a people, 192.
Nálim, a river, 171, n. 12.
Námmí, s. of Víprachíshthi, 148.
Nanda, chief of the cowherds, leaves Mathurá, 505. goes to Vrindásavana, 509. s. of Vasudéva, 439. s. of Mahánanda, 420.
Nandá, grove of Indra, 169.
Nándás, dynasty of, 467.
Nándáyaníya, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278, n. 12.
Nándi, ‘delight,’ w. of Kámá, 55.
Nándimukhas, a class of Pitrás, 297, 315.
Nándivardhánas, s. of Uдárasa, 390. s. of Janaka, 466. s. of Udyáśína, 467.
Náma, a sage, s. of Dharma, 55, n. 13. s. of Vás, 165. s. of Sudhárití, 353. s. of Bhavanmána, 450.
Nára, ‘waters,’ first product of Nara, 28, n. 2.
Nára, a Prajapáti, 40, n. 2. dissuades the sons of Daksáha from multiplying their races, 117. cursed by Daksáha, by Bhráma; his former birth, &c. 118, n. 10. apprises Kansa of his danger, 498. praises Krishńa, 540.
Nánda Puráda, analysis of, 321.
Náradá, a Puráda, 284, xxxi.
Nárikas, s. of Anúrita, 36. s. of Víprachíshthi, 148. s. of Earth; his tyranny, 591. killed by Krishńa, 592.
Nárikas, ‘hells’ below the earth, 207. punishments inflicted in, ib.
Nárikas, ‘centaurs,’ from Bhráma, 42.
Náráyaña, a name of Vishńu, meaning of, 27. a sage, s. of Dharma, 55, n. 13. a prince, 471.
Nárhánántara, s. of Vávaśwáta, 348. his descendant, 591, n. 20. s. of Marutí, 353.
Nárikas, fifteen Laghús, 22, n. 3.
Nárikavácha, a prince, 383.
Narmadá, a river, 176. sister of the Nágas, 370. prayer to her, ib. mother of Trasadasíya, 371.
Navalá, d. of Vairája, w. of Chákshusha Manu, 98.
Navarathá, a prince, 422.
Naya, s. of Dharma, 55.
Nádevá, s. of Vávaśwáta, 348.
Náchaka, a prince, removes the capital, 461.
Nichtitá, a river, 182.
Nádghá, pupil of Ribbhu, legend of, 254.
Nídrá, ‘sleep,’ a form of Bhráma, 40, n. 15. produced from the ocean, 78, n. 8.
Níghína, s. of Anamítya, 435.
Níkiritá, d. of Adhárama, 56.
Níkumbá, a prince, 382.
Níla, a range of mountains, 167. mountains in Orissa, 180, n. 3.
Níla, s. of Yudá, 416, n. 2. s. of Ajámída, 453.
Nilalohíta, s. of Rudra, 58, n. 2.
Niliní, w. of Ajámída, 453.
Níma, measure of time, 22, n. 3. three Lávas, ibid.
Ními, s. of Ichhástva, 357. cursed by Vásáshthá, 388. placed on the eyelids of men, 389. s. of Bhajumpána, 424.
Nípa, s. of Pára, 452.
Níramítra, s. of Nakula, 460. s. of Kháshapáni, 462. s. of Ayutáya, 465.
Nírmání, a class of deities, 268.
Níririta, a Rudra, 121, n. 17.
Níruktá, an Anga of the Vedas, 284.
Níruktákrit, author of a glossary of the Rig-veda, 278.
Nirvindhá, a river, 176, 185, n. 10.
Nírviriti, a prince, 422.
Nísvátha, s. of Balarámaná, 439.
Nísvátha, a Rishi, 261.
Níshá, a river, 182, n. 17.
Níshá, a river, 182.
Nísháhá, a barbarian, his origin, 100.
Níshádas, barbarians, 190.
Níshadhá, a range of mountains, south of Meru, 167. east of Meru, 172.
Níshadhá, a prince, 386.
Níshadhá, a river, 185, n. 80.
Níshadhás, a people, 190.
Níshtha, s. of Kalpa, 98, n. 1.
Níshunda, s. of Hílá, 147, n. 1.
Nítaíla, a division of Pátíla, 204.
Nívárik, a river, 182.
Nívárikaváchas, a class of Dénavas, 148, n. 12.
Níyama, duties so called, 288, n. 2. 653.
INDEX

Niyama, s. of Dharma, 52.
Niyati, w. of Vidhātī, 82. d. of Meru, 85, n. 11.
Niyut, w. of Mahān, 59, n. 4.
Nṛchakshu, a prince, 462.
Nṛga, s. of Vaivasvata, his descendants, 391, n. 20. changed to a lizard, ib.
Nṛparanjaya, s. of Suvira, 453. s. of Medhāvin, 462.
Nṛṣyāṇa, 'hospitality,' 204, n. 3.
Nṛṣogrodha, s. of Ugrasena, 456.
Nyāya, 'logic,' 284.

O.

Oblations, daily, with fire, 303.
Obsequial rites, three kinds of, 318. by whom performed, ib.
Ocean churned, 75.
Odra, a country, 192, n. 102.
Oghavati, a river, 185.
On, mystical and initiatory syllable; the monosyllabic Brahman; a type of the three worlds, of Brahman, of the Vedas, 1, n. 1. 273. type of Vāsudeva, 274, n. 6.
Oṣthika-kāraṇakas, a people, 187, n. 22.
Oxayvrae, the Śūdra people, 195, n. 153.

Pāda, 'past' Kalpa, or day of Brahman, 25.
Pāda Purāṇa, name, 284. analysis of, xvii.
Pādmapati, a city, 480, n. 69.
Pāhlavas, a people, 185, n. 61. 195, n. 158.
Pāhiniras, a people, 189. 195. conquered by Sa,

Pāli, pupil of Vyāsa, 275. compiler of the Rigveda, 277.
Pākṣayana, sort of sacrifice, 292, n. 3.
Pāldaka, a fortnight, 233.
Pālaka, s. of Pradyota, 466.
Pālasi, a river, 183.
Pālīn, s. of Prithu, 106.
Pālitrī, a prince, 420. ruler of Videha, 421.
Pampā, a river, 185, n. 80.
Panchadāsa hymna, from Brahman, 42.
Panchanjana, a demon, killed by Krishā, 562.
Panchanjaya, an island, 175, n. 3.
Panchāla, a country, 454. n. 49.
Pancha-lakṣhana, epithet of the Purāṇas, iv.
Pānchali, a people, 176, 177, n. 6. 185, n. 1. 186, and n. 20. sons of Harīyāswa, 454.
Pancha, a river, 183.
Pandara, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Pāṇḍava, s. of Dhritri and Ayati, married to Puru-darīkā, 82, n. 1. s. of Vyāsa, 459. married to Pārītah, 437. their sons, ib.

Pānagni, teacher of the Rigveda, 278, n. 12.
Pāncarasatras, a people, 188.
Pāpa, a hell, 207.
Pāpaksha, a river, 183.
Pārā, s. of Anu, 445. s. of Prithusena, 452. s.
of Samara, ib.
Pārā or Pārā, a river, 182. and n. 22.
Pāra, mystical meanings of, 113, n. 3.
Pāradas, a people, 189, n. 60. conquered by Sagara, 374.

Pāramāṇa, two equal to one Anu, 22, n. 3.
Pāramāṇa, the duration of Brahman's life, 22.
Pāramatmā, name of Vishnu, 2, n. 2.
Pārameswara, s. of Indradhumas, 164. s. of Anu, 444.

Pārāśā, a people, 189.
Pārśādham, half of Brahman's life, 22. 25. a different period, 630.

Pārās, a class of deities, 268.
Pārāsanāyakas, a people, 193, n. 125.
Pārśā, grandson of Vāsishtha, s. of Śakti or Śaktri, 4, n. 12. performs a sacrifice to destroy the Rāksasas, and is stopped by his grandsire, 4. Pulastya teaches him the Vishnu Purāna, 5.

he relates it to Maitreya, 6. one of the Vyāsas, 277. teacher of a branch of the Rigveda, 277.
teacher of the Śāma-veda, 282, n. 2.
Pārāsikas, a people, 177, and n. 6, 194.
Pārāśorama, s. of Jamadagni, 401. beheld his mother, 402. kills the Kṣatriyas, 403. gives the earth to the Brahman, ib. retires to Mahendra mountain, 404.
Pārātikas, a people, 194, n. 149.
Pāratanāyakas, a people, 193.
Pārāvatas, a class of divinities, 260.
Pārvatī, a prince, 419.
Pārvatī, a mountain-peak, 255. mentioned in the fourth month, 76. taken away from heaven by Kṛṣṇa, 586. returns thither, 613.
Pārkhita, s. of Kuru, 455. s. of Abhimanyus, 460.
made king, 619. Bhāgavata related to him, xxv.
Pārāśā, a name of Prachāna, 13, n. 19.
Pārīpātra, a range of mountains, 174. northern portion of the Vindhyā chain, n. 2.
Pārīpātra, a prince, 586.
Pārīplavas, a people, 452.
Pārīyātra, a mountain-range, west of Meru, 172.
same as Pārīpātra, q. v.
Pārvatara, 'cyclic year,' 224.
Pārjunyā, k. of clouds, 153, n. 1.
Pārjunyā, w. of Marichi, 83, n. 3.
Pārī, teacher of the white Yajush, 281, n. 5.
Pārvāna Śrīdharas, worship of progenitors at lunar periods, 8c. 322.
Pārvās, periods of impurity, 312.
Pārvās, s. of Paurāṇikās, 82, n. 2.
Pārvās, w. of Pārvās, 82, n. 2.
Pārvatiyas, mountaineers, 192.
Paśīvāsas, a people, 193.
Paśu, a heifer, 58.
Paśu, s. of animal sacrifice,' 275, n. 1.
Paśu, regions below the earth, description of, 204. name of one division of, ib. cities of, 205, n. 2.
Pātāla, a sun, 635, n. 6.
INDEX.

Pāṭalavati, a river, 183.
Pāṭaliputra, capital of Magudha, 474, n. 63.
Pataung, a mountain, 169, a sun, 632, n. 5.
Path, heavenly, of the Pitrīs, 226, of the gods, 227, of Vīshṇu, 228.
Pathya, teacher of the Sāma-veda, 182.
Pattis, a people, 195.
Pauan, a prince, 472.
Paumitra, a king, 478.
Paulomi, w. of Bhrigu, 82, n. 1.
Paulonas, a class of Dānavas, 148.
Pauṇḍaraka assumes the title and insignia of Kṛṣṇa, 598, is killed by him, 599.
Pauṇḍras, a people, 192.
Pauras, a race of kings, 477.
Pauravas, descendants of Puru, 453.
Pauravī, w. of Vasudeva, 439.
Paurāsamsa, s. of Marichi and Sambhūti, 82.
Paurāśamsa, day of full moon, 225.
Pausha, a month, 225, n. 19.
Paushyini (Paushpāñjī), teacher of the Sāma-veda, 282.
Pāvaka, s. of Agni, 84, s. of Antardhāna, 106,
n. 2, chief of the Vaisāyas, 153.
Pāvamāna, s. of Agni, 84, s. of Antardhāna, 106,
n. 2.
Pavanī, a river, 171, n. 12.
Pavitrap, a river, 183.
Pavitras, a class of deities, 269.
Payoshti, a river, 176, Payān Gangā, 181, n. 11.
Paśa, a month, 225, n. 19.
Pṛichchali, a river, 163.
Pṛipārāka, a tirthā, 606.
Pṛifā, offered at Śrīdradhā, 315.
Pūngala, a Rūdra, 121, n. 17.
Pinjāla, a river, 183.
Pipal tree, on Vipula mountain, 168.
Pipala, part of Jambu-dvipa, 166, n. 1.
Pippalāśa, teacher of the Atharva-veda, 283.
Pīśāchā, the son of Kṣitigarbha, 132, n. 19.
Pīśāchas, born from Brahmā, 42, children of Pi-śāchā, 150, n. 18.
Pīśāchikā, a river, 183, n. 80.
Piṇḍa, sthūnas, where Devi is worshipped, 499,
n. 26, lvi.
Piti-locana, heaven of the Pitrīs and Brahmans, 47,
48, n. 10.
Pitrīs, proceed from Brahmā, 40, sons of Angiras, 123, n. 25, path of, 226, classes and kinds of, 322, n. 1, song of, 323, food grateful to, 322, song of, 333.
Pītiśajas, 'obsequial rites,' 294, n. 3.
Pivari, w. of Vedaśiras, 82, n. 1, d. of, 83, n. 6.
Pivadā, inscriptions of, 470, n. 23.
Pīkṣa, a Dwipa, 166, divisions, mountains, rivers, people of, 157.
Poison, produced from the ocean, 76, drunk by Śīrā, 78, note.
Pooley, translation of the Upanishads by, ii. note.
Prabhā, d. of Swarabhānu, 147, w. of Namuchi, mother of Nabhuṣa, ib. n. 5, w. of the sun, 266, n. 1, w. of Kalpa, 98, n. 1.
Prabhākara, a Rāshi, 448, n. 8.
Prabhās, a Vasu, 120.
Prabhās, a place of pilgrimage, 561.
Prabhās, s. of the sun, 266, n. 1.
Prachetas, a deity, presides over the tongue, 17,
n. 28.
Prachetas, a prince of the race of Duryu, 443.
Prachetas, ten sons of Prāchinavarśiḥ, 107.
Prāchinavarśiḥ, s. of Haviṁbrahu, 106.
Prakhvat, s. of Jumnejaya, 447.
Prāchya, a people, 192.
Pradāraṇas, a class of deities, 261.
Pradāhana, 'primary matter,' a form of Vīshnu, 9, properties of, 10, and n. 14, same as Prakṛiti,
10, equipose of the three qualities, 10, n. 18.
656, one with Brahmā, 12, agitated, influenced, or entered into, by Vīshnu or Puruṣa, 13, n. 19, merges into spirit, 656.
Pradyota, a prince, 466.
Pradhānā, name of Vīshnu, 2, n. 2.
Pradōsha, s. of Kalpa, 58, n. 1.
Pradyumna, s. of Kṛishṇa and Rukmini, 574, carried off by Samba, 575, brought up by Māyādevi, ib. kills Samba, 576.
Prālikā, s. of Hirāyakāśipu, 124, devotee to Vīshnu, 127, persecuted by his father, 128.
Vīshnu appears to him, 144, makes him k. of the Daityas, 145, 153, his descendants, 147.
Prakāśā, a people, 188.
Prakāśā, a prince, 352.
Prapāti, a Vyāsa, 272.
Prapājātī, mind-born sons of Brahmā, variously enumerated, 49, n. 2, born from parts of Brah-mā's body; from the fires of a sacrifice; sons (twenty-one) of Daksha, 50, n. 2, married to the daughters of Daksha, 54.
Prapājātya-yajna, 'begetting offspring,' 294, n. 3.
Prapājātya-yajna, synonyme of Mahāt, 15, note.
Prakṛiti, 'primary creation,' 37, n. 12, 'elemental dissolution,' 12, 630, 635.
Prakṛiti: see Pradhāna.
Pralaya, 'dissolution,' fourfold, 56, account of, 621, three kinds of, 630, incidental, ib. elemental, 634, final, 638.
Pramochā, a nymph; her dwelling with Kālu, 110, a divine nymph, 150, n. 21.
Pramudia, s. of Brahmā, 50, n. 2.
Prāṇā, a measure of time, 23, n. 3.
Prāṇā, s. of Dhātrī and Ayāti, 82, a Rāshi, 261.
Prāṇāyāma, 'suppression of breath,' 8c. 653.
Pramūṣa, s. of Vaiśvavasūrya, 348, s. of Vatsapri, 357.
Prāpīti, w. of Kāma, 563.
Prasūna, s. of Dharma, 55, n. 13.
Prasūna, s. of Nighna, 425, killed by a lion, 429.
INDEX.

Prasenajit, s. of Krišdāwa, 362. s. of Ratula, 464.
Prasāya, s. of Dharma, 53, n. 13.
Pratāra, s. of Uḍgītha, 105.
Pratistās, a class of deities, 363.
Prasūmas, a people, 188, n. 46.
Prasuraka, a prince, 584, n. 15, 387.
Pradī, d. of Śvayambhula Manu, 53. married to Dakaha; their twenty-four daughters, 54.
ægological, 54, n. 12.
Prāthah, s. of Kālpa, 58, n. 1.
Pratardana, s. of Divodāsa, 407.
Pratibandhaka, a prince, 390.
Pratibimbha, ‘reflection,’ a form of Brāhma, 40, n. 15.
Pratihāra, s. of Parameshtihin, 164.
Pratihārtī, s. of Pratihāra, 164.
Pratikabha, s. of Kshatravrīḍhha, 412. s. of Samin, 456.
Pratimāsya (Pratimāsya), a people, 190.
Pratila, s. of Dīlīpa, 457.
Pratisarga, ‘secondary creation,’ 27, n. 1.
Pratishthāna, capital of Sudyumna, 350.
Pratīvāha, s. of Śvayaḥalka, 435.
Prativindhyas, s. of Yudhīthāha, 459.
Pratipyoman, a prince, 453.
Pratīyāha, ‘control of the senses,’ 653.
Pratīya, a secondary creation, 37, n. 11.
Pratīyāha, a Vasu, 130.
Pravā, d. of Dakaha, w. of Kaśyapa, 132, n. 19.
Pravaha, a wind, 240.
Pravāra, a river, 153.
Prativāsa, a prince, 473.
Pravīna, s. of Prachinvaṭ, 447. s. of Puru, ib. n. 1.
Pravṛṣṭā, s. of Harṣyāva, 454.
Prāvṛṣṭāya, a people, 190.
Prāyāsāṭita, ‘expiration,’ from Brāhma, 42, n. 31.
Prakāha, a theatre, 553, note.
Prinsep, J., publication of the Mahabhārata, ix.
scriptions and coins deciphered by, 475, note.
11x.
Prasadhāva, a prince, 371. s. of Anāraḍya, 371.
Prasadhāva, s. of Vaivāñjasa, 348. becomes a Śūdra, 351.
Prasahā, s. of Somaka, 455.
Prashtajā, s. of Kumāra, 120.
Prāśi, s. of Anamitra, 435.
Prāśi, d. of Śūra, w. of Pāḍha, 337.
Prathī, ‘earth,’ the element, produced from the rudiment of smell, 16, and n. 25.
Prathī, ‘earth’ personified; dialogue with Vaṁśha, 29. takes the form of a cow in fear of Prithu, 103. named from him, 104. milked by all beings, ib. see Earth.
Prithuh, s. of Veṇa, born, 101. conquers the earth, 103. s. of Pratāra, 165. s. of Anena, 361. s. of Samara, 451. s. of Chitrapa, 435.
Prithudāna, s. of Śaśāntud, 420.
Prithugas, a class of deities, 463.
Prithuṣyā, s. of Śaśāntud, 420.
Prithuṣyās, s. of Śaśāntud, 420.
Prithukarman, s. of Śaśāntud, 420.
Prithvākṛti, s. of Śaśāntud, 420.
Prithulakha, a prince, 445.
Prithurukman, a prince, 420.
Prithusena, a prince, 452.
Prithuvrava, s. of Śaśāntud, 420.
Prithuvas, s. of Śaśāntud, 420.
Priti, ‘affection,’ d. of Daṁka, w. of Pulastya, 54.
Priyavara, s. of Śvayambhula Manu, 53.
Properties of sensible objects, 17, n. 27.
Pṛshaka, a people, 196.
Proṣhtas, a people, 193.
Ptolemy Euergetes, name of in ancient inscription, 470, n. 23.
Pulaka, a Prajāpati, 49. marries Kaśmā, 54. his posterity, 83.
Pulastya, s. of Brahmā, appears to Parāśara, 5.
one of the Prajāpatīs, 49. marries Priti, 54.
their posterity, 83, and n. 5.
Pūlimat, a prince, 473.
Pulindaka, a prince, 471.
Pulindas, barbarians, 186, n. 15, 193.
Pulomā, d. of Vaisvānara, w. of Kaśyapa, 148.
Puloman, a Dānava, s. of Kaśyapa, 147. s. of Vipracitī, father of Śachi, 148, n. 11.
Pulomānchī, last Andhra prince, 473.
Pumā, ‘spirit,’ s. ‘incorporated spirit,’ 2, n. 4.
Purnanava, a lunar mansion, 326, n. 21.
Pūrnavṛsa, a Yādava chief, 436.
Pūrfakrīṣa, a serpent, 149, n. 16. a prince, s. of Naḥbas, 356.
Pūrfakrīṣa, w. of Prāka or Pāṇḍu, 82, n. 1. d. of Vaiśdhūla, 84, n. 8.
Pūrfakrīṣa, a name of Vaiśhūa, 1. ‘having eyes like a lotus,’ 2, n. 2.
Pūrfṣva, s. of Bali, 444.
Pūrfṛda, a fabulous city, 231, n. 4.
Pūṛḍa, a people, 176. 177, n. 6. 190, n. 73.
Pūṇya, d. of Krau, 83, n. 7.
Pūṇya, a river, 184, and n. 79.
Pūṇyaṭana, Kubadha, 358.
Pūra, synonyme of Maḥat, 14, n. 32.
Pūraka, ‘inspiration,’ 653, n. 10.
Pūramālī, a river, 183.
Pūrāṇas, general character of, iii. subject of, v.
classes of, xlii. notices and analyses of them severally, xiv. taught by Vyaśa, 276, by Śūtra, 283. Sanhitās of, ib. eighteen named, 284.
Purandara, Indra of the seventh Manvantara, 264.
Pūrana, s. of Vīsh רק, 360. assists the god; named also Kākata, 361. s. of Śrīnaja, 444. s. of Vindhyāṣākī, 477.
Pūrāvā, a river, 183.
Pūrāṇa (Pūrāṇa), a river, 184.
Pūrnatsaga, a prince, 472.
Pūru, s. of Chakshusha, 58. s. of Vasiṭṭa, 413.
k. of the earth, 415. his descendants, 447.
Pūrūḥbrih, a prince, 423.

8 N
INDEX.

Purūjāsū, a prince, 453.
Purukutsa, a king to whom the Vīshāhu Purūśa was narrated, 9, s. of Māndhātā, 363. assists the Nāgas, at the prayer of Narmadā, 370.
Purumāhā, s. of Hastin, 453.
Puruvāras, s. of Bhadra, 350. his love for Uiruśā, 354. makes fire threadless, 357. traditions of, ib, n. 6. his sons, 398.
Purusha, 'spirit,' a form of Vīshāhu, q. name of Mahat, 15, n. 22.
Purushottama, 'supreme spirit,' a name of Vīshāhu, 8, n. 6.
Puṣva-bhadrapādā, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 31.
Puṇabhirāmā, a river, 183.
Puṇavchittī, a divine nymph, 150, n. 21.
Puṇavajra, name of Vīshāhu, 2.
Puṇavahānē, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Puṇava-pālguṇi, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Pušan, an Aditya, 132.
Puškara, s. of Bharata, 385. k. of Puṣkharavati, 386, n. 17.
Puškara, a Dwipa, 166. description of, 300.
Puṣkvārā textualas, a class of clouds, 231, n. 3.
Puṣkbhī, a prince, 451.
Puṣkhyā, d. of Anarasya, 98.
Puṣkypāśa, a serpent, 149, n. 16.
Puṣkypāti, a river, 185, n. 80.
Puṣkypatirā, first Sungs prince, 471. k. of Me-khyā, 478.
Puṣkvavat, a prince, 455.
Puṣkvavē, a river, 184.
Puṣkhyā, s. of Daka, w. of Dharma, 54. d. of Puṇavāmśa, 82, n. 2.
Puṣkv, a prince, 387.
Puṣkvahā, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Puṇask, d. of Baha, 147, n. 2. a female Asura, killed by Krishā, 506.
Puṇikṣeṇaya, a people, 193, n. 136.
Puτa, s. of Priyavrata, 162. adopts a religious life, ib.
Puṇyāvāhu, a hell, 207. sīva punished in, 208.
Q.
Qualities, three, Satya, Rajas, Tamas, q. v., s. see Guṇas.
R.
Rāga, 'love,' 34, n. 2.
Raghu, a prince, s. of Dirghabāhu, 383. s. of Kṛukutāma, 384, n. 15. s. of Yudh, 416.
Rahasya, a river, 182.
Rāhu, obtains a portion of the Amrita; is beheaded by Vīshāhu; becomes a constellation; causes eclipses, 78. a Dānava, s. of Viprāchittī, and Sinhikā, 140, n. 2. 148, n. 10. k. of meteors, 153, n. 1. his car and horses, 240.
Rahula, s. of Sākya, 463, n. 20.
Railbhya, s. of Sumati, 448, n. 12.
Rain, how formed, 230. kinds of, 231.
Raiyata, s. of Priyavrata, 162, n. 2. the fifth Manu, 265. his birth, ib. n. 14. his sons, 265.
Rudra, 131. a prince, s. of Revata, visits Brahms, 355. gives his daughter to Balarāma, 357.
Raivatā, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Raja, a. of Viraja, 165.
Rāk, meaning of, 104, n. 6.
Rājadhāni, d. of Sūra, 437. w. of Jayasena, ib.
Rajati, a river, 183.
Rajārāja, 'royal states,' 284, n. 8.
Rajā, quality of foulishness, passion, activity, 2, n. 5.
Rajas, s. of Vajasrī, 83.
Rāyavardhāna, a prince, 353.
Rāyavat, s. of Dyutiman, 82.
Raja, s. of Ayus, 406. his descendants, 411.
Rājī, w. of Vivasvat, 266, n. 1.
Rāk, d. of Angiras, 83.
Rāk, day when the moon is round, 225.
Rākshā (Rākhi), an amulet, 506, n. 3.
Rākshas, s. of Kās, parent of the Rākshasas, 150, n. 20.
Rākshasas, descendants of Pulastya, 5, n. 13. proceed from Brahms, 41. children of Surasā, 149, n. 15. of Kās, 150.
Rāma, s. of Daśaratha, his exploits, 384.
Rāma, a prince, 477.
Rāmagiri (Ramtek), a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Ramaša (Ramathas), a people, 194 and n. 150.
Ramānaka, an island, 175, n. 3.
Ramānuja, date of, x.
Rāmas, a people, 177 and n. 6.
Rāma, a heroic poem, British epic, 384.
translations of, 385, n. 13.
Rāmāh, s. of Ayus, 406. his descendants, 412, n. 2.
Rāmbhā, a nymph, 151, n. 21.
Rāmamun Roy, translations from the Vedas, ii.
Rāma, s. of Agnīthra, 162, k. of the country between mount Meru and mount Nile, 163.
Rāmīyaka, a country, 168.
Rāma, a prince, 463.
Rāmatambha, a country, 186, n. 11.
Rāntideva, s. of Saṅkrity, 450.
Rāntiśā, s. of Rīteyu, 447.
Rās dance of Krishā and the Gopīs, 533.
Rāsalomā, w. of Mahānāsa, 59, n. 4.
Rāskala, a division of Pāta, 204, n. 1.
Rāsā, a branch of pharmacy, 407, n. 11.
Rāsilās, an original property of man, 45, n. 5.
Rāśgrāpā, s. of Ugrāsa, 436.
Rāśgrājāśa, d. of Ugrāsa, 436.
Rāthachātrī, a river, 183.
Rāthakrit, a Yakshe, 233.
Rāthantar, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277, n. 7.
Rāthantar, part of the Śāma-veda, from Brahms, 42.
Rāthināra, a prince, 359.
Ratnagurī, a commentator on the Vīshāhu Purāsā, lxxiv.
INDEX.

Rátri, 'night,' a form of Brahám, 40.
Rá会影响到, s. of Sudhodana, 463.
Raschya, the thirteenth Manu, 369. his sons, ib.
. s. of Ruchi, ib. n. 10. ninth Manu, 368, n. 8.
Raudráswá, s. of Ahayyati, 447. s. of Purú, ib.
. n. 1.
Rávura, a hell: crimes there punished, 207.
Rávána, s. of Visrávas, 83, n. 5. taken prisoner by Kértavírya, 417. killed by Rámá, 385.
Ráya, s. of Púrurávas, 396, n. 1.
Ráyádará, teacher of the Sáma-veda, 282, n. 2.
Ráchaka, 'expiration,' 513, n. 10.
Religion, Hindu, periods of, 1.
Renuká, w. of Jamadagni, 400. mother of Paraśráma, 401.
Reyanta, s. of Virasvat by Chháyá, 266. by Rájóli, ib. n. 1.
Reyata, s. of Anárita, 355.
Reyati, d. of Reyata, w. of Balaráma, 337.
439.
Révatí, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Ribbú, s. of Rudra, 38, n. 13. s. of Brahám;
legend of, 254.
Ribbus, a class of deities, 263, n. 1B, 264, n. 20.
Rich: see Rig-veda.
Richa, a prince, 462.
Richas, hymns of the Rig-veda, 276.
Richas, children of Angirás, 123, n. 25.
Richyá, s. of Raudrásá, 447, n. 7.
Richiká, s. of Bhrígu, married Satyaváti, 399.
Richa (Righ) Veda, from Brahám, 42, n. 21. taught by Vyása, 275. by Pála, 277. Sanhitás of, ib.
Rjúdásá, s. of Vasáveda, 439.
Rikha, a Vyása, 273. a prince, s. of Ajamídha, 455. s. of Akrodhána, 457.
Rikha, a chain of mountains, 174. in Góndwana,
ib. n. 2.
Ríta, a Vyása, 273.
Riup, s. of Dhrúva, 98.
Ripunjāya, s. of Dhrúva, 98. s. of Visvárají, 465.
Rishabha, a king, s. of Nábhá, 105. adopts a religion, ib. if Tirthákara or teacher of Jain doctrines, 164, n. 7. a Rishi, s. of Angirás, 260, n. 4. a prince, s. of Kúśágrá, 455.
Rishabha, a mountain, 169. 180, n. 3.
Rishi, seven, same as the Prájápati, 49, n. 2.
attendants on the sun, 233. three classes of, 284. of the Manvantaras; of the first, 49.
second, 260. third, 261. fourth and fifth, 262.
sixth, 263. seventh, 264. eighth, 267. ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, 268. thirteenth and fourteenth, 269. their office, ib. mocked by the Yádavas, 626.
Rishis, the constellation, revolution of, 485.
Ríshiká, a river, 176, n. 5.
Rishikás, a people, 189, n. 55.
Rishikuláká, a river, 176. the Rasíkulíka, ib. n. 5.
Rishyamúka, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Rita, 'truth,' s. of Dharma, 55, n. 13. s. of Vijayar, 390.
Ritadhéman, thirteenth Manu, 268, n. 8.
Ritadhwaja, a Rudra, 59, n. 4. a name of Pratádána, 408.
Ríseyu, s. of Raudráswá, 447.
Ríti, twelfth Manu, 268, n. 8.
Ritídháman, Indra of the twelfth Manvantara, 268.
Ritájú, a prince, 390.
Ritupárda, a prince, 379.
Rochand, w. of Vasáveda, 440, n. 2.
Rodha, a ball, 207. crimes there punished, 208.
Robh, a river, 184.
Robhítá, d. of Surabhí, parent of cattle, 150, n. 19.
w. of Mahádeva, a Rudra, 59. w. of Yádavas, 408. w. of Kriishña, 578.
Robhítá, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Rhóta, ninth Manu, 268, n. 8.
Rhóta, also Róhitásá, 373, n. 10.
Robhításá, s. of Hariáchandra, 373.
Romáhasáda, a name of Síta, 283. author of a Sanhitá of the Puránas, ib. narrator of the Purána, x.
Románásá, a people, 192.
Romápadá, s. of Vídhráha, 423. s. of Chitraratha, 445.
Rosso, translation of the Rig-veda, i.
Ruchaka, a mountain, 169.
Ruchtí, a Prájápati, 49, n. 2. married to Akútí;
their children, 54.
Ruchirá, a river, 185, n. 80.
Ruchirá, a prince, 450.
Ruchirá, a prince, 452.
Rucharándha, a hell, 207. crimes punished in, 209.
Rudiment, or element of an element, 17. see Tanmátra.
Rudra, born from the forehead of Brahám; becomes androgynous; divided into eleven male, and as many female forms, 51, n. 3. why so named, 58.
Rudrá, w. of Vasáveda, 439, n. 2.
Rudrákálli, a form of Umá, 66.
Rudrás-loka, site of, 213, n. 3.
Rudrádá, w. of a Rudra, 59, n. 4.
Rudras, eleven, male and female, 51. eight, 58.
their stations; wives and progeny, 59. eleven, 59. n. 4. eleven, sons of Káyásya and Surabhí;
of Bhúta and Surápá; of Brahám and Surabhí, 121, n. 17. their names, ib. very numerous,
121. children of Surabhí, 150, n. 19.
Rudra-Sárvatí, twelfth Manu, 268. s. of Rudra,
ib. n. 8. his sons, 269.
Rukmikavachá, a Yádava prince, 420.
Rukmeshu, a prince, 420.
Rukmí, s. of物体, 573. founds Bhojkata,
574. killed by Baláráma, 585.
Rukmí, d. of Íbáhama, carried off by Krishna,
INDEX.

573. mother of Pradyumna, 574. burns with Krisnaha's body, 613.
Rupak, a river, 185, n. 80.
Rupashikas, a people, 187.
Ruraka, a prince, 373.
Rushadra, a prince, 420.
S.
Sabbhakara, s. of Anu, 444.
Sace: see Sakas.
Sadacharama, 'fixed observances,' 300.
Sadakkant, a river, 183.
Sadandira, a river, 183.
Sadaswa, s. of Samars, 453.
Sahas, 'pious men,' 300.
Sahitya, d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 119.
Sahitya, a class of gods, sons of Sahitya, 120.
their number and names, n. 14. gods of the present period, 264, n. 20.
Sadvati, w. of Agni, 83, n. 3. d. of Pulastya, 83,
n. 5.
Sagena, s. of Bahu, subdued the barbarous tribes, 374. imposes marks upon them, 375. his sons destroyed, 378.
Sagar; bed of the ocean dug by the sons of Sagara, 379.
Sahadeva, s. of Srivijaya, 354. s. of Harshavardhana, 412. s. of Pindu, 437. 459. s. of Sudasa, 455.
s. of Jarasandha, 456. 465. s. of Divakara, 463.
Sahadeva, d. of Devaka, 436.
Sahajanaha, a divine nymph, 150, n. 21.
Sahanj, a prince, 416.
Saharaksh, s. of Pavamana, 84, n. 9.
Sahas, a month, 225.
Sahasarabala, a prince, 386, n. 19.
Sahasrajit, s. of Yudu, 416. s. of Bhaqamana, 424.
Sahasrakasa, a prince, 386, n. 19.
Sahasya, a month, 225.
Sahasna, s. of Pulas, 83, s. of Vana Kapirat, 83,
n. 6.
Sahya, a range of mountains, 174. north part of the western Ghats, ib. n. 3.
Sailikgyani, teacher of the Atharva-veda, 283.
Sainadhava, a people, 177. and n. 6. a school of Brahmans, 283.
Sainadhavaya, teacher of the Atharva-veda, 283.
Sainitaya, sons of Sin, a branch of the Yadava, 435.
Sainiyas, descendents of Sin, 451.
Sainikeyas, sons of Sinhika, a class of Denaivas,
146, n. 10.
Sainikat, a people, 192.
Sainiri, teacher of the white Yajush, 281, n. 5.
Sainitaya, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277, n. 8.
Sainusaga dynasty, 466.
Saiya, a Puraka, 284.
Saiyas, a people, 191.
Saiya, a river, 193.
Saiya, w. of Satadhana, 342. w. of Jymagha, 421.
Saka, a Dwipa, 116. divisions, mountains, rivers, people of, 190.
Sakalya, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277.
Sakapurty, author of a Nirukta, 277. name as Rashntara, ib. n. 9.
Sakas, a people, 188. and n. 43. 190, 193. conquered by Sagara, 374. kings of their race,
474. 475. n. 64.
Sakha, s. of Kunada, 120.
Sakra, name of Indra, 78. &c. an Aditya, 122.
Sakridgrah, a people, 104.
Sakti, father of Parashara, killed by Kalmsahapada changed to a Raksha, 4. n. 12. one of the Yasas, 275.
Sakti, 'energy,' of three kinds, 655.
Saktis, female forms of Rudra, white and black,
n. 5, n. 4.
Sakti, s. of Valishma, 84, n. 8. see Sakti.
Sakuni, s. of Hiranyaksha, 147. s. of Dasaratha, 432.
Sakuni, d. of Bali, 147, n. 2.
Sakya, s. of Sanjaya, 463. s. of Suddhodana,
ib. n. 20. teacher of the Buddhists, ib.
Sala, s. of Bahlaka, 459.
Sala, place of pilgrimage, 163. 243.
Salaka, a branch of surgery, 407.
Sala, a people, 193. n. 119.
Sala, teacher of the Sama-veda, 283, n. 2.
Sala, teacher of the white Yajush, 281. n. 5.
Sala, a prince, 470.
Salya, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277.
Salmali (or Salmala), a Dwipa, 166. divisions, mountains, rivers, people of, 195.
Saliwa, a people, 177. and n. 6. 185.
Saliwanes, a people, 193.
Saliya, a branch of surgery, 407. n. 11.
Saliya, s. of Viprachitti, 148.
Sama, 'end of meditation,' 657.
Sami: see Sama-veda.
Samandesa, a people, 103.
Samandakas, relations by offerings of water, 316,
n. 7.
Samara, s. of Nipa, 452.
Sama-veda, from Brahmi, 42. taught by Vyasa, 276. Sanioba of, 282. Jyestha portions of,
355, n. 4.
Samavaga-sas, a people, 193.
Sama, s. of Krshna, 591. taken prisoner by the Kuras, 601. recovered by Balarama, 605.
cursed by the Rishis, 606.
Sambhala, birthplace of Kalki, 484.
Sambhu, a Rudra, 121.
Sambhu, w. of Dhrurva, 98.
Sambhuta, a prince, 371.
INDEX

Sambhāti, a prince, 371, n. 5.
Sambhāti, ̔'finish,' d. of Daksha, w. of Marichī, 54, their progeny, 82.
Samika, s. of Śūra, 437.
Śāmin, s. of Śūra, 436.
Samrāśa, a people, 191.
Sampadāvānu, a solar ray, 236, n. 3.
Sampāra, s. of Samara, 458.
Śīmārkaṇḍā, teacher of the white Yajurveda, 281, n. 5.
Sampti, s. of Śyēṣi, 149, n. 13.
Samrāț, the Mahā, 93, n. 3.
Samrāț, d. of Priyavrata, 161.
Samudra, k. of rivers, 153, n. 1.
Śāmudrād, d. of Śamudra, w. of Prachinavartah, 83, n. 11.
Śāmvara, a Dāitya and magician, 137, s. of Danu, 147.
Śāmvarṇā, s. of Rikha, 455.
Śama, the first year of a cycle, 224, lord of seasons, 153, n. 1.
Śamrit, synonymous of Mahāb, 15, n. 32.
Śṛṃya, an original property of man, 45, n. 5.
Śāmyā, s. of Bahuguna, 447, s. of Prachinavrat, ib. n. 1.
Śāmya, ̔'union of continuity,' 632.
Śanāṣāchara, s. of Rudra, 95, s. of the sun, 266.
Śāraṇi, the chariot and horse, 240.
Śanaka, s. of Rudra, 38, n. 13.
Śanand, s. of Rudra, 38, n. 13.
Śanākā, s. of Rudra, 38, n. 13.
Śanāka, a bell, 207, sins punished in, 209.
Śāndhyā, the twilight, a form of Brahmā, 40, period preceding a Yuga, 23, n. 4.
Śāndhya, twilight, 222, ̔dawn,' ib. prayer to be used at, ib. n. 14, duration of, 223, ̔morning and evening,' 308.
Śāndipani, tutor of Kuśa and Balkūma, 561.
Śāndhāyana, period succeeding a Yuga, 23, n. 4.
Śāndrocottus: see Chandragupta, 406.
Śāntrāmājīt, s. of Kuśa, 591.
Śāntrādā, a prince, 362.
Śāntrā, a prince, 127, s. of the Yajurveda, 277, of the Śāma, 279, of the Aitareveda, 281, of the Purāṇa, 283, of the Śāṃkā, 327.
Śānkīdī, s. of Kuśa, 124.
Śātī, s. of Atri, 83, n. 4. (Śānāṣāchara) s. of the sun, 266, his chariot and horses, 240.
Śātī, a people, 103.
Śānti, s. of Supārśva, 390, s. of Pratikahatra, 472, s. of Rāṇakī, 463.
Śānti, d. of Vāswakarmā, w. of the sun, 266.
Śāntaka, a Prājapati, 49, n. 2.
Śāntakā, d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 119.
Śāntaka, a prince, 384, n. 15.
Śānaka, a name of Śīva, 7, n. 1. a Dānava, 147.
Śāntaka, a name of Dānava, 147.
Śāntaka, a name of Dānava, 147.
Śāntaka, a name of Dānava, 147.
Śāntaka, a name of Dānava, 147.
Śāntaka, a name of Dānava, 147.
Śāntaka, a name of Dānava, 147.
INDEX.

Sarva, a Rudra, 58, 121.
Sarvatthita, a prince, 457.
Sarvaagga, s. of Paurámtas, 82, s. of Bhima, 459.
Sarväla, a prince, 48.
Sarvamangal, a river, 184.
Sarvabhadra, a forest, 169.
Sarvatraga, s. of Bhima, 460.
Sārayatas, sons of Sāryati, 358.
Sāsā, part of Jambu-dvipa, 166, n. 1.
Sāsāla, s. of Ishwákumāra, 360.
Sāśānharman, a prince, 470.
Sāśānindu, a prince, 420.
Sāśākas, a people, 189.
Sāswata, a prince, 390.
Sātaka, a river, 182.
Sātakbhisā, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Sātadhana, a pious king, speaks to a heretic, 342; his repeated births, 343; final liberation, 344; s. of Hridikā, 436.
Sātadhana, kills Sātāraj, 458; killed by Krī-ṣṇa, 430.
Sātadru, a river, 175; the Setlej, 176, n. 5.
Sātadyumna, s. of Chākhusha, 98; s. of Bhrūmat, 390.
Sātāj, s. of Rāja, 165; s. of Sahāraj, 416.
Sātāj, s. of Bhajamāna, 424.
Sātakatī, name or title of several Andhra princes, 472, 473.
Sātakumbi, a river, 182.
Sātāvandana, s. of Gauśama, 454.
Sātāvikā, s. of Nākula, 459; s. of Janamejaya, 461; s. of Vasudhāka, 462.
Sātāvartha, s. of Mulas, 384, n. 15.
Sātārūpa, female portion of Bhrūma, w. of Śrī-ṃbhuva Manu, 51, n. 5; type of many forms; same as Māyā, as Śavitrī, 53, n. 5.
Sātāroṣikās, a class of deities, 368.
Sātāvalikā, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278, n. 10.
Sātāyu, s. of Purūravas, 358.
Sātī, 'truth,' d. of Daksā, w. of Bhāva, 54, 59; burns herself, 65, n. 4; w. of Angirā, 123, n. 25.
Sātrughna, s. of Dārāratha, 384; takes Mathurā, 385; s. of Swaphāka, 435.
Sātrāj, s. of Nīghna, friend of Ādiyā, receives the Śyamantaka gem, 425; gives Krī-,a his daughter Sātābāmā, 438; killed by Sātāwana, ib. name of Pratardana, 408.
Sātwaca, a prince of the Yādava race, 423; his descendants, 424.
Sātwasa, descendants of Sātwaca, 425.
Sātya, quality of goodness or purity, knowledge, quiescence, 2, n. 5; a form of Viśhū, 264.
Sātābāmā, d. of Sātrāj, married to Krī-,a, 438; 576; desires the Pīrjāta tree, 586; promotes the quarell of the Yādavas, 610, n. 11.
Sātādhriti, s. of Puspha, 455.
Sātādhriti, s. of Mahāviyā, 350; s. of Sāyā, 439; s. of Dhrīmat, 453; s. of Sātānanda, 454.
Sātādvaraja, a prince, 430.
Sātāhitā, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277, n. 7.
Sātāraj, a prince, 465.
Sātāyaka, s. of Śirhi, 435.
Sātāyakarn, a prince, 446.
Sātāyaketa, a prince, 409.
Sātyaka, s. of Sātyaka, also Yuyudhāna, 435.
Sātya-loka, 'heaven of truth,' 48, n. 10; site of, 213.
Sātāyanendra, s. of Atri, 83, n. 4.
Sātāyanātha, a prince, 390.
Sātāyarā, a prince, 390.
Sātāya, a class of deities, 122, n. 20, 261, 262.
Sātāyāvara, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277, n. 7.
Sātāyāri, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277, n. 7.
Sātāyāk, s. of Chākhusha, 98.
Sātāyavati, d. of Gādhi, w. of Rīchikā, 399; becomes the Kauśikī river, 400, n. 13; mother of Vīśā, 459.
Sātāyarata, a prince; also Triśanku, 371.
Sātāyavati, 'observance of truth,' 394, n. 2.
Sābuṣhara, w. and, 263; marries the daughters of Māndhārī, 366; becomes an ascetic, 360.
Sādūṣa, s. of Sudāsa, a prince, 380; story of, ib. n. 11, and 381.
Sāgara, s. of Dārāratha, 470.
Sāhārida, a people, 192.
Sāunaka, a people, 406; s. of Sūnaka, ib. n. 7.
Sāunukriti, teacher of the Śāma-veda, 282, n. 2.
Sāumya, a division of Bhrūata-varsha, 175.
Sāumya, a class of Pātris, 239, n. 3.
Sāunaka, teacher of the Atharva-veda, 283.
Sāvahāyas, a people, 177, and n. 6.
Sāvarāya (Sāvaḷa), a people, 185, and n. 8.
Sāvira, a people, 177, and n. 6.
Sāvāla (or Sāvāna), s. of Priyāvara, 162; k. of Pūrṇara, ib. his two sons, 300.
Sāvālāas, sons of Dāka, 117.
Sāvāna, s. of Vāśiksha, 83.
Sāvārā, d. of Ocean, w. of Prāchīnavarha, 107.
Sāvarī, s. of the sun, 266; eighth Manu, 267.
Sāvarī, his son, ib.
Sāvibhairā, a sun, 632.
Sāvitrī, an Ādiyā, 122, s. Vīśā, 373.
Sāvitrī, d. of Daksā, w. of Bhrāma, 119, n. 12.
Sāyā, s. of Kalpa, 58, n. 1.
Schlegel, translation of the Rāmāyana by, 385, n. 16.
Sāsas, seven, surrounding the seven Dvipas, 166.
of salt water, 197, of treslei, 198, of wine, ib. of butter, 199, of curds, ib. of milk, 200, of fresh water, 201.
Sāla, a river, 183.
INDEX.

Senajit, s. of Visvajit, 452. s. of Vrihatkarman, 465.
Senakin, a Rudra, 121, n. 17.
Serpents, proceed from Brahmâ, 41. children of Kadru, 149.
Sense, organs of; products of Egotism; presided over by divinities, 17, their number, 18.
Sesha, a Prajapati, 50, n. 2.
Sesha, s. of Kadru, 149. k. of the Naga, 153.
the serpent below Patâla, description of, 205.
teacher of astronomy, 206. supports the world upon his head, 206. incarnate as Balârma, 458.
Setu, a prince, 443.
Shakdasas, a people, 187.
Siddhās, their residence, number, and nature, 227.
Siddhas, a people, 192.
Siddhi, perfection of, d. of Daksha, l. of Dharma, 54.
Siddhi, attributes of perfection, 45.
Sighra, a prince, 387.
Sighra, a river, 183.
Sighrâs, a prince, 384, n. 15.
Sikhândhâs, of l. of Antardhâna, 106.
Sikhivassas, a mountain, 169.
Sikâh, an Anga of the Vedas, 284.
Sindhu, a river, 171, n. 12. of Bhârata-vanaka, the Indus, 180. the Kâli Sindhu, 183, n. 30.
Sindhuka, 472, n. 39. see Sipraka.
Sindhudwipas, a prince, 379.
Sindhupalindes, a people, 186.
Sindhuvarmanas, a people, 191.
Sinhâs, an island, 175, n. 3.
Sinhâs, d. of Kaânya, w. of Vîrâchittida, 122, n. 10. 124. 148.
Sîni, s. of Sumitra, 434. his descendants, 451.
s. of Garga, ib.
Sînhâsana, a river, 185, n. 80.
Sîn vá, d. of Angiras, 82. day of the moon visible, 225.
Sîpíra, a river, 185, n. 80.
Sîpraka, first Andhra king, 472.
Srâdhwaja, a king of Mithilâ, father of Sîtâ, 390.
Sîrâ, a mountain, 169.
Sîrâs, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277.
Sîuktâ, s. of Sîrika, 439.
Sîmamukha or 'poreste' (celestial), 230. represents the stellar sphere, 340.
Sîmamukha, a king of Maghadha, 466.
Sîvâdipâ, s. of Damaghosha, 437. his previous births and hostility to Krishnâ, ib. obtains felicity, 439.
Sîtâ, a river, 170.
Sîtâ, w. of Râvana, 384. d. of Srâdhwaja, 390.
Sîtâsâ, a mountain, 169.
Sîtâyas, a prince, 420.
Sîtâsâ, a lake, 169.
Sîva, the deity, same as Vîshnu in the character of destroyer, 19. born as a Kumâra from Brahmâ in each Kalpa; of different coloours, 50, n. 13.
spoils Daksha's sacrifice, 62. bears Alakasandâ on his head, 239. intercedes for Bâda, 596. a Rudra, 50. a prince, s. of Uru, 98.
Sîvâ, w. of Math, 59.
Sîvâ, a river, 183.
Sîvarâ, a class of deities, 261.
Sîvâkanka, a prince, 473.
Sîvârâ, a prince, 473.
Sîvânaputrukâ, notice of, 161.
Sîvî, s. of Sanhârâ, 147. of Prahlâda, ib. n. 1.
Indra of the fourth Manvantara, 262. a prince, s. of Ushâna, 444. Skanda, s. of Pârashurâma, 59.
Skanda Purâna, parts of, 81. notice of, 284.
Sleeping, rules of, 309.
Sîshvâ, s. of Dharma, 58.
Sînaya, s. of Dharma, 55, n. 3.
Sûrâti, 'memory,' synonyme of Mahat, 15, n. 32.
Sûrâti, d. of Daksha, w. of Angiras, 54. their progeny, 82.
Sûrâti, s. of Dharma, 55, n. 13.
Society, origin and progress of, 45.
Sodhas, a people, 187.
Soka, s. of Mrityu, 56.
Soma, 'the moon,' s. of Atri, 83. king over the constellations, Brahmans, plants, &c. 153. carries off Tûrā, 392. has Budha by her, the founder of the lunar race, 393. a Vasus, 120. s. of the Rishi Prabhâkara, 447, n. 8.
Somaka, s. of Sahadeva, 455.
Somadatta, k. of Vaiśali, 354.
Somapâ, a class of Pitrâs, 86, n. 10. 321, n. 1.
Somâpi, s. of Sahadeva, 455. 405.
Somasarman, a prince, 470.
Somadushmantâ, a Vyas, 273.
Somatirtha, a place of pilgrimage, 561, n. 3.
Somavâna, offering of ascetics, 275, n. 1.
Sôsâ, a river, the Sone, 183.
Sôsîmputra, city of Bâda, 595.
Spheres of the sun and planets, 218.
Srâddhâ, 'faith,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 54. of Angiras, 55, n. 12.
Srâddhâ, 'worship of progenitors'; for prosperity, 297, n. 3. 314. different kinds of, ib. n. 1. for kindred newly deceased, 316. monthly, for deceased relatives, 317. annual, 318. occasional, 320. Brahmans to be entertained at, 325. prayers used at, 328. things sacred at, 330. how vitiated, 333.
Srâvâna, a month, 235, n. 19.
Srâvâna, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Sravastâ, a prince, 561.
Sravasti, a city, 361.
Sri (or Lakshmi), d. of Bhrigu, 50. 80. in all things the counterpart of Vîshnu, 50. produced from the ocean, 76. hymned by Indra, 78.
INDEX.

Śridevā, d. of Devaka, 436.
Śrīdhara Swāmī, commentator on the Bhāgavata, xxi. on the Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa, ixiv.
Śrījñāna, s. of Dvaita, 83, n. 1.
Śrīṅglī, a range of mountains, 167.
Śrīṅjaya, s. of Dvārakā, 354, s. of Śūra, 436.
Śrīṅjaya, a people, 193, n. 136.
Śrī-pālī (or Śrī-parvata), a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Śrītala, a division of Pātalī, 204, n. 1.
Śrītata, a river, 185, n. 80.
Śruta, s. of Dharma, 55, s. of Bhagavatī, 379.
Śruta, s. of Upagū, 390, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 501.
Śruta-devā, d. of Śūra, 437, w. of Vṛddhāsarman, ib.
Śruta-karman, s. of Sahadeva, 459.
Śruta-kirtti, d. of Śūra, 437, w. of Dhriśṭhaketu, ib. s. of Arjuna, 459.
Śruta-jaya, a prince, 465.
Śruta-sena, s. of Parikṣit, 457, 461.
Śruta-bhāma, 459.
Śruta-rāva, a prince, 455.
Śruta-rāva, d. of Śūra, 437, w. of Damaghoobra, ib.
Śruta-vat, a prince, 465.
Śrutī, s. of Bhārunātra, 386, n. 19, s. of Aritānemi, 350, s. of Purīrāva, 398.
Śrutī, d. of Atri, w. of Kardama, 83, n. 4.
Śambha, a Rishi, 260.
Śasta-bāla, a people, 193, n. 134.
Śanta-śiyakya, a people, 260.
Śhāleya, a prince, 447.
Śhaḍḍīlaya, a prince, 447.
Śomā, 'hymns,' from Brahmā, 42, n. 21.
Śuṭī, 'prayer,' from Brahmā, 42, n. 21.
Śrāvha, s. of Satrughna, 385, k. of Mathurā, 389, n. 17.
Śubhās, a prince, 390.
Śubhāsā, s. of Ugrasena, 436.
Śubhās, imperceptible, how perceptible, 32, n. 8.
Suchandra, k. of Vaiśāli, 354.
Suchāra, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 578.
Suchāsā, w. of Dvāra, 98.
Suchā, s. of Agol, 84, s. of Antardhāna, 106, n. 2.
Suchā, s. of Satyārṇa, 390, s. of Andhraka, 435, s. of Vipra, 455. Īndra of the fourteenth Manvantara, 260.
Suchā, d. of Kaśyapa, parent of water-fowl, 148.
Suchā, a month, 228.
Suchāsā, a Prājapatī, 50, n. 2.
Suchāsā, a people, 193.
Suchāsā, a prince, 384, n. 15, 387.
Suchāsā, s. of Sarvākrama, 380, s. of Chyavana, 455.
Suchāsā, s. of Śākya, 463, father of Śākya, ib. n. 20.
Suchāsā, Sudešas, Sudeśatas), s. a people, 188, 190.
Sudeśas, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 578.
Sudevā, s. of Chuncha, 373, s. of Devaka, 436.
Sudhās, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Sudhās, a Lokapāla, s. of Virajas and Gaurī, 83, n. 2, 153, s. of Kardama, 236, and n. 20.
Sudhās, a class of deities, 261, 268.
Sudhās, a class of deities, 269.
Sudhanu, s. of Kuru, 455.
Sudhanu, s. of Śāwata, 390, s. of Satyadhrīta, 455.
Sudharmā, ball of Indra, given to Ugrasena by Kṛṣṇa, 561, returns to heaven, 613.
Sudharmas, a class of deities, 268, 269.
Sucha, a class of deities, 262.
Suchrīti, a prince, 353.
Sudrīci of Pīny, Śūra, 195, n. 135.
Śudrās, first Andhara prince, 472, n. 39.
Śūdras, a people, 195, n. 135, 481.
Śūdras, from the feet of Brahmā, 44, their duties, 292.
Śudayunna, transformed from Ilā; his sons; k. of Pratīṣṭhūpāna, 350, s. of Chākshuṣa, 98, s. of Bhayada, 447.
Śugandha, bondmaid of Vasudeva, 439, n. 2.
Śugrī Bird. d. of Kaśyapa, parent of horses, &c. 148.
Śubha, s. of Bali, 449.
Śubhus, a people, 188, n. 46.
Śuhotra, s. of Kāñcana, 398, s. of Kāṇṭhāmā, 406, s. of Virahatsahatra, 451, s. of Bhumāya, ib. n. 20. s. of Sudhanu, 455, s. of Sahadeva, 450.
Śukti, s. of Vīhūtra, 418.
Śukṣeṣha, a prince, 471.
Śukṣa, a country, 177, and n. 6.
Śukūla, a class of Pitrīs, 331, n. 1.
Śukandakas, a people, 191.
Śukanyā, d. of Saryati, w. of Chyavana, 354.
Śukrī, a hell, 207. crimes there punished, 208.
Śukrā, teacher of the Śāma-veda, 282.
Śukramas, a class of deities, 269.
Śukramas, a class of deities, 268.
Śuktīs, s. of Nandivardhana, 390, s. of Sunītha, 409.
Śukha, s. of Dharma, 55.
Śukhībala, a prince, 462.
Śukti, d. of Kaśyapa, mother of parrots, &c. 148.
Śukra, s. of Bhava, 59, s. of Vīśākhā, 83, s. of Havirdhāna, 106, (the planet), his car and horses, 239.
Śukra, a month, 235.
Śukrīti, s. of Prithū, 452.
Śukrāshtra, a prince, 465.
Śuktīmat, a mountain chain, the east and north portion of the Vindhyā range, 174, 176, n. 5.
INDEX.

Sūkṣmapāṇi, chief of the Bhūtas, 153, n. 1.
Sulomadhi, last Andhra prince, 473, n. 63.
Sumsāva, s. of Mahāpāduka, 468.
Sunnathis, a people, 192.
Sumasa, s. of Uru, 98, s. of Harīyaśva, 371.
Sumanasa, a class of deities, 268.
Sumsāngi, a river, 184, n. 74.
Sumantu, pupil of Vyāša, 276. teacher of the Athāra-veda, 282. s. and pupil of Jaimini, 282. a prince, s. of Jahnū, 390.
Sumati, s. of Bharata, 104. fifth Tirthakara, ib. n. 8. s. of Janamejaya, 354. s. of Sagaras, 377. s. of Supārswa, 455. s. of Drīḍhasena, 465.
Sumati, teacher of the Purāṇas, 383.
Sumati, d. of Kratu, 83, n. 7.
Sumedhāhasa, a class of deities, 262.
Sumitra, s. of Vriśchī, 444. last of the race of Pākṣikā, 464.
Sun, presides over the eyes, 17, n. 48. his car and horses, 217. his diurnal course, 219. northern and southern declination, 220. harassed by the Māndeņas, 222. the cause of rain, 230. his attendants in each month, 233. mystical account of, 236. his functions, ib. his rays, ib. n. 3. his wives and children, 266. ground by Viśvakarmā, 267. s. of Aditi, and origin of the solar dynasty, 348. gives Yajñavalkya the white Yajñash, 281. gives the Sūmantaka gem to Satralī, 45. becomes sevenfold at the end of the world, 632.
Sunahāpānas, s. of Viśvāmitra, 404. legend of, ib. n. 22.
Sunakha, s. of Grhitrasamāda, 406, n. 7.
Sunakshakra, a prince, 463.
Sunānandana, s. of Ugrasena, 436.
Sunas, a river, 184.
Sunayasa, s. of Riti, 350. s. of Pariplava, 462.
Sunayasa, a people, 193.
Sundā, s. of Nisunda, 147, n. 1.
Sundara, a prince, 473.
Sundari, d. of Viśavāhana, 147, n. 7.
Sungas dynasty of, 470.
Sunika, minister of Rīpunja, 466.
Sunita, a prince, 465.
Sunitha, s. of Santi, 409. s. of Sudhā, 462.
Sunithā, d. of Mritu, w. of Anga, 99.
Sunrita, w. of Utakṣapa, 86, n. 5.
Suns, seven, their names, 634.
Sunyabandha, s. of Trisārinda, 555, n. 21.
Supārṣava, a name of Garuḍa, 140.
Supārśava, a mountain, north of Meru, 168.
Supārśava, s. of Sukṛtya, 390. s. of Drīḍhanemi, 455.
Supratiṣṭha, a prince, 465.
Suprāyatka, a river, 183.
Supreme condition (of Viśvād), 156.
Śūra, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 417. s. of Viśvādha, 436. s. of Devamādhava, 18.
Surabhī (cow), produced from the ocean, 76.
Surabhī, d. of Daka, w. of Kṣaya, 132.
Śūra, a people, 177. and n. 6.
Surasa, d. of Daka, w. of Kṣaya, 122.
Surasa, a river, 176.
Śūrasena, s. of Śatrugna, 385. k. of Mathurā, 386, n. 17. s. of Kṛṣṇa, 417.
Śūrōhana, a people, 183. Śuraseni, ib. n. 3.
Suratha, s. of Jahnū, 457. s. of Kuśadaka, 464.
Suraśvāra, a Rudra, 121, n. 17.
Surya, branches of, 407, n. 11.
Sūrīṇa, a class of deities, 262.
Surochita, s. of Viśvādha, 83, n. 8.
Sūrakṣa, a prince, 387.
Śūrānti, a prince, 453.
Śūrānti, Indra of the third Manvantara, 261.
Śūrōman, a prince, 471.
Śuṣjēda, s. of Vasūlīka, 439. s. of Viśvās, 462. s. of Kṛṣṇa, 578.
Śuṣumna, a ray of the sun, 236, n. 3.
Śuṣravas, a Prajāpati, 50, n. 2.
Śuṣrūta, a prince, 390. a teacher of medical science, 407, n. 11.
Śuṣuma, a prince, 465.
Śūta, a bard; origin of, 102. pupil of Vyāsa, 273. teacher of the Purāṇas, 393. a generic term for chroniclers and bards, 81.
Sutala, a division of Patala, 204.
Sutatva, of Vasuto, 436.
Sutatva, s. of Viśvāttha, 83. a prince, s. of Hemas, 444.
Sutapas, a class of deities, 267.
Sutatva, d. of Swabhāka, 435.
Sutala, a prince, 465.
Suvānī, a river, 183. the Rāmagā, ib. n. 53.
Suvardhala, w. of Rudra, 59.
Suvardī, a prince, 463.
Suvardarman, a prince, 390.
Suvatu, a river, 183.
Suvēla, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Suvīhā, a prince, 409.
Suvīra, s. of Sivi, 444. s. of Kshemya, 453.
Suvītra, a prince, 465.
Suvāyasa, s. of Aśokavardhana, 470.
Swabhāva, characteristics or properties of perceptible things, 34, n. 1.
Swadhā, a hell, 207. sins punished in, 209.
Swadha, ‘oblation,’ d. of Daka, w. of the Pitr, 54. w. of Angira, 123, n. 25. w. of a Rudra, 59, n. 4.
Swāhā, ‘offering,’ d. of Daka, w. of Agni, 54. w. of the Rudra Pasūpati, 59.
Śvāhī, a prince, 420.
Śvāhā, a people, 188.
Śvāmabhāk, a sun, 632.
Śvāmabhāka, marries Gāndini, 431. s. of Priyā, 435.
Śvārā, a solar ray, 256, n. 3.
Śvātṛ, the creator, 93, n. 3.
INDEX.

Svarabhātras, a people, 189.
Swarbhānu, a Dānava, s. of Kaśyapa, 147. s. of Viprachitti, 148.
Swarga, on Meru, 172.
Swarga, s. of Bhima, 59.
Swar-lōka, site and extent of, 212.
Swarūpaśrama, an island, 175, n. 3.
Swarochiha, s. of Swarochish, second Manu, 260. and n. 2. his sons, 261.
Swārīpas, 'forms of things,' 34. n. 1.
Swastyārāyas, a race of Brahmans, 447. n. 8.
Śvātī, a lunar mansion, 326. n. 21.
Śvātī, s. of Uru, 98.
Śwaśambhoga, a Yādava chief, 436.
Śwaśambhū (Brahmā), synonyme of Mahat, 15, n. 22. a Vyas, 272.
Śwaśambhuvā Manu, born of, and one with, Brahmā, 51. n. 5.
Śveta, s. of Kadru, 149.
Śveta, a range of mountains, 167.
Śveta-dvīpa, 'white island,' 200. n. 2.
Śvēdvadāsa, 'Jains,' 339. n. 2.
Śyāla, offensas Gagra, 555.
Śyāma, s. of Śūra, 437.
Śyamantaka jewel, given by the Sun to Sātrājīt, 462. its properties, ib. taken by Jambavat, 466. recovered by Krishna, 427. carried off by Satadhana, 493. transferred to Akroha, 497. its virtues, 495. remains in Akroha’s keeping, 495-Śyāmsyani, teacher of the Yajur-veda, 279. n. 1.
Śyēnti, d. of Kaśyapa, parent of hawks, 148.

T.

Tadāikyam, 'unity,' 653.
Taittirīya portion of the Yajur-veda, 280.
Taksha, s. of Bharata, 385. k. of Takhasalā, 386, n. 17.
Taksha, s. of Kadru, 149.
Tāla, a bell, 207. crimes punished in, 208.
Tālaśangha, a prince of the Yādava race, 418.
Tālaśanghas, a tribe, conquer Bhu, 373. conquered by Sāgara, 374. sons of Tālaśangha, 418. a branch of the Haivi, 418. n. 20.
Tālakā, a prince, 473.
Tāllāta, a division of Pātāla, 204. n. 1.
Tamas, quality of darkness, ignorance, inertia, 2, n. 5. kind of ignorance, 34. n. 2. a bell, 207.
Tamos, a prince, 420.
Tāmāsa Manu, s. of Priyavrata, 162. n. 2. 262. his sons, ib.
Tāmāsa, a river, 184. the Tons, ib. n. 60.
Tāmās, a river, 184.
Tāmas, 'gloom,' kind of ignorance, 34. n. 2.
Tāmāta, d. of Daksha, w. of Kaśyapa, 122.
Tāmāta, a river, 183.
Tāmralipita (Tāmralipita), a people, 192.
Tāmrapakshi, s. of Krishōa, 591.
Tāmraparitri, a river, 176. in Tinnivelly, ib. n. 5.
Tāntravāra, a division of Bhārata-varsha, 175.
Tāntrīyani, teacher of the white Yajush, 281. n. 5.
Tānubhās, a people, 193.
Tānayās, a people, 193.
Tāndri, 'sloth,' a form of Brahmā, 40. n. 15.
Tānkanas, a people, 194. n. 143.
Tānñātāra, rudiment or type of an element; devoid of qualities, 17. same as the properties of an element, 17, n. 26.
Tānus, a prince, 448.
Tānurodhā or Tānus, 448, n. 10. 13.
Tāpa-lōka, sphere of the seven Rāshis, 48. n. 10.
Tāpaniyas, Brahmans of a branch of the white Yajush, 281, n. 5.
Tāpa, a month, 225.
Tāpaspās, s. of Chākshusha, 98.
Tāpasya, a month, 345.
Tapati, d. of the sun, 266.
Tāpi, a river, 176. the Tapti, n. 5.
Tāpo-lōka, site of, 231.
Tāptakumbha, a hell, 417. crimes punished in, 208.
Tāptalōka, a bell, 208.
Tārā, w. of Vṛihaspatis, carried off by Soma, 392. mother of Buddha, 393.
Tārakā, s. of Hiranyāksha, s. of Kaśyapa by Danu, 147.
Tārākā, d. of Sunda, 147, n. 1.
Tārāpādī, a prince, 386, n. 19.
Tāru, s. of Dhrūva, 98, n. 1.
Tejas, 'light' or 'fire,' the element; produced from the rudiment of form or colour, and produces that of taste, 16. and n. 25.
Tigama, a prince, 462.
Tilabhātras, a people, 191.
Tilakañjas, a people, 193, n. 115.
Tilottama, a nymph, 150. n. 31.
Tīne, a form of Vaiśu, 9. (see Kāla); divisions of, 22, 631. 631.
Tīmi, d. of Daksha, w. of Kaśyapa, 122, n. 19.
Tiragnas, a people, 190.
Tīryakrotas, 'creation of animals,' 35.
Tītikās, 'patience,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 52, n. 12.
Tītikasu, a prince, 444.
Tītirī, a pupil of Yāsaka, teacher of the Taittirīya Yajush, 280, n. 3.
Tocharī, a people, 195, n. 157.
Tomas, a people, 196.
Toyō, a river, 185, n. 80.
Tāśaṁba, a prince, 442.
Tāśaṁba, a prince, 442.
Transmigration, stages of, 210.
Tresnedvya, name of Māndhātrī, 362. n. 18. s. of Purukutāsa, 357.
Tresnef, three Ådus, 22, n. 3.
Treyāsūra, a prince, and author of hymns, 371. n. 6. a Vyas, 273. s. of Urukshaya, 451.
Treta, second Yuga or age; its duration, 25. n. 4.
INDEX.

Tridháman, a Výása, 272.
Tridhánwan, a prince, 371.
Trídév, a river, 182.
Trigattas, a people, 193.
Trikiṭá, a mountain, 169, of Bháratavarṣa, 180, n. 3.
Trímadhu-Brahmans, 325.
Trídá, s. of Uárína, 444.
Tríśáíchikāṭa-Brahmans, 325.
Tríśavindu, a Výása, 273. a prince, s. of Budha, 534.
Tripi, an original property of man, 45, n. 5.
Triśák, a river, 176.
Triśanku, a prince, elevated to heaven, 371.
Trishá, s. of Mrítyu, 56.
Trishthubh, metre from Brahmá, 43.
Trísaparíśa-Brahmans, 335.
Trivirishan, a Výása, 273.
Triviri, hymns from Brahmá, 42.
Truth, obligation of, 312.
Truti, three Trasarefus, 22, n. 3.
Tryambaka, a Rodra, 121.
Tushárás (Tushhára), a people, 195, n. 157.
Tulasi plant, produced from the ocean, 78, note.
Tulyátá, an original property of man, 45, n. 5.
Tumburu, a Gandharva, 233.
Tungapravátha, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Tungavénká, a river, 183, the Tambhádrá, s. ib. n. 31.
Tufdikera, a branch of the Haimaya tribe, 418, n. 20.
Túthi, a prince, 435.
Turtrasu, s. of Yásu, 413, k. of the south-east, 415, his descendents, 442.
Tusháras, a people, 195, n. 157, a race of princes, 474-475, n. 64.
Tushítas, a class of deities, 122, 260, sons of Kránta; of Vedaśiras, ib. n. 3.
Tushñi, 'resignation,' d. of Dáksha, w. of Dharma, 54, d. of Puráṃśáma, 83, n. 2.
Tushñat, s. of Ugrasena, 436.
Tvashfrí, a Rodra, 121.
Tvashfrí, s. of Manasa, 165.
Tvashfrí, an Aditya, 132.
Tvashá, d. of Puráṃśáma, 83, n. 2.

U.
Uchchhásdrávana, produced from the ocean, 78, n. chief of horses, 153.
Udáksena, a prince, 453.
Udáradhi, s. of Tushñi, s. of Dhruva, 98, n. 1.
Udivasu, s. of Janaka, 389, n. 3.
Udayana, s. of Satánika, 462.
Udayásava, s. of Dhávaka, 467.
Udvarí, s. of Vaśudeva, 439.
Uddálíni, teacher of the white Yajus, 281, n. 5.
Uddhíva, goes to Badarikáśrama, 609.
Udgháti, chanters of prayers and hymns, 276.
Udágháti, s. of Bhava, 165.

Ugrá, a Rudra, 58, 131, n. 17.
Ugrāretas, a Rodra, 59, n. 4.
Ugrasena, s. of Ahuka, 436, made king by Krítás, 560, burns himself, 613, s. of Paŕśikhit, 457, 461.
Ugráyudha, s. of Krítás, 453.
Ukthá, part of the Sáma-veda, from Brahmá, 42.
Uktá, a prince, 396.
Ulmukas, s. of Balaráma, 439.
Ulúká, parent of owls, 148, n. 13.
Ule vá, s. of Vaśishthá, 83, n. 8.
Ulúka, d. of Himáváni, w. of Bhava, 59, 85, n. 11.
w. of Siva; her dialogue with him, 64.
Umbrella produced from the ocean, taken by Varúá, 78, note.
Unmáda, 'insanity,' a form of Brahmá, 40, n. 15.
Unmá, 'elevation,' d. of Dáksha, w. of Dharma, 55, n. 12.
Upádánavá, d. of Vrischapanvan, 147, d. of Vaináwána, and w. of Hiraýáshá, ib. n. 7.
Upádeva, s. of Akrúra, 435, s. of Devaka, 436.
Upádeva, d. of Devaka, 436.
Upágu, a prince, 390.
Upámadú, a prince, 435.
Upánanda, s. of Vaśudeva, 439.
Upánidhi, s. of Vaśudeva, 439.
Upáparáñas, eighteen, xiii. names of, 14.
Upárishára, a prince, 455, his sons, ib.
Upásunda, s. of Niñunda, 147, n. 1.
Upárvitás, a people, 180.
Upendra, presides over the feet, 17, n. 28.
Upendrá, a river, 153.
Urdhábáhu, s. of Vaśishthá, 83.
Urja, a Rishi, 260.
Urja, a month, 235.
Urjá, 'energy,' d. of Dáksha, w. of Vaśishthá, 54.
Urjaswáti, d. of Dáksha, w. of Dharma, 119, n. 12. d. of Priyavrata, 162, n. 2.
Urjavátha, a prince, 390.
Uru, s. of Chákshusha, 98.
Uruksháya, a prince, 451.
Uruksha, a prince, 463.
Urvasí, a nymph; her love for Purárvávas, 394.
her children, 398.
Ușhanás, s. of Vedaśiras; s. of Bhriguna, 82, n. 1.
a Výása, 272, a prince, 430.
Ushá, name of night, 123.
Ushá, w. of Bhava, 59, d. of Báña; in love with Aniruddá, 592.
Usháhrástra, a prince, 444.
Ushá, a prince, 401.
Udána, s. prince, 444.
Utkala, s. of Súdyunnas, 350.
Utkalas, a people, 186.
Utpalaváti, a river, 184, 185, n. 80.
Uttama, s. of Uttámápa, 86, s. of Priyavrata, 162, n. 2. a Manus, 261, a Výása, 273.
INDEX.

Uttamastha, a people, 186, n. 16.
Uttanavirahis, a prince, 354, n. 30.
Uttarabhadrada, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Uttara-kurva, a Varsha or country, 168.
Uttara-phalguni, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Uttarasvandha, a lunar mansion, 226, n. 21.
Uttarasvamanketa (Uttarasvamanketa), a people, 193, n. 121.
Utattiyas, s. of Angiras, 83, n. 3; husband of Namatik, 449.
Utudk, a people, 191.
V.
Vach, d. of Daksha, w. of Kaṣyapa, 123, n. 19.
Vahini, deity of fire (see Agni), s. of Turvasu, 442.
Vahni-jwala, a bell, 207; sins punished in, 209.
Valibhṛga, a forest, 169.
Vaidheka, name of Janaka, 389; a country, ib. n. 3.
Vaidhekas, a people, 192.
Vaidheya, teacher of the white Yajush, 281, n. 5.
Vaidūrya, a mountain, 169.
Vaisalanka, a mountain, 169.
Vaisakhta, heaven of Vishnu, 48, n. 10; form of Vishnu, 265.
Vaisakhtas, a class of deities, 123, n. 20; 262.
Vaiķrata, secondary creation, 37, n. 12.
Vaimānakas, a class of deities, 96, n. 9.
Vaiśafatstra, a prince, 409.
Vairāja, part of the Śaṁveda, from Brahmā, 42.
Vairāja, a name of the first Manu, 51, n. 5.
Vairajas, a class of deities, 213; of Pitrīs, 321, n. 1.
Vairāja, portion of the Śaṁveda, from Brahmā, 42.
Vāśikha, a month, 225, n. 19.
Vāśikha, w. of Vasudeva, 439, n. 2.
Vāśilā, w. of Vasudeva, 439.
Vāśilā, a city, 353; kings of, 354.
Vāśampāyana, pupil of Vyāsa, 275; teacher of the Yajur-veda, 279.
Vāśīvávā, a Purāṇa, 284.
Vāśīvāvā, king of kings, 153.
Vāśīvadéva, worship of the Vāśīvadevas, 327.
Vāśīvánara, a Dānava, 148, n. 8.
Vāśīvánara, portion of the planetary sphere, 226, n. 21.
Vāśīvánara, a division of the lunar mansions, 226, n. 21.
Vāśīs, from the thighs of Brahmā, 44; duties of, 292.
Vāśīs, Vāśīs, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278.
Vāśīs, s. of the Vāśīs Áps, 120.
Vāśīs, a hell, 207; sins punished in, 209.
Vāśīs, a river, 184; in Cutack, ib. n. 71.
Vāśīs, seventh Manu, 264; his sons, ib. s. of the sun, 266. 348; his sons, ib. a Rudra, 121, n. 17.
Vāśīs, students of the white Yajush, 281.
Vajra, made chief of the Yadvu race, 611.
Vajrí, d. of Vaisvānara, 147, n. 7.
Vajramitra, a prince, 471.
Vajrunabhā, a prince, 386.
Vakr, a people, 188, n. 42.
Vakratapasa, a people, 188.
Vakrtyodhi, s. of Viprachitti, 148.
Vāliśa, teacher of the Rig-veda, 278.
Vālīśa, a prince, 399.
Vālīrāma, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Vallabha, date of, 1.
Vallabhas, a people; Vallabhi, a city, 193, n. 129.
Vallīrāsha, a country, 188, n. 38.
Vāmikī, a Vṛyas, 273.
Vāma, a Rudra, 121, n. 17.
Vāmādeva, a Rudra, 51, n. 3; 59, n. 4.
Vāmās, a form of Vīśnu; s. of Kaṣyapa, 265; legend of, ib. n. 22.
Vāmanā, a Purāṇa, 284; analysis of, 387.
Vānākapivat, s. of Pulaha, 83, n. 6.
Vānaprastha, 'hermit,' duties of, 295.
Vānārījī, bondmaid of Vasudev, 439, n. 2.
Vānarāya, a people, 188, n. 40.
Vānarāyas, a people, 192.
Vānāvasas, a people, 192.
Vānāyas, a people, 192, n. 93.
Vānāyas, s. of Purāvās, 398, n. 1.
Vāneya, a prince, 447.
Vangas (Bangas), people of Bengal, 188.
Vans Kennedy, notices of the Purānas, iv. xiii.
Vansadhārā, a river, 185, n. 80.
Vāpra, a Vṛyas, 273.
Vāpu, 'body,' d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 54.
Vāpuṣhman, s. of Priyavrata and Kāmya, 162; k. of the Dwipa of Sūlimi, ib. his sons, 198.
Vār, a river, 183.
Vārād (Vardā), a river, 185, n. 80.
Vārāh, a form of Vīśnu, for the recovery of the earth, 28; praised by the earth, 39; raises it up, 30; his form, 30; n. 6; type of the ritual of the Vedas, 31, n. 7; newens the world, 32.
Vārāha, present Kālp, or day of Brahmā, 28.
Vārāha, a Purāṇa, 284.
Vārāha, a minor Dwipa, 175, n. 3.
Vārāha Purāṇa, analysis of, 287.
Vārāh, a rivulet, 184.
Vārākṣas (Vairākṣas), a people, 188.
Vārāchās, s. of the Vārāchā Soma, 120.
Vārāya, s. of Vīśnu, 20, n. 36.
Vārāhadrāthas, kings of Magadha, 465.
Vārāhaapatiyas, 'hereticas,' 340, n. 7.
Vārhi, 'sacrificial grass,' 106, n. 3.
Vārhiśandras, a class of Pitrīs, 84, n. 10; 239, n. 3.
Vārhiśmati, w. of Priyavrata, 162, n. 1.
Vārīdhara, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Vāriyās, s. of Pulaha, 83, n. 6.
Varman, name for a Kālāṭrīya, 397.
INDEX

Varādā, a river, 184, n. 62.
Varṣhas, divisions of Jambu-dvīpa, 167.
Varṣhēyas, a tribe, 418, n. 19.
Varuṣa, lord of the waters, 153, gives horses to Rīchā, 390, so Aditya, 122.
Varuṣa, a division of Bhārata-varsha, 175.
Vārūṇī, the goddess of wine, produced from the ocean, 76, waits on Balarāma, 571.
Vāś, a river, 184.
Vāsishtha, a prince, 452.
Vāsikā, 'defiled oblation,' 123, n. 27.
Vāśkala, s. of Sanhārā, 147, s. of Prabhāda, ib. n. 1.
Vāśishtha, grandfather of Parāśara; allays his anger, 4, a Pṛjāpati, 40, marries Uṛjā, 54, his sons in the first Manvantara, 83, in the third, 461, n. 8, a Vyaś, 272, rebukes Vī-kuskha, 360, disputes with Visvāmitra, ib. n. 11, changed to a stabling, 373, n. 9, curses Saumāsa, 381, and Nimi, 388, is cursed by him, ib.
Vāstu, a river, 183.
Vasu, d. of Daksīha, w. of Dharma, 119.
Vasu, s. of Kuṣa, 390.
Vasubundūya, s. of Vasīshtha, 83, n. 8.
Vasudēna, a prince, 462.
Vasuveda, s. of Sūra, 436, marries the daughters of Ahuśa, ib. imprisoned by Kansa, 498, father of Krishṇa, 502, burns himself, 613.
Vasudeva, first Kādwa prince, 471.
Vasudeva, name of Vīshu, 1, s. of Vasudeva, ib. n. 1, abiding and shining in all things, 9, n. 10, one with the three Vedas, 274, one with Om, &c. ib. n. 5, meaning of 643.
Vasuki, s. of Kāru, 149, k. of the Nāga, 153, n. 1.
Vasumitra, a Sunga prince, 471.
Vasu, sons of Vāsū; their names, sons, and grandchildren, 120.
Vāsara, k. of the winds, 153.
Vāsa tree, on Supārśa, 168.
Vātadānās, a people, 189.
Vātacanārathorasas, a people, 192.
Vātasaṇgas, a people, 192.
Vātāxā, s. of Hīlā, 147, n. 1, s. of Vīrāchiti, 148.
Vata, a name of Pratārdana, 408, s. of Urukahepa, 463.
Vatasālāka, s. of Sūra, 436.
Vataśābhdāmi, a prince, 409, n. 15.
Vataśpi, a prince, 352.
Vatastra, s. of Druva, 98, n. 1.
Vatastra, fifth cyclic year, 324.
Vatas, a people, 186, n. 12.
Vataśvāsīha, a prince, 463.
Vatāya, teacher of the Rīg-vedas, 277, of the white Yājush, 281, n. 5.
Vārāddha, a class of deities, 269.

Vāyu or ‘wind,’ produced from the rudiment of touch; produces that of form, 16, and n. 25, wind, the deity of k. of the Gandharvās, 153, n. 1.

Vāyu Purāṇa, analysis of, xxii.
Vayuṇā, s. of Krisāwa, 123, n. 26.
Veda, a river, 182, n. 13.
Vedabhu, s. of Pulatya, 83, n. 5.
Vedamitra, teacher of the Rīg-vedas, 277.
Vedānd, ‘torture,’ d. of Anīta, 50.
Vedas, typified by Om, t. n. 1, of particular sciences; also portions of, from Brahmā, 42, n. 21, divisions and teachers of, 272, 275, &c. translations from, t. religion taught in, ii.
Vedanta or Vedānti, a river, 183, n. 13.
Vedasanta, s. of Mārkaṇḍeyā and Murdhyanā, 82, s. of Prāśa, 82, n. 1, progenitor of the Bhārgava Brahmans, 82, n. 1, s. of Krisāwa, 123, n. 26.
Vedasmita, a river, 176, the Beas, ib. n. 5.
Vedāyā, a river, 183.
Vedavati, a river, 183.
Vedavasis, a river, 182, n. 13.
Veda-vyāasa, arrangers of the Vedas, 272.
Veda, one hundred Trūtas, 22, n. 3.
Vedha, a bell, 268.
Vega, a prince, 353.
Vegeta, (Vikī), a river, 185, n. 80.
Vegetables, creation of; kinds of, 35, n. 3.
Veśa, d. of Meru, w. of Sāmudra, 83, n. 11.
Veda, s. of Anga, 98.
Vēja, a river, 273.
Vēja, a river, 183.
Venkaṭa, a mountain, 180, n. 3.
Veda, a Yādava prince, 416.
Vedhaya, a prince, 416, n. 3.
Vedūhotra, a prince, 409, n. 15.
Vetavati, a river, the Betwa, 181.
Vibhakhsa, s. of Viśrava, 83, n. 5.
Vibhrīja, s. of Sukṛiti, 452.
Vibhū, Indra, of the fifth Manvantara, 262.
Vibhū, a prince, 409.
Vibuda, a prince, 390.
Vichertarvīya, s. of Śāntu, 450.
Vidagdha, teacher of the white Yājush, 281, n. 5.
Vidarbha, s. of Jñāmgha, 422.
Vidarbhas, a people, 187.
Videhas, a people, 188.
Vidhātri, s. of Bhīru, 59, s. of Viśu and Lakṣmī, married to Nīryati, 82.
Vidīśa, a river, 183, the Bess, ib. n. 52.
Vidmisāra, a prince, 466.
Vidura, s. of Viśa, 460.
Viduratha, s. of Bhajamāna, 436, s. of Suratha, 457.
Vihangamas, a class of deities, 269.
Vijaya, a prince, s. of Chunchu, 373, s. of Jaya, 390, s. of Sanjaya, 412, s. of Jayadratha, 445.
an Andhra prince, 473.
8 s
INDEX.

Vijāyā, d. of Daksha, w. of Krisnā, 123, n. 26.
Vijaya, a people, 188.
Vijñānā, s. of Prithu, 106, n. 1.
Vikāla, six Prākūra, 23, n. 3.
Vikāyas (Vikālap), a people, 192.
Vikēśi, w. of Sarva, 59.
Vikrānta, a Prajāpati, 50, n. 2.
Vikrīti, a prince, 432.
Vikukshā, s. of Ikshūvaku, 359. named Saśāda, 360.
Viloman, a Yādava chief, 435.
Vimala, s. of Sudāmun, 350, n. 6.
Vimobhana, a hell, 207. crimes punished in, 208.
Vinā, a river, 182.
Vinādi (Vinādi), a river, 183.
Vinata, s. of Sudāmun, 350.
Vināț, d. of Daksha, w. of Kaśyapa, 122. w. of Tārkhana, 149, n. 15.
Vinaya, s. of Dharmā, 55.
Vinda, s. of Jayasena, 437.
Vindhyā, a range of mountains, 174. the Sath-pura range, ib. n. 2.
Vindhyachulikas, a people, 193.
Vindhyarālikas, a people, 193, n. 126.
Vindhyosakta, a king, 477.
Vindumati, w. of Māndhātri, 363.
Vinduskara, s. of Chandragupta, 469.
Vinita, s. of Pulastya, 83, n. 5.
Vinā, a prince, 354.
Vipāk, a river, 181.
Vipās, a river, 181. the Beyah or Hyphasis, ib. n. 8.
Vijñēśhita, Indra of the second Manvantara, 260.
Vīpra, s. of Dhrūva, 98. s. of Śrutajaya, 465.
Viprachitti, a Dānava, 147. his sons, 148. k. of the Dānav, 153, n. 1.
Vipritā, s. of Chitraka, 435.
Vipula, a mountain, west of Meru, 168.
Virā, a river, 185.
Virābdhara, produced from Śiva, 65. spoils Daksha’s sacrifice, 67.
Virāj (or Vidāj), progeny of Śvāyambhuva, 52, n. 5. all male animals; all bodily substance, 53. n. 5.
Viraha, s. of Twashti, 165.
Virājas, s. of Prurāmāsā, 82. s. of Vasiṣṭha, 83, n. 8.
Viraṅa, a sage, father of Viraṅa, 99, n. 1. of Asikini, 117. teacher of the white Yājush, 181, n. 5.
Viraṅi, d. of Viraṅa, mother of Chākhusha, 99, n. 1.
Virankṣa, a river, 183.
Virāt, s. of Nara, 105.
Virāt, the universal matter, 93, n. 3.
Virāvatī, a river, 183.
Virochana, s. of Prahlāda, 147.
Viruddhas, a class of deities, 268.
Virūpā, a prince, 359.
Virūpākṣa, a Rudra, 121, n. 17.
Vīsāka, s. of Kumāra, 120.
Vīsākha, a lunar mansion, 224. 226, n. 31.
Vīsākhayūja, a prince, 466.
Vīsāla, s. of Triśāvindrā, 355.
Vīsāla, a city, 353, n. 25.
Vīsāsana, a hell, 207. crimes punished in, 208.
Vīsokā, an original property of man, 45, n. 5.
Vīsāvaya, s. of Pulastya, 83, n. 5.
Vīśrutavat, a prince, 387.
Vīshānu; same with Brahmā, Śiva, spirit; cause of creation, preservation, and destruction; parent of nature, and material of the universe, 2, 3. 4. 6. origin, end, and substance of the world, 6, n. 16. nature of, 8. four forms of, 9. 154. same with Brahmā, Vīsānu, Śiva, as creator, preserver, and destroyer, 19. hymned by Earth, 20. combined in all forms with Śri, 60. praised by the gods, 72. directs them to churn the ocean, 74. deceives the Asuras, 75. praised by Dhrūva, 93. by the Prachetasas, 108. worshipped by Prahlāda, 127. one of the Adityas, 122. their chief, 153. ornaments and arms of, 155. forms of, worshipped in different Varahas, 173. remembrance of, best expiation, 210. energy of, encompasses the universe, 215. supreme Brahmā, 216. his path in the sky, 228. triple energy in the sun, 236. forms in the four ages, 270. worshipers of, how known, 287. prayers of the gods to, 335. deceives the Dītyas, 337. praised by the gods, 494. incarnate as Krisnā and Balarāma, 497. praised by Akrūra, 447. sleeps on the ocean, 634. asylum of spirit, 656. all that is, 661. praises of, 664.
Vīshāṇu-loka, site of, 313, n. 3.
Vīshānu Purāṇa, notice of, 284. xvi. analysis of, lit. merit of hearing, 662. how communicated, 663.
Vīṣṇu, d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 119.
Vīṣṇabhāvana, name of Vīṣṇu, 2. creator of the universe, ib. n. 2.
Vīṣṇu-chi, a divine nymph, 150, n. 21.
Vīṣṇu-deva, a class of gods, sons of Vīṣṇu, 130. their number, ib. n. 13. worshipped at Śrīdhas, 321. 326.
Vīṣṇugūḍha, a prince, 361.
Vīṣṇujyotiś, eldest of the hundred sons of Satrajit, 165.
Vīṣṇu-jit, s. of Jayadratha, 452. s. of Satrajit, 465.
Vīṣṇukarmā, artist of the gods, 76. s. of the Vīṣṇu Prabhāsa, 121.
Vīṣṇu-karmāna, a solar ray, 236, n. 3.
Vīṣṇukārśya, a solar ray, 236, n. 3.
Vīṣṇuskṣaṇa, fourteenth Manu, 268, n. 8.
Vīṣṇuskṣaṇa, a prince, s. of Brahmadatta, 453.
Vīṣṇumitrā, a Rishi, 264. raises Triśānu to heaven, 371. quarrels with Vasiṣṭha, 373.
INDEX

n. 9. son of Gādhi, 400. his descendants, 404.
Viśvāmitra, a river, 183.
Viśvarūpa, a name of Viśhū, 20, n. 35. a Rudra, 121.
Viśvarūpas, s. of Iśvās, 383. a. of Abhyuthtitaśva, 386.
Viśvasphāla, k. of Maṅgulā, 479.
Viśvapahūrtta (Viśvaspahūrtta), a prince, 479, n. 69.
Viśvarūpa, s. of Purūravus, 398.
Viśvedē, d. of Dakte, w. of Dharma, 119, n. 12.
Viśhatra, a prince, 390.
Vitala, a division of Pātaḷa, 204.
Vitāta, a river, 181. the Jhelum or Hydaspes, ib. n. 10.
Vitābha, name of Bharadvāja, 440.
Vithi, division of the planetary sphere, 326, n. 21.
Vitāthra, s. of Priyavrata, 162, n. 2. s. of Tālamangha, 418.
Vitāthras, a branch of the Haihaya tribe, 418, n. 20.
Viraśvat, a Prājāpāti, 50, n. 2. an Aśīya, 122. s. of Kaśyapa, 466, n. 1. the sun, and father of Vairavavata Manu, 348.
Viraśvat, a prince, 359.
Vīraśvata, s. of Nabuzva, 413.
Vṛṣa, s. of Havirvāna, 106.
Vṛṣenata, a prince, 447.
Vṛṣenata, killed by Abhimanyu, 387.
Vṛṣadās, s. of Svaśanta, 361. s. of Sahadeva, 463.
Vṛṣhadvāna, s. of Dharmas, 463.
Vṛṣhadvāna, a prince, 445.
Vṛṣhadvāna, s. of Aṣaminda, 452. s. of Haryāśva, 454.
Vṛṣhadvāna, a prince, 463.
Vṛṣhadratha, s. of Bhradratha, 445. s. of Upārichara, 455. s. of Tīga, 462. s. of Saha dvārman, 470.
Vṛṣhadvāsa, a prince, 452.
Vṛṣhadvāsa, a prince, 390.
Vṛṣhadvāsa, a river, 184.
Vṛṣhṇarādiya Purāṇa, analysis of, xxiii.
Vṛṣapati, s. of Angirasa, 83, n. 3. the planet Jupiter, his car and horses, 240. a Vṛṣasa, 373. teacher of political science, 284. his wife Tārak carried off by Soma, 393.
Vṛṣatkarman, s. of Bhadraratha, 445. s. of Vṛṣadvāsa, 452. s. of Sukuvatra, 465.
Vṛṣatkarman, s. of Vṛṣhadvāsa, 463.
Vṛṣatkarman, s. of Bhavanmanyu, 450.
Vṛṣat-sena, from Brahmā, 42.
Vṛṣina, s. of Vṛṣina, 430.
Vṛṣina, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 430.
Vṛṣi, s. of Prithu, 106, n. 1. s. of Vīṣṇa, 373. s. of Kṛṣṇa, 591.
Vṛṣideva, d. of Devaka, 436.
Vṛṣideva, s. of Dvēra, 48.
Vṛṣiṣa, a people, 193, n. 123.
Vṛṣideva, s. of Dvēra, 48.

Vṛishna, Indra of the eleventh Manvantara, 468.
Vṛishna, s. of Vṛishṇotra, 418.
Vṛishabha, a river, 184.
Vṛishadārśa, s. of Śivī, 444.
Vṛishaka, a Rudra, 121.
Vṛishaka, s. of Kārttavirya, 417.
Vṛishṇavar, a Dānav, 147.
Vṛishasena, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 486.
Vṛishī, a prince of the Yadu race, s. of Madhu, 418. s. of Kunti, 422. s. of Śatūrata, 424.
Vṛishnī, a tribe, 462.
Vṛishnī, a tribe, 418.
Vṛishna, s. of Kukkura, 435.
Vṛishtih, a river, 185, n. 80.
Vṛṣñih, s. of Mritu, 50.
Vṛṣā, mystica words, 274, n. 5.
Vṛṣṭā, gruham, an Anga of the Vedas, 284.
Vṛṣṭā, visible substance, a form of Vṛṣṇī, 9.
Vṛṣṭa, s. of Vṛṣṇi, 148.
Vṛṣṭa, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 222.
Vṛṣṭi, s. of Kṛṣṇa, 98, n. 1.

War, between the gods and demons, 235, 360. of the gods and Daityas, on account of Śūlak, 393.
Water, the element, 16. see Apsa.
Wind or air, the element, 16. see Vīyu.
Wine from the Kadam tree, 571.
Wife, how to be chosen, 298.
World, dimensions of, 203, 203, n. 7. destruction of, 632.
Wrestling, modes of, 557, n. 5.

Yādavas, a tribe, descendants of Yadu, 418. numerous, 441. go to Prabhāsa, 609. destroyed, 610.
Yadu, s. of Yātśī, 413. k. of the south, 415. his descendants, 416.
Yajña, s. of Ruci; marries his sister Dakshā, 54. n. 9. "sacrifice personified;" decapitated, 67. becomes the constellation Mrigaśiras, 68, n. 7.
Yajñabahu, s. of Priyavrata, 162, n. 2.
Yajñākṣī, a prince, 412.
Yajñāra, principal kinds of, 294, n. 3.
Yajñātra, a prince, 473.
Yajñavāna, s. of Parvāsa, 83, n. 2.
Yajur-veda, from Brahmā, 12. original Veda, 276. divided into four, ib. how composed, ib. Sanshitas and teachers of, 279. black or Taittiriya portion of, 280. white or Vījñānānaya, 281, note.
Yajush: see Yajur-veda.
INDEX.

Yajnawalka, teacher of the Rig-veda, 277.
Yajnawalkya, pupil of Vaisampayana, 379. propitiated the sun, 280. receives the white Yajush, 281.
Yakrilomasa, a people, 188.
Yaksha, s. of Khasa, parent of the Yakshas, 150, n. 20.
Yakshas, proceed from Brahmas, 41. children of Khasa, 150.
Yama, a minor Dwipa, 175, n. 3.
Yama, monarch of the Pitris, 153. judge of the dead, 207, n. 3. s. of the sun, 266. how to be avoided, 286.
Yama, a watch of the day or night, 22, n. 3.
Yama-gita, 'song of Yama,' 289, n. 3.
Yamas, duties so called, 288, n. 2. acts of restraint, 653.
Yanas, deities, twelve, sons of Yajna and Dakshinah, 54, n. 10.
Yami, d. of Daksha, w. of Dharma, 119. d. of the sun, 266. the Yamuna river, ib.
Yamuna, a river, 20. d. of the sun, 266. compelled by Balarama to come to him, 572.
Yamunasa, a people, 190.
Yasa, s. of Dharma, 55.
Yasa, author of a Nirukta, 227, n. 9.
Yasodha, bears Yogasindri, 593. who is changed for Krishna, ib.
Yasodharas, w. of Sahasrā, 83, n. 6.
Yati, s. of Nabhāsa, 413.
Yavaksharā, a river, 184.
Yavanasa, a people, w. of Bhārata-varsha, 175. a people, 194. Ionians or Greeks, ib. n. 144. conquered by Sagaras, 374. descendants of Turvasu, 442, n. 5. kings of, 474-475. n. 64. 477. n. 66.
Yavinara, s. of Dwimidha, 453.
Yaudheya, s. of Yudhishtīra, 459, n. 5.
Yayati, s. of Nabhāsa, 384, n. 15. 413.
Year, of mortals; of the gods, 23. of the Rishis; of Druvas, 23, n. 4. of Brahmas, 25. of Manu, 26, n. 9. of five kinds, 224.
Yoga, s. of Dharma, 55, n. 13.
Yoga, 'mystical union,' how effected, 157. mode of practising, and explanation of, 631.
Yoganidra, 'personified delusion,' 498. her exploits as Durgā, 499. born of Yasodha, 500. mocks Kansa, 503.
Yoganidhras, sister of Vrihaspati, w. of the Vasu Prabhāsa, 120.
Yogi, how he attains final liberation, 155. two kinds, novice and adept, 652.
Yuddhamuskta, s. of Ugrasena, 436.
Yudhājīta, s. of Vrishā, 424.
Yudhishtīra, s. of Pāta, 437-459. his children, ibid.
Yuga, cycle of five years, 224. and n. 17. an age: see Yugas.
Yugandhara, a prince, 435.
Yugandharas, a people, 157. n. 23.
Yugas, four, 23. (see Kṛta, Treta, Dwāpara, Kali) system of, 23, n. 4. a great Yuga, ib.
Yuvanesa, a prince, s. of Ardra, 361. s. of Prasenajit, 362. s. of Ambarisha, 309.
Yuvishana, s. of Satyas, 435.